1. The readiness of their faith was famed abroad. These Thessalonians embraced the gospel as soon as it was preached to them; so that every body took notice what manner ofConditions in among them the apostles had; that there were no such delays as at Philiippi, where it was a great while before much good was done.

2. The effects of their faith were famous. They quitting their idolatry, they turned from their idols, and abandoned all the false worship they had been educated in. They gave themselves up to God, to the living and true God, and devoted themselves to him. They set themselves to wait for the Son of God from heaven, v. 10. And this is one of the peculiarities of our holy religion, to wait for Christ's second coming, as those who believe he will come, and hope he will come to our joy. The believers under the Old Testament waited for the coming of the Messiah, and believers now wait for his second coming; he is yet to come. And he shall come in glory, be reigning, and then bring salvation to every one of his people; for he has raised him from the dead, which is a full assurance unto all men that he will come to judgment, Acts 17. 31. And there is good reason to hope and wait for his coming, because he has delivered us from the wrath to come. He came to purchase salvation, and will, when he comes again, bring salvation with him, full and final deliverance from sin and death and hell; from that wrath which is not to come in extremity or fury, when we shall see if it be yet to come, because it is everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels, Matt. 25. 41.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, the apostle puts the Thessalonians in mind of the manner of his preaching among them, v. 1. . . . 6. Then of the manner of his conversation among them, v. 7. . . . 12. Afterward of the success of his ministry, with the effect both on himself and Thessalonicans, v. 13. . . . 16. and then apologizes for his absence, v. 17. . . . 20.

1. NOR yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain: 2. But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, we were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention. 3. For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile: 4. But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth our hearts, v. 5. For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness; God is witness. 6. Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ.

Here we have an account of Paul's manner of preaching, and his comfortable reflection upon his entrance in among the Thessalonians. As he had the testimony of his own conscience witnessing to his integrity, so he could appeal to the Thessalonians how faithfully he, and Silas and Timothy, his Thessalonians, and the Lord, who strengthened their office; Ye yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, Note, It is a great comfort to a minister, to have his own conscience and the consciences of others witnessing for him, that he set out well, with good designs and from good principles; and that his preaching was not in vain, or, as some read it, was not vain. The apostle here comforts himself either in the success of his ministry, that it was not for nothing in vain, or useful to our translation, or, as others think, reflecting upon the sincerity of his preaching, that it was not vain and empty, or deceitful and treacherous. The subject matter of the apostle's preaching was not vain and idle speculations about useless niceties and foolish questions, but sound and solid truth, such as was most likely to profit his hearers. A good example this, to be imitated by all the ministers of the gospel. Much less was the apostle's preaching vain or deceitful. He could say to these Thessalonians what he told the Corinthians; 2 Cor. 4. 2. We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not witting in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully. He had no sinister or worldly design in his preaching; which he puts them in mind to have been.

With courage and resolution; We were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God, v. 2. The apostle was inspired with a holy boldness, nor was he discouraged at the afflictions he met with, or the opposition that was made against him. He had met with ill usage at Philippi, as these Thessalonians well knew; there it was that he and Silas were shamefully entreated, being put in the stocks; yet no sooner were they set at liberty than they went to Thessalonica, and everywhere Paul preached, without much boldness as ever. Note, Suffering in a good cause should rather sharpen than blunt the edge of holy resolution. The gospel of Christ, at its first setting out in the world, met with much opposition; and they who preached it, preached it with contention, with great agony: which denoted either the apostles' striving in their preaching, or their striving against their opposition they met with. The apostle here takes Paul's comfort; he was neither daunted in his work, nor driven from it.

II. With great simplicity and godly sincerity; Our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile, v. 3. This, no doubt, was matter of the greatest comfort to the apostle—the consciousness of his own sincerity; and was one reason of his success. It was an inestimable, and incoerced good, when he preached, and exhorted them to believe and obey. His design was not to set up a faction to draw men over to a party, but to promote pure religion and undefiled, before God and the Father. The gospel he preached, was without deceit, it was true and faithful; it was not fallacious, nor a cunningly devised fable. Nor was it of uncleanness. His gos pel was pure and holy, worthy of its holy Author, tending to discomfit our all manner of impurity. The word of God is pure. There should be no corrupt mixtures therewith; and as the matter of the apostle's exhortation was thus true and pure, the manner of his speaking was without guile. He did not pretend one thing, and intend another. He believed and therefore he spake. He had no sinister and secular aims and views, but was in reality what he seemed to be. The apostle not only asserts his sincerity, but subjoins the reasons and evidences thereof. The reasons are contained, v. 4.

1. They were stewards; put in trust with the gospel: and it is required of a steward, that he be faithful. The gospel which Paul preached, was not his own; but the gospel of God. Note, Ministers have a great favour shewn them, and honour put upon them, and trust committed to them. They must not dare to corrupt the word of God: they must diligently make use of what is intrusted with them, so as God hath allowed and commanded, knowing they shall be called to an account, when they must be no longer stewards.

2. Their design was to please God, and not men. God is a God of truth, and requires truth in the inward parts; and if sincerity be wanting, all that we do cannot please God. The gospel of Christ is not accommodated to the vain fancies and lusts of men, to gratify their appetites and passions: but, on the contrary, it was designed for the mortifying of their corrupt affections, and delivering them from the power of fancy, that they might be brought under the power of faith. If I be pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ, Gal. 1. 10.

3. They acted under the consideration of God's omniscience, as in the sight of him who tries our hearts. This is indeed the great motive to sincerity, to consider, God not only seeth all that we do, but knoweth our thoughts afar off, and searcheth the heart. He is well acquainted with all our aims and designs, as well as our actions. And it is from this God who trieth our hearts, that we must receive our reward.

The evidences of the apostle's sincerity follow; and they are these: (1.) He avoided flattery; Neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, v. 5. He and his fellow-labourers preached Christ and him crucified, and did not aim to gain an interest in men's affections for themselves, by glorying, and flattering, and flattering, and flattering, and flattering, and flattering; nor did they flatten men in their sins; nor tell them, if they would be of his party, they might live as they listed. He did not flatter them with vain hopes, or indulge them in any evil work or way, promising them life, and so dunging with untempered mortar.

(2.) He avoided covetousness. He did not make the ministry a cloak, or a covering, for covetousness, as God was witness, v. 5. His design was not to enrich himself: so far from that, he did not condition with them for bread. He was not like the false apostles, who, through covetousness, with feigned words made merchandise of the people, 2 Pet. 2. 3.

(3.) He avoided ambition and vain-glory; nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, v. 6. They expected neither people's purses nor their persons, neither to be enriched by them, nor cared for and esteemed by them, and called Rabbi. This apostle exHORTS THE GALATIANS, ch. 5. 26, not to be desirous of vain-glory; his ambition was to obtain that honour which comes from God, John 5. 44.

He tells them, they might have used greater authority as apostles, and expected greater esteem, and demanded maintenance, which is meant by the phrase of being burdened; because perhaps some would have thought this too great a burthen for them to bear.

7. But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children: 8. So, being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us. 9. For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail: for, labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God. 10. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves among you that believe: 11. As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, 12. That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

In these words the apostle reminds the Thessalonians of the manner of their conversation among them. And,

I. He mentions the gentleness of their behaviour; We were gentle among you, v. 7. He showed great mildness and tenderness, who might have acted with the authority of an apostle of Christ. Such a behaviour greatly recommends religion, and is most agreeable to God's gracious dealing with sinners, in and by the gospel. This great apostle, though he abhorred and avoided flattery, was most condescending to all men. He accommodated himself to all men's capacities, and became all things to all men. He showed the kindness and care of a nurse that cherisheth her children. This is the way to win people, rather than to rule with rigour. The word of God is indeed powerful; and as it comes often with awful authority upon the minds of men, as it always has enough in it to convince every impartial judgment, so it comes with the more pleasing power, when the ministers of the gospel recommend themselves to the affections of the people. And as a nursing mother bears with frowardness in a child, and condescends to mean offices for its good, and draws out her breast, cherishing it in her bosom; so in like manner should the ministers of Christ be-Thessalonians in particular to this apostle, and so great was his love to them. 3. By bodily labour to prevent their charge; or that his ministry might not be expensive and burdensome to them; Ye remember our labour and travail; for, labouring night and day, &c. v. 9. He denied himself the liberty he had of taking wages from the churches. To the labour of the ministry he added that of his calling, as a tent-maker, that he might thereby support himself. We are not to suppose that the apostle spent the whole night and day in bodily labour, or to supply the necessaries of his body; for then he would have had no time for the work of the ministry. But he spent part of the night, as well as the day, in this work; and was willing to forego his rest in the night, that he might have an opportunity to do good to the souls of men in the day. The labourers of God are his stewards, before the ministers of the gospel, to be industrious for the salvation of men's souls: though it will not follow that they are always obliged to preach freely. There is no general rule to be drawn from this instance; either that ministers may at no time work with their hands, for supply of their outward necessities, or that they ought always so to do.

4. By the holiness of their conversation, concerning which he did not only to them, but to God also; (v. 16.) Ye are witnesses, and God also. They were observers of their outward conversation in public before men, and God was witness not only of their behaviour in secret, but of the inward principles from whence they acted. Their behaviour was holy toward God, just towards all men, and unblamable, without giving cause of scandal or offence; and they were careful to give no occasion either to them who were without, or to them who believed, that they might give no ill example; that their preaching and living might be all of a piece. Herein, said this apostle, do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men, Acts 24. 16.

II. He mentions their faithful discharge of the work and office of the ministry, v. 11, 12. Concerning this also, he could appeal to them as witenesses. Paul and his fellow-labourers were not only good Christians, but faithful ministers. And we should not only be good as to our general calling as Christians, but in our particular callings and relations. Paul exhorted the Thessalonians, not only informing them in their duty, but exciting and quickening them to the performance of it, by proper motives and arguments. And he comforted them also, endeavouring to cheer and support them, when he saw that they were under difficulties and discouragements they might meet with. And this he did not only publicly, but privately also, and from house to house; (Acts 20. 20.) and charged every one of them by personal addresses: this, some think, is intended by the similitude of a father's charging his children. This expression also denotes the affectionate and compassionate concern the apostle had for these his spiritual children. He was their spiritual father; and as he cherished them like a nursing mother, so he charged them as a father, with a father's affection rather than a father's authority. As my beloved sons, I warn you, 1 Cor. 4. 14.

The manner of this apostle's exhortation ought to be regarded by ministers in particular for their imitation; and we are to observe it is the duty of faithful ministers, not only to instruct by them and all others; namely, that they would walk worthy of God, who hath called them to his kingdom and glory, v. 12. Observe, 1. What is our great gospel-privilege—that God has called us to his kingdom and glory. The gospel calls us into the kingdom and state of grace here; and into the kingdom and state of glory hereafter: to heaven and happiness as our end, and to holiness as the way to that end. 2. What is our great gospel-duty—that we walk worthy of God; that the temper of our minds and tenour of our lives be answerable to this call, and suitable to this privilege. We should accommodate ourselves to the intention and design of the gospel, and live suitably to our profession and privileges, our hopes and expectations, as becomes those who are called with such a high and holy calling.

15. For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe. 14. For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews; 15. Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men; 16. Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles, that they might be saved, to fill up their sins always: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

Here observe, I. The apostle makes mention of the success of his ministry among these Thessalonians, (v. 13.) which is expressed, 1. By the manner of their receiving the word of God; When ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God. Where note, (1.) The word that the apostle is preaching by men like ourselves, men of like passions and infirmities with others; We have this treasure in earthen vessels. The word of God, which these Thessalonians received, they heard from the apostles. (2.) However, it is in truth the word of God. Such was the word the apostles preached by divine inspiration, and such is that which is left upon record, written in the scriptures by divine inspiration; and such is the word which in our days is preached, being contained in the same scripture from which the sacred oracles are derived from, these sacred oracles. (2.) They are greatly to blame, who give out their own fancies or injunctions for the word of God. This is the vilest way of imposing upon people, and to deal unfaithfully. (4.) They are also to blame, who, in hearing the word, look no further than to the ministry of men, or the words of men, who are only, or chiefly, pleased with the elegance of the style, or the melody or speaking, or some other excellency of the composition, or the voice and manner in which the word is preached, and expect to receive their advantage herein. (5.) We should receive the word of God as the word of God, with affections suitable to the holiness, wisdom, verity, and goodness thereof. The words of men are frail and perishable, like themselves, and sometimes false, foolish, and feeble: But God's word is holy, wise, just, and true. He is, like his Author, lives and abides for ever. Let us accordingly receive and regard it. 2. By the wonderful operation of this word they received; It effectually worketh in them that believe, v. 15. They who by faith receive the word, find it profitable. It doeth good to them that walk uprightly, and by its wonderful effects evidences itself to be the word of God. This converts their souls, and enlightens their minds, and rejoices their hearts; (Ps. 19.) and such as have this inward testimony of the truth of the scriptures, the word of God, by the effectual operations thereof on their hearts, have the best evidence of their divine origin to themselves, though this is not sufficient to convince others who are strangers thereto.

II. He mentions the good effects which his successful preaching had,

1. Upon himself and fellow-labourers. It was a constant cause of thankfulness; For this cause, thank we God without ceasing, v. 13. The apostle expresses his thankfulness to God so often upon this subject, as seems to think he never could be sufficiently thankful that God had counted him faithful, and put him into the ministry, and made his ministrations successful.

2. Upon themselves. The word wrought effectually in them, not only to be examples unto others in faith and good works, (which he had mentioned before,) but also in constancy and patience under sufferings and trials for the sake of the gospel; Ye became followers of the churches of God, and have suffered like things as they have done, (v. 14.) and with like courage and constancy, with like patience and hope. Note, The cross is the Christian's mark: if we are called to suffer, we are called only to be followers of the churches of God; so persecuted they the prophets that were before you, Matt. 5. 12. It is a good effect of the gospel, when we are enabled to suffer for its sake. The apostle mentions some instances of great persecution of the apostles, and Jews were in Christ Jesus. Those in Judea first heard the gospel, and they first suffered for it: for the Jews were the most bitter enemies Christianity had, and were especially enraged against their countrymen who embraced Christianity. Note, Bitter zeal and fiery persecution will set countrymen at variance, and break through all the bonds of nature, and all thebounds of religion. In every city where the apostles went to preach the gospel, the Jews stirred the inhabitants up against them. They were the ringleaders of persecution in all places; so in particular it was at Thessalonica; (Acts 17. 5.) The Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city in an uproar. Upon this occasion, the apostles were put to great suffering, (Acts 17.) enough to justify their final rejection, and the ruin of their place, and church, and nation, which was now approaching.

(2.) They killed their own prophets: so they had done all along; their fathers had done so: they had been a persecuting generation. Where he and his fellow-labourers came, they drove them away (Acts 13. 50.) and chased them from place to place: and no marvel, if they killed the Lord Jesus, that they persecuted his followers.

(3.) They hated the apostles, and did him all the mischief they could. They persecuted them, and drove and chased them from place to place: and no marvel, if they killed the Lord Jesus, that they persecuted his followers.

(4.) They blasphemed God. They had quite lost all sense of religion, and dare care to do their duty to account, that he seems to think he never could be sufficiently thankful that God had counted him faithful, and put him into the ministry, and made his ministrations successful. Murder and persecution are most hateful to God, and cannot be justified on any pretense; it is so contrary to natural religion, that no zeal for any true or only pretended institution of religion can ever excuse it.

(5.) They were contrary to all men. Their persecuting spirit was a perverse spirit; contrary to the light of nature, and contrary to humanity; contrary to the welfare of all men, and contrary to the sentiments of all men not under the power of bigotry.

(6.) They had an implacable enmity to the Gentiles, and envied them the offers of the gospel; forbidding the apostles to speak to them, that they might be saved. The means of salvation had long been confined to the Jews. Salvation is of the Jews, says our Saviour. And they were envious against the Gentiles, and angry that they should be admitted to share in the means of salvation. Nothing provoked them more than our Saviour's speaking to them at any time concerning this matter; this enraged the Jews at Jerusalem, when, in his defence, Paul told them, he was sent unto the Gentiles, Acts 22. 21. They heard him patiently till he uttered these words, but then could endure no longer; but lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth. Thus did the Jews fill up their sins; and nothing tends more to any person or people's filling up the measure of their sins, than opposing the gospel, obstructing the progress of it, and hindering the salvation of precious souls. For the sake of these things, wrath is come upon them to the uttermost; that is, wrath was determined against them, and would soon overtake them. It was not many years after this, that Jerusalem was utterly destroyed, and the Jewish nation cut off by the Romans. Note, When the measure of any man's iniquity is full, and he has sinned to the uttermost, then comes wrath, and that to the uttermost.

17. But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face with great desire. 18. Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us. 19. For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? 20. For ye are our glory and joy.

In these words the apostle apologizes for his absence.

Here observe,

1. He tells them they were involuntarily forced from them; We, brethren, were taken from you, v. 17. Such was the rage of his persecutors. He was unmercifully sent away by night to Beroa, Acts 17. 10. 2. Though he was absent in body, yet he was present in heart. He had still a remembrance of them, and great care for them.

3. Even his bodily absence was but for a short time; (the time of an hour;) time is short, all our time on earth is short and uncertain, whether we are present with our friends, or absent from them. This world is not a place where we are always, or long, to be together. It is in heaven that holy souls shall meet, and never part more.

4. He earnestly desired, and endeavoured to see them again; We endeavoured more abundantly to see your face with great desire, v. 17. So that the apostle, at least, intended his absence should be but for a short time. His desire and endeavoured were to return again very soon to Thessalonica. But men of business are not masters of their own time. Paul did his endeavoured, and he could do no more, v. 18.

5. He tells them, Satan hindered his return; (v. 18.) that is, either some enemy or enemies, or the great enemy of mankind, who stirred up opposition to Paul, either in his return to Thessalonica, when he intended to return thither, or stirred up such contentions or dissensions in those places whither he went, as made his presence necessary. Note, Satan is a constant enemy to the work of God, and does all he can to obstruct it.

6. He assures them of his affection and high esteem for them, though he was not able, as yet, to be present with them, according to his desire. They were his hope, and joy, and crown of rejoicing; his glory and joy. These are expressions of great and endeared affection and high estimation. And it is happy, when ministers and people have such mutual affection and esteem of each other; and especially if they shall thus rejoice, if they that sow, and they that reap, shall then rejoice together, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming.

The apostle begins the Thessalonians in mind, that though he could not come to them as yet, and though he should never be able to come to them, yet our Lord Jesus Christ will come, nothing shall hinder that. And further, when he shall come, all must appear in his presence, or before him. Ministers and people must all appear before him, and faithful people will be the glory and joy of faithful ministers in that great and glorious day.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter, the apostle gives further evidence of his love to the Thessalonians, reminding them of his sending Timothy to them, with the mention of his design therein, and his inducements so to do, v. 1...5. He acquaints them also with his great satisfaction at the return of Timothy, with good tidings concerning them, v. 6. He concludes with fervent prayer for both v. 11, to the end.

1. WHEREFORE when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone; 2. And sent Timotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith; 3. That no man should be moved by these afflictions; for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto. 4. For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know. 5. For this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

In these words the apostle gives an account of his sending Timothy to the Thessalonians: though he was hindered from going to them himself, yet his love was such, that he could not forbear sending Timothy to them: though he was very useful to him, and could not well spare him, yet he was content, for their good, to be left alone at Athens. Note, Those ministers do not duly value the establishment and welfare of their people, who cannot deny themselves in many things for that end. Observe,

1. The character he gives of Timothy; (v. 2.) We sent Timotheus, our brother. Elsewhere he calls him his son; here he calls him brother. Timothy was Paul's junior in age, his inferior in gifts and graces, and of a lower rank in the ministry; for Paul was an apostle, and Timothy but an evangelist; yet Paul calls him brother. This was an instance of the apostle's humility, and showed his desire to put honour upon Timothy, and to recommend him to the esteem of the churches. He calls him also a minister of God. Note, Minister of the gospel of Christ are ministers of God, to promote the kingdom of God among men. He calls him also his fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ. Note, Ministers of the gospel must look upon themselves as labourers in the Lord's vineyard; they have an honourable office and hard work, yet a good work. This is a true saying. If any man desire the office of a bishop, he desires a good work, 1 Tim. 3. 1. And ministers should look upon one another as fellow-labourers; and should therefore love one another, and strengthen one another's hands, not strive and contend one with another, (which will hinder their work,) but strive together to carry on the great work they are engaged in, that is, to preach and publish the gospel of Christ, and to persuade people to embrace and entertain it, and live suitably thereto.

2. The end and design why Paul sent Timothy to establish them, and comfort them concerning their faith, v. 2. Paul had converted them to the Christian faith, and now he was desirous that they might be confirmed and comforted; that they might be confirmed in the choice they had made of the Christian religion, and be comforted in the profession and practice of it. Note, The more we are comforted, the more we shall be confirmed; because, when we set ourselves to know and to do good, Christ will be our helper: we shall thereupon be engaged to continue and persist in it. The apostle's design was to establish and comfort the Thessalonians concerning their faith: concerning the object of their faith, the truths of the gospel; and particularly that Jesus Christ was the Saviour of the world, and so wise and good, so powerful and faithful, that they might rely upon him: concerning the recommencement of faith, which was more their suffering the world, the balance all their losses, and reward all their labours.

III. The motives inducing Paul to send Timothy for this end—a godly fear or jealousy, lest they should be moved from the faith of Christ, v. 3. He was desirous that no man, no one among them, should be moved or shaken in mind; that they should not apostatize, or waiver in the faith. And yet he apprehended there was danger, and feared the consequence.

1. There was danger by reason of affliction and persecution for the sake of the gospel, v. 3. These Thessalonians could not but perceive what afflictions the apostle and preachers of the gospel met with, and that might possibly stumble them; and also those who made profession of the gospel, were persecuted, and without doubt these Thessalonians themselves were afflicted. 2. By reason of the tempter's subtlety and malice. The apostle was afraid, lest by some means the tempter had tempted them, v. 5. The Devil is a subtle and unwearied tempter, who seeks an opportunity to beguile and destroy us, and takes all advantages against us, both in a time of prosperity and adversity; and has often been successful in his attacks upon persons under afflictions. He has often prejudiced the minds of the way of God, on account of the sufferings its professors are exposed to. We have reason therefore to be jealous over ourselves and others, lest we be insamied by him. The consequence the apostle feared, was, lest his labour should be in vain. And thus it would have been, if the tempter had tempted them, and prevented against them, to move them from the faith. They had lost what they had wrought, and the battle was lost, before it was begun. To prevent this, the apostle tells them what care he took in sending Timothy. (1.) To put them in mind of what he had told them before concerning suffering tribulation, v. 4. He says, (v. 3.) We are afflicted thereunto that is, unto afflictions. So is the will and purpose of God, that through many afflictions we must enter into his kingdom. Their troubles and persecutions did not come by chance, nor merely from the wrath and malice of the enemies of religion, but by the appointment of God. It only came to pass according as God had determined, and they knew he told them before it would be; so that they should not think it strange, and, being forewarned, they should be fore-armed. Note, The apostles were so far from flattering people with an expectation of worldly prosperity in religion, that, on the contrary, they told them plainly they must count upon trouble in the flesh. And herein they followed the example of their great Master, the Author of our faith. Besides, it might prove a trial of their faith, when they perceived, that it only happened to them, as was predicted before.

(2.) To know their faith: that so he might inform the apostles, whether they remained steadfast under all their sufferings, whether their faith failed or not.
Because, if their faith did not fail, they would be able to stand their ground against the tempter and all his temptations: their faith would be a shield, to defend them against all the fiery darts of the wicked, Eph. 6. 16.

6. But now, when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you; 7. Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you, in all your affliction and distress, by your faith: 8. For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord. 9. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God; 10. Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith!

Here we have Paul's great satisfaction upon the return of Timothy with good tidings from the Thessalonians. In which we may observe,

I. The good report Timothy made concerning them, v. 6. Without question, he was a willing messenger, and brought us good tidings. Concerning their faith, concerning their steadfastness in the faith, that they were not shaken in mind, nor turned aside from the profession of the gospel. Their love also continued; their love to the gospel, and the ministers of the gospel. For they had a good and a kind remembrace of the apostles, and that constantly, or always.
Their names were very dear to them; and the thoughts of them, and what they had received from them, were very precious, insomuch that they desired greatly to see them again, and receive some spiritual gift from them; and there was no love lost, for the apostle was as desirous to see them. It is happy where there is such mutual love between minister and people. This tends to promote religion, and the success of the gospel. The world hates them, and therefore they should love one another.

II. The great praise and satisfaction the apostle had in hearing of this proceeding; (v. 7, 8.) Therefor,e brethren, we were comforted in all our afflic-tion and distress. The apostle thought this good news of them was sufficient to balance all the troubles he met with. It was easy to him to bear affliction, or persecution, or fightings from without, when he found the good success of his ministry, in the constancy of the converts he had made to Christianity; his distress of mind on account of his fears within, lest he had laboured in vain, was now in a good measure over, when he understood their faith, and the perseverance of it. This put new life and spirit into the apostle, and made him vigorous and active in the work of the Lord. Thus he was not only comforted, but greatly rejoiced also;

Now we are the Paul, verses 1-10.

It would have been a killing thing to the apostle, if professors of religion had been unsteady, or proved apostates, whereas nothing was more encouraging than their constancy.

III. The effects of this were thankfulness and prayer to God on their behalf.

1. Observe, How thankful the apostle was, v. 9.
His joy was of joy, and full of praise and thanksgiving.
When we are most needful, we should be most thankful.
What we rejoice in, we should give thanks for. This is to rejoice before our God, to spiritualize our joy. Paul speaks, as if he could not tell how to express his thankfulness to God, or his joy and rejoicing for their sakes. But he was careful God should not lose the glory of the comfort he received in the welfare of his friends. His heart was enlarged with love to them, and with thanksgiving to God. He was willing to express the one and the other, as well as he could. This needful thanksgiving to God, this especially is very imperfect in the present state; but when we come to heaven, we shall do this work better than now we can.

2. He prayed for them night and day, (v. 10.) evening and morning, or very frequently; in the midst of the busines of the day, or slumber of the night, lifting up his heart to God in prayer. Thus we should resemble the apostle. And Paul's prayer was fervent prayer. He prayed exceedingly, and was carnest in his supplication. Note, When we are most thankful, we should also give ourselves to prayer; and those we give thanks for, have need to be prayed for. These whom we most rejoice in, and who are our greatest comforts, must be our constant care, while in this world of temptation and imperfecion. Where there is something still lacking in their faith; Paul desired that this might be perfected, and to see their face in order thereto. Note, (1.) The best of men have something wanting in their faith; if not as to the matter of it, there being some mysteries or doctrines not sufficiently known or believed by them, yet as to the clearness and certainty of their faith, there being some remaining darknesses and doubts, at least as to the effects and purveyances. But he desired they should be

(2.) The ministry of the word and ordinances is helpful, and to be desired and used for the perfecting of that which is lacking in our faith.

11. Now God himself and our Father

And the Lord Jesus Christ, direct our way unto you. 12. And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: 13. To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

In these words we have the earnest prayer of the apostle. He desires to be instrumental in the further benefit of the Thessalonians, and the only way to do so while at a distance, was by his letters, together with his writing or sending to them. He desired that their faith might be perfected, which he could not be the proper cause or author of; for he pretended not to dominion over their faith, nor to have the donation of it, and he therefore concludes with prayer for them. In which observe,
I. Whom he prays to, namely, God and Christ. Prayer is a part of religious worship, and all religious worship is due unto God only. Prayer is here made to God, even the Father and a Father also to Christ, even our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore Jesus Christ our Lord is God, even as God our Father is God. Prayer is to be offered to God as our Father. So Christ taught his disciples to pray; and the Spirit of adoption prompteth them to pray, to cry, “Abba, Father.” Prayer is not only to be offered in the name of Christ, but offered up to Christ himself, as our Lord and our Saviour, when he speaks for and with respect to himself and his fellow-labourers, then on behalf of the Thessalonians.

1. He prays that they might have a prosperous journey to them by the will of God; that their way might be directed to them, v. 11. The taking of a journey to this or that place, one would think, is a thing depending very much on a man’s own will, and lies so much in his own power, that Paul needed not by prayer to go to God about it. But the apostle knew that in God we live, and move, and have our being; that we depend upon God in all our motions and actions, as well for the continuance of life and being; that Divine Providence orders all our affairs, and that it is owing thereto if we prosper therein; that God our Father directs and orders his children whether they shall go, and what they shall do; that our Lord Jesus Christ in a particular manner directs the motion of his faithful ministers, those stars which he holds in his right hand. Let us acknowledge God in all our ways, and he will direct our paths.

2. He prays for the prosperity of the Thessalonians. Whether he should have an opportunity of coming to them or no, yet he earnestly prays for the prosperity of their souls. And there are two things he desired for them, which we should desire for ourselves and others:—

(1.) That they might increase and abound in love, (v. 12.) in love to one another, and in love to all men. Note, Mutual love is required of all Christians; and not only that they love one another, but that they also have a charitable disposition of mind, and due-concern for the welfare of all men. Love is of God, and is the fulfilling of the gospel as well as the declaration of it by him; by which himself abounds in his fatherly kindness and mercy to his children, their faith, yet something was lacking therein; and of their charity and love, yet the apostle prays that that might increase and abound. Note, We have reason to desire to grow in every grace; and have need of the Spirit’s influence in order to growth in grace; and the way to obtain that, is prayer. We are beholden to God not only for the stock put into our hands at first, but for the improvement of it also. And to our prayer we must add endeavour. To excite this in the Thessalonians, the apostle again mentions his love, his abounding love, toward them. The more we are beloved, the more affectionate we should be.

(2.) That they might be established unblamable in holiness, v. 13. This spiritual benefit is mentioned as an effect of increasing and abounding love: to the end that our hearts may be established, v. 14. Note, The more we grow and abound in grace, and particularly in the grace of love, the more we are established and confirmed in it. Note also, Holiness is required of all those who would go to heaven, and that therein we must be unblamable; we must act in every thing so that we may not in the least contradict the profession we make of holiness. Our desires should be to have our hearts established in holiness before God, and be preserved safe to the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and that we may be unblamable before God, even the Father, now, and be presented blameless before the throne of his glory, when the Lord Jesus will come with all his saints. Note, [1.] The Lord Jesus will certainly come, and come in his glory. [2.] When he comes, his saints will come with him; they shall appear with him in glory. [3.] Then the excellency as well as the necessity of holiness will appear; because without this no hearts shall be established at that day, nor shall any one be unblamable, or avoid everlasting condemnation.

In this chapter, the apostle gives earnest exhortations to abound in holiness, with a caution against uncleanness, enforced with several arguments, in v. 1. 8. He then mentions the great duties of brotherly love, and quietness in industry in our callings, v. 9. 12. And concludes with comforting them who mourned for their relations and friends that died in the Lord, v. 15. 18.

1. FURTHERMORE then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you, by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more. 2. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. 3. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication: 4. That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; 5. Not in the list of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles who know not God: 6. That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter; because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. 7. For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. 8. He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit.

Here we have,

1. An exhortation to abound in holiness, to abound more and more in that which is good, v. 1. 2. In which we may observe,

1. The manner in which the exhortation is given—very affectionately. The apostle entreats them as brethren; he calls them so, and loved them as such. Because his love to them was very great, he exerts them very earnestly. We beseech and exhort you. The apostle was unwilling to take any denial, and therefore repeats his exhortation again and again.

2. The matter of his exhortation; that they would abound more and more in holy walking, or excel in those things that are good, in good works. Their faith was justly famed abroad, and they were already examples to other churches; yet the apostle would have them yet further to excel others, and to make further progress in holiness. Note, (1.) Those who most excel others, fall short of perfection. The very best of us should forget those things which are behind, and reach forth unto those things which are before. (2.) It is not enough that we abide in the faith of the gospel, but we must abound in the work of faith. We must not only persevere to the end, but we should grow better, and walk more evenly and closely with God.

3. The arguments with which the apostle enforces his exhortation. (1.) They had been informed of their duty. They knew their Master’s will, and could not plead their ignorance as an excuse. Now as faith, so knowledge, is dead without practice. They had received of them who had converted them to Christianity, or been taught of them, how they ought to walk. Observe, The design of the gospel is, to teach men not only what they should believe, but also how they ought to live: so not much to fill men's minds with notions, as to regulate their temper and behaviour. The apostle taught them how to walk, not how to talk. To talk well without living well, will never bring us to heaven: for the character of those who are in Christ Jesus, is this; They walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. (2.) Another argument is, that the apostle taught and exhorted them in the name, or by the authority, of the Lord Jesus Christ. He was Christ's minister and ambassador, declaring to them what was the will and commandment of the Lord Jesus. (3.) Another argument is this. Herein they would please God. Holy walking is most pleasing to the holy God, who is glorious in holiness. This ought to be the aim and ambition of every Christian, to please God, and to be accepted of him. We should not be mere-pleasurers, or flesh-pleasers, but should walk so as to please God. (4.) The rule according to which they were taught and exhorted was, that they had given them by the Lord Jesus Christ; which were the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ himself, because given by authority and direction from him, and such as were agreeable to his will. The apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ were only commissioned by him to teach men to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them, Matt. 28. 20. Though they had great authority from Christ, yet that was to teach men what Christ had commanded, not to give forth commandments of their own. They did not act as lords over God's heritage, (1 Pet. 5. 3.) nor should any do so, that pretend to be their successors. The apostle could appeal to the Thessalonians, who knew what commandments he gave them, that they were no other than what he had received from the Lord Jesus. II. A caution against uncleanness, that being a sin directly contrary to sanctification, or that holy walking which he so earnestly exhorts them to. This caution is expressed, and also enforced by many arguments.

1. It is expressed in these words; That ye should abstain from fornication, v. 3. By which words we are to understand all uncleanness whatsoever, either in a married or unmarried state. Adultery is of course included, though fornication is particularly mentioned: it be to one of the faculties of the soul, prohibited, of which it is a shame even to speak, though they are done by too many in secret. All that is contrary to chastity in heart, speech, and behaviour, is contrary to the command of God in the decalogue, and contrary to that holiness which the gospel requires.

2. There are several arguments to enforce this caution: (1.) This branch of sanctification in particular, is the will of God, v. 3. It is the will of God in general, that we should be holy, because he that called us is holy, and because we are chosen into salvation through the sanctification of the Spirit. God requires holiness in the heart, and also purity in our bodies, and that we should cleanse ourselves from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit, 2 Cor. 7. 1. Who can on the body of Christ ought it to be devoted to God, and dedicated and set apart for him, it should be kept clean and pure for his service. And as chastity is one branch of our sanctification, so this is one thing which God commands in his law, and what his grace effects in all true believers. (2.) This will be greatly for our honour; so much is plainly implied, v. 4. Whereas the contrary will be a great dishonour; And his reproach shall not be wiped away, Prov. 6. 33. The body is here called the vessel of the soul, that dwells therein, (so 1 Sam. 21. 5.) and that must be kept pure from defiling lusts. Every one should be careful in this matter, as he values his own honour, and will not be contemptible on this account; that his inferior appetites and passions gain not the ascendant, tyrannize over his reason and conscience, and enslave the superior faculties of his soul. How much dishonourable than for a rational soul to be enslaved by bodily affections and brutal appetites? (3.) To indulge the lusts of concupiscence, is to live and act like heathens; even as the Gentiles who know not God, v. 5. The Gentiles, and especially the Greeks, were commonly guilty of some sins of uncleanness, which were not so evidently forbidden by the light of nature. But they did not know God, or his will, and will, so well, as we know; and should know, this his will, namely, our sanctification in this branch of it. It is not so much to be wondered at, therefore, if the Gentiles indulge their fleshly appetites and lusts; but Christians should not walk as unconverted Gentiles, in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquets, &c. (1 Pet. 4. 3.) because they who are in Christ, have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts, (4.) The principle of uncleanness is, they lead always an unclean life, and are therefore liable to a piece of injustice that God will be the Avenger of; so we may understand those words, That no man go beyond or defraud his brother, v. 6., in any matter— ἕν τῷ σφαγματισμῷ, in this matter of which the apostle is speaking in the preceding and following verses, namely, the sin of uncleanness. Some understand these words as a further warning and caution against injustice and oppression, all fraud and deceit in our dealings; or, in other words, which are certainly criminal, and contrary to the gospel. And Christians should not impose upon the ignorance and necessity of those they deal with, and so go beyond them, nor should they by equivocations or lying arts defraud them; and although this may be practised by some, and lie long undiscovered, and so go unpunished among men, yet the righteous God will render a recompense. But the meaning may rather be, to shew the injustice and wrong that in many cases are done by the sin of uncleanness. Not only are fornication and other acts of uncleanness sins against his own body who commits them, (1 Cor. 6. 18.) not only are they very injurious to the sinner himself both in soul and body; but sometimes they are very injurious, and no less than defrauding, acts of injustice to others; particularly to those who are joined together with him in the bonds of the Lord Jesus Christ. And as this is of such a heinous nature, so it follows, that God will be the Avenger of it. Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, Heb. 13. 4. This the apostle had forewarned and testified by his gospel; which, as it contained exceeding great and precious promises, so also it revealed from heaven the wrath of God against all uncleanness and impurity of the flesh, Eph. 5. 6. The sin of uncleanness is contrary to the nature and design of our Christian calling; For God hath called us not unto uncleanness, but unto holiness, v. 7. The law of God forbids all impurity, and the gospel requires the greatest purity; it calls us from uncleanness unto holiness. (6.) The contemplation therefore of God's law and gospel is the contempt of God himself. In this solemn description of our nature only. Some might possibly make light of the precepts of purity and holiness, because they heard them from men like themselves; but the apostle lets them know that they were God's commands, and to violate them was no less than to despise God. He adds, God hath given Christians his Spirit; intimating that all sorts of uncleanness do in an especial manner grieve the Holy Spirit, and will provoke him to withdraw from us; and also the Holy

Spirit is given unto us, to arm us against these sins, and to help us to mortify these deeds of the body, that we may live, Rom. 8. 13.

9. But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. 10. And indeed ye do it towards all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more: 11. And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you; 12. That ye may walk honestly towards them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing.

In these words the apostle mentions the great duties.

I. Of brotherly love. This he exHORTS them to increase in yet more and more. The exhortation is introduced, not with a compliment, but with a commendation; because they were remarkable in the exercise of it, which made it less needful that he should write to them about it, v. 9. Thus by his good opinion of them he insinuated himself into their affections, and so made way for his exhortation to them. Note, It would be well, if all of this kind of fruit should be much, to their praise, that by so doing we may lay engagements upon them to abound therein more and more. Observe, 1. What it is that the apostle commends in them. It was not so much their own virtue as God's grace; yet he takes notice of the evidence they shewed of the grace of God in them. (1.) It was God's grace that he took special notice of: that God had taught them this good lesson; Ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another, v. 9. Whoever do that which is good, are taught of God to do it, and God must have the glory. All who are savingly taught of God, are taught this lesson, to love one another. This is the livery of Christ's family. Note also, The teaching of the Spirit exceeds the teachings of men; and as no man should teach contrary to what God teaches, so none can teach so effectually as he teaches; and men's teaching is vain and useless, unless God teach also. (2.) The Thessalonians gave good evidence of their being taught of God, by their love to the brethren in all Macedonia, v. 10. They not only loved those of their own city and society, or such as were near them, and just of their own sentiments; but their love was extensive. And a true Christian's is so to all the saints, though distant from him in place, and differing from him in some opinions, practices, of less moment.

2. The exhortation is, to increase more and more in this great grace and duty of brotherly love, v. 10. Though these Thessalonians had in some sense no need of an exhortation to brotherly love, as if it were wholly wanting; yet they must be exhorted to pray for more, and labour for more. There are none on this side heaven, who love in perfection. Those who are eminent in this, or any other grace, have need of increase therein, as well as of perseverance unto the end.

II. Of quietness and industry in their callings. Observe, 1. The apostle exhorts to these duties; that they should study to be quiet, v. 11. It is a most desirable thing to be quiet and calm, and to be of a peaceable and quiet behaviour. This tends much to our own and others' happiness; and Christians should study how to be quiet. We should be ambitious and industrious, how to be calm and quiet in our minds, in patience to possess our own souls, and to be quiet towards others; or of a meek and mild, a gentle and peaceable disposition, not given to strife, contention, or division. Satan is very busy to disquiet us; and we have that in our own hearts, that disposes us to be unquiet; therefore let us study to be quiet. It follows, Do your own business; when we go beyond that, we expose ourselves to a great deal of inquietude. Those who are busy-bodies, meddling in other men's matters, generally have but little quiet in their own minds, and cause great disputes, among their neighbours; at least, they seldom mind the other exhortation, to be diligent in their own calling, to work with their own hands. And yet this was what the apostle commanded them, and what is required of us also. Christianity does not discharge us from the work and duty of our particular callings, but teaches us to be diligent therein.

2. The exhortation is enforced with a double argument: Namely, (1.) So we shall live creditibly. Thus we shall walk honestly, or decently, and creditably, towards them that are without, v. 12. This will be to act as becomes the gospel, and will gain a good report from them that are strangers, ye enemies to it. Note, It is a great ornament to a religion, when the professors of it are of meek and quiet spirits, diligent to do their own business, and peaceable, as they are, in other men's matters. (2.) We shall live comfortably, and have lack of nothing, v. 12. People often by their slothfulness bring themselves into narrow circumstances, and reduce themselves to great straits, and are liable to many wants; when such as are diligent in their own business, live comfortably, and have lack of nothing. They are not burdensome to their friends, nor scandalous to strangers. They earn their own bread, and have the greatest pleasure in so doing.

13. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. 14. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 15. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. 16. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: 17. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. 18. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

In these words the apostle comforts the Thessalonians who mourned for the death of their relations and friends that died in the Lord. His design is to dissuade them from excessive grief, or inordinate sorrow, on that account. All grief for the death of friends is far from being unlawful; we may weep at least for ourselves if we do not weep for them, weep for our own loss, though that may be their gain. Yet we must not be immoderate or excessive in our sorrow; be calm and quiet in our minds, in patience to possess our own souls, and to be quiet towards others; or of a meek and mild, a gentle and peaceable disposition, not given to strife, contention, or division. Satan is very busy to disquiet us; and we have that in our own hearts, that disposes us to be unquiet; therefore let us study to be quiet. It follows, Do your own business; when we go beyond that, we expose ourselves to a great deal of inquietude. Those who are busy-bodies, meddling in other men's matters, generally have but little quiet in their own minds, and cause great disputes, among their neighbours; at least, they seldom mind the other exhortation, to be diligent in their own calling, to work with their own hands. And yet this was what the apostle commanded them, and what is required of us also. Christianity does not discharge us from the work and duty of our particular callings, but teaches us to be diligent therein.

1. This looks as if we had no hope, v. 13. It is to act too much like the Gentiles, who had no hope of a better life after this; whereas we Christians, who have a most sure hope, the hope of eternal life after
II. This is an effect of ignorance concerning those who are dead, v. 13. There are some things which we cannot but be ignorant of, concerning them that are dead, and they are pleased to try a land of darkness, which we know but little of, and to live we know not how. Death is an unknown thing, and the state of the dead, or the state after death, we are much in the dark about; yet there are some things concerning them especially who die in the Lord, that we can know not, and accordingly, to be ignorant of: and if those things any rightly understood and duly considered, they will be sufficient to allay our sorrow concerning them. 1. They sleep in Jesus. They are asleep, v. 13. They are fallen asleep in Christ, 1 Cor. 15. 18. Death does not annihilate them. It is but a sleep to them. It is their rest, an undisturbed rest. They are retired out of this troublesome world, to rest from sin and sorrow, and sleep in Jesus, v. 14. Being still in union with him, they sleep in his arms, and are under his special care and protection. Their souls are in his presence, and their dust under his care and power; so that they are not lost, nor are they losers, but great gainers, by death, and their removal out of this world is into a better. 2. They shall be raised up from the dead, and awakened out of their sleep, for God will bring them with him, v. 14. They then are with God, and are better where they are than when they were here; and when God cometh he will bring them with him. The doctrine of the resurrection, and the second coming of Christ, is a great antidote against the fear of death, and inordinate sorrow for the death of our Christian friends; and this doctrine we have a full assurance of, because we believe that Jesus died and rose again, v. 14. It is taken for granted, that as Christians they knew and believed this. The death and resurrection of Christ are fundamental articles of the Christian religion, and give us hope of a joyful resurrection: for Christ, being risen from the dead, is become the first-fruits of them that sleep; and therefore they who are fallen asleep in him, are not perished or lost, 1 Cor. 15. 18, 20. His resurrection is full of all grace, which is said in the gospel, or by the word of the Lord, which has brought life and immortality to light. 3. Their state and condition shall be glorious and happy at the second coming of Christ. This the apostle informs the Thessalonians of by the word of the Lord, (v. 13.) by divine revelation from the Lord Jesus: for though the resurrection of the dead, and future state of blessedness, were part of the creed of the early Christians, and it must remain until the day of the Lord, which is veiled, ye shall see it revealed in and by the gospel. By this word of the Lord we know, (1.) That the Lord Jesus will come down from heaven in all the pomp and power of the upper world; (v. 16.) The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout. He ascended up into heaven after his resurrection, and is passed through these material heavens into the third heaven; but that must remain until the day of the Lord, v. 17. He will then come again, and appear in his glory. He will descend from heaven into this our air, v. 17. The appearance will be with pomp and power, with a shout—the shout of a king, and the power and authority of a mighty King and Conqueror, with the voice of the archangel; an immovable company of angels will attend him; perhaps one, as General of those hosts of the Lord, shall give notice of his approach, and the glorious appearance of this great Redeemer and Judge shall be proclaimed and ushered in by the triumph of God. For the trumpet shall sound, and that will wake them that sleep in the dust of the earth, and shall summon all the world to appear. For, (2.) The dead shall be raised; The dead in Christ shall rise first, (v. 16.) before those who are found alive at Christ's coming, shall be changed; and so it appears that those who shall then be found alive, shall not prevent them that are asleep, v. 15. The first care of the Redeemer in that day, will be about his dead saints; he will raise them before the great change passes on them that shall be found alive; so that those who did not sleep in death, will have no greater privilege or joy at that day than those who fell asleep in Jesus. (3.) They shall be found alive, will then be changed. They shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, v. 17. At, or immediately before, this rapture into the clouds, those who are alive will undergo a mighty change, that will be equivalent to dying. This change is so mysterious, that we cannot comprehend it, we know little or nothing of it, 1 Cor. 15. 51. It will involve the immortality of the soul, and immortality; and these bodies shall be made fit to inherit the kingdom of God, which flesh and blood in its present state are not capable of. This change will be in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, (1 Cor. 15. 52.) in the very instant, or not long after the raising up of them that sleep in Jesus. And these who are raised, are thus changed, shall meet together in the clouds and there meet with their Lord, to congratulate him on his coming, to receive the crown of glory he will then bestow upon them, and to be assessors with him in judgment, approving and applauding the sentence he will then pass upon the prince of the power of the air, and all the wicked who shall be doomed to destruction with the Devil and his angels. (4.) Here is the bliss of the saints at that day; they shall be ever with the Lord, v. 17. It will be some part of their felicity, that all the saints shall meet together, and remain together for ever: but the principal happiness of heaven is this, to be with the Lord, to see him, live with him, and enjoy him, for ever. This should comfort the saints upon the death of their pious friends: that although death has made a separation, yet their souls and bodies will meet again; we and they shall meet together again: we and they with all the saints shall meet our Lord, and be with him; and he shall be with us, v. 18. They shall have converse with him from him or from another for ever. And the apostle would have us comfort one another with these words, v. 18. We should endeavour to support one another in times of sorrow; not deaden one another's spirits, or weaken one another's hands, but should comfort one another; and that may be done by serious consideration and discourse on these matters. He has been before to expound and explain the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, the second coming of Christ, and the glory of the saints in that day.

CHAP. V. The apostle, having spoken in the opening of this foregoing chapter concerning the resurrection of the dead, and the second coming of Christ, proceeds to speak concerning the unsearchableness of inquiring after the particular time of Christ's coming, which would be sudden and terrible to the wicked, but comfortable to the saints, v. 1—5. He then exhorts them to the duties of watchfulness; sobriety, and the exercise of faith, love, and hope, as being suitable to their state, v. 6—10. In the next words he exhorts them to several duties, which they owed to one another; and to one another; v. 11—14. Afterward to several other Christian duties of great importance; (v. 16—22.) and then concludes this epistle, v. 23—26.
1. BUT of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. 2. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. 3. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. 4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. 5. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

In these words, observe,

1. The apostle tells the Thessalonians, it was needless or useless to inquire about the particular time of Christ's coming; of the times and seasons, ye need not that I write unto you, v. 1. The thing is certain that Christ will come, and there is a certain time appointed for his coming; but there was no need that the apostle should write about that, and therefore he had no revelation given him; nor should they or we inquire into this secret, which the Father has reserved in his own power. Of that day and hour knoweth no man, for Christ himself did not call it, while it was in the night. It was not in his commission as the great Prophet of the church; nor did he reveal this to the apostles; there was no need of this; there are times and seasons for us to do our work in, these it is our duty and interest to know and observe; but the time and season when we must give up our account, we know not, nor is it needful that we should know them. Note, There are many things which our vain curiosity desires to know, which there is necessity at all of our knowing; nor would our knowledge of them do us good.

2. He tells them that the coming of Christ would be sudden, and a great surprise to most men, v. 2. And this is what they knew perfectly, or might know, because our Lord himself had so said: In such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh, Matt. 24. 44. So Mark 13. 35, 36. Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, lest he come suddenly, he find you sleeping. And no doubt the apostle had told them, as of the coming of Christ, so also of his coming suddenly, which is the meaning of his coming as a thief in the night, Rev. 16. 15. As the thief usually cometh in the dead time of the night, when he is least expected; such a surprise will the day of the Lord be; so sudden and surprising his appearance. The knowledge of this will be more useful than to know the exact time, because this should awaken us to stand upon our watch, that we may be ready whenever he cometh.

3. He tells them how terrible Christ's coming would be to the ungodly, v. 3. It will be to their destruction in that day of the Lord. The righteous God will bring ruin upon his, and his people's, enemies, with their destruction, as it will be total and final, so, (1.) It will be sudden. It will overtake them, and fall upon them, in the midst of their carnal security and folly; when they say in their hearts Peace and safety, when they dream of felicity, and please themselves with vain amusements of their fancies or their senses, and think not of it: as travail cometh upon a woman with child, at the set time indeed, but not perhaps just then expected, or readily feared. (2.) It will be unavoidable destruction too; They shall not escape; they shall in no wise escape. There will be no means possible for them to avoid the terror or the punishment of that day. There will be no place where the workers of iniquity shall be able to hide themselves; no shelter from the storm, or shadow from the burning heat that shall consume the wicked.

4. He tells them how comfortable this day will be to the righteous, v. 4, 5. Where observe,

(1.) Their character and privilege. They are not in darkness; they are the children of the light, &c. This was the happy condition of the Thessalonians, and of all true Christians. They were not in a state of sin and ignorance, as the heathen world. They were sometime darkness, but were made light in the Lord. They were favoured with the divine revelation of things that are unseen and eternal, particularly concerning the coming of Christ, and the consequences thereof. They were the children of the day, for the Day-star had risen upon them; yea, the Sun of righteousness had shone on them with healing under his wings. They were no longer under the darkness of idolatry, or under the shadow of the law, but under the gospel, which brings life and immortality to light.

(2.) Their great advantage on this account; that that day should not overtake them as a thief, v. 4. It was at least their own fault, if they were surprised by that day. They had fair warning, and sufficient helps to provide against that day, and might hope to stand with comfort and confidence before the Son of man. This would be a great advantage of refugees from among us, from the presence of the Lord, who to them that look for him will appear without sin unto their salvation, and will come to them as a friend in the day, not as a thief in the night.

6. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober. 7. For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that are drunken are drunken in the night. 8. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love; and for a helmet, the hope of salvation. 9. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. 10. Who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

On what had been said, the apostle grounds seasonable exhortations to several needful duties.

1. To watchfulness and sobriety, v. 6. These duties are distinct, yet they mutually befriended one another. For while we are compassed about with so many temptations from Satan, and our own corruptions, we must be sober, unless we be upon our guard; and unless we keep sober, we shall not long watch.

1. Then let us not sleep, as do others, but let us watch; we must not be secure and careless, or indulge spiritual sloth and idleness. We must not be off our watch, but continually upon our guard against sin, and temptation to it. The generality of men are too careless of their duty, and regardless of their spiritual concerns. They are drunk and sazzled, when they are in the greatest danger; doze away their precious moments, on which eternity depends, indulging idle dreams; and have no more thoughts and cares about another world than men that are asleep have about this. Either they do not consider the things of another world at all, because they are asleep; or they do not consider them aright, because they dream. But let us watch, and set like men that are awake, and that stand upon their guard.

2. Let us also be sober, or temperate and moderate. Let us keep our natural desires and appetites after the things of this world, within due bounds. Sobriety is usually opposed to excess in meats and drinks, and here particularly it is opposed to drunk enness: but it also extends to all other temporal things. Thus our Saviour warned his disciples, to take heed lest their hearts should be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon them unawares, Luke 21. 34. Our watchfulness then, as to all temporal things, should be known to all men, because the Lord is at hand.

Beside this, watchfulness and sobriety are most suitable to the Christian's character and privilege, as being children of the day; because they that sleep, sleep in the night, and they that are drunken, are drunken in the night, v. 7. It is a most proper and fit time for men to sober away the day-time, which is for doing, and not for sleep; to be drunken in the day, when so many eyes are upon them, to behold their shame. It was not so strange if those who had not the benefit of divine revelation suffered themselves to be lulled asleep by the Devil in carnal security, and if they laid the reins upon the neck of their appetites, and indulged themselves in all manner of riot and excess; for it was night-time with them, they were not sensible of their danger, therefore they slept; they were not sensible of their duty, therefore they were drunk: but it ill becomes Christians to do this. What! shall Christians, who have the light of the blessed gospel shining in their faces, be careless about their souls, and unmindful of another world? They who have so many eyes upon them, should conduct themselves with peculiar propriety.

11. To be well armed as well as watchful: to put on the whole armour of God. And this is necessary in order to such sobriety as becomes us, and will be a preparation for the day of the Lord; because our spiritual enemies are many, and mighty, and malicious; they draw many to their interest, and keep them in it, by making them careless, secure, and presumptuous, by making them drunk; drunk with pride, drunk with passion, drunk and giddy with self-conceit; drunk with the gratification of applause, so that we have need to arm ourselves against their attempts, by putting on the spiritual breastplate, to keep the heart, and the spiritual helmet, to secure the head; and this spiritual armour consists of the three great graces of Christians, faith, love, and hope, v. 8.

1. We must live by faith, and that will keep us war-like and sober. If we believe that the eye of God (who is a spirit) is always upon us, that we have spiritual enemies to grapple with, that there is a world of spirits to prepare for, we shall see reason to watch and be sober. Faith will be our best defence against the assaults of our enemies.

2. We must get a heart inflamed with love; and this also will be our defence. True and fervent love to God, and the things of God, will keep us watchful another, and suffer our apostasy in times of trouble and temptation.

3. We must make salvation our hope, and should have a lively hope of it. This good hope, through grace, of eternal life, will be as a helmet to defend the head, and hinder our being intoxicated with the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season. If we have hope of salvation, let us take heed of doing any thing that shall harm our hopes, or render us unworthy of them, for the great salvation we hope for. Having mentioned salvation and the hope of it, the apostle shews what grounds and reasons Christians have to hope for this salvation; as to which, observe, he says nothing of their merit in it. No, the doctrine of our merits is altogether unscriptural and antiscientific; there is no foundation of any good hope upon that account. But our hopes are to be grounded, (1.) Upon God's appointment; because God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation, v. 9. (2.) Upon God's appointment, because God's power and grace are set forth to us, v. 10.
I. THESSALONIANS, V.

the duty of every one of us, to study that which is for the edification of those with whom we converse; to please all men for their real profit. We should communicate our knowledge and experiences one to another. We should join in prayer and praise one with another. We should set a good example one before another. And it is the duty of those especially who live in the same vicinity and family, that they converse together, and worship together. Such is the best end of society. Such as are nearly related together, and have affection for one another, as they have the greatest opportunity, so they are under the greatest obligation, to do this kindness one to another. This the Thessalonians did, (which also ye do,) and this is what they are exhorted to continue and increase in doing. Now, therefore, that when they have given such duty exhortations to excite them to do good, to do more good, as well as continue in doing what they do.

II. He shows them their duty toward their ministers, v. 12, 13. Though the apostle himself was driven from them, yet they had others who labour into them, and to whom they owed these duties. The apostle here exhorteth them to observe.

The ministers, and show their zeal described by the work of their office; and they should rather mind the work and duty they are called to, than affect venerable and honourable names that they may be called by. Their work is very weighty, and very honourable and useful. (1.) Ministers must labour among their people, labour with diligence, and unto weariness; (so the word in the original imports,) They must labour in the word and doctrine, 1 Tim. 5. 17. They are called labourers, and should not be loiterers. They must labour with their people, to instruct, comfort, and edify them. And, (2.) Ministers are to rule their people also, so the word is rendered, 1 Tim. 5. 17. They must rule, not with rigour, but with love. They must not exercise dominion as temporal lords; but rule as spiritual guides, by setting a good example to the flock. They are over the people in the Lord, to distinguish them from civil magistrates, and to declare also that "they are but ministers under Christ, appointed by him, and must rule the people by Christ's laws, and not by laws of their own. This may also intimate the end of their office and all their labour; namely, the service and honour of the Lord. (3.) They must also admonish the people, and that not only publicly, but privately, as there may be occasion. They must instruct them to do well, and should reprove them when they do ill. It is they that are not only to give good counsel, but also to give admonition: to give warning to the flock of the dangers they are liable to, and reprove for negligence or what else may be amiss.

2. What the duty of the people is toward their ministers. There is a mutual duty between ministers and people. If ministers should labour among their people, so should they bear with their people. As the shepherd should know his flock, so the sheep must know their shepherd. They must know his person, bear his voice, acknowledge him for their pastor, and pay due regard to his teaching, ruling, and admonitions. (2.) They must esteem their ministers highly in love; they should greatly value the office of the ministry, honour and love the persons of their ministers, and shew the highest estimation in all proper ways, and this for their work's sake, because their business is to promote the honour of Christ, and the welfare of men's souls. Note, Faithful ministers ought to be so far from being lightly esteemed because of their work, that they should be highly esteemed on account thereof. The work of the ministry is so far from being a disgrace to them who upon other accounts deserve esteem, that it puts an honour upon them who are faithful and diligent, which otherwise they could lay no claim to; and will procure them that esteem and love among good people, which otherwise they could not expect.

III. He gives divers other exhortations touching the duty Christians owe to one another.

1. To be always ready to answer the inquiry, v. 13. Some understand this exhortation, (according to the reading in some copies,) as referring to the people's duty to their ministers, to live peaceably with them, and not raise and promote dissensions at any time between minister and people, which will certainly prove a hindrance to the success of a minister's work, and the edification of the people. This is certain, that ministers and people should avoid every mistake and misunderstanding that may alienate their affections one from another. And the people should be at peace among themselves, doing all they can to hinder any differences from raising or continuing among them, and using all proper means to preserve peace and harmony.

2. To warn the unruly, v. 14. There will be in all societies some who walk disorderly, who go out of their rank, and station; and it is not only the duty of ministers, but of private Christians also, to warn and admonish them. Such should be reproved for their sin, warned of their danger, and told plainly of the injury they do their own souls, and the hurt they may do to others. Such should be put in mind of what they should do, and be reproved for doing otherwise.

3. To comfort the feeble-minded, v. 14. By these are intended the timorous and faint-hearted, or such as are dejected and of a sorrowful spirit. Some are cowardly, afraid of difficulties, and disheartened at the thoughts of hazards and losses, and afflictions; now such should be encouraged; we should not despise them, but comfort them; and who knows what good a kind and comfortable word may do them?

4. To support the weak, v. 14. Some are not well able to perform their work, nor bear up under their burdens; we should therefore support them, help their infirmities, and lift at one end of the burden, and so help to bear it. It is the grace of God, indeed, that must strengthen and support such; but we should tell them of that grace, and endeavour to minister of that grace to them.

5. To be patient towards all men, v. 14. We must bear and forbear. We must be long-suffering, and suppress our anger, if it begins to rise upon the offences of others, to prevent worse; we must not fail to moderate our anger, and this duty must be exercised towards all men, good and bad, high and low. We must not be high in our expectations and demands, or hard in our impositions, but endeavour to make the best we can of every thing, and think the best we can of everybody.

6. Not to return evil for evil to any man, v. 15. This we never look to, and be very careful about, that is, we must by all means forbear to avenge ourselves. If others do us an injury, that will not justify us in returning it, in doing the same, or the like, or any other injury to them. It becomes us to forgive, as those that are, and that hope to be, forgiven of God.

7. Ever to follow that which is good, v. 15. In general, we must study to do what is our duty, and pleasing to God, in all circumstances, whether men do us good turns or ill turns; whatever men do to us, we must do good to others. We must always endeavour to be beneficent and instrumental to promote the welfare of others, both among ourselves, (in the first place to them that are of the household of faith,) and then, as we have opportunity, unto all men, Gal. 6. 10.
16. Rejoice evermore. 17. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God concerning you. 18. Quench not the Spirit. 19. Despise not prophecies. 20. Prove all things; hold fast what is good. 22. Abstain from all appearance of evil.

Here we have divers short exhortations, that will not burden our memories, but will be of great use to direct the motions of our hearts and lives; for the duties are of great importance; and we may observe, how they are connected together, and have a dependence upon one another.

1. Rejoice evermore. v. 16. This must be understood of spiritual joy: for we must rejoice in our creature-comforts, as if we rejoiced not, and must not expect to live many years, and rejoice in them all; but if we do rejoice in God, we may do that evermore. In him our joy will be full; and it is our fault if we have not a continual feast. If we are sorrowful upon any worldly account, yet still we may always rejoice. 2 Cor. 6. 10. Note. A religious heart is to be the seat of joy.

2. Pray without ceasing. v. 17. Note. The way to rejoice evermore, is, to pray without ceasing. We should rejoice more, if we prayed more. We should keep up stated times for prayer, and continue instant in prayer. We should pray always, and not faint; pray without weariness, and continue in prayer, till we come to that world where prayer shall be swallowed up in praise. The meaning is not, that men should do nothing but pray, but this holy nothing else we do should hinder prayer in its proper season. Prayer will help forward, and not hinder, all other lawful business, and every good work.

3. In every thing give thanks. v. 18. If we pray without ceasing, we shall not want matter for thanksgiving, in every thing. As we must in every thing make our requests known to God by supplications, so we must not omit thanksgiving; Phil. 4. 6. We should be thankful in every condition, even in adversity as well as prosperity. It is never so bad with us, but it might be worse. If we have ever so much occasion to make our humble complaints to God, we never can have any reason to complain of God, and have always much reason to praise and give thanks: the apostle says, This is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us, that we give thanks; seeing God is reconciled to us in Christ Jesus; in him, through him, and for his sake, he allows us to rejoice evermore, and appoints us in every thing to give thanks. It is pleasing to God.

4. Quench not the Spirit; (v. 19.) for it is this Spirit of grace and supplication, that helpeth our infirmities, that assisteth us in our prayer and thanksgivings. Christians are said to be baptized with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. He worketh as fire, by enlightening, elevating, and purifying the souls of men. We must be careful not to quench this Spirit of fire. As fire is put out by withdrawing fuel, so we quench the Spirit, if we do not stir up our spirits, and all that is within us, to comply with the motions of the good Spirit; and as fire is quenched by pouring water, or putting a great quantity of dirt upon it, so we must be careful not to quench the Holy Spirit, by indulging carnal lusts and affections, or minding only earthly things; 5. Despise not prophecies; (v. 20.) for if we neglect the means of grace, we forfeit the Spirit of grace. By prophecies here we are to understand the preaching of the word, the interpretation and applying of the scriptures; and this we must not despise, but should prize and value, because it is the ordinance of God, appointed of him for our furtherance and increase in knowledge and grace, and holiness and comfort. We must not despise preaching, though it be plain, and not with enticing words of men's wisdom, and though we are told no more than what we knew before. It is useful, and many times needful, to have our minds stirred up, our affections and resolutions renewed; to those things that we knew before to be our interest and our duty.

6. Prove all things, but hold fast that which is good, v. 21. This is a needful caution, to prove all things; for though we must put a value on preaching, we must not take things upon trust from the preacher, but try them by the law and the testimony. We must search the scriptures, whether what they say be true or not. We must not believe every spirit, but must try the spirits. But we must not be always trying, always unsettled; no, at length we must be settled, and hold fast that which is good. When we are satisfied, that any thing is right, and true, and good, we must hold it fast, and not let it go, whatever opposition or whatever persecution we meet with for the sake thereof. Note, The doctrines of human infallibility, implicit faith, and blind obedience, are not the doctrines of the Bible. Every Christian, and all, ought to have, the judgment of discretion, and should have his own test of the truth from the discerning between good and evil, truth and falsehood, Heb. 5. 13, 14. And proving all things must be in order to the holding fast that which is good. We must not always be seekers, or fluctuating in our minds, like children tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

7. Abstain from all appearance of evil. v. 22. This is a good means to prevent our being deceived with false doctrines, or unsettled in our faith; for our Saviour has told us, (John 7. 17.) If a man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. Corrupt affections indulged in the heart, and evil practices allowed of in the life, will greatly tend to produce fatal errors in the mind: whereas purity of heart, and integrity of life, will dispose men to receive the truth in the love of it. We should therefore abstain from evil, and all appearances of evil, from sin, and that which looks like sin, leads to it, and borders upon it. He who is not shy of the appearances of sin, who shuns not the occasions of sin, and who avoids not the temptations and approaches to sin, will not long abstain from the actual commission of sin.

23. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly: and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 24. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. 25. Brethren, pray for us. 26. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss. 27. I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren. 28. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

These words conclude this epistle. In which observe,

1. Paul's prayer for them, v. 25. He had told them, in the beginning of this epistle, that he always made mention of them in his prayers; and now that he is expressing to them, he lifts up his heart to God in prayer for them. Take notice.

(1.) To whom the apostle prays, namely, The very God of peace. He is the God of grace, and the God of peace and love. He is the Author of peace, and Lover of concord; and by their peaceableness and unity, from God as the Author, those things would best be obtained, which he prays for.

(2.) The things he prays for on behalf of the Thessalonians, are, their sanctification, that God would sanctify them wholly: and their preservation, that they might be preserved blameless. He prays that they might be wholly sanctified, that the whole man, spirit, soul, and body, might be preserved: or, he prays, that they might be wholly sanctified, more perfectly, for the best are sanctified but in part, while in this world: and therefore, we should pray for and press toward complete sanctification. When the good work of grace is begun, it shall be carried on, be protected and preserved; and all those who are sanctified in Christ Jesus, shall be preserved to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. And because, if God did not carry on his good work in the soul, that would miscarry; we should pray to God, to perfect his work, and preserve us blameless, free from sin and impurity, till at length we are presented faultless before the throne of his glory with exceeding joy.

2. His comfortable assurance that God would hear his prayer;

Faithful is he who calleth you, who will also do it, v. 24. The kindness and love of God had appeared to them in calling them to the knowledge of his truth, and the faithfulness of God was their security, that they should persevere to the end; and therefore the apostle assures them, God would do what he desired; he would effect what he had promised; he would accomplish all the good pleasure of his goodness toward them. Note, Our fidelity to God depends upon his faithfulness to us.

3. His request of their prayers; Brethren, pray for us, v. 25. We should pray for one another; and brethren should thus express brotherly love. This great apostle did not think it beneath him to call the Thessalonians brethren, or to request their prayers. Ministers stand in need of their people's prayers; and the more people pray for their ministers, the more good ministers may have from God, and the people may receive by their ministry.

4. His salutation; Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss, v. 26. Thus the apostle sends a friendly salutation from himself, and Silvanus, and Timothy; and would have them salute each other in their names: and thus he would have them signify their mutual love and affection to one another by the kiss of charity, (1 Pet. 5. 14.) which is here called a holy kiss, to intimate how cautious they should be of all impurity in the use of this ceremony, then commonly practised; as it should not be a treacherous kiss like that of Judas, so not a lascivious kiss like that of the harlot, Prov. 7. 13.

5. His solemn charge for the reading of this epistle, v. 27. This is not only an exhortation, but an adjuration by the Lord. And this epistle was to be read to all the holy brethren. It is not only allowed to the common people, to read the scriptures, and what none should prohibit, but it is their indispensable duty, and what they should be persuaded to do. In order to this, these holy oracles should not be kept concealed in an unknown tongue, but translated into the vulgar languages; that, all men being concerned to know the scriptures, they all may be able to read them, and be acquainted with them. The public reading of the law was one part of the worship of the sabbath among the Jews in their synagogues, and the scriptures should be read in the public assemblies of Christians also.

6. The apostolical benediction that is usual in other epistles; The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen, v. 28. We need no more to make us happy, than to know that grace which our Lord Jesus Christ has manifested, be interested in that grace which he has purchased, and partake of that grace which dwells in him as the Head of the church. This is an ever-flowing and over-flowing fountain of grace to supply all our wants.

AN EXPOSITION

WITH

OF THE

SECOND EPISTLE

ST. PAUL TO THE THESSALONIANS.

Completed by Mr. D. Mayo.

THIS Second Epistle was written soon after the former, and seems to be designed to prevent their running into a mistake which might arise from some passages in the former Epistle, concerning the Second coming of Christ; as if it were near at hand. The apostle in this Epistle is careful to prevent any
II. THESALONIANS, I.

After the introduction, (v. 1, 2.) the apostle begins this epistle with an account of his high esteem for these Thessalonians, v. 3, 4. He then comforts them under their afflictions and persecutions, v. 5...10. And tells them what his prayers were to God for them, v. 11, 12.

1. PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: 2. Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: 3. We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth; 4. So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure;

Here we have,

I. The introduction, (v. 1, 2.) in the same words as in the former epistle. From whence we may observe, That as the apostle did not count it grievous to him to write the same things (Phil. 3. 1.) in this epistle, that he had delivered in preaching; so he willingly wrote the same things to one church that he did to another. The occurrence of the same words in the second epistle as in the former, shows us, that ministers ought not so much to regard the variety of expression and elegance of style, as the truth and usefulness of the doctrines they preach. And great care should be taken, lest, from an affection of novelty in method and phrases, we advance new notions or doctrines, contrary to the principles of natural or revealed religion, upon which this church of the Thessalonians was built, as all true churches are; namely, in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

II. The high esteem this apostle had for them. He not only had a great affection for them, (as he had expressed in his former epistle, and now again in his pious wish of grace and peace for them,) but he also expresses his great esteem for them. Concerning which observe,

1. How his esteem of them is expressed.

(1.) He glorified God on their behalf; We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, v. 3. He chooses rather to speak of what was praise-worthy in them, in a way of thanksgiving to God, than by commendation of them; and as what he mentions was matter of his rejoicing, he accounted it matter of thanksgiving, and it was meet or fit it should be so; for we are bound, and it is our duty, to be thankful to God for all the good that is found in us or others; and it not only is an act of Kindness to our fellow-Christians, but our duty, to thank God on their behalf.

(2.) He also glorifies in them before the churches of God, v. 4. The apostle never flattered his friends, but he took pleasure in commending them, and speaking well of them, to the glory of God, and for the encouragement and encouragement of others. Paul did not glory in his own gifts, or his labour among them, but he gloried in the grace of God which was bestowed upon them, and so his glorying was good; because all the commendation he gave to them, and the pleasure he took himself, centred in the praise and glory of God.

2. For what he esteemed them and thanked God; namely, the increase of their faith, and love, and patience. In his former epistle, (ch. 1. 3.) he gave thanks for their faith, love, and persecutions; here he gives thanks for the increase of all those graces, that they were not only true Christians, but growing Christians. Note, Where there is the truth of grace, there will be increase of it. The path of the just is as a shining light, which shines more and more unto the perfect day. And where there is the increase of grace, God must have all the glory of it. We are as much indebted to him for the improvement of grace, and the progress of that good work, as we are for the first work of grace, and the very beginning of it. We may be tempted to think, that though when we were bad we could not make ourselves good, yet when we are good we can easily make ourselves better; but we have as much dependence on the grace of God for increasing the grace we have, as for planting grace when we had it not. The matter of the apostle's thanksgiving and glorying on behalf of the Thessalonians, was,

(1.) That their faith grew exceedingly, v. 5. They were more confirmed in the truth of gospel-revelations, confined in gospel-promises, and had lively expectations of another world. The growth of their faith appeared by the works of faith; and where faith grows, all other graces grow proportionably.

(2.) Their charity abounded, (v. 3.) their love to God and man. Note, Where faith grows, love will abound, for faith works by love; and not only the charity of some of them, but of every one to each other, did abound. There were no such divisions among them as in some other churches.

(3.) Their patience as well as faith increased in all their persecutions and tribulations. And then patience has its perfect work, when it extends itself to all trials. There were a more high esteem for them, which the Thessalonians endured for the sake of righteousness, as well as other troubles which they met with in this calamitous life; yet they endured all these, by faith seeing him that is invisible, and looking to the recompense of reward; and endured them with patience, not with an insensibility under them, but with a patient bearing them, and that from Christian principles, which kept them quiet and submissive, and afforded them inward strength and support.

5. Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer: 6. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; 7. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. 8. In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: 9. Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; 10. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe, (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

Having mentioned their persecutions and tribulations, which they endured principally for the cause of Christ, the apostle proceeds to offer several things for their comfort under them. As, the present happiness and advantage of their sufferings, v. 5. Their faith, being thus tried, and patience exercised, were improved by their sufferings, insomuch that they were counted worthy of the kingdom of God. Their sufferings were a manifest token of this, that they were worthy or meet to be accounted Christians indeed, seeing they could suffer for Christianity. And the truth is, Religion, if it is worth any thing, is worth every thing, and those either have no religion at all, or none that is worth having, or know not how to value it, that cannot find in their hearts to suffer for it. Besides, from their patient suffering, it appeared that, according to the righteous judgment of God, they should be counted worthy of the heavenly glory: not by worthiness of condignity, but of congruity only; not that they could merit heaven, but they were made meet for heaven. We cannot by all our sufferings, and more than by our services, merit heaven as a debt; but by our patience under our sufferings, we are qualified for the joy that is promised to patient sufferers in the cause of God.

11. He tells them next of the future recompense that shall be given to persecutors, and persecuted.

1. There will be a punishment inflicted on persecutors; God will recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, v. 6. And there is nothing that more infallibly marks a man for eternal ruin, than a spirit of persecution, and enmity to the name and people of God: as the faith, patience, and constancy of the saints are to them an earnest of everlasting rest and joy, so the pride, malice, and wickedness of their persecutors are to them an earnest of everlasting misery: for every man carries about with him, and carries out of the world with him, either his hell or his heaven. God will render recompense, and will trouble them that trouble his people. This he has done sometimes in this world, witness the dreadful end of many persecutors; but especially this he will do in the other world, where the portion of the wicked must be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

2. There is a reward for them that are persecuted; God will recompense their trouble with rest, v. 7. There is a rest that remains for the people of God; a rest from sin and sorrow. Though many may be the troubles of the righteous now, yet God will deliver them out of them all. The future rest will abundantly recompense all their present troubles. The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed.

There is enough in heaven, to counterbalance all that we may lose or suffer for the name of Christ in this world. 'The apostle says, To you who are troubled, rest with us. In heaven, ministers and people shall rest together, and rejoice together, who suffer together here; and the meanest Christian shall rest with the greatest in heaven.' Concerning this future recompense we are further to observe,

1. The certainty of it, proved by the righteousness and justice of God: It is a righteous thing with God, (v. 6.) to render to every man according to his works. The thoughts of this should be terrible to wicked men and persecutors, and the great support of the righteous in trouble and suffering, for seeing there is a righteous God, there will be a righteous recompense, and God's suffering people shall lose nothing by their sufferings, and their enemies will gain nothing by their advantages against them.

2. The time when this righteous recompense shall be made; When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, v. 7. That will be the day of the righteous judgment of God; for then will God judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath appointed, even Jesus Christ the righteous Judge. The righteousness of God does not so visibly appear to all men in the procedure of his providence, as it will in the process of the great judgment-day. The scripture has made known to us the judgment to come, and we are bound to receive the revelation here given concerning it. As, The Lord Jesus will in that day appear from heaven. Now the heavens retain him, they conceal him; but then he will be revealed and made manifest. He will come in the pomp and power of the upper world, from whence we look for the Saviour.

3. He will be revealed with his mighty angels, (v. 7.) or the angels of his presence; these will attend upon him, to glorify the solemnity of that great day of his appearance; they will be the ministers of his justice and mercy in that day; they will summon the criminals to his tribunal, and gather in the elect, and be employed in executing his sentence.

4. He will come in flaming fire, v. 8. A fire goeth before him, that shall consume his enemies. The earth, and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. The earth shall be a devouring fire, to try every man's work; a refining fire, to purify the saints, who shall share in the purity, and partake of the felicity, of the new heaven and the new earth; a consuming fire to the wicked. His light will be piercing, and his power consuming, to all those who in that day shall be found as chalk.

5. The effects of this appearance will be terrible to some, and joyful to others. First, They will be terrible to some; for he will then take vengeance on the wicked.

1. On those that sinned against the principles of natural religion, and rebelled against the light of nature; that know not God, (v. 8.) though the invisible things of him are manifested in the things that are seen.

2. On those that rebels against the light of revelation, that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light. This is the great crime of multitude—the gospel is revealed to them, and they will not believe it; or if they pretend to believe it, they will not obey it. Note, The believing the truth of the gospel is in order to our obeying the precepts of the gospel; there must be the obedience of faith. To such persons as are here mentioned, the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ will be terrible, because of their doom, which is mentioned, ver. 9. Where observe,

(1.) They will then be punished. Though sinners may be long reprieved, yet they will be punished at last. They will be a preacher of sin and a preacher of punishment for their crimes, and only what they have deserved. They did sin's work, and must receive sin's wages.

(2.) Their punishment will be no less than destruction, not of their being, but of their bliss; not that of the body alone, but both as to body and soul. Therefore watch and pray, so as Saviour directs his disciples, (Luke 21. 36.)

Watch we therefore, and pray always, that we may be counted worthy to stand before the Son of man.

Observe,

1. What the apostle prayed for, ver. 11. It is a great concern, to be well instructed what to pray for; and without divine instruction we know not what to pray for, as without divine assistance we shall not pray in such a manner as we ought. Our prayers should be manageable to our expectations. Thus the apostle prayed for the church of Thessalonica.

(1.) That God would begin his good work of grace in them; so we may understand this expression; That our God would count you (as it might be read, make you) worthy of this calling. We are called with a high and holy calling; we are called to God's kingdom and glory; and no less than the inheritance of the saints is the hope of our calling, nothing less than the inheritance of the saints which shall be revealed when Christ shall appear from heaven. Now, if this be our calling, our great concern should be, to be worthy of it, or meet and prepare for this glory: and because we have no worthiness of our own, but what is owing purely to the grace of God, we should pray that he would make us worthy, and then count us worthy, of this calling, or that he would make us meet to partake of the inheritance of the saints in Light, Col. 1.

(2.) That God would carry on the good work that is begun, and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodness. The good pleasure of God denotes his gracious purposes toward his people, which flow from his goodness, and are full of goodness toward them: and it is from thence that all good comes to us. If there be any good in us, it is the fruit of God's good will to us, it is owing to the good pleasure of his goodness, and therefore is called grace. Now, there are various and manifold purposes of grace and good will in God toward his people; and the apostle prays, that all of them may be fulfilled or accomplished toward these Thessalonians. There are several good works of grace begun in the hearts of God's people, which proceed from this good pleasure of God's goodness, and we should desire that they may be completed and perfected. In particular, the apostle prays, that God would make us meet to partake of the inheritance of the saints in heaven. Now, there are various purposes of grace and good will in God toward his people; and the apostle prays, that all of them may be fulfilled or accomplished toward these Thessalonians.

11. Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

In these verses the apostle again tells the Thessalonians of his earnest and constant prayer for them. He could not be present with them, yet he had a constant remembrance of them; they were much upon his thoughts, he wished them well, and could not express his good will and good wishes to them, better than in earnest constant prayer to God for them; Wherefore also we pray, &c. Note, The believing thoughts and expectation of the second coming of Christ should put us upon prayer to God for ourselves and others. We should watch and pray, so does our Saviour directs his disciples, (Luke 21. 36.)

Watch we therefore, and pray always, that we may be counted worthy to stand before the Son of man.

Observe,

coming of Christ, as being very near, v. 1, 3. Then he proceeds to correct the error he had cautioned them against, by telling them of two great events that were antecedent to the coming of Christ—A general apostasy, and the revelation of antichrist, concerning whom the apostle tells them many remarkable things, about his name, his character, his rise, his reign, and the sin and ruin of his subjects, v. 3, 12. He then comforts them against the terror of this apostasy, and exhorts them to steadfastness, v. 13, 15. And concludes with a prayer for them, v. 16, 17.

1. NOW we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, 2. That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 3. Let no man deceive you by any means:

From these words it appears, that some among the Thessalonians had mistaken the apostle's meaning, in what he had written to them in his former epistle about the coming of Christ, by thinking that it was near at hand; that Christ was just ready to appear, and come to judgment. Or, it may be, some among them pretended that they had the knowledge of this by particular revelation from the Spirit, or from some words they had heard from the apostle, when he was with them, or in the letter he had written, or they pretended them, or some other parts; hereupon the apostle is careful to rectify this mistake, and to prevent the spreading of this error. Observe, If errors and mistakes arise among Christians, we should take the first opportunity to rectify them, and hinder the spreading thereof; and good men will be especially careful to suppress errors that may arise from a mistake of their words and actions, though that which was spoken might be very innocent or well. We have a subtle adversary, who watches all opportunities to do mischief, and will sometimes promote errors even by means of the words of scripture. Observe,

I. How very earnest and solicitous this apostle was to prevent mistakes; We beseech you, brethren, &c. v. 1. He entreats them as brethren, who might have charged them, as a father charges his children; he shews great kindness and compassion; and he shews himself into their affections. And this is the best way to deal with men, when we would preserve or recover them from errors, to deal gently and affectionately with them: rough and rigorous treatment will but exasperate their spirits, and prejudice them against the reasons we may offer. He entreats, and even conjures them in the most solemn manner, By the coming of Christ, &c. The words are in the form of an oath; and his meaning is, that if they believed Christ would come, and if they desired he would come, and rejoiced in the hope of his coming, they should be careful to avoid the error, and the evil consequence hereof, that he was now cautioning them against. From this form of oaths used by the apostle, we may observe,

1. It is most certain that the Lord Jesus Christ will judge the world, that he will come in all the power and majesty which he promised to use in the last day, to execute judgment upon all. Whatever uncertainty we are at, or whatever mistakes may arise about the time of his coming, his coming itself is certain. This has been the faith and hope of all Christians in all ages of the church; nay, it was the faith and hope of the Old Testament saints, ever since Faith in light from Adam, who said, Behold I come, Lord Jesus, &c. Jude 2. 1.

2. At the second coming of Christ, all the saints will be gathered together to him; and this mention of the gathering of the saints unto Christ at his coming, shows, that the apostle speaks of Christ's coming to judgment at the last day, and not of his coming to destroy Jerusalem. He speaks of it not as an event of no importance; and as it will be part of Christ's honour in that day, so it will be the completing of the happiness of his saints.

3. That they all shall be gathered together. There will then be a general meeting of all the saints, and none but saints; all the Old Testament saints, who get acquaintance with Christ by the dark shadows of the law, and saw this day at a distance; and all the New Testament saints, to whom life and death were brought home, and who are to receive the gospel; they will all be gathered together. There will then come from the four winds of heaven, all that are, or ever were, or ever shall be, from the beginning to the end of time. All shall be gathered together.

4. That they shall be gathered together to Christ. He will be the great Centre of their unity. They shall be gathered together to him, to be attendants on him, to be assessors with him, to be presented by him to the Father, to be with him for ever, and altogether happy in his presence to all eternity.

5. That the doctrine of Christ's coming, and our gathering together to him, is of great moment and importance to Christians; otherwise it would not be the proper matter of the apostle's exposition. We ought therefore not only to believe these things, but highly to account of them also, and look upon them as things which are greatly concerned in, and should be deeply affected by.

II. The thing itself the apostle cautions the Thessalonians against, is, that they should not be deceived about the time of Christ's coming, and so be shaken in mind, or be troubled. Note, Errors in the mind tend greatly to weaken our faith, and cause us trouble; and such are weak in faith and of troubled minds, are oftentimes apt to be deceived, and fall thereby, as much as others are thereby affected.

1. The apostle would not have them deceived; Let no man deceive you by any means, v. 3. There are many who lie in wait to deceive, and they have many ways of deceiving; we have reason therefore to be cautious, and stand upon our guard. Some deceivers will pretend new revelations, others misinterpret scripture, and others will be guilty of gross forgeries; divers means and artifices of deceit men, to make themselves acceptable to us by any means. The particular matter in which the apostle cautions them not to be deceived, is about the near approach of Christ's coming, as if it was to have been in the apostle's days; and harmless as this error might have seemed to many, yet, because it was indeed an error, it would have proved of bad consequence to many persons. Therefore,

2. He gives them warning, and would not have them soon shaken in mind, or be troubled. We should be cautious of being deceived about the time of Christ's coming. (1.) He would not have their faith weakened. We should firmly believe the second coming of Christ, and be settled and established in the faith of this; but there was danger lest the Thessalonians, if they apprehended the coming of Christ was just at hand, upon finding that they, or others whom they too much regarded, were mistaken as to the time, should thereupon question the truth or certainty of the thing itself; whereas they ought not to wheav in their minds, as to this great thing, which is the faith and hope of all the saints. False doctrines are like the winds that toss the water to and fro, and they are apt to unsettle the minds of men, who are sometimes as unstable as water. Then,

(2.) He would not have their comforts lessened, that they should not be troubled or afflicted with the speedy coming of Christ. It is certain that the faith of Christ was represented in so much terror, as to trouble many serious Christians among them; though in itself it should be matter of the believer's hope and joy; or else many might be troubled with the thought, how surprising this day would be, or with the fear of their unpreparedness, or upon the reflection on their mistake about the time of Christ’s coming; we should always watch and pray, but must not be discouraged, or uncomfortable at the thought of Christ’s coming.

3. For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; 4. Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. 5. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? 6. And now ye know what withholdeth, that he might be revealed in his time. 7. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let until he be taken out of the way. 8. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: 9. Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, 10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. 11. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: 12. That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

In these words the apostle confutes the error he had cautioned them against, and gives the reasons why they should not expect the coming of Christ as just at hand. There were several events previous to the second coming of Christ; in particular, he tells them,

I. There would be a general apostasy, there would come a falling away first, v. 3. By this apostasy we are not to understand a defection in the state, or from civil government, but in spiritual or religious matters, from sound doctrine, instituted worship and church government, and a holy life. The apostle speaks of some very great apostasy, not only of some converted Jews or Gentiles, but such as should be very general, though gradual, and should give occasion to the revelation or rise of antichrist, that man of sin. This, he says, (v. 5.) he had told them of when he was with them, with design, no doubt, that they should not take offence or be stumbled at it. And let us observe, that no sooner was Christianity planted and rooted in the world, than there began to be a defection in the Christian church. It was so in the Old Testament church; presently after any considerable advance in the religion, there followed a defection; soon after the promise there was revolting; soon after men began to call upon the name of the Lord, all flesh corrupted their way; soon after the covenant with Noah the Babel-builders bore defiance to heaven; soon after the covenant with Abraham his seed degenerated in Egypt; soon after the Israelites were planted in Canaan, when the first generation was worn off, they forsak God and served Baal; soon after God’s covenant with David his seed revolted, and served other gods; soon after the return out of captivity there was a general decay of piety, as appears by the story of Ezra and Nehemiah; and therefore it was no strange thing, that after the planting of Christianity there should come a falling away.

II. There would be a revelation of that man of sin; (v. 5.) antichrist would take his rise from this general apostasy. The apostle afterword speaks of the revelation of that wicked one, (v. 8.) intimating the discovery which should be made of his wickedness, in order to his ruin: here he seems to speak of his rise, which should be occasioned by the general apostasy he had mentioned; and to intimate that all sorts of false doctrines and corruptions should adhere in him. Great disputes have been, who or what is intended by this man of sin and son of perdition; and if it is not certain that the papal power and tyranny are principally or only intended, yet this is plain, What is here said does very exactly agree thereto. For observe,

1. The names of this person, or rather the state and power here spoken of. He is called the man of sin, to denote his opposite to righteousness; not only is he addicted to, and practises, wickedness himself, but he also promotes, countenances, and commands sin and wickedness in others; and he is the son of perdition, because he himself is devoted to certain destruction, and is the instrument of destroying many others both in soul and body. These names may properly be applied, for these reasons, to the papal state; and thereto agree also,

2. The character of this state, v. 4.

1. That he opposes and exalts himself above all that is called God, or is worshipped; and thus have the bishops of Rome not only opposed God’s authority, and that of the civil magistrate, who are called gods, but have exalted themselves above God, and earthly governors, in demanding greater regard to their commands than to the commands of God or the magistrate.

2. As God, he sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. As God was in the temple of old, and worshipped there, and is in and with his church now; so the antichrist here mentioned, is some usurper of God’s authority in the Christian church, who claims divine honours; and to whom can this better apply than to the bishops of Rome, to whom the most blasphemous titles have been given, as Dominion and Master Papas—Our Lord and the Pope. Deus alter in terris. Another God on earth; Idol est Dominium Dni et Papae. The dominion of God and the Pope is the same?

3. His rise is mentioned, v. 6, 7. Concerning which, we are to observe two things:

1. There was something that hindered or withheld, or let, until it was taken away. This is supposed to be the power of the Roman empire, which the apostle speaks of as an instrument of defection at that time; and it is notorious that while this power continued, it prevented the advances of the bishops of Rome to that height of tyranny, which soon afterward they arrived to.

2. This mystery of iniquity was gradually to arise at its height; and so it was in effect, that the universal corruption of doctrine and worship in the Romish Church came in by degrees, and the usurpation of the bishops of Rome was gradual, not at once; and thus the mystery of iniquity did the more easily, and almost insensibly, prevail. The apostle justly calls it a mysterium iniquitatis, because wicked designs and actions were concealed under false shews and pretences, at least they were concealed from the common view and observation. By pretended devotion, superstition and idolatry were advanced; and by a pretended zeal for God and his glory, bigotry and persecution were promoted. And he tells us,
This mystery of iniquity did even then begin, or did already work; while the apostles were yet living, the enemy came, and sowed tares; there were then the deeds of the Nicolaitans, persons who pretended zeal for Christ, but really opposed him. Pride, ambition, and worldly interest of church-pastors and church-rulers, as in Diotrephes, and others, were the early working of the mystery of iniquity, which, by degrees, came to that prodigious height, which has been visible in the church of Rome.

4. The fall or ruin of the antichristian state is declared, v. 8. The head of this antichristian kingdom is called that wicked one, or that lawless person who sets up a human power in competition with, and contradiction to, the divine dominion and power of the Lord Jesus Christ: but as he would thus manifest himself to be the man of sin, so the revelation or discovery of this to the world would be the sure presage and the means of his ruin. This presages the Thessalonians that the Lord would consume and destroy him; the consuming of him precedes his final destruction, and that is by the Spirit of his mouth, by his word of command; the pure word of God, accompanied with the Spirit of God, will discover this mystery of iniquity, and make the power of antichrist to consume and waste away; and in due time it shall be totally and finally destroyed, and this is the ruin and fall of antichrist's kingdom.

Note, The coming of Christ to destroy the wicked will be with peculiar glory and eminent lustre and brightness.

5. The apostle further describes the reign and rule of this man of sin. Where we are to observe,

(1.) The manner of his coming or ruling, and working: in general, that it is after the example of Satan, the grand enemy of souls, the great adversary of God. Satan is the author of error and lies, the sworn enemy of the truth as it is in Jesus, and all the faithful followers of Jesus.

More particularly, it is with satanical power and deceit; a divine power is pretended for the support of this kingdom, but it is only after the working of Satan; signs and wonders, visions and miracles, are pretended; by these the papal kingdom was first set up, and has all along been kept up, but they have false signs, and false support false doctrines, and lying wonders, or only pretended miracles that have served their cause, things false in act, and fraudulently managed, to impose upon the people; and the diabolical deceits with which the antichristian state has been supported are notorious. The apostle calls it all deceivableness of unrighteousness. V. 10. Others may call them pious frauds, but the apostle called them unrighteous and wicked frauds; and, indeed, all fraud (which is contrary to truth) is an impious thing. Many are the subtle artifices the man of sin has used, and various are the plausible pretences by which he has beguiled unwary and unstable souls to embrace false doctrines, and submit to his usurped dominion.

(2.) The persons are described, who are his willing subjects, or most likely to become such, v. 10. They are such as love not the truth, that they may be saved. They heard the truth, (it may be,) but they did not love it; they could not bear sound doctrine, and therefore easily imbibed false doctrines; they had some notional knowledge of what was true, but they indulged some powerful prejudices, and so became a prey to seducers; had they loved the truth, they would have persevered in it, and been preserved by it; but no wonder if they easily parted with what they never had any love to. And of these persons it is said, that they perish, or are lost; they are in a lost condition, and in danger to be lost for ever. For,

6. We have the sin and ruin of the subjects as antichrist's kingdom declared, v. 11, 12.

(1.) Their sin is this; They believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness: they did not love the truth, and therefore they did not believe it; and because they did not believe the truth, therefore they had pleasure in unrighteousness, or in wicked actions, and were pleased with false notions. Note, An erroneous mind and vicious life often go together, and help forward one another.

(2.) Their ruin is thus expressed; God shall send them strong delusions, preface, v. 12. He shall send men for their unbelief, and for their dislike of the truth, and love to sin and wickedness; not that God is the author of sin, but in righteousness he sometimes withdraws his grace from such sinners as are here mentioned; he gives them over to Satan, or leaves them to be deluded by his instruments; he gives them up to their own hearts' lusts, and leaves them to themselves, and then sin will follow of course, yea, the worst of wickedness, that shall end at last in eternal damnation. God is just when he inflicts spiritual judgments here, and eternal punishments hereafter, upon those who have no love to the truths of the gospel, who will not believe them, or live suitably to them, but indulge false doctrines in their minds, and wicked practices in their lives and conversations.

13. But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth: Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. 15. Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or by our epistle.

Here observe, 1. The consolation the Thessalonians might take against the terrors of this apostasy, v. 13, 14. For they were chosen to salvation, and called to the obtaining of glory. Note, When we hear of the apostasy of many, it is matter of great comfort and joy that there is a remnant according to the election of grace, which does and shall persevere; and especially we should rejoice, if we have reason to hope that we are of that number. The apostle reckoned himself bound in duty to be thankful to God on this account; we are bound to give thanks to God always for you. He had often given thanks on their behalf; and he is still abounding in thanksgiving for them; and there was good reason, because they were beloved by the Lord, as appeared in this matter,—their security from apostatizing. This preservation of the saints is owing,

(1.) To the stability of the election of grace, v. 13. Therefore were they beloved of the Lord, because God had chosen them from the beginning. He had loved them with an everlasting love. Concerning this election of God, we may observe, [1.] The eternal date thereof, it is from the beginning; not the beginning of the grace of the gospel, or the beginning of the world, before the foundation of the world, Eph. 1. 4. Then, [2.] The end to which they were chosen—salvation, complete and eternal salvation from sin and misery, and the full fruition of all good. [3.] The means in order to obtaining this end—sanctification of the spirit, and belief of the truth. The decree of election therefore connects the end and the means, and these must not be separated. We are not elected of God, because we were holy, but that we might be holy. Being chosen of God, we must not live as we list; but if we are chosen to salvation—as the end, we must be prepared for it by sanctification as the necessary means to obtain that end; which sanctification is by the operation of the Holy Spirit, as the Author, and by faith on our part. There must be the belief of the truth, without which there can be no true salvation, or perseverance in grace, or obtaining of salvation. Faith and holiness must be joined together, as well as holiness and happiness; therefore our Saviour prayed for Peter, that his faith might not fail, (Luke 22. 32.) and for his disciples, John 17. 15. Sanctify them by thy truth; thy word is truth.

(2.) To the efficacy of the gospel-call, v. 14. As they were chosen to salvation, so they were called thereunto by the gospel. Whom he did predestinate, them he also called, Rom. 8. 30. The outward call of God is by the gospel; and this is rendered effectual by the inward operation of the Spirit. Note, Wherever the gospel comes, it calls and invites men to the obtaining of glory; it is a call to honour and happiness, even the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, the glory he has purchased, and the glory he is possessed of, to be communicated unto them who believe in him, and obey his gospel: such shall be with Christ, to behold his glory, and they shall be glorified with Christ, and partake of his glory. Hereupon there follows,

(3.) An exhortation to steadfastness and perseverance; Therefore, brethren, stand fast, v. 15. Observe, he does not say, "Ye are chosen to salvation, and therefore ye may be careless and secure;" but therefore stand fast, God's grace in our election and vocation is so far from superseding our diligent care and endeavour, that it should quicken and engage us to the greatest resolution and diligence. So the apostle John having told those whom he wrote to, that they had received the anointing which should abide in them, and that they should abide in him, (in Christ,) subjoins this exhortation, Now abide in him, 1 John 2. 27, 28. The Thessalonians are exhorted to steadfastness in profession, or to hold fast the traditions which they had been taught, the doctrine of the gospel, which had been delivered by the apostle, by word or epistle. As yet the canon of scripture was not complete, and therefore some things were delivered by the apostles, in their preaching, under the guidance of the infallible Spirit, which Christians were bound to observe as coming from God; other things were afterward written by the apostles committed to writing, as the apostle and his disciples had written a former epistle to these Thessalonians; and these epistles were written, as the writers were moved by the Holy Ghost. Note, There is no argument from hence for regarding oral traditions in our days, now that the canon of scripture is complete, as of equal authority with the sacred writings. Such doctrines and duties as were taught by the inspired apostles, we must steadfastly adhere to; but we have no certain evidence of any thing delivered by them, more than what we find contained in the holy scriptures.

16. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, who hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, v. 17. Comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good word and work.

In these words we have the apostle's earnest prayer for them: in which observe, 1. To whom he prays—to our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father. We may and should direct our prayers, not only to God the Father, through the mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ, but also to our Lord Jesus Christ himself; and should pray in his name unto God, not only as his Father, but as our Father in and through him. 2. From what he takes encouragement in his prayer—from the consideration of what God had already done for him and them; Who hath loved us, and given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, v. 16. Where observe, (1.) The love of God is the spring and fountain of all the good we have or hope for; our election, vocation, justifica- tion, and salvation, are all owing to the love of God in Christ Jesus. (2.) From this fountain in particular all our consolation flows. And the consolation of saints is an everlasting consolation. The comforts of saints are not fleeting things; they shall not die with them: the spiritual blessings which God gives, none shall deprive them of; and God will not take them away; because he loves them with an everlasting love, therefore they should have everlasting consolations. (3.) Their consolation is founded on the hope of eternal life. They rejoice in hope of the glory of God, and are not only patient, but joyful, in tribulations; and there is good reason for these strong consolations, because the saints have good hope: their hope is grounded on the love of God, the promise of God, and the experience they have had of the power, the goodness, and the faithfulness of God, and it is good hope through grace; the free grace and mercy of God are what they hope for, and what their hopes are founded on, and not on any worth or merit of their own. 3. What it is that he asks of God for them—that he would comfort their hearts, and establish them in every good word and work, v. 17. God had given them consolations, and he prays that they might have more abundant consolation. There was good hope, through grace, that they should be preserved, and he prays that they might be established: it is observable how comfort and establishment are here joined together. Note therefore, (1.) Comfort is a means of establishment; for the more pleasure we take in the word, and work, and ways of God, the more likely we shall be to persevere therein. And, (2.) Our establishment in the ways of God is a likely means in order to comfort; whereas, if we are wavering in faith, and of a doubtful mind, or if we are halting and faultering in our duty, no wonder if we are strangers to the pleasures and joys of religion. What is it that lies at the bottom of all our uneasiness, but our unsteadiness in religion? We must be established in every good word and work, in the word of truth and the work of righteousness: Christ must be honoured by our good works and good words; and who are sincere will endeavour do both; and in so doing they may hope for comfort and establishment, till at length their holiness and happiness be completed.

CHAP. III.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, the apostle had prayed earnestly for the Thessalonians, and now he does their prayers, encouraging them to trust in God, to which he subjoins another petition for them, v. 1. 5. He then proceeds to give them commands and directions for correcting some things he was informed were amiss among them, v. 6. 13. And concludes with benedictions and prayers, v. 16. 18.

1. Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you; 2. And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith. 3. But the Lord is faithful, who shall establish you, and keep you from evil. 4. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you. 5. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ.

In these words observe, 1. The apostle desires the prayers of his friends; Finally, brethren, pray for us, ver. 1. He always remembered them in his prayers, and would not have them forget him and his fellow-labourers, but bear them on their hearts at the throne of grace. Note, 1. This is one way by which the communion of saints is kept up, not only by their praying together, or with one another, but by their praying for one another, when they are in the same place, or at a great distance, may meet together at the throne of grace; and thus they who are not capable of doing or receiving any other kindness, may yet this way do and receive real and very great kindness. 2. It is the duty of people to pray for their ministers; and not only for their own pastors, but also for all good and faithful ministers. And, 3. Ministers need, and therefore should draw from God, grace to be made able to perform their office. How remarkable is the humility, and how engaging the example, of this great apostle, who was so mighty in prayer himself, and yet despaired not the prayers of the meanest Christian, but desired an interest in them. Observe, further, what they are desired and directed to pray for; namely,

(1.) For the success of the gospel ministry; that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, 2. This was the greatest thing that blessed Paul was most solicitous about. He was more solicitous that, God's name might be sanctified, his kingdom come, and his will be done, than he was about his own daily bread. He desired that the word of the Lord might run, (so it is in the original,) that it might get ground, that the interest of religion in the world might go forward and not backward, and not only go forward, but go on.

All the purposes of hell were then in motion. There was more life, raised and matured to oppose the word of the Lord, to hinder its publication and success; we should pray, therefore, that oppositions may be removed, that so the gospel may have free course to the ears, the hearts, and the consciences of men, that it may be glorified in the conviction and conversion of sinners, the confutation of gain-sayers, and the holy conversation of the saints. And, 3. The word of the Lord may be made it honourable, will glorify the gospel, and make that honourable, and so will glorify his own name. And good ministers and good Christians may very well be contented to be little, to be anything, to be nothing, if Christ be magnified and his gospel be glorified. Paul was now at Athens, or, as some think, at Corinth, and would have the Thessalonians pray that he might have as good a time of things there as he did at Corinth. 2 Thess. 2. 20. Notice, it might be as well with others even as it was with them. Note, If ministers have been successful in one place, they should desire to be successful in every place where they may preach the gospel.

(2.) For the safety of gospel ministers. He asks their prayers, not for perishing, but for preservation—that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men, 2. Note, Those who stand in the way of the preaching of the gospel, and persecutors of the faithful preachers of it, are unreasonable and wicked men. They act against all the rules and laws of reason and religion, and are guilty of the greatest absurdity and impiety. Not only in the principles of atheism and infidelity, but also in the practice of vice and immorality, and especially in persecution, there is the greatest absurdity in the world, as well as impiety. There is need of the spiritual protection, as well as the assistance, of godly and faithful ministers, for these are as the standard-bearers, who are most strick at; and therefore all who wish well to the interest of Christ in the world, should pray for them. For all men have not faith; many do not believe the gospel; this is the reason why we should pray for it themselves, and therefore, if such are restless and malicious in their endeavours to oppose the gospel, decry the ministry, and disgrace the ministers of the world; and too many have not common faith or honesty; there is no confidence that we can safely put in them, and we should pray to be delivered from those who have no conscience or honour, who never regard what they say or do. We may sometimes be in as much danger of being assaulted by our enemies as from open and avowed enemies.

II. He encourages them to trust in God. We should not only pray to God for his grace, but also place our trust and confidence in his grace, and humbly expect what we pray for. Observe, 1. What the good is, which we may expect from the grace of God—establishment, and preservation from evil; and the best Christians stand in need of an earnest of the grace of God. Thus the apostle had prayed for on their behalf, (ch. 2. 17.) and now he encourages them to expect this favour: we stand no longer than God holds us up; unless he hold up our goings in his paths, our feet will slide, and we shall fall. (2.) That God will keep them from evil: we have as much need of the grace of God for our perseverance to the end as for the beginning of the good work. The evil of his ministers evil, but there are other evils which God will also preserve his saints from—the evil that is in the world, yea from all evil to his heavenly kingdom.

2. What encouragement we have to depend upon the grace of God; The Lord is faithful. He is faithful to his promises, and is the Lord who cannot lie, who will not alter the thing that is gone out of his mouth. When once the promise therefore is made, performance is sure and certain. He is faithful to his relation, a faithful God, and a faithful Friend; we may depend upon his filling up all the relations he stands in to his people. Let it be our care to be true and faithful in our promises, and to the relations we stand in to this faithful God. He adds, 3. A further ground of hope that God would do this for them, seeing they did and would do the things they were commanded, v. 4. The apostle had this confidence in them, and that was founded upon his confidence in God; for there is otherwise no confidence in man. Their obedience is described by doing what he and his fellow-labourers had commanded them; which was no other thing than the commandments of the Lord; for the apostles themselves had no further command than to teach men to observe and to do what the Lord had commanded. 2 Thess. 2. 15. And as the experience the apostle had of their obedience for the time past, was the ground of his confidence that they would do the things commanded them for the time to come; so this is one ground to hope, that whatsoever we ask of God we shall receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight, 1 John 5. 22.
part of the happiness of heaven itself, where this love shall be made perfect. We can never attain to this, unless God by his grace direct our hearts aright, for our love is apt to go astray after other things. Note, We sustain a great deal of damage by misplacing our affections; it is both sin and our misery that we place our affections upon wrong objects. If God direct our love aright upon himself, the rest of the affections will thereby be rectified. 2. That a patient waiting for Christ might be joined with this love of God. There is no true love of God without faith in Jesus Christ; we must wait for Christ, which supposes our faith in him, that we believe he came once in flesh, and will come again in glory; and we must expect this second coming of Christ, and be careful to get ready for it. There must be a patient waiting, enduring with courage and constancy all that we may meet with in the mean time: and we have need of patience, and need of divine grace, to exercise Christian patience, the patience of Christ, (as some read the word,) patience for Christ's sake and after Christ's example.

6. Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us. 7. For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you: 8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought: but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you: 9. Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us. 10. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat. 11. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies. 12. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread. 13. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing. 14. And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. 15. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.

The apostle, having commended their obedience for the time past, and mentioned his confidence in their obedience for the time to come, proceeds to give them commands and directions to some who were faulty, correcting some things that were amiss among them. Observe, The best society of Christians may have some faulty persons among them, and some things that ought to be reformed. Perfection is not to be found on this side heaven; but evil manners beget good laws; therefore observe and be patient in the hearing of as existing among the Thessalonians, occasioned the good laws we find in these verses, which are of constant use to us, and all others whom they may concern. Observe, I. That which was amiss among the Thessalonians, which is expressed, 1. More generally; there were some who walked disorderly, not after the tradition they received from the apostle, v. 6. Some of the brethren were guilty of this disorderly walking; they did not live regularly, or govern themselves according to the rules of Christianity, or agreeably to their profession of religion; not according to the precepts delivered by the apostle, which they had received, and pretended to pay a regard to. Note, Some of those who have received the gospel, and profess a regard to it, that they live according to the gospel. If they do not, they are to be counted disorderly persons. 2. In particular, there were among them some idle persons and busy-bodies, v. 11. This the apostle was so credibly informed of, that he had sufficient reason to give commands and directions with relation to such persons, how they ought to behave, and how the church should deal with them.

(1.) There were some among them who were idle, not working at all, or doing nothing. It does not appear that they were gluttons or drunkards, but idle, and therefore disorderly people. It is not enough for any to say, they do no hurt; for it is required of all persons that they do good in the places and relations in which Providence has placed them. It is probable that these persons had a notion (by some misunderstanding of some passages in the former epistle) concerning the near approach of the second coming of Christ, which served them for a pretence to leave off the work of their callings, and live in idleness. Note, It is a great error, or abuse of religion, to make it a cloak for idleness, or any other sin. If we were sure that the day of judgment were ever so near, we must, notwithstanding, do the work of the day in our day, that when our Lord comes, he may find us to be doers. The servant who waits for the coming of his Lord aright, must be working as his Lord has commanded, that all may be ready when he comes. Or it may be, these disorderly persons pretended that the liberty whereby Christ had made them free, discharged them from the services and business of their particular callings and employments in the world; whereas they were to abide in the same calling wherein they were called of God, and therein abide with God. 1 Cor. 7, 20, 24. Industry in our particular callings as men, is a duty required of us by our general calling as Christians. Or perhaps the general charity that was then among Christians to their poor brethren, encouraged some to live in idleness, as knowing the church would maintain them: whatever was the cause, they were much to blame. (2.) There were busy-bodies among them; and it should seem, by the connection, that the same persons who were idle, were busy-bodies also. This may seem to be a contradiction; but so it is, that most commonly those persons who have no business of their own to do, or who neglect that, busy themselves in other men's matters. If we are idle, the Devil and a corrupt heart will soon find us something to do. The mind of man is a busy thing: if it is not employed in doing good, it will be doing evil. Note, Business and disorderliness are generally attended with evil manners. Some of the evil manners which were occasioned by these evil manners, Concerning which we may take notice. 1. Whose laws they are: they are commands of the apostles of our Lord, given in the name of their Lord and our's, the commands of our Lord himself. We command you, brethren, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, v. 6. Again, We command and exhort you by our Lord Jesus Christ, v. 12. The apostle uses words of authority and entreaty; and where disorders are to be rectified or prevented, there is need of both. The authority of Christ should awe our minds to obedience, and his grace and goodness should allure us. 2. What the good laws and rules are. The apostle gives directions to the whole church, commands to those disorderly persons, and an exhortation to them all. We will dwell well with them. (1.) His commands and directions to the whole church, regard. [1.] Their behaviour toward the disorderly persons who were among them; which is thus expressed, (v. 6.) to withdraw themselves from such, and afterward to mark that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed; yet not to count him as an enemy, but to admonish him as a brother. The direction which he gives in this matter, how we are to act to disorderly persons. We must be very cautious in church-censures and church-discipline. We must, First, Note that man who is suspected or charged with not obeying the word of God, or walking contrary thereto, that is, we must have sufficient proof of his fault before we proceed further. We must, Second, Admonish him in a friendly manner; we must put him in mind of his sin, and of his duty; this he must do, lest (if he be (Matt. 18. 15.) then, if he will not hear, we must, Thirdly, Withdraw from him, and not keep company with him, that is, we must avoid familiar converse and society with such; for two reasons, namely, that we may not learn his evil ways: for he who follows vain and idle persons, and keeps company with such, is in danger of becoming like them. Another reason is, for the shameing, and so the reforming, of them that offend; that when idle and disorderly persons see how their loose practices are disliked by all wise and good people, they may be ashamed of them, and walk more orderly. Love therefore to the persons of our offending brethren, even when we hate their vices, should be the motive of our withdrawing from them; and yet those who are under the censures of the church, must not be accounted as enemies; (v. 15.) for if they be reclaimed and restrained by these censures, they will recover their credit and comfort, and right to church-privileges as brethren. [2.] Their general conduct and behaviour ought to be according to the good example the apostle and those who were with him had given them; Yourselves know how ye ought to follow us, v. 7. Those who planted religion among them had set a good example before them; and the ministers of the gospel should be careful examples to the flock. It is the duty of Christians not only to walk according to the traditions of the apostles, and the doctrines they preached, but also according to the good example they set before them; to be followers of them, so far as they were followers of Christ. The particular good example the apostle mentions, was, their diligence, which was so different from that with which the disorderly walkers he takes notice of; We behaved not ourselves as others be (1 Thess. 2. 6.) we did not spend our time idly, in idle visits, idle talk, idle sports. They took pains in their ministry, in preaching the gospel, and in getting their own living. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought, v. 8. Though he might justly have demanded a maintenance, because they who preach the gospel have no right to expect to live by the gospel. This is the less just, because those who owe to their ministers, and the apostle had power or authority, have demanded this; (v. 9.) but he waved his right from affection to them, and for the sake of the gospel, and that he might be an example for them to follow, (v. 9.) that they might learn how to fill up time, and always be employed in somewhat that would turn good account.

(2.) He commands and directs those that lived idle lives, to reform, and set themselves to their business. He had given commandments to this purport, as well as a good example of this, when he was among them; Even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any man would not work, neither should he eat, v. 10. He was as a proverbial spirit, and all the Jews, He who does not labour does not deserve to eat. The labourer is worthy of his meat; but what is the loiterer worthy of? It is the will of God that every man should have a calling, and mind his calling, and make a business of it, and not live like useless drones in the world. Such persons do what in them lies to defeat the sentence, In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread. It was not the mere honour of the apostle, who was an active walker himself, and therefore would have every body else to be so too, but it was the command of our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness we work, and eat our own bread, v. 12. Men ought some way or other to earn their own living, otherwise they do not eat their own bread. Observe, There must be work or labour, in opposition to idleness; and there must be quietness, in opposition to being busy-bodies in other men's matters. We must study to be quiet, and do our own business. This is an excellent but rare composition, to be of an active yet quiet spirit; active in our own business, and yet quiet as to other people's. (3.) He exhorts those that did well, not to be weary in well-doing; (v. 13.) “Go on and prosper. The Lord is with you while you are with him. See that whatever you do, that is good, you persevere therein. Hold on your way, and hold out the end. You must never give over, or tire in your work. It will be time enough to rest when you come to heaven, that everlasting rest which remains for the people of God.”

16. Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all. 17. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle: so I write. 18. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

In this conclusion of the epistle we have the apostle's benediction and prayers for these Thessalonians. Let us desire them for ourselves and our friends. There are three blessings pronounced upon them, or desired for them.

1. That God would give them peace. Note, (1.) Peace is the blessing pronounced or desired. By peace we may understand all manner of prosperity; here it may signify in particular, peace with God; peace in their own minds and consciences; peace among themselves, and peace with all men. (2.) This peace is desired for them always, or in every thing; and he desired they might have all good things at all times. (3.) Peace by all means: that as they enjoyed the means of grace, they might with success use all the means and methods of peace too; for peace is often difficult, as it is always desirable. (4.) That God would give them peace, who is the Lord of peace. If we have any peace that is desirable, God must give it, who is the Author of peace and Lover of concord. We shall neither have peaceable breezes ourselves, nor be able to close to be at peace with us, unless the God of peace give us both.

2. That the presence of God might be with them; The Lord be with you all. We need nothing more to make us safe and happy, nor can we desire any thing better for ourselves and our friends, than to have God's gracious presence with us and them.
This will be a guide and guard in every way that we may go, and our comfort in every condition we may be in. It is the presence of God that makes heaven to be heaven, and that will make this earth to be like to heaven. No matter where we are, if God is with us; nor who is absent, if God be present with us.

3. That the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ might be with them. So this apostle concluded his first epistle to these Thessalonians; and it is through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that we may comfortably hope to have peace with God, and enjoy the presence of God, for he has made them holy, that were afar off. It is this grace that is all in all to make us happy. This is what the apostle admired and magnified on all occasions, what he delighted and trusted in; and by this salutation or benediction, written with his own hand, as the token of every epistle, (when the rest was written by an amanuensis,) he took care lest the churches he wrote to should be imposed on by counterfeit epistles, which he knew would be of dangerous consequence.

Let us be thankful that we have the canon of scripture complete, and by the wonderful and special care of Divine Providence preserved pure and uncorrupt through so many successive ages; and not dare to add to it, or diminish from it. Let us believe the divine original of the sacred scriptures, and conform our faith and practice to this our sufficient and only rule, which is able to make us wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Amen.

AN

WITH

OF THE

FIRST EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO TIMOTHY.

Completed by Mr. Atkinson.

HITHERTO Paul's Epistles were directed to churches; now follow some to particular persons: two to Timothy, one to Titus, and another to Philemon; all three ministers. Timothy and Titus were evangelists, an inferior order to the apostles, as appears by that, (Eph. 4. 11.) Some prophets, some apostles, some evangelists. Their commission and work was much the same with that of the apostles, to plant churches, and water the churches that were planted; and accordingly they were itinerants, as we find Timothy was. Timothy was first converted by Paul, and therefore he calls him his own son in the faith: we read of his conversion, Acts 16. 3. The scope of these two Epistles, is, to direct Timothy how to discharge his office as an evangelist at Ephesus, where he now was, and where Paul ordered him for some time to reside, to perfect the good work which he had begun there. As for the ordinary pastoral charge of that church, he had very solemnly committed it to the Presbytery, as appears from Acts 20. 28. where he charges the presbyters to feed the flock of God, which he had purchased with his own blood.

I. TIMOTHY, I.

CHAP. I.

After the inscription (v. 1, 2) we have, I. the charge given to Timothy, v. 3, 4. II. The true end of the law, (v. 5., 11.) where he shews it is entirely agreeable to the gospel. III. He mentions his own call to be an apostle; for which he expresses his thankfulness, v. 12. IV. His doxology, v. 17. V. A renewal of the charge to Timothy, v. 18. And of Hymenæus and Alexander, v. 19, 20.

1. PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, who is our hope; 2. Unto Timothy, my own son in the faith: grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord. 3. As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine. 4. Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do.
Here is,

1. The inscription of the epistle; from whom it seems Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ, constituted an apostle by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ. His credentials were unquestionable; he had not only a commission, but a commandment, not only from God our Saviour, but from Jesus Christ: he was a preacher of the gospel of Christ, and a minister of the kingdom of Christ. Observe, God is our Saviour, Jesus Christ, who is our Hope. Observe, Jesus Christ is a Christian's hope; our hope is in him, all our hope of eternal life is built upon him; Christ is in us the Hope of glory, Col. 1. 27. He calls Timothy his own son, because he had been an instrument of his conversion, and because he had been a son that served him; served with him in the gospel, Phil. 2. 22. Timothy had not been wanting in the duty and observance of a son to Paul, and Paul was not wanting in the care and tenderness of a father to him.

2. The benediction is, grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father. Some have observed, that whereas in all the epistles to the churches, the apostolical benediction is grace and peace; in these two epistles to Timothy, and that to Titus, it is grace, mercy, and peace: as if ministers had more need of God's mercy than other men. Ministers need more grace than others, to discharge their duty faithfully; and they need more mercy than others, to pardon what they do. Observe, if Timothy, so eminent a minister, must be indebted to the mercy of God, and needed the increase and continuance of it, how much more do we ministers, in these times, who have so little of his excellent spirit!

3. Paul tells Timothy what was the end of his appointing him to this office; I besought thee to abide at Ephesus. Timothy had a mind to have gone with Paul, but Paul would have him to remain. Observe in the public service; I besought thee, says he. Though he might assume an authority to command him, yet for love's sake he chose rather to beseech him. Now his business was, to take care to fix both the ministers and the people of that church; Charge them that they teach no other doctrine than what they have received; that they do not add to the Christian doctrine, either by preaching other points, or making up the defects of it; that they do not subtract from it, but cleave to it as it was delivered to them. Observe,

(1.) Ministers must not only be charged to preach the true doctrine of the gospel, but charged to preach another doctrine. If an angel from heaven preached any other doctrine, he was an anathema, Gal. 1. 8.

(2.) In the times of the apostles there were attempts made to corrupt Christianity; (as we are not as many, who corrupt the word, 2 Cor. 2. 17.) otherwise this charge to Timothy might have been spared.

(3.) He must not only see to it, that he did not preach any other doctrine, but he must charge others that they might not add any thing of their own to the Christian doctrine. It is not enough that ministers, but that they preach it pure and uncorrupted. He must also take care to prevent their regarding fables and endless genealogies and strifes of words. This is often repeated in these two epistles, (as ch. 4. 7. — 6. 4.) 2 Tim. 2. 23.) as well as in the epistle to Titus. As among the Jews there were some who brought Judaism into Christianity; so among the Gentiles there were some who brought Paganism into Christianity. "Take heed of these," says he, "watch against them, it will be the corrupting and ruining of religion among you, for these minister questions rather than edifying." That which ministers questions, is not for edifying; that which gives occasion for doubtful disputes, pulls down the church rather than builds it up. And I think, by a parity of reason, every thing else that ministers questions rather than godly edifying, should be disclaimed and disregarded by us, such as an uninterrupted succession in the ministry from the apostles down to these times, the absolute necessity of episcopal ordination, and the intention of the minister to the efficacy and validity of the sacraments he administers. These are as bad as Jewish fables and endless genealogies, for they involve us in inextricable difficulties, and tend only to make the foundations of a Christian's hope, and to fill his mind with perplexing doubts and fears. Godly edifying is the end ministers should aim at in all their discourses, that Christians may be improving in godliness, and growing up to a greater likeness to the blessed God. Observe further, Godly edifying must be in faith: the gospel is the foundation on which we build; it is by faith that we come to God at first; (Heb. 11. 6.) and it must be in the same way, and by the same principle of faith, that we must be edified. Again, Ministers should avoid, as much as may be, what will occasion disputes; and would do well to insist on the great and practical points of religion, about which there can be no disputes; for even disputes about great and necessary truths draw off the mind from the main design of Christianity, and eat out the vitals of religion, which is to practice and observe the same faith, that we may not hold the truth in unrighteousness, but may keep the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

5. Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned: 6. From which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; 7. Desire to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. 8. But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully; 9. Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unprofitable and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for man-slayers, 10. For whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine; 11. According to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust.

Here the apostle instructs Timothy how to guard against the judging teachers, or others who mingled fables and endless genealogies with the gospel. He shews the use of the law, and glory of the gospel.

1. He shews the end and uses of the law: it is intended to promote love, for love is the fulfilling of the law, Rom. 13. 10.

1. The end of the commandment is charity, or love, Rom. 13. 8. The main scope and drift of the divine law are to engage use of obedience and love of God, and another; and whatever tends to weaken either our love to God, or love to the brethren, tends to defeat the end of the commandment: and surely the gospel, which obliges us to love our enemies, to do good to them that hate us, (Matt. 5. 44.) does not design to lay aside or supersede a commandment the end whereof is love; so far from it, that, on the other hand, we are told, that though we had all advantages, and wanted charity, we are but as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, 1 Cor. 13. 1. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another, John 13. 35. Those therefore who boasted of their knowledge of the law, but used it as a cloak against the precepts of the gospel, were driven by the preachers of the gospel to the preching of the gospel, under pretence of zeal for the law, dividing the church, and distinguiting it; they defeated that which was the very end of the commandment, and that is love; love out of a pure heart, a heart purified by faith, purified from corruptions. In order to the keeping up of holy love, our hearts must be cleansed from all sinful love; our first duty, sincerely to love God and every good companion to love with all our heart, with all the might, with all the strength, and which they have been careful to keep a good conscience, from a real belief of the truth of the word of God, which enjoins it, here called, a faith unfeigned; those answer the end of the commandment.

Here we have the concomitants of that excellent grace charily: they are three. (1.) A pure heart; there must be seated, and from hence it must take its rise; the first and greatest of these was, we must exercise ourselves daily in, that we may not only get it, but that we may keep it, Acts 24. 16. (2.) Faith unfeigned must also accompany it, for it is love without dissimulation: the faith that works by it, must be of the like nature, genuine and sincere. Now some who set up for teachers of the law, swerved from the very end of the commandment: they set up for disputers, but their disputes proved vain jangling; set up for teachers, but they pretended to teach others what they themselves did not understand. If the church be corrupted by such teachers, we must not think it strange, for we see from the beginning it was so. Observe,

[1.] When persons, especially ministers, swerve from the great law of charity—the end of the commandment, they will turn aside to vain jangling; when a man misses his end and scope, it is no wonder that every step he takes is out of the way.

[2.] Jangling, especially in religion, is vain; it is unprofitable and useless as to all that is good, and it is very pernicious and hurtful: and yet many people's religion consists of little else but vain jangling.

[3.] Those who deal much in vain jangling are fond and ambitious to be teachers of others; they desire, that is, they affect, the office of teaching. Jangling is too common for men to intrude into the office of the ministry, when they are not masters of those things about which they are to speak; they understand neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm: and by such learned ignorance, no doubt, they edify their hearers very much.

2. The use of the law; (v. 8.) The law is good, if a man use it lawfully. The Jews used it unlawfully, as an engine to divide the church, a veil to the malignant opposition they made against Christ; they set it up for justification, and so used it unlawfully. We must not therefore think to set it aside, but use it lawfully, for the restraint of sin. The abuse which some have made of the law, does not take away the use of it; but when a divine appointment has been abused, call it back to its right use, and take away the abuses, for the law is still very necessary to guide them. We must consider it as under a covenant of works, yet it is good to teach us what is sin and what is duty. It is not made for a righteous man, it is not made for those who observe it: for if we could keep the law, righteousness would be by the law; (Gal. 3. 21) but it is made for wicked persons, to restrain them, to check them, and to put a stop to vice and profaneness. It is the grace of God that changes men's hearts; but the terrors of the law may be of use, to tie their hands and restrain their tongues. A righteous man does not want those restraints which are necessary for the wicked; or at least the law is not made primarily and principally for the righteous, but for sinners of all sorts, whether in a greater or lesser measure, v. 9, 10. In this black roll of sinners, he particularly mentions breaches of the second table of the law, which we owe to our neighbour; against the fifth and sixth commandments, murderers of fathers and mothers, and man-slayers; against the seventh, whoremongers, and them that defile themselves with mankind; against the eighth, men-stealers; against the ninth, liars and perjured persons; and then he closes his account with this, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine. Some understand this as an institution of a power in the civil magistrate to make laws against such notorious sinners as are specified, and to see those laws put in execution.

II. He shews the glory and grace of the gospel. Paul's epistles are expressive, significant; and frequently every one is a sentence; as here, (v. 11.) According to the glorious gospel of the blessed God. Let us learn from hence,

1. To call God the blessed God, infinitely happy in the enjoyment of himself and his own perfections.

2. To call the gospel the glorious gospel, for so it is: much of the glory of God appears in the works of creation and providence, but much more in the gospel, where it shines in the face of Jesus Christ. Paul reckoned it a great honour put upon him, and a great favour done him, that this glorious gospel was committed to his trust; that is, the preaching of it; for the framing of it is not committed to any man or company of men in the world. The settling of the terms of salvation in the gospel of Christ, is God's own work; but the publishing of it to the world is committed to the apostles and ministers. Note here,

[1.] The ministry is a trust, for the gospel was committed unto this apostle; it is an office of trust as well as of power, and the former more than the latter; for this reason ministers are called stewards, 1 Cor. 4. 1.

[2.] It is a glorious trust, because the gospel committed to them is a glorious gospel; it is a trust of very great importance, God's glory is very much concerned in it. Lord! what a trust is committed to us! How much grace do we want to be found faithful in this great trust!

12. And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry;

13. Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief. 14. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. 15. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. 16. Howbeit for this I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them who should hereafter believe on him for life everlasting. 17. Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.
Here he returns thanks to Jesus Christ for putting him into the ministry. Observe,
I. It is Christ's work to put men into the ministry, Acts 26. 16, 17. God condemned the false prophets among the Jews in these words, I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied, Jer. 23. 21. Ministers, properly speaking, cannot make ministers, much less remove them; but they make themselves ministers for it is Christ's work, as King and Head, Prophet and Teacher of his church.
II. Those whom he puts into the ministry he enables for it; whom he calls he qualifies. Those ministers who are no way fit for their work, nor have ability for it, are not of Christ's putting into the ministry, though there are different qualifications as gifts and graces.
III. Christ gives only ability, but fidelity, to those whom he puts into the ministry; He counted me faithful: and none are counted faithful, but those whom he makes so. Christ's ministers are trusty servants, and they ought to be so, who have so great a trust committed to them.
IV. A call to the ministry is a great favour, for which those who are so called ought to give thanks to Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath put me into the ministry. Now, the more we magnify the grace of Christ in putting him into the ministry, he gives an account of his conversion.
1. What he was before his conversion; a blasphemer, a persecutor, and injurious. Saul breathed out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, Acts 9. 1. He made havoc of the church, Acts 8. 3. He was a blasphemer of God, a persecutor of the saints, and injurious to both. Frequently those who are designed for great and eminent services, are left to themselves before their conversion, to fall into great wickedness; that the mercy of God may be more glorified in their remission, and the grace of God in their regeneration. The greatness of sin is no bar to our acceptance with God, no, nor to our being employed for him, if it be truly repented of.
Observe here,
(1.) Blasphemy, persecution, and injuriousness, are very great and heinous sins, and those who are guilty of them are sinners before God exceedingly; to blaspheme God is immediately and directly to strike at God; to persecute his people is to endeavour to wound them through their sides; and to be injurious, is to be like Ishmael, whose hand was against every one, and every one was against him; for such iniquity is of a prerogative, and encroach upon the liberties of their fellow-creatures.
(2.) True penitents, to serve a good purpose, will not be backward to own their former condition before they were brought home to God: this good apostle often confessed what his former life had been, as Acts 22. 4.—26. 10, 11.
2. See the great favour of God to him; But I obtained mercy. This was a blessed but indeed, a great miracle, that so notorious a rebel should, through mercy with his Prince. If Paul had persecuted the Christians wilfully, knowing them to be the people of God, for ought I know, he had been guilty of the unpardonable sin; but because he did it ignorantly, and in unbelief, he obtained mercy.
Note,
(1.) What we do ignorantly is a less crime than what we do knowingly: yet a sin of ignorance is a sin, and he is guilty who, in the commission of sin, doth commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beard with few stripes, Luke 12. 48. Ignorance in some cases will extenuate a crime, though it do not take it away.
(2.) Unbelief is at the bottom of what sinners do ignorantly; they do not believe God's threatenings, otherwise they could not do as they do.
(3.) For these reasons St. Paul obtained mercy,
But I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly, in unbelief. (4.) Here was mercy for a blasphemer, a persecutor, and for an injurious person; "but I obtained mercy, I a blasphemer," etc.
Here he takes notice of the abundant grace of Jesus Christ, v. 14. The conversion and salvation of great sinners are owing to the grace of Christ, his exceeding abundant grace, even that grace of God which appeared in his gospels, v. 15. This is a faithful saying; for this we have the sum of the whole gospel, that Jesus Christ came into the world. The Son of God took upon him our nature, was made flesh, and dwelt among us, John 1. 14. He came into the world, not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, Matt. 9. 13. His errand into the world was to seek and save, and so save, them that were lost, Luke 19. 10. His ratification of this, that it is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance. It is a good news, worthy of all acceptance; and yet not too good to be true, for it is a faithful saying, It is a faithful saying, and therefore worthy to be embraced in the arms of faith: it is worthy of all acceptance, and therefore to be received with holy love, which refers to the foregoing verse, where the grace of Christ is said to abound in faith and love. In the close of the verse he applies it to himself, saying, Paul was a sinner of the first rank; so he acknowledges himself to have been, for he breathed out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, etc. Acts 9. 1, 2. Persecutors are some of the worst of sinners: such a one as Paul had been; or, of whom am I chief, that is, of pardoned sinners I am chief. It is an expression of his great humility; he that elsewhere calls himself the least of all saints, (1 Thess. 3. 8.) here calls himself the chief of sinners.
Observe,
[1.] Christ Jesus is come into the world; the prophecies concerning his coming are now fulfilled.
[2.] He came to save sinners, he came to save those who could not save and help themselves.
[3.] Blasphemers and persecutors are the chief of sinners, so St. Paul reckoned them. (4.) The chief of sinners may become the chief of saints; so this apostle was, for he was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles; (2 Cor. 11. 5.) for Christ came to save the chief of sinners. (5.) This is a very great truth, it is a faithful saying; these are true and faithful words, which may be depended on. (6.) It deserves to be received, to be believed by us all, for our comfort and encouragement.
The mercy which Paul found with God, notwithstanding his great wickedness before his conversion, bequests.
First, For the encouragement of others to repent and believe; (v. 16.) For this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them who should hereafter believe. It was an instance of the long-suffering of Christ, that he would bear so much with one who had been so very provoking; and it was designed for a pattern to all others, that the greatest sinners might not despair of mercy with God.
Note here, 1. Our apostle was one of the first great sinners converted to Christianity. 2. He was converted, and obtained mercy, for the sake of others as well as of himself; he was a pattern to others. 3. The Lord Jesus Christ shews great long-suffering in the conversion of great sinners. Those who obtain mercy, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; for without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6. 5. Those who believe on Christ, believe on him to life everlasting; they believe to the salvation of the soul, Heb. 10. 39.
Secondly, He mentions it to the glory of God: having spoken of the mercy he had found with God, he could not go on with his letter, without inserting a thankful acknowledgment of God's goodness to him; now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen. Observe,

1. That grace which we have the comfort of, God must have the glory of. Those who are sensible of their obligations to the mercy and grace of God, will have their hearts enlarged in his praise. Here is praise ascribed to him, as the King eternal, immortal, invisible.

2. When we have found God good, we must not forget to pronounce him great; and his kind thoughts of us must not at all abate our high thoughts of him, but rather increase them. God had taken particular cognizance of Paul, and showed him mercy, and taken him into communion with himself, and yet he calls him the King eternal, &c. God's gracious dealings with us should fill us with admiration of his glorious attributes. He is eternal, without beginning of days, or end of life, or change of time. He is the Ancient of days, Dan. 7. 9. He is immortal, and the Original of immortality; he only has immortality, (1 Tim. 6. 14.) for he cannot die. He is invisible, for he cannot be seen with mortal eyes, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see. He is (1 Tim. 6. 16.) the only wise God; (Jude 25.) he only is infinitely wise, and the Fountain of all wisdom. It seems, therefore, that the apostle exhorts Timothy to be employed in giving honour and glory to him, as the thousands of thousands do, Rev. 5. 12, 13.

18. This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare; 19. Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck: 20. Of whom are Hymenaeus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme.

Here is the charge he gives to Timothy to proceed in his work with resolution, v. 18. Observe here, The gospel is a charge committed to the ministers of it; it is committed to their trust, to see that it be duly applied according to the intent and meaning of it, and the design of its great Author. It seems, there had been prophecies before, concerning Timothy, that he should be taken into the ministry, and should prove eminent in the work of the ministry; this encouraged Paul to commit this charge to him. Observe,

1. The ministry is a warfare, it is a good warfare against sin and Satan: and under the banner of the Lord Jesus, who is the Captain of our salvation, (Heb. 2. 10.) and in his cause, and against his enemies, ministers are in a particular manner engaged.

2. Ministers must war this good warfare; must execute their office diligently and courageously, notwithstanding oppositions and discouragements.

3. The prophecies which went before concerning Timothy, are here mentioned as a motive to stir him up to a vigorous and conscientious discharge of his duty; so the good hopes that others have entertained concerning us, should excite us to our duty; that thou by them mightest war a good warfare.

5. Holding faith and a good conscience. We must hold both faith and a good conscience; those that put away a good conscience, will soon make shipwreck of faith. Let us live up to the directions of a renewed enlightened conscience, and keep accon-thought it enough to give them general heads; they, having the scripture to direct them in prayer, and the spirit of prayer poured out upon them, needed not any further directions. Observe, The design of the Christian religion was to promote prayer; and the design of prayer is to secure the peace and quiet life of the governed people. Pray always with prayer, Ephes. 6. 18. There must be prayers for ourselves in the first place; this is implied here; we must also pray for all men, for the world of mankind in general, for particular persons who need or desire our prayers. See how far the Christian religion was from being a sect, when it taught men this diffuse charity; to pray, not only for the peace of their own way, but for all ways. Pray for kings; though the kings at this time were heathens, enemies to Christianity, and persecutors of Christians, yet they must pray for them, because it is for the public good that there should be civil government, and proper persons intrusted with the administration of it, wherefore we ought to pray for, yea, though we ourselves suffer under them. For kings; and all that are in authority, that is, inferior magistrates; we must pray for them, and we must give thanks for them, pray for their welfare, and for the welfare of their kingdoms, and therefore must not plot against them, that in the peace thereof we may have peace, and give thanks for them and for the benefit we have under their government; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. Here see what we must desire for kings—that they may have the reverence of their hearts, and therefore we must make use of them, and that they may lead them a quiet and peaceable life, unless we keep in all godliness and honesty. Let us mind our duty, and then we may expect to be taken under the protection both of God and the government. In all godliness and honesty. Here we have our duty as Christians summed up in two words; godliness, that is, the right worshiping of God; and honesty, that is, a good conduct toward all men. This is the most genuine ground of all true benevolence, if we are not godly, and do not render to God his due; and we are not truly godly, if we are not honest, for God hates robbery for burnt-offering.

Here we observe, 1. Christians are to be men much given to prayer; they ought to abound herein, and should use themselves to prayers, supplications, &c. 2. In our prayers we are to have a generous concern for others as well as for ourselves; we are to pray for all men, saves specially for the public peace, and must not confine our prayers or thanksgivings to our own persons or families. 3. Prayer consists of various parts, of supplications, intercessions, and thanksgivings; for we must pray for the mercies we want, as well as be thankful for mercies already received; and we are to deprecate the judgments which our own sins or the sins of others have deserved. We pray for kings, and those who are in authority; we, as ordinary men, pray for all, and must not confine our prayers or thanksgivings to our own persons or families. 4. In praying for our governors, we take the most likely course to lead a peaceable and quiet life. The Jews at Babylon were commanded to seek the peace of the city, whither the Lord had caused them to be carried captives, and to pray to the Lord for it; for in the peace therefore of them they should have peace, Jer. 29. 7. 6. If we would lead a peaceable and quiet life, we must live in all godliness and honesty; we must do our duty to God and man. He that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile; let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it, 1 Pet. 3. 10. 11.

Now the reason he gives for this, is, because this is good in the sight of God our Saviour; the gospel of Christ requires this. That which is acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour, we should do, and should abound in.

II. As a reason why we should in our prayers concern ourselves for all men, he shows God's love to mankind universal, v. 4. 1. One reason why all men are to be prayed for, is, because there is one God, and that God bears a good will to all mankind. There is one God, (v. 5.) and one only, there is no other, there can be no other, for there can be but one infinite. This one God will have all men to be saved; he desires not the death and destruction of any, (Ezek. 33. 11.) but the welfare and salvation of all. Not that he has decreed the salvation of all, for then all men would be saved; but he has a good will to the salvation of all, and none perish but by their own fault, Matt. 23. 37. He will have all to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth; to be saved in the way that he has appointed, and not otherwise. It concerns us to get the knowledge of the truth, because that is the way to be saved; Christ is the way and the truth, Acts 4. 12.

2. There is one Mediator, and that Mediator gave himself a Ransom for all. As the mercy of God extends itself to all his works, so the mediation of Christ extends itself thus far to all the children of men, that he paid a price sufficient for the salvation of all mankind; he brought mankind to stand upon new terms with God, so that they are not now under the law as a covenant of works, but as a rule of life; they are no longer guilty without the covenant of nature, but under a new covenant; he gave himself a Ransom.

Observe, The death of Christ was a ransom, a counter-price; we deserved to have died; Christ died for us, to save us from death and hell; he gave himself a Ransom voluntarily, a Ransom for all; so that all mankind are put in a better condition than that of devils. He died to work out a common salvation: in order heretofore, he put himself into the hands of the Mediator between God and man. A mediator supposes a controversy. Sin had made a quarrel between us and God; Jesus Christ is a Mediator who undertakes to make peace, to bring God and man together, in the nature of an Empire or Arbitrator, a Days-man who lays his hand upon us both, Job 9. 33. He is a Ransom that was to be testified in due time; that is, in the Old Testament times, his sufferings, and the glory that should follow, were written of all things to come; and thus all the last times, 1 Pet. 1. 10. 11. And they are accordingly revealed, Paul himself having been ordained a preacher and an apostle, to publish to the Gentiles the glad tidings of redemption and salvation by Jesus Christ. This doctrine of Christ's mediation Paul was intrusted to preach to every creature, Mark 16. 15. He was appointed to be a teacher of the Gentiles; beside his general call to the Gentiles, he was commissioned particularly to preach to the Gentiles, in faith and truth, faithfully and truly.

Note, (1.) It is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour, that we pray for kings and for all men, and also, that we lead a peaceable and quiet life; and this is a very good reason why we should do the one as well as the other. It is an act of worship to the salvation of all; so that it is not so much the want of a will in God to save them, as it is a want of will in themselves to be saved in God's way. Here our blessed Lord charges the fault; Ye shall not come unto me, that ye may have life. John 5. 40. I would have thereby you, and ye would not. (3.) Those who are saved must come to the knowledge of the truth, for that is God's appointed way to save sinners; without knowledge the heart cannot be good; if we do not know the truth, we cannot be ruled by it. (4.) It is observable, that the unity of God is asserted, and joined with the unity of the Mediator; and the church of Rome might as well maintain a plurality of gods as a plurality of mediators. (5.) He that is a Mediator in the New Testament, sense, gave himself a Ransom. Vain then is the pretence of the Romanists, that there is but one Mediator of satisfaction, but many of intercession; for, according to St. Paul, Christ's giving himself a Ransom, was a necessary part of the Mediator's office; and indeed this lays the foundation for his intercession. (6.) St. Paul was ordaining a minister, to declare this to the Gentiles, that Christ is the one Mediator between God and men, who gave himself a Ransom for all. This is the substance of which all ministers are to preach, to the end of the world; and St. Paul magnified his office, as he was the apostle of the Gentiles, Rom. 11. 13. Lastly, Ministers must preach the truth, what they apprehend to be so, and they must believe it themselves; they are, like our apostles, to preach in faith and verity, and they must also be faithful and true.

II. A direction how to pray, v. 8.

1. Now, under the gospel, prayer is not to be confined to any one particular house of prayer, but men must pray everywhere: where no place is amiss for prayer, no one place more acceptable to God than another, John 4. 21. Pray everywhere. We must pray in our closets, pray in our families, pray at our meals, when we are on journeys, and pray in the solemn assemblies, whether more public or private.

2. It is the will of God, that in prayer we should lift up holy hands; lifting up holy hands, or pure hands, pure from the pollution of sin, washed in the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness; I will wash my hands, &c. Ps. 26. 6.

3. We must pray in charity; without wrath, or malice, or anger at any person. Amen. Pray without doubting, (Jam. 1. 6.) or, as some read it, without disputing; and then it falls under the head of charity.

9. In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; 10. But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works. 11. Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. 12. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 13. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. 14. And Adam was not deceived; but the woman, being deceived, was in the transgression. 15. Notwithstanding, she shall be saved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.

Here is a charge, that women who profess the Christian religion, should be modest, sober, silent, and submissive, as becomes their place; they are not to affect their apparel, not affecting gaudiness, gaiety, or costliness; (you may read the vanity of a person's mind in the gaiety and gaudiness of their habit;) because they have better ornaments with which they should adorn themselves, as becomes women professing godliness, with good works. Note, God's works are the best ornament and decoration that the soul can be adorned with, of great price. Those that profess godliness, should, in their dress, as well as other things, act as becomes their profession; instead of laying out their money on fine clothes, they must lay it out in works of piety and charity, which are properly called good works.

2. Women must learn the principles of their religion, learn Christ, learn the scriptures; they must not think that their sex excuses them from that learning which is necessary to salvation.

3. They must be silent, submissive, and not usurp authority. The reason given is, because Adam was first formed, then Eve out of him, to denote her subordination to him, and dependence upon him; and that she was made for him, to be a help-meet for him. And as she was last in the creation, which is the one reason for her subjection; so it was first in the transgression, and that is another reason. Adam was not deceived, that is, not first; the serpent did not immediately set upon him, but the woman was first in the transgression; (2 Cor. 11. 3.) and it was part of the sentence, Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee, Gen. 3. 16.

But it is a word of comfort, (c. 13.) that they who continue in sobriety, shall be saved in child-bearing, or both child-bearing and the Messiah, who was born of a woman, should break the serpent's head. (3. 15.) or, the sentence which they are under for sin, shall be no bar to their acceptance with Christ, if they continue in faith, and charity, and holiness, with sobriety.

Here we observe, (1.) The extensiveness of the rules of Christianity; they reach not only to men, but to women, not only to their persons, but also to their apparel, which must be modest, like their sex; and to their persons also; their apparel may be observed, it must be in silence, with all subjection. (2.) Women are to profess godliness as well as men: for they are baptized, and thereby stand engaged to exercise themselves to godliness; and, to their honour be it spoken, many of them were eminent professors of Christianity in the days of the apostles, as the book of Acts will inform us. (3.) Women being more in danger of exceeding in their apparel, it was more necessary to provide for them, than for men, that the best ornaments for professors of godliness, are, good works. (5.) According to St. Paul, women must be learners, and are not allowed to be public teachers in the church: for teaching is an office of authority; whereas she must not usurp authority over the man, but is to be in silence. But notwithstanding this prohibition, good women may and ought to teach their children the principles of religion. Timothy from a child had known the holy scriptures; and who should teach him but his mother and grandmother? 2 Tim. 3. 15. Aquila and his wife Priscilla expanded unto Apollos the way of God more perfectly; but then they did it privately, for they took him unto them, Acts 18. 26. (6.) Here are two very good reasons given for the man's authority over the woman, and her subjection to the man, v. 13. 14. Adam was first formed then Eve; she was created for the man, and not the man for the woman; (1 Cor. 11. 9.) then she was deceived, and brought the man into the transgression. Lastly, though the difficulties and dangers of child-bearing are many and great, as they are part of the punishment inflicted on the sex for Eve's transgression, yet here is much for her support and encouragement; though in sorrow, yet she shall bring forth, and be a mother of living children: with this proviso, that they continue in faith, and charity, and holiness, so as they may; and women under the circumstance of child-
I. Timothy, III.

In this chapter, our apostle treats of church-officers. And, 1. He gives a rule by which a person to be admitted to the office of a bishop, v. 1., 7. II. He gives us the qualifications of deacons; (v. 8., 10.) and of their wives; (v. 11.) again of the deacons, v. 12., 13. III. He gives us the reasons of his writing to Timothy, whereupon he speaks of the church and the foundation-truth professed therein, v. 14., to the end.

1. This is a true saying, if a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. 2. A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach; 3. Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous; 4. One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; 5. (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) 6. Not a novice, lest, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. 7. Moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without: lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.

The two epistles to Timothy, and that to Titus, contain a scripture-plan of church-government, or a direction to ministers. Timothy, we suppose, was an evangelist who was left at Ephesus, to take care of those whom the Holy Ghost had made bishops there, that is, the presbyters, as appears by Acts 20. 28, where the care of the church was committed to the presbyters, and they were called bishops. It seems, they were very loth to part with Paul, especially because he told them, they should see his face no more, (Acts 20. 38.) for their church was but newly planted, they were afraid of undertaking the care of it, and therefore Paul left Timothy with them to set them in order.

And here we have the character of a gospel-minister, whose office it is, as a bishop, to preside in a particular congregation of christians: If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work, v. 1. The ministry is a work. However the office of a bishop may be now thought a good preferment, then it was thought a good work. Observe,

1. The office of a scripture-bishop is an office of divine appointment, and not of human invention; the ministry is not a creature of the state, and it is pity that the minister should be at any time the tool of the state. The first office of every minister was in the church before the magistracy conterminous Christianity, for this office is one of the great gifts Christ has bestowed on the church, Ephes. 4. 8, 11. 2. This office of a Christian-bishop is a work which requires diligence and application: the apostle represents it under the notion and character of a work; not of great honour and advantage, for ministers should be content with the work than to the honour and advantage of their office. 3. It is a good work, a work of the greatest importance, and designed for the greatest good: the ministry is conversant about no lower concerns than the life and happiness of immortal souls; it is a good work, because designed to illustrate the divine perfections in bringing many sons into glory; the ministry is appointed to open men's eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, &c. Acts 4. 18. (4.) There ought to be an earnest desire of the office, in those who would be put into it; if a man desire, he should earnestly desire it, for the prospect he has of bringing greater glory to God, and of doing the greatest good to the church and their persons, by this means. This is the question proposed to those who offer themselves to the ministry of the church of England; “Do you think you are moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon you this office?”

In order to the discharge of this office, the doing of this work, the workman must be duly qualified.

1. A minister must be blameless; he must not lie under any scandal; he must give as little occasion for scandal as he can, because that will be a prejudice to his ministry, and will reflect reproach upon his office. 2. He must be the husband of one wife; not having given a bill of divorce to one, and then taking another, or not having many wives at once, as at that time was too common both among Jews and Gentiles, especially among the Gentiles.

3. He must be vigilant and watchful against Satan, the subtle serpentin of, he must set himself, and the souls of those who are committed to his charge, of whom having taken the oversight, he must improve all opportunities of doing them good. A minister ought to be vigilant, because our adversary the Devil goes about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet. 5. 8. 4. He must be sober, temperate, moderate in all his actions, and in the use of all creature-comforts. Sobriety and watchfulness are often in scripture put together, because they mutually befriend one another: Be sober, be vigilant.

5. He must be of good behaviour, composed and solid, and not light, vain, and frivolous. 6. He must be given to hospitality; open-handed to strangers, and ready to entertain them according to his ability, as one who does not set his heart upon the wealth of the world, and who is a true lover of his brethren.

7. Amin to teach. Therefore this is a preaching bishop whom Paul describes, one who is both able and willing to communicate to others the knowledge which God has given him; one who is fit to teach, and ready to take all opportunities of giving instruction; who is himself well instructed in the things of the kingdom of heaven, and is communicative of what he knows to others.

8. Not a drunkard; not given to wine. The priests were not to drink wine when they went in to minister, (Lev. 10. 8, 9.) lest they drink and pervert the law.

9. No striker; one who is not quarrelsome, or apt to use violence to any, but does every thing with mildness, love, and gentleness. The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle towards all, &c. 2 Tim. 2. 22. 10. One who is not greedy of filthy lucre; who does not make his ministry to trounce to any secular design or interest; who uses no mean, base, sordid ways of getting money; who is dead to the weight of the world, lives above it, and makes it appear he is so.

11. He must be patient, and not a brawler; of a mild disposition. Christ, the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls, is so. Not apt to be angry or quarrelsome, as not a striker with his hands, so not a brawler with his tongue; for how shall men teach others to govern their tongues, who do not make conscience of keeping them under good government themselves?

12. Not covetous. Covetousness is bad in any, but it is worst in a minister, whose calling leads him to converse so much with another world.
I. TIMOTHY, III. 641

13. He must be one who keeps his family in good order; that rules well his own house, that he may set a good example to other masters of families, to do so too; and that he may thereby give a proof of his ability to take care of the church of God; For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God? Observe, The families of ministers ought to be examples of good to all other families. Ministers must have their children in subjection; then it is the duty of ministers' children to submit to the instructions that are given them. With all gravity. The best way to keep inferiors in subjection, is, to be grave with them. Not having his children in subjection with all austerity, but with all gravity. 14. He must not be a novice; not one newly brought to the Christian religion; or not one who is but meanly instructed in it, who knows no more of religion than the surface of it, for such a one is apt to be lifted up with pride; the more ignorant men are, the more proud they are. Lest, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the Devil. The devils fell through pride, which is a good reason why we should take heed of pride, because it is a sin that turned angels into devils.

15. He must be of good reputation among his neighbours, and under no reproach from former conversation; for the Devil will make use of that to insnare others, and work in them an aversion to the doctrine of Christ, preached by those who have not had a good report.

Now upon the whole, having briefly gone through the qualifications of a gospel-bishop, we have shown (1.) With great reason cry out, as St. Paul does, Who is sufficient for these things? 2 Cor. 2. 16. He labor, too often—This is a work indeed. What prudence, what prudence, what zeal, what courage, what faithfulness, what watchfulness over ourselves, our lusto, appetites, and passions, and over those under our charge; I say, what watchfulness is necessary in this work? (2.) Have not the best qualified and the most faithful and conscientious ministers just reason to complain against themselves, that so much is requisite by way of qualification, and so much work is necessary to be done? And, alas! how far short do the best come of what they should be, and what they should do? (3.) Yet let those bless God, and be thankful, whom the Lord has enabled, and counted faithful, putting them into the ministry; if God is pleased to make any, in some degree, able and faithful, let him have the praise and glory of it. (4.) For the encouragement of all faithful ministers, we have Christ's gracious word of promise, Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world, Matt. 28. 20. And if he be with us, he will fit us for our work in some measure, and carry us through the difficulties of it with comfort, gratefully pardon our imperfections, and reward our faithfulness with a crown of glory that fadeth not away, 1 Pet. 5. 4.

6. Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre; 9. Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. 10. And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless. 11. Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. 12. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. 13. For they that have used the office of a deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Jesus Christ.

1. We have here the character of deacons; these had the care of the temporal concerns of the church, that is, the administration of the ministers and provis. for the poor; they served tables, while the ministers or bishops gave themselves only to the ministry of the word and prayer, Acts 6, 2, 4. Of the institution of this office with that which gave occasion to it, you have an account in Acts 6, 1—7. Now it was requisite that the deacons should have a good character, because they were assistants to the ministers, appeared and acted publicly, and had a great trust reposed in them. They are to be of the office of gravity. All Christians, but especially those who are in office in the church. Not double-tongued; that will say one thing to one, and another thing to another, according as their interest leads them: a double tongue comes from a double heart; flatterers and slanderers are double-tongued. Not given to much wine; for that is a great disrepute to every man, especially to a Christian, and one in office, unfit men for business, opens the door to many temptations. Not greedy of filthy lucre; this would be especially bad in the deacons, who were intrusted with the church's money, and, if they were covetous and greedy of filthy lucre, would be tempted to embellish it, and convert that to their own use which was intended for the public service. Holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience, v. 9. Note, The mystery of faith is best held in a pure conscience. The practical love of truth is the most perfect preservative from error and delusion. If we keep a pure conscience, take heed of every thing that debauches conscience, and draws them away from God, that will preserve in our souls the mystery of faith. Let these also, first be proved, v. 10. It is not fit that the public trusts should be lodged in the hands of any, till they are first proved, and found fit for the business they are to be intrusted with; the soundness of their judgments, their zeal for Christ, and the blamelessness of their conversation, must be proved.

2. Their wives likewise must have a good character; (v. 11.) they must be of a grave behaviour, not slanderers, tale-bearers, carrying stories to make mischief and sow discord; they must be sober and faithful in all things, not given to any excess, but trusty in all that is committed to them. All who are related to ministers, must be good. As becomes the gospel of Christ, lest, if they in any thing walk disorderly, the ministry be blamed. As he said before of the bishops or ministers, so here of the deacons, they must be the husband of one wife, such as had not put away their wives, upon dislike, and married others; they must rule their children and their own houses well; families of ministers should be examples to other families. And the reason why this is required is, (v. 12.) because, though the office of a deacon be of an inferior degree, yet it is a step toward the higher degree; and they who had served tables well the church might see cause afterward to discharge from that service, and prefer to serve in preaching the word and in prayer. Or it may be meant of the good reputation that a man would gain by his fidelity in this office. For, he that exerciseth great boldness in the faith that is in Jesus Christ.

Observe, (1.) In the primitive church there were but two orders of ministers or officers, bishops and deacons, Philip. 1. 1. After-ages have invented the rest. The office of the bishop, presbyter, pastor, or minister, was confined to prayer and to the ministry of the word; and the office of the deacon was confined to, or at least principally conversant about, serving tables. Clemens Romanus, in his epistle the Christians (chap. 42, 44.) speaks very fully and plainly to this effect, that the apostles, foreknowing, by our Lord Jesus Christ, that there would arise in the Christian church a controversy about the name Episcopacy, appointed the forementioned orders, bishops and deacons. (2.) The scripture-deacon’s main employment was, to serve tables, and not to preach or baptize. It is true, indeed, Philip did preach and baptize many in Samaria, (Acts 8.) but you read he was an evangelist, (Acts 21. 8.) and he might preach and baptize, and perform any other part of the ministerial office, under that character: but still the design of the deacon’s office was, to mind the temporal concerns of the church, such as the salaries of the ministers, and providing for the poor. (3.) Several observations were made even for these inferior officers; The deacons must be grave, &c. (4.) Some trial should be made of person’s qualifications before they are admitted into office in the church, or have any trust committed to them; Let these also first be proved. (5.) Integrity and uprightness in an inferior office, are the way to be preferred to a higher station in the church; They purchase to themselves a good degree. (6.) This will give a man great hold in the church, whereas a want of integrity and uprightness will make a man timorous, and ready to tremble at his own shadow; The wicked fleeth when no man pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a lion, Prov. 28. 1.

14. These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly: 15. But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. 16. And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory. He concludes the chapter with a particular direction to Timothy. 1. He hoped shortly to come to him, to give him further directions and assistance in his work, and to see that Christianity was well planted, and took root well, at Ephesus; for he therefore wrote the more briefly to him. But II. He wrote lest he should tarry long, that he might know how to behave himself in the house of God, how to conduct himself as became an evangelist, and the apostle’s substitute. Observe, Those who are employed in the house of God, must see to it, that they behave themselves well, lest they bring reproach upon the house of God, and that worthy name by which they are called. Ministers ought to behave themselves well, and to look not only to their praying and preaching, but to their behaviour: their office binds them to their good behaviour, for any behaviour will not do in this case. Timothy must know how to behave himself, not only in the particular church where he was now appointed to reside for a time, being an evangelist, and the apostle’s substitute, but he must learn how to behave himself in other churches, where he should in like manner be appointed to reside for some time; and therefore it is not the church of Ephesus, but the Catholic church, which is here called the house of God, which is the church of the living God. Observe, 1. God is the living God; he is the Fountain of life, he is Life in himself, and he gives life, breath, and all things, to his creatures; in him we live, and move, and have our being, Acts 17. 25, 28. 2. The church is the house of God, he dwells there; the Lord has chosen Zion, to dwell there; “This is my rest, here will I dwell, for I have chosen it;” there may we see God’s power and glory, Ps. 65. 2. It is the great support of the church, that it is the church of the living God, the true God in opposition to false gods, dumb and dead idols; the pillar and ground of truth; that is, either, (1.) The church itself; that is, the pillar and ground of truth. Not that the authority of the scriptures depends upon that of the church, as the papiists pretend, for truth is the pillar and ground of the church; but the church holds forth the scripture and the doctrine of Christ, as the pillar, to which a proclamation is affixed, holds forth the proclamation. Even the pillars and beams in heavenly places is made known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, Eph. 3. 10. (2.) Others understand it of Timothy. He, not himself only, but he as an evangelist, he and other faithful ministers, are the pillars and ground of truth; it is their business to maintain, hold up, and publish, the truths of Christ in the church. It is said of the apostles, that they seemed to be pillars, Gal. 2. 9. [1.] Let us be diligent and impartial in our own inquiries after truth; let us buy the truth at any rate, and not think much of any pains to discover it. [2.] Let us be careful to keep and preserve it; “Buy the truth, and sell it not,” (Prov. 23. 23.) do not part with it on any consideration. [3.] Let us take care to publish it, and to transmit it safe and uncorrupted unto posterity. [4.] When the church ceases to be the pillar and ground of truth, we may and ought to forsake her; for our regard to truth should be greater than our regard to the church; we are no longer obliged to continue in the church than she continues to be the pillar and ground of truth.

Now what is the truth which the churches and ministers are the pillars and grounds of? He tells us, (v. 16.) that without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. The learned Camero joins this with what goes before, and then it runs thus, “The pillar and ground of the truth; and without controversy great is the mystery of godliness.” He supposes this mystery to be the pillar, &c. Observe, First, Christianity is a mystery, a mystery that could not have been found out by reason or the light of nature, and cannot be comprehended by reason, because it is above reason, though not contrary thereto. It is a mystery, not of philosophy or speculation; but, Secondly, it is a mystery of godliness, designed to promote godliness; and herein it exceeds all the mysteries of the Gentiles. Thirdly, It is a revealed mystery, not shut up and sealed; and it does not cease to be a mystery, because now in part revealed.

Now what is the mystery of godliness? It is Christ; and here are six things concerning Christ, which make up the mystery of godliness.

1. That he is God manifest in the flesh; God was manifest in the flesh. This proves that he is God, the eternal Word, that was made flesh, and was not made in the flesh. When God was to be manifested to man, he was pleased to manifest himself in the incarnation of his own Son; The word was made flesh, John 1. 14. 2. He is justified in the Spirit. Whereas he was reproached as a sinner, and put to death as a malefactor, he was raised again by the Spirit, and was justified from all calumnies with which he was loaded. He was made Sin for us, and was delivered for our offences; but, being raised again, he was justified in the Spirit; it was made to appear that his sacrifice was accepted, and so he rose again for our justification, as he was delivered for our offences, Rom. 4. 25. He was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, 1 Pet. 3. 18.

3. He was seen of angels. They worshipped him, (Heb. 1. 6.) they attended his incarnation, his temptation, his agony, his death, his resurrection, his ascension; this is much to his honour, and shews what a mighty interest he has in the upper world, that angels ministered to him, for he is the Lord of angels.

4. He is preached unto the Gentiles. This is a great part of the mystery of godliness, that Christ was offered to the Gentiles a Redeemer and Saviour; that whereas, before, salvation was of the Jews, the partition-wall was now taken down, and the Gentiles were taken in; I have set thee to be a Light of the Gentiles, Acts 13. 47.

5. That he was believed on in the world, so that he was not preached in vain. Many of the Gentiles welcomed the gospel which the Jews rejected. Who would have thought that the world, which lay in wickedness, should have believed in the Son of God, should have taken him to be their Saviour, who was himself crucified at Jerusalem. But, notwithstanding all the prejudices they laboured under, he was believed on, &c.

6. He was received up into glory; in his ascension. This indeed was before he was believed on in the world; but it is put last, because it was the crown of his exaltation, and because it is not only his ascension that is meant, but his sitting at the right-hand of God, where he ever lives, making intercession, and has all power, both in heaven and earth: and because in the apostasy, of which he treats in the following chapter, his remaining in heaven would be denied by those who pretend to bring him down on their altars in the consecrated wafer. Observers.

(1.) He who was manifest in flesh, was God, really and truly God; God by nature, and not only so by office, for this makes it to be a mystery.

(2.) God was manifest in flesh, real flesh; forasmuch as children are partakers of flesh and blood, he himself likewise took part of the same, Heb. 2. 14. And what is more amazing, he was manifest in the flesh, as all angels were appointed by himself, and he himself was holy from the womb. (3.) Godliness is a mystery in all its parts and branches, from the beginning to the end, from Christ’s incarnation to his ascension. (4.) It being a great mystery, we should rather humbly adore it, and piously believe it, than curiously pry into it, or be too positive in our explications of it, and determinations about it, further than the holy scriptures have revealed it to us.

CHAP. IV.

St. Paul here foretells, 1. A dreadful apostasy, v. 1. 3. 11. He forewars of Christ, v. 4. 5. 11. He diversifies directions with respect to himself, his doctrine, and the people under his care, v. 6. to the end.

1. NOW the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; 2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their consciences seared with a hot iron; 3. Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. 4. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: 5. For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

We have here a prophecy of the apostasy of the latter times, which he had spoken of as a thing expected and taken for granted among Christians. 2 Thess. 2. In the close of the foregoing chapter, we had the mystery of godliness summed up; and therefore very fitly, in the beginning of this chapter, we have the mystery of iniquity summed up. The Spirit speaks expressively, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith; whether he means the Spirit of Antichrist, the Old Testament, or the Spirit in the prophets of the New Testament, or both. He unfolds his speculations concerning antichrist, as well as the prophecies concerning Christ, came from the Spirit. The Spirit in both spake expressly of a general apostasy from the faith of Christ, and the pure worship of God. This should come in the latter times, during the Christian dispensation, for those are called the latter days; in the following ages of the church, for the mystery of iniquity now began to work. Some shall depart from the faith, or there shall be an apostasy from the faith. Some, not all; for in the worst of times God will have a remnant, according to the election of grace. They shall depart from the faith, the faith delivered to the saints (Jude 3,) which was delivered at once, the sound doctrine of the gospel. Giving heed to seducing spirits; men who pretended to the spirit but were not so. Paul, 1 John 4. 1. Beloved, believe not every spirit; every one who pretends to the Spirit. Now here observe,

I. One of the great instances of that apostasy, and that is, giving heed to doctrines of demons, or concerning demons; those doctrines which teach the worship of saints and angels, as a middle sort of deities, between the immortal God and mortal men, such as the heathens called demons, and worshipped under that notion. Now this plainly agrees toward the church of Rome, and it was one of the first steps toward that great apostasy, the inshrining of the relics of martyrs, paying divine honours to them, erecting altars, burning incense, consecrating images and temples, and making prayers and praises to the honour of saints departed. This demon-worship is paganism, as pagans receiveth, the image of the first beast.

II. The instrument of this apostasy is the propagation of this apostasy and delusion. It will be done by hypocrisy of those that speak lies, (v. 2.) speaking lies in hypocrisy; the agents and emissaries of Satan, who promote these delusions by lies and forgeries and pretended miracles. It is done by their hypocrisy, professing honour to Christ, and yet at the same time fighting against all his anointed offices, and corrupting or profaning all his ordinances. This respects also the hypocrisy of those who have their consciences seared with a hot iron, who are perfectly lost to the first principles of virtue and moral honesty. If men had not their consciences seared as with a hot iron, they could never maintain a power to dispense with oaths for the good of the Catholic cause, could never maintain that no faith is to be kept with heretics, could never divest themselves of all remains of humanity and compassion, and clothe themselves with the most barbarous cruelty, under pretence of promoting the interest of the church.

Another part of their character is, that they forbid to marry, forbid their clergy to marry, and speak very reproachfully of marriage, though an ordinance of God; and that they command to abstain from meats, and pray religion in that at certain times and seasons, only to exercise a tyranny over the consciences of men.

1. The apostasy of the latter times should not surprise us, because it was expressly foretold by the
The Spirit. 2. The Spirit is God, otherwise he could not certainly foresee such distant events, as which to us are uncertain and contingent, depending on the tempers, humours, and lusts of men. 3. The difference between the predictions of the Spirit and the oracles of the heathen is remarkable; the Spirit speaks expressly, but the oracles of the heathen were always doubtful and uncertain. 4. It is comfortable to think that in such general apostasies all are not totally lost, but only converted. It is common for seducers and deceivers to pretend to the Spirit, which is a strong presumption that all are convinced that this is the most likely to work in us an approbation of what pretends to come from the Spirit. 6. Men must be hardened, and their consciences seared, before they can depart from the faith, and draw in others to side with them. 7. It is a sign that men have departed from the faith, that they will command what God has forbidden, such as saint and angel or demon-worship; and forbid what God has allowed or commanded, such as marriage and meats.

Upon occasion of the mentioning of their hypocritical fastings, the apostle lays down the doctrine of the Christian liberty which we enjoy under the gospel, of using God's good creatures; that, whereas under the law there was a distinction of meats between clean and unclean (such sort of flesh they might eat, and such they might not eat,) all that is now taken away; and we are to call nothing common or unclean, Acts 10. 15.

(1.) We are to look upon our food as that which God has created; we have it from him, and therefore must use it for him.

(2.) God, in making those things, had a special regard to them who believe and know the truth; good Christians, who have a common right to the creatures; whereas others have only a common right.

(3.) What God has created, is to be received with thanksgiving. We must not refuse the gifts of God's bounty, or be scrupulous in making differences where God has made none; but take it, and be thankful, acknowledging the power of God the Maker of them, and the bounty of God the Giver of them.

Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, Acts 10. 4. This plainly sets us at liberty from all the distinctions of meats appointed by the ceremonial law, as particularly that of swine's flesh, which the Jews were forbidden to eat, but which is allowed to us Christians, by this rule, Every creature of God is good, &c. Observe, God's good creatures are then good, and doubly sweet to us, when they are received with thanksgiving.

For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer, v. 5. It is a desirable thing to have a sanctified use of our creature-comforts. Now they are sanctified to us,

[1.] By the word of God; not only his permission, allowing us the liberty of the use of these things, but his promise to feed us with food convenient for us. This gives us a sanctified use of our creature-comforts.

[2.] By prayer, which blesses our meat to us. The word of God and prayer must be brought to our common actions and affairs, and then we do all in faith. Observe,

First, Every creature is God's, for he made all. Every beast in the forest is mine, (says God,) and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains, and the wild beasts of the field are mine, Ps. 50. 10, 11. Secondly, Every creature of God is good: when the blessed God took a survey of all his works, God saw all that was made, and, behold, it was very good, Gen. 1. 31. Thirdly, The blessing of God makes every creature nourishing to us; man lives not by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God, (Matt. 4. 4.) and therefore nothing ought to be refused. Fourthly,

We ought therefore to ask his blessing by prayer, and so to sanctify the creatures we receive by prayer.

6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained. 7. But refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness. 8. For bodily exercise profiteth little: but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. 9. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation. 10. For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, especially of those that believe. 11. These things command and teach. 12. Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. 13. Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. 14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. 15. Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all. 16. Take heed unto thyself, and unto thy doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

If thou put the brethren in remembrance, &c. He would have Timothy to instil such notions as these into the minds of Christians, which might prevent their being seduced by the judaizing teachers. Observe, Those are good ministers of Jesus Christ, who are diligent in their work; not that study to advance new notions, but that put the brethren in remembrance of those things which they have received and heard. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though you know them, 2 Pet. 1. 12. And elsewhere, I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, 2 Pet. 3. 1. And, says the apostle Jude, I will therefore put you in remembrance, Jude 5. You see that the apostles and apostolical men reckoned it a main part of their work, to put their hearers in remembrance; for we are apt to forget, and slow to learn and remember, the things we hear.

Nourished up in the words of faith and good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained. Observe, 1. Even ministers themselves have need to be growing and increasing in the knowledge of Christ and his doctrine: they must be nourished up in the words of faith. 2. The best way for ministers to grow in knowledge and faith is, to put the brethren in remembrance, while we teach others, we teach our selves. 3. They whom ministers teach, are brethren, and are to be treated like brethren; for ministers are not lords of God's heritage.

1. Godliness is here pressed upon him and others; Refuse profane and old wives' sayings, v. 7, 8. The Jewish traditions which some people fill their heads with, have nothing to do with them. But exercise thyself rather unto godliness; mind practical reli gion.” Those who would be godly, must exercise themselves unto godliness; it requires a constant exercise. The reason is taken from the gain of godliness; bodily exercise profits little, or for a little time. Abstinence from meats and marriage, and the like, though they pass for acts of mortification and self-denial, yet they profit little, they turn to little account. What will it avail us, to mortify the body, if we do not mortify sin?

Observe,

There is a great deal to be got by godliness; it will be of use to us in the whole of our life: for it has the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. Observe, The gain of godliness lies much in that promise. Godliness is that which all people relate to the life that now is; but especially they relate to the life which is to come. Under the Old Testament the promises were mostly of temporal blessings, but under the New Testament of spiritual and eternal blessings. If godly people have but little of the good things of the life that now is, yet it shall be made up to them in the good things of the life that is to come. Observe further, There were profane and old wives' fables in the days of the apostles; and Timothy, though an excellent man, was not above such a word of advice, Refuse profane, &c. Again, It is not enough that we refuse profane and old wives' fables, but we must exercise ourselves to godliness; we must not only cease to do evil, but we must learn to do well, (Isa. 1. 16, 17.) and we must make a practice of exercising ourselves to godliness. And those who are truly godly, shall not be losers at last, whatever becomes of those who content themselves with bodily exercise, for godliness has the promise, &c.

II. The encouragement which we have to proceed in the ways of godliness, and to exercise ourselves to it, notwithstanding the difficulties and discouragements that we meet with in it. He had said, (v. 2.) that it is profitable for all things, having the promise of the life that now is. But the question is, Will the profit balance the loss? For if it will not, it is not profit. Yes, we are sure it will. Here is another of Paul's faithful savings, worthy of all acceptation—that all our labours and losses in the service of God and work of religion, will be abundantly recompensed: so that though we lose for Christ, we shall not lose by him; Therefore we laboured more abundantly than any, because we trust in the living God, v. 10. Observe,

1. Godly people must labour and expect reproach; they must do well, and yet expect at the same time to suffer ill: toil and trouble are to be expected by us in this world, not only as men, but as saints.

2. Those who labour and suffer reproach in the service of God and the work of religion, may depend upon the living God, that they shall not lose by it. Let this encourage them, We trust in the living God. The consideration of this, that God who has undertaken to be our Pay-master, is the living God, who does himself live for ever, and is the fountain of life to all who serve him, should encourage us in all our services and in all our sufferings for him, especially considering that he is the Saviour of all men.

(1.) By his providence he protects the persons, and provides the lives, of the children of men.

(2.) He has a general good-will to the eternal salvation of all men thus far, that he is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. He desires not the death of sinners; he is thus far the Saviour of all men, that none are left in the same desperate condition that fallen angels are in. He is the Saviour of all men, we may hence infer, that much more he will be the Rewarder of those who seek and serve him; if he has such a good-will for all his creatures, much more will he provide well for those who are new creatures, who are born again. He is the Saviour of all men, but especially of those that believe; and the salvation he has in store for those that believe, is sufficient to recompense them for all their services and sufferings.

Here we see, (1.) The life of a Christian is a life of labour and suffering; we labour and suffer. (2.) The best we can expect to suffer in the present life, is, reproach for our well-doing, for our work of faith and labour of love. (3.) True Christians trust in the living God; for cursed is the man that trusts in man, or in any but the living God; and that he in him, shall never be ashamed. Trust in him at all times. (4.) God is the general Saviour of all men, as he has put them into a salvable state; but he is in a peculiar manner the Saviour of true believers; there is then a general and a special redemption.

III. He concludes the chapter with an exhortation to Timothy;

1. To command and teach those things that he had now been teaching him. Command them to exercise themselves unto godliness, teach them the profit of it, and that if they serve God, they serve one who will be sure to bear them out.

2. He charges him to concern himself with that gravity and prudence that might gain him respect, notwithstanding his youth; Let no man despise thy youth; give no man an occasion to despise thy youth. Men's youth will not be despised, if they do not by youthful vanities and follies make themselves despicable; and that men may do, who are old, who may therefore thank themselves if they be despised.

3. He charges him to confirm his doctrine by a good example; Be thou an example of the believers, &c. Observe, Those who teach by their doctrine, must teach by their life, else they pull down with one hand what they build up with the other: they must be examples both in word and conversation. Their discourse must be edifying, and that will be a good example; their conversation must be strict, and that will be a good example: they must be examples in charity, or love to God and all good men: examples in spirit, that is, in spiritual-mindedness, in spiritual worship: in faith, that is, in the profession of Christian faith: and in purity or chastity.

4. He charges him to study hard; Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine, to meditation upon these things, v. 13. Though Ti- minius had extraordinary gifts, yet he must use ordinary means. Observe, The general public reading of the scriptures; he must read and expound, that is, read and expound, read, and press what he read upon them; he must expound it both by way of exhortation, and by way of doctrine; he must teach them both what to do, and what to believe.

Observe, (1.) Ministers must teach and command the things that they are taught and commanded themselves, that they may teach people to observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded, Matt. 28. 20. (2.) The best way for ministers to prevent themselves from being despised, is, to teach and practise the things that are given them in charge. No wonder if ministers are despised, who do not teach these things; or, instead of being examples of good to believers, act directly contrary to the doctrines they preach; that ministers are to be ensamples of their flock. (3.) Those things which are the best accomplished for their work, must yearn and ponder their studies, that they may be improving in knowledge; and they must mind also their work; they are to give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

Neglect not the gift that is in thee, v. 14. The gift of God will wither, if they be neglected. It may be understood, either of the office to which he was advanced, or of his qualifications for that office; or of the former, it was ordination in an ordinary way; if of the latter, it was extraordinary. It seems to be the former, for it was by laying on of hands, &c. Here see the scripture-way of ordination, it was by the laying on of hands, and the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. Observe, Timothy was ordained by men in office. It was an extraordinary gift that we read of elsewhere as being conferred on him by the laying on of Paul's hands, but he was invested in the office of the ministry by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

[1.] We may note, the office of the ministry is a gift, it is the gift of Christ; when he ascended up on high, he received gifts for men, and he gave some apostles and some pastors and teachers; (Eph. 4. 8, 11.) and this was a very kind gift to his church.

[2.] Ministers ought not to neglect the gift bestowed upon them, whether by gift we are here to understand the office of the ministry, or qualifications for that office; neither the one nor the other must be neglected. [3.] Though there was prophecy in the case of Timothy; (the gift was given by prophecy;) yet this was accompanied with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, that is, a number of presbyters; the office was conveyed to him this way; and I should think here is a sufficient warrant for ordination by presbyters, since it does not appear that St. Paul was concerned in Timothy's ordination. It is true, extraordinary gifts were conferred on him by the laying on of the apostle's hands; (2 Tim. 1. 6;) but if he was concerned in his ordination, the presbytery was not excluded, for that is particularly mentioned; whence it seems pretty evident, that the presbytery have the inherent power of ordination.

Having this work committed to him, he must give himself wholly to it; "Be wholly in those things, that thy presbyting may appear." He was a wise knowing man, and yet he must still be perfecting; and make it his delight that he improved in knowledge.

First, Ministers are to be much in meditation; they are to consider beforehand how and what they must speak; they are to meditate on the great trust committed to them, on the worth and value of immortal souls, and on the account they must give at the last. Secondly, Ministers must be wholly in these things, they must mind these things as their principal work and business; "Give thyself wholly to this thy calling." By this means their profiting will appear in all things, as well as to all persons; this is the way for them to profit in knowledge and grace, and also to profit others.

5. He presses it upon him to be very cautious; "Take heed to thyself and to the doctrine, consider what thou preachest; continue in them, in the truth that thou hast received; and this will be the way to save thyself, and those that hear thee." Observe, (1.) Ministers are engaged in saving work, which makes it a good work. (2.) The care of ministers should be in the first place to save themselves; "Save thyself in the first place, so shalt thou be instrumental to save them that hear thee." Observe, (3.) Ministers in preaching should aim at the salvation of those that hear them, next to the salvation of their own souls. (4.) The best way to answer both these ends is, to take heed to ourselves, &c.

CHAP. V.

Here the apostle, I. Directs Timothy how to reprove, v. 1, 2.

H. Advert to widows, both elder and younger, v. 3. 16.

III. To elders, v. 7. 13. IV. Treats of public reproof, v. 18, 20. V. Giveth a solemn charge to Timothy, v. 21, 22.

VI. Refers to his health, (v. 23.) and states men's sins to be very different in their effects, v. 24, 25.

1. R EBUKE not an elder, but entreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren; 2. The elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity.

Here the apostle gives rules to Timothy, and in him to other ministers, in reproving. Ministers are reprovers by office. Now the rule is,

1. To be very tender in rebuking elders; elders in age, elders by office. Respect must be had to the dignity of their years and place, and therefore they must not be rebuked sharply or magisterially; but Timothy himself, though an evangelist, must entreat them as fathers, for that would be the likeliest way to work upon them, and to win upon them.

2. The younger must be rebuked as brethren, with love and tenderness; not as desirous to spy faults, or pick quarrels, but as those who are willing to make the best of them. There is need of a great deal of meekness in reproving those who deserve reproof.

3. The elder women must be reproved, when there is occasion; they must be reproved as mothers, Hos. 2. 2. Plead with your mother, plead.

4. The younger women must be reproved, but reproved as sisters, with all purity. If Timothy, so mortified a man to this world and to the flesh and the lusts of it, had need of such a caution as this, much more must we.

(1.) Ministers are reprovers by office; it is a part, though the least pleasing part, of their office; they are to preach the word, to reprove and rebuke, 2 Tim. 4. 2.

(2.) A great difference is to be made in our reproofs, according to the age, quality, and other circumstances, of the persons rebuked; thus an elder in age or office must be entreated as a father; some have confusion, making a difference, Jude 22.

3. Honour widows that are widows indeed. 4. But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to shew piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God.

5. Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day.

6. But she that liveth in pleasure, is dead while she liveth. 7. And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless. 8. But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. 9. Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, 10. Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.

11. But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry; 12. Having dammation, because they have cast off their first faith. 13. And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not.

I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully. 15. For some are already turned aside after Satan. 16. If any man or woman that believeth, have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

Directions are here given concerning the taking of widows into the number of those who were employed by the church, and had maintenance from the church; Hebrews. 4. He that was poor, and was made rich, if he will maintain them, admit them into office. There was in those times an office in the church in which widows were employed, and that was, to tend the sick, the aged, to look to them by the direction of the deacons. We read of the care taken of widows, immediately upon the first forming of the Christian church, (Acts 6. 1.) where the Grecians thought their widows were neglected in the daily ministration and provision made for poor widows. The general rule is, to honour widows that are widows indeed, to maintain them, to relieve them with respect and tenderness.

1. It is appointed that those widows only should be relieved by the charity of the church, who were pious and devout, and not wanton widows that lived in pleasure, v. 5, 6. She is to be reckoned a widow indeed, and fit to be maintained at the church’s charge, who, being . . . God. Observe, It is the duty and comfort of those who are desolate, to trust in God. Therefore God sometimes brings his people into such straits, that they have nothing else to trust to, that they may with more confidence trust in him. Widowhood is a desolate estate; but let the widows trust in me, (Jer. 49. 11.) and rejoice that they have a God to trust to. Again, Those who trust in God, must continue in prayer. If by faith we confide in God, by prayer we must give glory to God, and commit ourselves to his guidance. Anna was a widow indeed, who departed not from the temple, (Luke 2. 37.) but served God with fasting and prayer night and day. But she is not a widow indeed, that lives in pleasure, (v. 6.) or who lives licenciously. A jovial widow is not a widow indeed, not fit to be taken under the care of the church. She that that is 'Merchant of the dead while she lives, is no living member of the church, but as a carcass in it, or a mortified member. We may apply it more generally; those who live in pleasure, are dead while they live, spiritual—dead, dead in trespasses and sins; they are in the world to no purpose, buried alive as to the great ends of living.

2. Another rule he gives is, that the church should not be charged with the maintenance of these widows who had relations of their own, who were able to maintain them. This is mentioned several times; (v. 4.) If any widows have children or nephews, grand-children, or near relations, let them maintain them, and let not the church be bsurthened. So, v. 16. This is called shewing piety at home, (v. 4.) or shewing piety toward their own families. Observe, The respect of children to their parents, and their care of them, is fitly called piety. This is requiting their parents. Children can never sufficiently requite their parents for the care they have taken of them, and the pains they have taken with them; but, however, they must endeavour to do it. It is the indispensable duty of children, if their parents be in necessity, and they in ability to relieve them, to do it to the utmost of their power, for that is good and acceptable before God. The Pharisees taught that a gift to the altar is more acceptable to God than relieving a poor parent, Matt. 15. 5. But here we are told that this is better than all burnt offerings and sacrifices; this is good and acceptable, &c. He speaks of this again; (v. 8.) If any provide not for his own, &c. If any man or woman do not maintain their own poor relations who belong to them, they do not maintain the church. For the design of Christ was to confirm the law of Moses, and particularly the law of the fifth commandment, which is, Honour thy father and mother; so that they deny the faith, who disobey that law, much more if they provide not for their wives and children, which are parts of themselves; if they spend that upon their lusts, which should maintain their families, they have denied the faith, and are worse off.

One reason why this care must be taken, that those who were rich, should maintain their poor relations, and not burden the church with them, is, (v. 16.) that it may relieve them that are widows indeed. Observe, Charity misplaced, is a great hinderance to true charity; therefore there should be prudence in the choice of the objects of charity, that it may be thrown upon those who are not properly so, that there may be the more for those who are real objects of charity.

3. He gives directions concerning the characters of the widows, that were to be taken into the number to receive the church’s charity; not under sixty years old, or any who have divorced their husbands, or been divorced from them, and have married again; she must have been the wife of one man, such as she had been, to shew good names, hospitality and charity, well reported of for good works. Observe, Particular care ought to be taken to relieve those, when they fall into decay, who, when they had wherewithal, were ready to every good work.

Here are instances of such good works as are proper to be done by good wives; If she have brought up children: he does not say, If she have borne children, (children are a Heritage of the Lord,) that depends on the will of God; but if she had not children of her own yet, if she had brought up children. If she have lodged strangers, and washed the saints’ feet; if she have been ready to give entertainment to good Christians and good ministers, when they were in their travels for the spreading of the gospel—washing of the feet of their friends was a part of their entertainments. If she were never been affected with want, and had ability, let her be relieved now. Observe, Those who would find mercy when they are in distress, must shew mercy when they are in prosperity.

4. He cautions them to take heed of admitting into the number those who are likely to be no credit to them, v. 11. The younger widows refuse; they will be weary of their employments in the church, and of living by rule, as they must do; so they will marry, and cast off their first faith. You read of a first love, (Rev. 2. 4.) and here of a first faith, that is, the engagements they gave to the church to behave well, and as became the trust reposed in them it does not appear that by their first faith is meant their vow not to marry, for the scripture is very silent on that head; besides, the apostle here adds the younger widows must be wise, (v. 14.) which he would not if hereby they must have broken their vows. Dr. Whitby well observes, If this faith referred to a promise made to the church not to marry, it could not be called their first faith, v. 13. Withal they learn to be idle, and not only idle, but tattlers, &c. Observe, It is seldom that those who are idle, are only idle, they learn to be tattlers and busy-bodies, and to make mischief among neighbours, and so discord among brethren. Those who had not attained to such a gravity of mind as was fit for the deaconesses, (or the widows who were taken among the church’s poor,) let them marry, bear children, &c. v. 14. Observe, If house-keepers do not mind their business, but are tatters, they give occasion to the adversaries of Christianity to reproach the Christian name, which, it seems, there were some instances of, v. 15.

We learn hence, (1.) In the primitive church there was care taken of poor widows, and provision made for them; the churches of Christ in these days should follow so good an example, as far as they are able. (2.) In the distribution of the church’s charity, or alms, great care is to be taken, that those share in the bounty, who most want it, and best deserve it; a widow was not to be taken into the primitive church, that had relations who were able to maintain them. (3.) The credit of religion, and the reputation of Christian churches, are very much concerned in the character and behaviour of those that are taken into any employment in the church, though of a lower nature, (such as the office of deaconess,) or that receive the care of the poor; if they do not behave well, but are tatters and busy-bodices, they will give occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully. (4.) Christianity obliges its professors to relieve their indigent friends, particularly poor widows, that the church may not be charged with them, that it may relieve them that are widows indeed; rich people should be ashamed to burden the church with their poor relations, when it is with difficulty that those are supplied, who have no children or nephews, that is, grand-children, who are in a capacity to relieve them.

17. Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine. 13. For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The labourer is worthy of his reward. 19. Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses. 20. Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear. 21. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things, without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality. 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men’s sins: keep thyself pure. 23. Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach’s sake and thine often infirmities.

18. Some men’s sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after. 25. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise, cannot be hid.

Here are directions concerning ministers.

1. Care must be taken that they be honourably maintained; (v. 17.) Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, of double maintenance, double to what they have had, or to what others have; especially they who labour in the word and doctrine, those who are more laborious than others. Observe, The presbytery ruled, and the same that ruled were those who laboured in the word and doctrine: they had not one to preach to them, and another to rule them, but the work was done by one and the same person.

Some have imagined that by the elders that rule well, the apostle means laborious elders, who were employed in business, but not in teaching; they were concerned in church-government, but did not meddle with the administration of the word and sacraments; and I confess this is the plainest text of scripture that can be found to counteract such an opinion; but it seems a little strange, that mere ruling elders should be accounted worthy of double honour, when the apostle preferred preaching to baptizing, and much more it would be preferable to ruling the church; and it is more strange, that the church should take no notice of them when he treats of church-officers; but, as it is hinted before, they had not, in the primitive church, one to preach to them, and another to rule them, but ruling and teaching were performed by the same persons, only some might labour more in the word and doctrine than others. Here we have, 1. The work of ministers; ministers are to be laborious elders, that they may labour in the word and doctrine; this was the main business of elders or presbyters in the days of the apostles. 2. The honour due to them who were not idle, but laborious in this work; they were worthy of double honour, esteem, and maintenance. He quotes a scripture to confirm this command concerning the maintenance of ministers, that we would think foreign; but it intimates what a significance there was given to the words of Moses, and particularly in that, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, Deut. 25. 4. The beasts that were employed in treading out the corn, (for that way they took instead of threshing it,) were allowed to feed while they did work, so that the more work they did, the more food they had; therefore let the elders that labour in the word and doctrine, be well provided for; for the labourer is worthy of his reward, (Matt. 10. 10.) and there is the all the reason in the world that he should have it.

We hence learn, (1.) God, both under the law, and now under the gospel, has taken care that his ministers be well provided for. Does God take care for oxen, and will he not take care of his own servants? The ox only treads out the corn, of which they make the bread that perishes; but ministers have bread of life which endures. The comfortable subsistence of ministers, as it is God’s appointment that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel, (1 Cor. 9. 14.) so is it their just due, as much as the reward of the labourer; and those who would have ministers starved, or not comfortably provided for, God will require it of them another day.

11. Concerning the accusation of ministers; (v. 19.) Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses: here is the scripture-method of proceeding against an elder, when accused of any crime. Observe, 1. There must be an accusation, it must not be a flying uncertain report; but an accusation, containing a certain charge, must be drawn up. Further, He is not to be proceeded against by way of inquiry; this is according to the modern practice, which draws up articles for men to purge themselves of such crimes, or else to accuse themselves; but, according to the advice of St. Paul, there must be an accusation brought against an elder. 2. This accusation is not to be received, unless supported by two or three credible witnesses: and the accusation must be received before them, that is, the accused must have the accusers face to face, because the reputation of a minister is, in a particular manner, a tender thing; and therefore, before any thing be done in the least to blemish that reputation, great care must be taken that the thing alleged against him be well proved, that he be not reproached upon an uncertain surmise; "but, (v. 20.) the rebuke before all, that he need not be so tender of other people, but rebuke them publicly." Or, "them that sin before all, rebuke before all, that the plaster may be as wide as the wound, and that those who are in danger of sinning by the example of their fall, may take warning by the rebuke given them for it, that others also may fear."

1. Public scandalous sinners must be rebuked publicly; their sin has been public, and committed before many, or at least come to the hearing of all, so their reproof must be public, and before all. 2. Public rebuke is designed for the good of others, that they may fear, as well as for the good of the party rebuked; as it was ordered under the law, that public offenders should receive public punishment; and all Israel shall hear, and fear, and do no more wickedly.

III. Concerning the ordination of ministers; (v. 22.) Lay hands suddenly on no man; it seems to be meant of the ordaining of men to the office of the ministry, which ought not to be done rashly and inconsiderably, and before due trial made of their gifts and graces, their abilities and qualifications for it.

Some understand it of absolution; "Be not too hasty in laying hands on any, remit not the censure of the church to any, till first time be taken for the proof of their sincerity in their repentance, neither be partakers of other men's sins;" implying, that those who are too easy in remitting the censures of the church, encourage others in the sins which are thus commited at, and make themselves thereby guilty. Observe, We have great need to watch over ourselves at all times, that we do not make ourselves partakers of other men's sins. Keep thyself pure, not only from doing the like thyself, but from countenancing it, or being any way accessory to it in others."

Here is 1. A caution against rash ordination of ministers, or absolution of those who have been under church-censures; "Lay hands suddenly on no man." 2. Those who are rash, either in the one case, or the other, will make themselves partakers of other men's sins. We must keep ourselves pure, if we will be pure; the grace of God makes and keeps us pure, but it is by our own endeavours.

The 24th and 25th verses seem to refer to absolution; "Some men's sins are openly beforehand, going before to judgment, and some follow after, &c. Observe, Ministers have need of a great deal of wisdom, to know how to accommodate themselves to the variety of offenders and offenders, that they have occasion to deal with."

(1) Some men's sins are so plain and obvious, and not found by secret search, that there is no dispute concerning the bringing of them under the censures of the church; they go before to judgment, to lead them to censure.

(2) Others, they follow after; their wickedness does not presently appear, nor till after a due search have been made concerning it. Or, as some understand it, some men's sins continue after they are censured; they are not reformed by the censure, and in that case there must be no absolution.

(3) As to the evidences of repentance; "The good works of some are manifest beforehand. And they that are otherwise, whose good works do not appear, their wickedness cannot be hid, and so it will be easy to discover when a man is to be absolved, and who are not."

1. There are secret, and there are open sins; some men's sins are open beforehand, and going before unto judgment, and some they follow after.

2. Sinners must be differently dealt with by the church. 3. The effects of church-censures are very different; some are thereby humbled and brought to repentance, so that their good works are manifest beforehand, while it is quite otherwise with others. 4. The incorrigible cannot be hid; for God will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of all hearts.

Lastly, As to Timothy himself.

1. Here is a charge to him to be careful of his office: and a solemn charge it is; I charge thee before God, as thou wilt answer it to God before the public and elect angels; observe these things without partiality, v. 21. Observe, It fall becomes ministers to be partial, and to have respect of persons, and to prefer one before another upon any secular account. He charges him, by all that is dear, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, to guard against partiality.

2. Ministers must give an account to God and the Lord Jesus Christ, whether, and how, they have observed all things given them in charge; and woe to them if they have been partial in their ministrations, out of any worldly politic view.

3. He charges him to take care of his health; Drink no longer water, &c. It seems, Timothy was a mortified man to the pleasures of sense; he drank water, and he was a man of no strong constitution of body, and for that reason Paul advises him to use wine, for the helping of his stomach, and the recruiting of his nature.

Observe, It is a little wine, for ministers must not be given to much wine; so much as may be for the health of the body, not so as to dis temper it; for God has made wine, to rejoice man's heart. 1. It is the will of God, that people should take all due care of their bodies. As we are not to make them our masters, so neither our slaves; but to use them so as they may be most fit and helpful us in the service of God.

Observe, 2. Wine is most proper for sickly and weak people, whose stomachs are often out of order, and who labour under infirmities. Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine to those that are of heavy hearts, Prov. 31. 6. 3. Wine should be used as a help, and not a hindrance, to our work and usefulness.

CHAP. VI.

LET as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed. 2. And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort. 3. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, 4. He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions, and strifes of words, wherein cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings. 5. Perverse disputations of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself.

Here is,

I. The duty of servants. He had spoken before of church-relations, here of our family-relations. Servants are here said to be under the yoke, which denotes their subjection and labour; they are yoked to work, not to be idle. If Christianity finds servants under the yoke, it continues them under it; for the gospel does not cancel the obligations any lie under, either by the law of nature, or by mutual consent. They must respect their masters, count them worthy of all honour, (because they are their masters,) of all the respect, observance, compliance, and obedience, that are justly due to persons of value. Not that they were to think that of them which they were not; but as their masters they must count them worthy of all that honour which was fit for them to receive, that the name of God be not blasphemed. If servants that embraced the Christian religion, should grow insolent and disobedient to their masters, the doctrine of Christ would be reflected on their sakes, these had many men worse livers than they had been before they had received the gospel. Observe, If the professors of religion misbehave themselves, the name of God and his doctrine are in danger of being blasphemed by those who seek occasions to speak evil of that worthy name by which we are called. And this is a good reason why we should all conduct ourselves well, that we may prevent the occasion which many seek, and will be very apt to lay hold of, to speak ill of religion for our sakes.

Or suppose the master were a Christian, and a believer, and the servant a believer too, would not that excite him, because in Christ there is neither bond nor free? No, by no means, for Jesus Christ did not come to dissolve the bond of civil relation, but to strengthen it; They that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; for that brotherhood relates only to spiritual privileges, not to any outward dignity or advantage; (those misunderstand and abuse their religion, who make it a pretence for denying the duties that they owe to their relations;) nay, rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved. They must think themselves the more obliged to serve them, because the faith and love that bespeak men Christians, oblige them to do good, and that jointly whatever is their service. Observe, It is a great encouragement to us in doing our duty to our relations, if we have reason to think they are faithful and beloved, and partakers of the benefit, that is, of the benefit of Christianity. Again, Believing masters and servants are brethren, and partakers of the benefit; for in Christ Jesus there is neither bond nor free, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus, Gal. 3. 28. Thus is it appropos to teach and exhort them, that they may discharge their duty; and this is, I suppose, the reason why the apostle adds, Ministers must preach not only the general duties of all, but the duties of particular relations.

II. Paul here warns Timothy to withdraw from those who corrupted the doctrine of Christ, and made it the subject of strife, debate, and controversy; If any man teach otherwise, (v. 3-5.) do not preach practically; do not teach and exhort that which he knows to be the proceedings of serious godliness. If he will not consent to wholesome words, words that have a direct tendency to heal the soul, he will not consent to these, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ. Observe, We are not required to consent to any words as wholesome words, except the words of our Lord Jesus Christ; but those must give our unfeigned assent and consent to, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness. Observe, The doctrine of our Lord Jesus is a doctrine according to godliness; it has a direct tendency to make people godly; but he that does not act agreeably, is prouddy, (v. 4.) and contentious, ignorant, and does a great deal of mischief to the church, knowing nothing. Observe, Commonly those are most proud, who know least; for with all their knowledge they do not know themselves, but dote about questions. Those who fall into dissensions about the doctrine of Christianity, fall in with controversies, which eat out the life and power of religion; they dote about questions and stripes of words, which do a great deal of mischief in the church, are the occasion of envy, strife, railings, and evil surmisings. When men are not content with the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness, but will frame notions of their own, and impose them, and that they may support and maintain their notions of godliness, they are polluted, and corrupted, and so are men, as common divinity teaches, and not in the words which the Holy Ghost teaches, (1 Cor. 13.) they sow the seeds of all mischief in the church. Hence come perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, (v. 5.) disputes that are all subtilety, and no solidity. Observe, Men of corrupt minds are destitute of the truth. The reason why men's minds are corrupt, is, because they do not use the doctrine, which the apostle teaches, that gain is godliness, making religion trullce to their secular interest. From such as these Timothy is warned to withdraw himself.

We observe, (1.) The words of our Lord Jesus Christ are wholesome words, they are the fittest to prevent or heal the church's wounds, as well as to heal a wounded conscience; for Christ has the tongue of the learned, to speak a word in season to him that is weary, Isa. 50. 4. The words of Christ are the best to prevent ruptures in the church; for none who profess faith in him, will dispute the aptness or authority of his words, who is their Lord and Teacher; and it has never gone well with the church, since the words of men have claimed a regard equal to his words, and in some cases a much greater. (2.) Whoever teaches otherwise, and does not consent to these wholesome words, he is proud, knowing nothing; for pride and ignorance commonly go together. (3.) St. Paul sets a brand only on those who consent not to the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness; they are proud, knowing nothing; other words more wholesome he knew not. (4.) We learn the sad effects of doting about questions and stripes of words; of such doting about questions they have been guilty, which have occasioned perverse disputings; when men leave the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, they will never agree in other words, either of their own or other men's inventions, but will peremptorily wrangle and quarrel about them; and this will produce envy, when they see the words of others preferred to those they have adopted for their own; and this will be attended with jealousies and suspicions, and such evil accusations among them, that they will proceed to perverse disputings. (5.) Such persons as are given to perverse disputings, appear to be men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth; especially such as act in this manner for the sake of gain, which is all their godliness, supposing gain to be godliness, contrary to the apostle's judgment, who reckoned godliness great gain. (6.) Good ministers and masters will withdraw from them, and say, “Come out from among them, my people, and be ye separate,” says the Lord: from such withdraw thyself.

6. But godliness with contentment is great gain. 7. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. 8. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content.
I. Timothy, VI.

tation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. 10. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. 11. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. 12. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

From the mention of the abuse which some put upon religion, (making it serve their secular advantages,) the apostle takes occasion to shew the excellency of contentment, and the evil of covet-ousness.

I. The excellency of contentment, v. 6—8. Some account Christianity an advantageous profession for this world; in the sense they mean, it is false; yet it is undoubtedly true, that though Christianity is the worst trade, it is the best calling, in the world. A Christian, men say, will do everything for money; but he is more likely, when the turn for this world, will be disappointed, and find it a sorry trade; but they that mind it as their calling, and make a business of it, will find it a gainful calling, for it has the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come. The truth he lays down is, that godliness with contentment is great gain. Some Reid it, godliness with a competency; that is, if a man have but a little in this world, yet if he have not enough to carry him through it, he needs desire no more, his godliness with that will be his great gain; for a little which a righteous man has, is better than the riches of many wicked, Ps. 37. 16. We read it, godliness with contentment; godliness itself great gain, it is profitable to all things; and wherever there is true godliness, there will be contentment; but those that are arrived at the highest pitch of contentment with their godliness, are certainly the easiest, happiest, and richest in the world. Godliness with contentment, that is, Christian contentment, (content must come from principles of godliness,) is great gain; it is all the wealth in the world. He that is godly, is sure to be happy in another world; and if withal he do by contentment accommodate himself to his condition in this world, he has enough.

Here we have, 1. A Christian's gain, it is god-liness with contentment, this is the true way to gain, yea, it is gain itself. 2. A Christian's gain is great, it is not like the little gain of worldlings, who are so fond of a little worldly advantage. 3. Godliness is ever accompanied with contentment in a greater or lesser degree; all truly godly people have learned with St. Paul, in whatever state they are, to be thus contented. Here you are content with what God allots for them, well knowing that is best for them. Let us all then endeavour after godliness with contentment.

The reason he gives for it, is, For we brought nothing with us into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out, v. 7. This is a reason why we should be content with a little.

(1.) Because we can challenge nothing as a debt that is due to us, for we came naked into the world; whatever we have had since, we are obliged to the providence of God for it; but he that gave, may take what and when he pleases. We had our beings, our bodies, our lives, (which are more than meat, which are more than raiment,) when we came into the world, though we came naked, and brought nothing with us; may we not then be content while our beings and lives are continued to us, though we have not every thing we would have? We brought nothing with us into this world, and yet God provided for us, care was taken of us; we have been fed all our lives long unto this day; and therefore, when we are reduced to the greatest straits, we cannot be poorer than when we came into this world, and yet then we were provided for; therefore let us trust in God for the remaining part of our pilgrimage.

(2.) We must carry nothing with us out of this world; a shroud, a coffin, and a grave, are all that the richest man in the world can have from his thousands. Therefore why should we covet much? Why should we not be content with a little, because, how much soever we have, we must leave it behind us! Ecc. v. 15, 16. From hence he infers, (v. 8.) Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. Food and a covering including habitation as well as raiment. Observe, If God give us the necessary supports of life, we ought to be content therewith, though we have not the ornaments and delights of it. If nature should be content with a little, grace should be content with less; though we have not dainty food, though we have not costly raiment, if we have but food and raiment convenient for us, we ought to be content: for we know Agur's prayer, Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me, Prov. 30. 8.

Here we see, [1.] The folly of placing our happiness in these things, when we did not bring any thing into this world with us, and we can carry nothing out. What will these do when death shall strip them of their happiness and portion? And they must take an everlasting farewell of all these things on which they have so much set. They may say with poor Micah, Ye have taken away my gods; and what have I more? Judges 18. 24. [2.] The necessaries of life are the bounds of a true Christian's desire, and with these he will endeavour to be content; his desires are not insatiable; no, a little, a few comforts of this life, will serve him, and these he may hope to enjoy, having food and raiment.

II. The evil of covetousness; (v. 9.) They that will be rich, fall into temptation and a snare, that is, that set their hearts upon the wealth of this world, and are resolved, right or wrong, they will have it. It is not said, they that are rich, but they that will be rich, that is, that place their happiness in worldly wealth, that covet it inordinately, and are eager and violent in the pursuit of it. They that are such, fall into temptation and a snare, unavoidably; for when the Devil sees which way their lusts carry them, he will soon bait his hook accordingly. He knew how fond Achab would be of a wedge of gold, and therefore laid that before him. They fall into many foolish and hurtful lusts.

The apostle supposes, 1. Some will be rich; they are resolved upon it, nothing short of a great abundance will satisfy. 2. Such will not be safe or innocent, for they will be in danger of gaining them-Eves for ever; they fall into temptation and a snare, &c. 3. Worldly lusts are foolish and hurtful, for they drown men in destruction and perdition. 4. It is good for us to consider the mischievousness of worldly fleshly lusts. They are foolish, and therefore we should be ashamed of them; hurtful, and therefore we should be afraid of them, especially considering to what deep danger we may be by being in the practice of them, and therefore they are hurtful, for they drown men in destruction and perdition.

The love of money is the root of all evil, v. 10. What sins will not men be drawn to by the love of money? Particularly this was at the bottom of the apostacy of many from the faith of Christ; while they coveted money, they erred from the faith, they quitted their Christianity, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

1. Observe what is the root of all evil; the love of money: people may have money, and yet not love it; but if they love it inordinately, it will push them away from all evil. (2) Covetous persons will quit the faith, if they love money. While some coveted after, they have erred from the faith. Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, 2 Tim. 4. 10. For the world was dearer to him than Christianity.

Observe, Those that err from the faith, pierce themselves with many sorrows; those that depart from God, do but treasure up sorrows for themselves.

III. Hence he takes occasion both to caution Timothy against their last, and to counsel him to keep in the way of God and his duty, and particularly to fulfill the trust reposed in him as a minister. He addresses himself to him as a man of God. Ministers are men of God, and ought to conduct themselves accordingly in every thing; they are men employed for God, devoted to his honour more immediately. The prophets under the Old Testament were called men of God.

1. He charges Timothy to the head of the love of money, which had been so pernicious to many: Fly these things. It is ill becoming any men, but especially men of God, to set their hearts upon the things of this world; men of God should be taken up with the things of God.

2. To arm him against the love of the world, he directs him to follow that which is good; Follow righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness, righteousness in his conversation toward men, godliness toward God, faith and love as living principles, to support him and carry him on in the practice both of righteousness and godliness. They that follow after righteousness and godliness, from a principle of faith and love, have need to put on patience and meekness; patience to bear both the rebukes of Providence, and the reproaches of men, and meekness whereunto to instruct gain-sayers, and pass by the affronts and injuries that are done us.

Observe, It is not enough that men of God flee these things, but they must follow after what is directly contrary thereto. Further, what excellent persons men of God are, who follow after righteousness! They are the excellent of the earth, and, being acceptable to God, they should be approved of men.

3. He exhorts him to do the part of a soldier; Fight the good fight of faith. Note, Those who will get to heaven, must fight their way thither. There must be a conflict with corruption and temptations, and the opposition of the powers of darkness. Again, It is a good fight, it is a good cause, and it will have a good issue; further, it is the fight of faith: we do not war after the flesh, for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal. 2 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

He exhorts him to lay hold on eternal life. Observe, (1.) Eternal life is the crown proposed to us, for our encouragement. (2.) He is to fight the good fight of faith, the good warfare. (2.) This we must lay hold on, as those that are afraid of coming short of it, and losing it. Lay hold, and take heed of losing your hold. Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown, Rev. 3. 11. (3.) We are called to the fight, and to lay hold on eternal life. This, for which Timothy and all faithful ministers make before many witnesses, that they may have a good profession; for they profess and engage to fight the good fight of faith, and to lay hold on eternal life; their calling and their own profession oblige them unto this.

13. I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; 14. That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: 15. Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; 16. Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen. 17. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; 18. That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; 19. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. 20. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: 21. Which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

He charges him to keep this commandment without spot; that is, the whole work of his ministry, all the trust reposed in him, all the service expected from him, he must keep it without spot, unrebukable; he must conduct himself so in his ministry, that he might not lay himself open to any blame, or any blemish.

What are the motives to move him to this?

I. He gives him a solemn charge; I give thee a charge in the sight of God, that thou do this. He charges him, as he will answer it at the great day to that God whose eyes are upon us, who sees what we are, and what we do. God, who quickeneth all things, who has life in himself, and is the Fountain of life. This should quicken us to the service of God, that we serve a God who quickeneth all things. He charges him before Christ Jesus, to whom in a peculiar manner he stood related as a minister of his gospel; who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession.

Observe, Christ died not only as a Sacrifice, but as a Martyr; and he witnessed a good confession when he was arraigned before Pilate, saying, (John 18. 36, 37.) My kingdom is not of this world: I am come to bear witness unto the truth. The confession of his before Pilate, My kingdom is not of this world, should be effectual to draw off all his followers, both ministers and people, from the love of this world.

II. He reminds him of the confession that he himself had made: Thou hast professed a good profession before many witnesses; (v. 12.) when he was ordained by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. The obligation of that was still upon him, and he must live up to that, and he quickened by that, to do the work of his ministry.

III. He reminds him of Christ's second coming; Keep this commandment, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; keep it as long as they livest, till Christ come at death to give thee a discharge. Keep it with an eye to his second coming, when we must all give an account of the talents we have been intrusted with," Luke 16. 2.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ will appear, and it will be a glorious appearing, not like his first appearing in the days of his humiliation. 2. Ministers should have an eye to this appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ in all their ministrations. 3. Till his appearing they are to keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable.

Mentioning the appearing of Christ as one that loved it, he loves to speak of it, and loves to speak of him who shall then appear. The appearing of Christ must be seen God, he sheweth it; but it is his for us to know the time and season of it, for the Father has kept that in his own power: let this suffice us, that in time he shall shew it, in the time that he thinks it fits for it.

Concerning Christ and God the Father he here speaks great things.

(1) That God is the only Potentate; the powers of earthly princes are all derived from him, and depend on him. The powers that are, are ordained of God, Rom. 13. 1. He is the only Potentate that is absolute and sovereign, and perfectly independent.

(2) He is the blessed and only Potentate, infinitely happy, and nothing can in the least impair his happiness.

(3) He is King of kings, and Lord of lords. All the kings of the earth derive their power from him; he gave them their crowns, they hold them under him, and he has a sovereign dominion over them. This is Christ's title, (Rev. 19. 16.) upon his venture and his thigh; for he has a name higher than the kings of the earth.

(4) He only has immortality; he only is immortal in himself, and has immortality as he is the Fountain of it, for the immortality of angels and spirits is derived from him.

(5) He dwells in inaccessible light; light which no man can approach unto: no man can get to heaven, but those whom he is pleased to bring thither, and admit into his kingdom.

(6) He is invisible; whom no man hath seen, nor can see. It is impossible that mortal eyes should bear the brightness of the divine glory. No man can see God, and live.

Having mentioned these glorious attributes, he concludes with a doxology; To him be honour and power everlasting. Amen. God having all power and honour to himself, it is our duty to ascribe all power and honour to him.

[1.] What an evil is sin, when committed against such a God, the blessed and only Potentate! The evil of it rises in proportion to the dignity of him against whom it is committed. [2.] The consideration of his condescension, to take notice of such mean and vile creatures as we are. What are we then, that the blessed God, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, should seek after us? [3.] Blessed are they who are admitted to dwell with this great and blessed Potentate; Happy are thy men, says the queen of Sheba to King Solomon, happy are these thy servants. [4.] Let us love, adore, and praise, the great God; for who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For thou art only art holy, Rev. 15. 4.

The apostle adds, by way of postscript, a lesson for rich people, v. 17-19. Timothy must charge them that are rich to take care of the temptations, and improve the opportunities, of their prosperous estate.

First, Caution them to take heed of pride. That is a sin that easily besets rich people, whom the world smiles upon. Charge them that they be not high-minded, or think of themselves above what is meet, or be puffed up with their wealth.

Secondly, Caution them against vain confidence in their wealth; Charge them that they trust not in uncertain riches. Nothing is more uncertain than the wealth of this world; many have had much of it one day, and been stripped of all the next. Riches make themselves wings, and fly away as an eagle, &c. Prov. 23. 5.

Thirdly, He must charge them to trust in God, the living God; to make him their Hope, who giveth all things to enjoy. They who are rich, and have such things as are for enjoyment, and giving them to enjoy them richly; for many have riches, but enjoy them poorly, not having a heart to use them.

Fourthly, He must charge them to do good with what they have; (for what is the best estate worth, any more than as it gives a man an opportunity of doing so much the more good? that they be rich in good works.) These are truly rich, who are rich in good works. They may be readily seen, an object to distribute, willing to communicate: not only to do it, but to do it willingly, for God loves a cheerful giver.

Fifthly, He must charge them to think of another world, and prepare for that which is to come by works of charity—laying up in store a good foundation against the time to come, that they may take hold on eternal life.

Ministers are not to be afraid of the rich; be they ever so rich, they must speak to them, and charge them. 2. They must caution them against pride, and vain confidence in their riches, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches. Sir them up to works of piety and charity, that they do good, &c. 3. This is the way for the rich to lay up in store for themselves for the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life; in the way of well-doing we are to seek for glory, honour, immortality, and eternal life will be the end of all, Rom. 2. 7. 4. Here is a lesson for ministers in the charge given to Timothy; Keep that which is committed to thy trust. Every minister is a trustee, and it is a treasure committed to his trust, which he has to keep. The truths of God, the ordinances of God, keep these, avoiding profane and vain babblings; set a guard against human eloquence, which the apostle calls vain babblings; for they are always at war with the word of God; they are always at war with the word of God, which opposes the truths of God, but keep close to the written word, for that is committed to our trust. Some who have been very proud of their learning, their science, which is falsely so called, have by that been debauched in their principles, and been drawn away from the faith of Christ, which is a good reason why we should keep to the plain word of the gospel, and resolve to be the first, and foremost, in the love of the word of God.

Observe, (1) Ministers cannot be too earnestly exhorted to keep what is committed to their trust, because it is a great trust lodged with them; O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust! as if he had said, "I cannot conclude without charging thee again; whatever thou dost, be sure to keep this trust, for it is too great a trust to be betrayed." (2) Ministers are to avoid babblings, if they would keep what is committed to them, because they are vain and profane. (3.) That science which opposes the truth of the gospel, is falsely so called; it is not true science, for if it was, it would approve of the gospel, and consent to it. (4) Those who are so fond of such science, are in great danger of erring concerning the faith; they who are for advancing reason above faith, are in danger of leaving faith. Lastly, Our apostle concludes with a solemn prayer and benediction; Grace be with thee, Amen. Observe, This is a short, yet comprehensive prayer for our friends. Grace be with them, for grace comprehends in it all that is good, and grace is an earnest, yea a beginning, of glory; for wherever God gives grace, he will give glory, and will not withhold any good thing from him who walketh uprightly.

Grace be with you all. Amen.

AN

WITH

SECOND EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO TIMOTHY.

Completed by Mr. Atkinson.

THIS second epistle Paul wrote to Timothy from Rome, when he was a prisoner there, and in danger of his life; this is evident from these words, I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, ch. 4. v. 6. It appears that his removal out of this world, in his own apprehension, was not far off, especially considering the rage and malice of his persecutors; and that he had been brought before the emperor Nero, which he calls his first answer, when no man stood with him, but all men forsook him, ch. 4. v. 16. And interpreters agree that this was the last epistle he wrote.

Where Timothy now was, is not certain. The scope of this epistle somewhat differs from that of the former, not so much relating to his office as an evangelist, as to his personal conduct and behaviour.

II. TIMOTHY, I.

CHAP. I.

After this introduction, (v. 1, 2.) we have, I. Paul's sincere love to Timothy, v. 3. 5. II. Divers exhortations given to him, v. 6. 14. III. He speaks of Phygellus and Hermogenes, with others, and closes with Onesiphorus, v. 13, to the end.

I. PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord. 2. To Timothy, my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord. 3. I thank God whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day; 4. Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy; 5. When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

1. The inscription of the epistle; Paul calls himself an apostle by the will of God, merely by the good pleasure of God, and by his grace, which he professes himself unworthy of, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, according to the gospel. The gospel is the promise of life in Christ Jesus; life the end, and Christ the way, John 14. 6. The life is put into the promise, and both are sure in Christ Jesus the faithful Witness; for all the promises of God in Christ Jesus are yea, and all amen, 2 Cor. 1. 20. He calls Timothy his beloved son; Paul felt the warmest affection for him, both because he had been an instrument of his conversion, and because as a son with his father he had served with him in the gospel.

We here learn, (1.) St. Paul was an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God; as he did not receive the gospel of man, nor was taught it, but had it by the revelation of Jesus Christ, (Gal. 1. 12.) so his commission to be an apostle was not by the will of man, but of God; in the former epistle he says it was by the commandment of God our Saviour, and here by the will of God; God called him to be an apostle. (2.) We have the promise of life, blessed be God for it, in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began, Tit. 1. 2. It is a promise to discover the freeness and certainty of it. (3.) This, as well as all other promises, is in and through Jesus Christ; they all take their rise from the mercy of God in Christ, and they are sure, that we may safely depend on them. (4.) The grace, mercy, and peace, which even St. Paul's dearly beloved son Timothy wanted, came from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord; and therefore the one as well as the other is the Giver of these blessings, and ought to be applied to for them. Lasty, The best want these blessings, and they are the best we can ask for our dearly beloved friends, that they may have grace to help them in the time of need, and mercy to pardon what is amiss, and so may have peace with God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

The thanks of God for Timothy's faith and holiness; he thanks God that he remembered Timothy in his prayers. Observe, Whatever good we do, and whatever good office we perform for our friends, God must have the glory of it, and we must give him thanks. It is he who puts it into our hearts to remember such and such in our prayers. Paul was much in prayer, he prayed night and day; in all his prayers he was mindful of his friends, he particularly prayed for good ministers, he prayed for Timothy, and had remembrance of him in his prayers night and day: he did this without ceasing; prayer was his constant business, and he never forgot his friends in his prayers, as we often do. Paul served God from his forefathers with a pure conscience. It was a comfort to him, that he was born in God's house; and was of the seed of those that served God; as likewise did they nowtxed him, and taught him so: that he had a conscience, according to the best of his light; he had kept a conscience void of offence, and made it his daily exercise to do so, Acts 24. 16. He greatly desired to see Timothy, out of the affection he had for him, that he might have some conversation with him, being mindful of his tears at their last parting. Timothy was sorry to part with Paul, he wept at parting, and therefore Paul desired to see him again, because he was persuaded by that what a true affection he had for him. He thanks God that Timothy kept up the religion of his ancestors, v. 5. Observe, The entail of religion descended upon Timothy by the mother's side; he had a good mother, and a good grandmother: they believed, though his father did not, Acts 16. It is a comfortable thing when children imitate the faith and holiness of their godly parents, and grandparents. 3. Timothy was set in thy grandmother and thy mother, and I am persuaded that in thee also. Paul had a very charitable opinion of his friends, was very willing to hope the best concerning them; indeed he had a great deal of reason to believe well of Timothy, for he had no man like-minded, Phil. 2. 10.

Observe, (1.) We are, according to St. Paul, to serve God with a pure conscience, so did his and our pious forefathers; this is to drink near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, Heb. 10. 22. (2.) In our prayers we are to remember without ceasing our friends, especially the faithful ministers of Christ; St. Paul had remembrance of his dearly beloved son Timothy in his prayers night and day. (3.) The faith that dwells in real believers, is unfeigned; it is without hypocrisy, it is a faith that will stand the trial, and it dwells in them as a living principle. It was the matter of St. Paul's thanksgiving, that Timothy inherited the faith of his mother Eunice and his grandmother Lois, and ought to be our's, whenever we see the like; we should rejoice wherever we see the grace of God; so did Barnabas, Acts 11. 23, 24. I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in the truth, 2 John 4.

6. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. 7. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. 8. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; 9. Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; 10. But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel: 11. Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. 12. For the which cause I also suffer these things; nevertheless I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day. 13. Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. 14. That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us.

Here is an exhortation and excitation of Timothy to his duty; (v. 6.) I put thee in remembrance: the best men need remembrance: what we know we should be reminded of; (2 Pet. 3. 1.) I write thee, to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance.

1. He exhorts him to stir up the gift of God that was in him. Stir it up as fire under the embers. It is meant of all the gifts and graces that God had given him, to qualify him for the work of an evangelist, the gifts of the Holy Ghost, the extraordinary gifts that were conferred by the imposition of the apostle's hands. These he must stir up; he must exercise them, and so increase them: use gifts, and have gifts; to him that hath shall be given; (Matt. 25. 29.) he must take all opportunities to use these gifts, and so stir them up, for that is the best way of increasing them.

Whether the gift of God in Timothy was ordinary or extraordinary, (though I incline to the latter,) he must stir it up, otherwise it would decay. Further, observe that this gift was in him by the putting on of the apostle's hands, which I take to be distinct from his ordination, which was performed by the hands of the presbytery, 1 Tim. 4. 14. It is probable that Timothy had the Holy Ghost, in his extraordinary gifts and graces, conferred on him by the laying on of the apostle's hands, (for I reckon none but the apostles had the power of giving the Holy Ghost,) and afterward, being thus richly furnished for the work of the ministry, was ordained by the presbytery.

The great hinderance of usefulness in the increase of our gifts, is, slavish fear; therefore he warns him against this; God hath not given us the spirit of fear; (v. 7.) it was through base fear that the evil servant buried his talent, and did not trade with it, Matt. 25. 25. Now God hath therefore armed us against the spirit of fear, by often bidding us fear not; "Fear not the face of man; fear not the dangers you may meet with in the way of your duty." God hath delivered us from the spirit of fear, and hath given us the spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. The spirit of power, of courage and resolution, to encounter difficulties and dangers; the spirit of love to God, which will carry us through the opposition we may meet with, as Jacob made nothing of the hard service he was to endure for Rachel. The spirit of love to the fear of God, and all the hurt that man can do us. And the spirit of a sound mind, or quietness of mind, a peaceable enjoyment of ourselves, for we are often times discouraged in our way and work by the creatures of our own fancy and imagination, which a sober, solid thinking mind would obviate, and would easily answer.

The Spirit God gives to his ministers, is not a fearful, a courageous Spirit; it is a Spirit of power, for they speak in his name who has all power, both in heaven and earth; and it is a Spirit of love; for love to God and the souls of men must inflame ministers in all their service; and it is a Spirit of a sound mind, for they speak the words of truth and soberness.

II. He exhorts him to count upon afflictions, and get ready for them; “Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of his suffering: if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; for he is the Saviour of the world.” The gospel of Christ is what we have none of us reason to be ashamed of. We must not be ashamed of those who are suffering for the gospel of Christ. Timothy must not be ashamed of good old Paul, though he was now in bonds. As he must not be afraid of suffering himself, so he must not be afraid of owning those who were sufferers for the gospel of Christ.

1. The gospel is a testimony of our Lord; and by that he bears testimony of himself to us, and by professing our adherence to it we bear testimony of him and for him. 2. St. Paul was the Lord’s prisoner, his prisoner; for his sake he was bound with a chain, Eph. 4. 1. 3. We have no reason to be ashamed either of the testimony of our Lord, or of his prisoners: if we are ashamed of either Christ, or him who hides for life and salvation by it will be content to suffer with it. Observe, (1.) Then we are likely to bear afflictions well, when we fetch strength and power from God to enable us to bear them: “Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God, expect afflictions for the gospel’s sake, prepare for them, count upon them, be willing to take thy lot with the suffering saints in this world. Be partaker of the afflictions of the gospel;” (or, as it may be read, Do thou suffer with the gospel;) not only sympathize with those who suffer for it, but be ready to suffer with them, and suffer as they do, when you are put in the same condition, and in the same place of suffering, he who hopes for life and salvation by it will be content to suffer with it. Observe, (2.) All Christians, but especially ministers, must expect afflictions and sufferings of some kind concerning the gospel. (3.) They shall be proportioned, according to the power of God (1 Cor. 10. 13.) resting upon us.

Mentioning God and the gospel, he takes notice what great things God has done for us by the gospel, vs. 9, 10. To encourage him to suffer, he urges two considerations.

1. He shews him the nature of that gospel which he had preached, and the glorious and gracious designs and purposes of it, which God spake by the hand of his servant Paul, when he mentions Christ, and the gospel of Christ, to draw his subject, and enliven upon them; for full was he of that which is all our salvation, and ought to be all our desire.

Observe, First, The gospel aims at our salvation; he has saved us, and we must not think much to suffer for that which we hope to be saved by. He has begun to save us, and will complete it in due time; he calls those things that are not, that are not yet completed, as though they were; (Rom. 4. 17.) therefore he says, who has saved us.

Secondly, It is designed for our sanctification; and called us with a holy calling, called us to holiness. Christianity is a calling, a holy calling; it is the calling wherewith we are called, it is the calling to which we are called, and we must answer. Look here: “All who shall be saved hereafter, are sanctified now. Wherever the call of the gospel is an effectual call, it is found to be a holy call, making those holy, who are effectually called.”

Thirdly, The rise of it is the free grace and eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus. If we had merited it, it had been hard to suffer for it; but our salvation by it is of free grace, and not according to our works, and therefore we must not think much to suffer for it. This grace is said to be given us before the world began, that is, in the purpose and design of God from all eternity; in Christ Jesus, for all the gifts that come from God to sinful man, come in and through Christ Jesus.

Fourthly, The gospel is the manifestation of this purpose and grace, by the upbuilding of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who had lain in the bosom of the Father from eternity, and was perfectly apprised of all his gracious purposes; by his appearing that gracious purpose was made manifest to us. Did Jesus Christ suffer for it, and shall we think much to suffer for it?

Fifthly, By the gospel of Christ death is abolished; he has abolished death, not only weakened it, but taken it out of the way, has broken the power of death over men, and taken away sin, and the sting of death, (for the sting of death is sin, 1 Cor. 15. 56.) in altering the property of it, and breaking the power of it.

Death now of an enemy is become a friend, and is the gate by which we pass out of a troublesome, vexatious, sinful world, into a world of perfect peace and purity; and the power thereof is broken, for death doth triumph over those who are in the body of Christ, but they triumph over it. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? 1 Cor. 15. 55.

Lastly, He has brought life and immortality to light by the gospel; he has shewed another world, more clearly than it was before discovered under any former dispensation, and the happiness of that world, the certain recompense of our obedience by faith; we shall with open face, as in a glass, behold the glory of God. He has hitherto hidden it from light, not only to set it before us, but offered it to us, by the gospel.

Let us value the gospel more than ever, as it is that whereby life and immortality are brought to light, for herein it has the pre-eminence above all former discoveries; so that it is the gospel of life and immortality, as it discovers them to us, and directs us in the ready way that leads thereto, as well as the Saviour himself, and most weighty motives to excite our endeavours in seeking after glory, honour, and immortality.

[2.] Consider the example of blessed Paul, v. 11, 12. He was appointed to preach the gospel, and particularly appointed to teach the Gentiles. He thought it a cause worth suffering for, and why should not Timothy think so too? No man needs to be afraid or ashamed to suffer for the cause of the gospel; we are called, we are commanded, says Paul, for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.

Observe, First, God men often suffer many things for the best cause in the world; for which cause I suffer these things; that is, for my preaching, and adhering to the gospel. Secondly, They need not to be ashamed, the cause will bear them out; but those who oppose it, shall be clothed with shame.
Observe, Thirdly, Those who trust in Christ, know whom they have trusted. He speaks with a holy triumph and exultation, as much as to say, “I stand on his ground.” I know he has lodged the great trust in the hands of the best Trustees, and are persuaded, &c. What must we commit to Christ? The salvation of our souls, and their preservation to the heavenly kingdom; and what we so commit to him he will keep. There is a day coming, when our souls will be inquired after; “Man! Woman! thou hadst a soul committed to thee, what hast thou done with it? To whom was it offered, to God or Satan? He has transgressed; in the service of sin, or in the service of Christ?” There is a dark hour in the day, and it will be a very solemn and awful day, when we must give an account of our stewardship, (Luke 16. 2.) give an account of our souls; now if by an active obedient faith we commit it to Jesus Christ, we may be sure he is able to keep it, and it shall be forthcoming to our comfort in that day.

III. He exhorts him to hold fast the form of sound words, v. 13.

1. “Have a form of sound words;” (so it may be read,) “a short form, a catechism, an abstract of the first principles of religion, according to the scriptures; a scheme of sound words, a brief summary of the Christian faith, in a proper method, drawn out by thyself from the holy scriptures for thy own use;” or rather, by the form of sound words, I understand the holy scriptures, which themselves, as the apostle mentions, are the mediations and vehicle of sound doctrine. But how must it be held fast? In faith and love; we must attend to it as a faithful saying, and bid it welcome as worthy of all acceptation. Hold it fast in a good heart, that is the ark of the covenant, in which the tables both of law and gospel are most safely and profitably deposited, Ps. 119. 11. Faith and love must go together; it is not enough to believe the sound words, and to give an assent to them, but we must love them, and love God in the sincerest goodness, and we must propagate the form of sound words in love, speaking the truth in love, Eph. 4. 15. Faith and love which are in Christ Jesus; it must be Christian faith and love; faith and love fasting upon Jesus Christ, in and by whom God speaks to us, and we to him. Timothy, as a minister, must hold fast the form of sound words, for the benefit of others. Of healing words, so it may read; there is a healing in the word; God sent his word, and healed them. To the same purport is that, (v. 14.) That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost, which dwelleth in us. That good thing was the form of sound words, the Christian doctrine, which was committed to Timothy in his baptism and education as he was a Christian, and in his ordination as he was a minister. The Christian doctrine committed to us; it is committed to Christians in general, but to ministers in particular; it is a good thing, of unspeakable value in itself, and which will be of unspeakable advantage to us; it is a good thing indeed, for it is an inestimable jewel, for it discovers to us the unsearchable riches of Christ, Eph. 3. 8. It is committed to us, to be preserved pure and entire, and to be transmitted to those who shall come after us, and we must keep it, and not contribute any thing to the corrupting of its purity, the weakening of its power, or the diminishing of its perfection; Keep it by the Holy Ghost that dwelleth in us. Observe,

Even those who are ever so well taught, cannot keep what they have learned, any more than they could at first learn it, without the assistance of the Holy Spirit. We must not think to keep it by our own strength, but keep it by the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Ghost dwell in all good ministers and Christians; they are his temples, and he enables them to keep the gospel pure and uncorrupt; and yet they must use their best endeavours to keep this good thing, for the assistance and indwelling of the Holy Ghost do not exclude men's endeavours, but they very well consist together.

15. This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia, are turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. 16. The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain: 17. But when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me. 18. The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day: and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.

Having exhorted Timothy to hold fast, (v. 15, 14.) the apostle mentions,

The apostasy of divers from the doctrine of Christ, v. 19. In the last and purest ages of the church, there were those that had embraced the Christian faith, and yet afterward revolted from it, may there were many such. He does not say that they were turned away from the doctrine of Christ, (though it should seem they were,) but they were turned away from him, they had turned their backs upon him, and disowned him in the time of his distress. And should we wonder at it, when many turned their backs on a much better than St. Paul? I mean the Lord Jesus Christ, John 6. 66.

2. He mentions the constancy of one that adhered to him, that was Onesiphorus; for he often refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain, v. 16. Observe, (1.) What kindness Onesiphorus had shewed to Paul: he refreshed him, he oft refreshed him with his letters, and counsels, and comforts, and he was not ashamed of my chain. He was not ashamed of a chain as if the disgrace he had then received was his own; he was not ashamed of a chain as if the disgrace he was now under. He was kind to him not once or twice, but often; not only when he was at Ephesus among his own friends, but when Onesiphorus was at Rome; he took care to seek Paul out very diligently, and found him, v. 17. Observe, A good man will seek opportunities of doing good, and will not shun any that offer. At Ephesus he had ministered to him, and been very kind to him; Timothy knew it. (2.) How Paul returns his kindness, v. 16-18. He that receives a prophet, shall have a prophet's reward. He repays him with his prayers; The Lord give mercy to Onesiphorus. It is probable that Onesiphorus was now absent from home, and in company with Paul; he therefore prays that his house might be kept during his absence. Though the prophet will have it that he was now dead; and from the praying for the dead he might find mercy, they conclude the warrantable praying for the dead; but who told them that Onesiphorus was dead? And can it be safe to ground a doctrine and practice of such importance on a mere supposition and very great uncertainty?

He prays for Onesiphorus himself, as well as for his house, that he might find mercy in that day, in the day of death and of judgment, when Christ will account all the good offices done to his poor members as done to himself. Observe, [1.] The day of death and judgment is an awful day, which may be emphatically called that day. [2.] We need desire no more to make us happy, than to find mercy of the Lord in that day, when those that have shewed no mercy, will have judgment without mercy. [3.] The best Christians will want mercy in that day, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, Jude 21. [4.] If you would have mercy then, you must seek for it now of the Lord. [5.] It is of and from the Lord that we must have mercy; for unless the Lord has mercy on us, in vain will be the pity and compassion of men or angels. [6.] We are to seek and ask for mercy of the Lord, who is the Giver of all good gifts; and in the Lord Christ, is established justice, that mercy might be displayed. We are come to a throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in the time of need. Finally, The best thing we can ask, either for ourselves or our friends, is, that the Lord will grant to them, that they may find mercy of the Lord in that day, when they must pass out of time into eternity, and exchange this world for the other, and appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; the Lord then grant unto all of us, that we may find mercy of the Lord in that day.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, our apostle gives Timothy many exhortations and directions, which may be of great use to others, both ministers and Christians, for whom they were designed as well as for him. 1. He encourages him in his ministry and usefulness, v. 1. II. He must take care of a succession in the ministry, that the office might not die with him, v. 2. III. He exhorts him to constancy and perseverance in this work, as a soldier, and as a husbandman, considering what would be the end of all his sufferings, &c. v. 3. 15. IV. He must shun profane and vain babblings, v. 16. 17. for they will be pernicious and miscellaneous. V. He speaks of the foundation of the gospel; and the successions of his work, to which he, like a soldier, is to be faithful, and love the successions of his life; and what to do, v. 22, to the end.

1. THOU therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.

2. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also. 3. Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

4. No man that warreth entangle himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier.

5. And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully.

6. The husbandman that laboureth, must be first partaker of the fruits.

7. Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.

Here, 1. Paul encourages Timothy to constancy and perseverance in his work; (v. 1.) Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. Those who have work to do for God, must stir up themselves to do it, and strengthen themselves for it. Being strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, may be understood,

1. In opposition to the weakness of grace. Where there is the truth of grace, there must be a laughing after the strength of grace. As our trials increase, we had need to grow stronger and stronger in that which is good; our faith stronger, our resolution stronger, our love to God and Christ stronger.

2. In opposition to our being strong in our own strength; Be strong, not confiding in thy own sufficiency, but in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.

Compare Eph. 6. 16. Be strong in the Lord, and in the faith. Paul exhorts all to be strong in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. He again promises, "Be strong in the Lord and in the faith"; ver. 10. He exhorts Timothy to be strong in Christ, rather than to deny him. Christ was strong in his own strength; had he been strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, he had kept his standing better.

1. There is grace in Christ Jesus; for the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, John 1. 17. There is grace enough in him for all of us. (2.) We must be strong in this grace; a strong life, in our own strength, or in the grace we have already received, but in the grace that is in him, and that is the way to be strong in grace. (3.) As a father exhorts his son, so does St. Paul exhort Timothy with great tenderness and affection; Thou, therefore, my son, &c.

Timothy must count upon sufferings, even unto blood, and therefore,

First, He must train up others to succeed him in the ministry of the gospel, v. 2. He must instruct others, and train them up for the ministry; and so commit to them the things which he had. Secondly, He must exhort them to the ministry, lodge the gospel as a trust in their hands, and so commit to them the things which he had heard. Two things he must have an eye to in ordaining ministers.

1. Their fidelity and integrity; "Commit them to faithful men, who will sincerely aim at the glory of God, the honour of Christ, the welfare of souls, and the advancement of the kingdom of the Redeemer among men."

2. Their ministerial ability. They must not only be knowing themselves, but be able to teach others also, and be apt to teach.

Here we have, (1.) The things Timothy was to commit to others; what he had heard of the apostle among many witnesses, he must not deliver any thing beside, and what St. Paul delivered to him and others, he had received of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(2.) He was to commit them as a trust, as a sacred deposit, which they are to keep, and to transmit pure and uncorrupt unto others. (3.) Those to whom he was to commit these things, must be faithful, trusty men, and who were skilful to teach others.

(4.) Though men were both faithful and able to teach others, yet these things must be committed to them by "some" of the minister, a man in office; for none must intrude themselves into the ministry, but must have these things committed to them by those already in that office.

II. He must endure hardness; (v. 3.) Thou therefore, &c. 1. All Christians, but especially ministers, are soldiers of Jesus Christ; they fight under his banner, in his cause, and against his enemies, for he is the Captain of our salvation, Heb. 2. 16.

2. The soldiers of Jesus Christ must approve themselves good soldiers; faithful to their Captain, resolute in his cause, and must not give over fighting till they are made more than conquerors, through him that loved them, Rom. 8. 37.

3. Those who would approve themselves good soldiers of Jesus Christ, must endure hardness; that is, we must expect it, and count upon it in this world; must endure and accustom ourselves to it, and be ready to be moved away from this world.

III. He must not entangle himself in the affairs of this world, v. 4. A soldier, when he is enlisted, leaves his calling, and all the business of it, that he may attend his captain's orders. If we have given up ourselves to be Christ's soldiers, we must sit loose to this world; and though there is no remedy, but we must employ ourselves in the affairs of this life while we are here, (we have something to do here,) yet we must not entangle ourselves with those...
II. TIMOTHY, II.

We must see to it, that in warring our spiritual warfare we go by rule; we observe the laws of war; (v. 5.) If a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully. We are striving for mastery, to get the mastery of our lusts and corruptions, to excel in that which is good, but we cannot expect the prize unless we observe the laws. In doing that which is good, we must take care that we do it in a right manner, that our good may not be evil spoken of. We observe here: 1. A Christian is to strive for masteries; he must aim at mastering his own lusts and corruptions. 2. Yet he must strive according to the law given to him; he must strive lawfully. 3. Those who do so, shall be crowned at last, after a complete victory is obtained.

And further, we must first labour as the husbandman does, with diligence and patience, before we are partakers of the fruit; we must do the will of God, before we receive the promises, for which reason we have need of patience, Heb. 10. 36.

Consider what Isaac, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things, v. 7. Here, 1. Paul commands Timothy to consider these things that he admonished him about, Timothy must be reminded to use his considering faculties about the things of God. Consideration is as necessary to a good conversation as to a sound conversion.

2. He prays for him, The Lord give thee understanding in all things. Observe, It is God who gives understanding. The most intelligent men need more and more of this gift. If he who gave the revelation in the word, does not give the understanding in the heart, we are nothing.

Together with our prayers for others, that the Lord would give them understanding in all things, we must exhort and stir them up to consider what we say, for consideration is the way to understand, remember, and practise, what we hear or read.

8. Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead, according to our gospel: 9. Wherein I suffer trouble as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound. 10. Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. 11. It is a faithful saying: For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him: 12. If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us: 13. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself.

1. To encourage Timothy in suffering, the apostle puts him in mind of the resurrection of Christ: (v. 8.) Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead, according to my gospel. This is the great proof of his divine mission, and therefore a great confirmation of the truth of the Christian religion; and the consideration of it should make us faithful to our Christian profession, and should particularly encourage us in suffering for it. 2. Suffering saints remember this. Observe, how the apostle is ready to produce the Author and Finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despised the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the throne of God, Heb. 12. 2. The incarnation and resurrection of Jesus Christ, heartily believed and rightly considered, will support a Christian under all sufferings in the present life.

2. Another thing to encourage him in suffering, was, that he had Paul for an example; (v. 9.) Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer; and let not Timothy the son expect any better treatment than Paul the father. Paul was a man who did good, and yet suffered as an evil-doer: we must not think it strange if those who do well fare ill in this world, and if the best of men meet with the worst of treatment; but this was his comfort, that the word of God is not bound.

Paul may silence ministers and restrain them, but they cannot hinder the execution of the word of God upon men's hearts and consciences; that cannot be bound by any human force. This might encourage Timothy not to be afraid of bonds for the testimony of Jesus; for the word of Christ, which ought to dearer to him than liberty, or life itself, should in the issue suffer nothing by those bands.

Here we see, 1. The good apostle's treatment in the world. I suffer trouble; to this he was called and appointed. 2. The pretence and colour under which he suffered; I suffer as an evil-doer; so the Jews said to Pilate concerning Christ, If he was not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up to thee, John 18. 30. 3. The real and true cause of his suffering trouble as an evil-doer; wherein, that is, in or for the sake of the gospel. 4. The apostle suffered trouble as one that had to look to afterward he resisted unto blood, striving against sin, Heb. 12. 2. Though the preachers of the word are often bound, yet the word is never bound.

I endure all things for the elect's sake, v. 10. Observe, Good ministers may and should encourage themselves in the hardest services and the hardest sufferings, with this, that God will certainly bring them to their church, and benefit to his elect, out of them; that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus. Next to the salvation of our own souls we should be willing to do and suffer anything, to promote the salvation of the souls of others.

Observe further, The elect are designed to obtain salvation; God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation, 1 Thess. 5. 9. Again, This salvation is in Christ Jesus; in him as the Fountain, the Purchase of all the elect; and it is accompanied with eternal glory; there is no salvation in Christ Jesus without it. Lastly, The sufferings of our apostle were for the elect's sake, for their confirmation and encouragement.

3. Another thing with which he encourages Timothy, is, the prospect of a future state. 1. Those who faithfully adhere to Christ and to his truths and ways, whatever it costs them, will certainly have the advantage of it in another world. If we be dead with him, we shall live with him, v. 11. If, in conformity to Christ, we be dead to this world,
II. TIMOTHY, II.

...and its pleasures, profits, and honours, we shall go to live with him in a better world, to be for ever with him. Nay, though we be called out to suffer for him, we shall not lose by that. They who suffer for Christ on earth, shall reign with Christ in heaven, v. 12. They who suffered with David in his humiliation, were preferred with him in his exaltation: so it will be with the Son of David.

2. To shew thyself a lover of the truth; If we deny him, he also will deny us. If we deny him before man, he will deny us before his Father, Matt. 10. 33. And that man must needs be ever miserable, whom Christ disowns at last.

This will certainly be the issue, whether we believe it or not; (v. 13.) If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself: he is faithful to his threatenings, faithful to his promises; neither one nor the other shall fall to the ground, so not the least jot or tittle of them. If we be faithful to Christ, he will certainly be faithful to us. If we do not believe, he will be faithful to his threatenings; he cannot deny himself, cannot recede from any word that he hath spoken, for he is Yea, and Amen, the faithful Witness.

Observe, (1.) Our being dead with Christ, precedes our living with him, and is connected with it, the one in the other; so our suffering for him is the way to reign with him. Ye that have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, Matt. 19. 28. (2.) This is a faithful saying, and may be depended on, and ought to be believed. But, (3.) If we deny him, out of fear, or shame, or for the sake of some temporal advantage, he will deny and disown us; and will not deny himself, but will continue faithful to his word when he threatens as well as when he promises.

14. Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord, that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers. 15. Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. 16. But shun profane and vain babblings, for they will increase unto more ungodliness. 17. And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom are Hymenaeus and Philetus; 18. Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already, and overthrew the faith of some.

Having thus encouraged Timothy to suffer, he comes in the next place to direct him in his work.

1. He must make it his business to edify those who were under his charge, to put them in remembrance of those things which they did already know: for that is the work of ministers; not to tell people that which they never knew before, but to put them in mind of that which they do know, charging them that they strive not about words. Observe, Those that are disposed to strive, commonly strive about matters of very small moment. Strifes of words are very destructive to the things of God. That they strive not about words to no profit. If people did but consider of what little use most of the controversies in religion are, they would not be so zealous in their strifes of words, to the subverting of the bearers, to the drawing of them away from the great things of God, and occasioning unchristian heats and animosities, by which truth is often in danger of being lost.

Observe, People are very prone to strive about words, and such strife never answers any other ends than to shake some and subvert others; they are not only useless, but they are very hurtful, and therefore ministers are to charge them that they do not strive about words, and then they are most likely to be regarded; when they charge them before the Lord, and in his presence, it is, in effect, the same as when they produce their warrant for what they say.

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, v. 15. Observe, The care of ministers must be to approve themselves unto God, to be accepted of him, and to shew that they are so approved unto God. In order thereto, there must be constant care and industry.

Study to shew thyself such a one, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, v. 16. Ministers must be workmen, they must have work to do, and they must do it industriously; workmen that are either unskilful, or unskilful, or lazy, have need to be ashamed; but those who mind their business, and keep to their work, are workmen that need not be ashamed. And what is their work? It is rightly to divide the word of truth. Not to invent a new gospel, but rightly to divide the gospel that is committed to their trust. To speak terror to those whom terror belongs, comfort to whom comfort; to give every one his portion in due season, Matt. 24. 25.

Observe here, 1. The word which ministers preach, is the word of truth, for the Author of it is the God of truth. 2. It requires great wisdom, study, and care, to divide this word of truth rightly; Timothy must study in order to do this well.

11. He must take heed of that which would be a hinderance to him in his work, v. 16. He must take heed of error: Shun profane and vain babblings: when once men take to be fond of such, they will increase unto more ungodliness. The way of error is down-hill; one absurdity being granted or contended for, a thousand follow; their word will eat as doth a canker or gangrene; when errors or heresies come into the church, the infecting of one often provokes the infecting of many, or the infecting of the same person with one error often provokes the infecting of him with many errors. Upon this occasion, the apostle mentions some who had lately advanced erroneous doctrines; Hymenaeus and Philetus. He names these corrupt teachers, by which he sets a brand upon them, to their perpetual infamy, and warns all people against hearkening to them; they have erred concerning the truth, concerning one of the fundamental articles of the Christian religion, which is truth. The resurrection of the dead is one of the great doctrines of Christ. Now see the subtlety of the serpent and the serpent's seed. They did not deny the resurrection, (for that had been boldly and avowedly to confront the word of Christ;) but they in a subterfuge obstructed the truth, doctrine, saying that the resurrection is past already; that what Christ spake concerning the resurrection, is to be understood mystically and by way of allegory, that it must be meant of a spiritual resurrection only. It is true, there is a spiritual resurrection, but from thence to infer that there will not be a true and real resurrection of the body at the last day, is to dash one truth of Christ in pieces against another. Be they they faithless, they took them off from the belief of the resurrection of the dead; and if there be no resurrection of the dead, no future state, no recompense of our services and sufferings in another world, we are of all men the most miserable, 1 Cor. 13. 19. What takes away the doctrine of a future state, overthrows the faith of Christians. The apostle had largely disproved this error, (1
Cor. 15,) and therefore does not here enter into the arguments against it.

1. The babblings Timothy was to shun, were profane and vain; they were empty shadows, and led to profaneness, for they will increase unto more ungodliness. 2. Error is very fruitful and productive, and on that account the more dangerous; it will eat like a gangrene. 3. When men err concerning the truth, they always endeavour to have some plausible pretence for it. Hymenæus and Philetus did not deny a resurrection, but pretended it was already past. 4. Error, especially that affects the foundation, will overthrow the faith of some.

19. Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his: And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity. 20. But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood, and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour.

21. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work.

Here we see what we may comfort ourselves with, in reference to this, and the little errors and heresies that both infect and infest the church, and do mischief.

1. It may be a great comfort to us, that the unbelief of men cannot make the promise of God of none effect. Though the faith of some particular persons be overthrown, yet the foundation of God standeth sure; (v. 19.) it is not possible that they should deceive the elect. Or it may be meant of the truth itself. All the attacks which the powers of darkness have made upon the doctrine of Christ, cannot shake it; it stands firm, and weather all the storms which have been raised against it.

The prophets and apostles, that is, the doctrines of the Old and New Testament, are still firm; and they have a seal with two mottoes upon it, one on the one side, and the other on the other, as is usual in a broad seal.

And speaks our comfort—that the Lord knows them that are his, and them that are not; knows them, that is, he owns them, so knows them, that he will never lose them. Though the faith of some be overthrown, yet the Lord is said to know the ways of the righteous, Ps. 1. 6. None can overthrow the faith of any whom God hath chosen.

(2.) Another speaks our duty—that every one who names the name of Christ, must depart from iniquity. Those who would have the comfort of the privilege, must make conscience of the duty. If the name of Christ be called upon us, we must depart from iniquity, else he will not own us; he will say in the great day, (Matt. 7. 22.) Depart from me, I never knew you, ye workers of iniquity, Observe,

1. Whatever errors are introduced in the church, the foundation of God standeth sure, his purpose can never be defeated. 2. God hath some in the church, whom he hath not known, and whom he knoweth to be his. 3. Professing Christians name the name of Christ, are called by his name, and therefore are bound to depart from iniquity; for Christ gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, Tit. 2. 14.

2. Another thing that may comfort us, is, that though there be some in the church that are overthrown, there are others who keep their integrity, and hold it fast; (v. 20.) In a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, &c. The church of Christ is a great house, a well-furnished house: now some of the furniture of this house is of great value, as the plate in a house; some of small value, and put to mean uses, as the vessels of wood and earth; so it is in the church of God. There are some professors of religion, that are like the vessels of wood and earth, they are vessels of dishonour; but at the same time all are not vessels of dishonour; there are vessels of gold and silver, that are vessels of honour, that are sanctified and meet for the Master's use. When we are discouraged by the badness of some, we must encourage ourselves by the consideration of the goodness of others. Now we should see to it that we be vessels of honour; we must purge ourselves from these corrupt opinions, that we may be sanctified for our Master's use.

1. Observe, the church there are some vessels of honour, and some of dishonour; there are some vessels of mercy, and other vessels of wrath, Rom. 9. 22, 23. Some dishonour the church by their corrupt opinions and wicked lives; and others honour and credit it by their exemplary conversation. 2. A man must purge himself from these before he can be a vessel of honour, or meet for his Master's use. (3.) Every vessel must be fit for its Master's use; every one in the church whom God approves, must be devoted to his Master's service, and meet for his use. (4.) Sanctification in the heart is our preparation for every good work. The tree must be made good, and then the fruit will be good.

22. Flee also youthful lusts: but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. 23. But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they gender strifes. 24. And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient. 25. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth;

26. And that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

I. Timothy must take care of youthful lusts; (v. 22.) though he was a holy good man, very much mortified to the world, yet Paul thought it necessary to caution him against youthful lusts; "Flee them, take all possible care and pains to keep thyself pure from them." The lusts of the flesh are youthful lusts, which young people must carefully watch against, and the best must not be secure. He describes an excellent remedy against youthful lusts; Follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, &c. Observe,

1. Youthful lusts are very dangerous, for which reason even hopeful young people should be warned of them, for they war against the soul, 1 Pet. 2. 11. 2. The exciting of our graces will be the extinguishing of our lusts. 3. There are such which is good, the faster and the further we shall flee from that which is evil. Righteousness, and faith, and love, will be excellent antidotes against youthful lusts. Holy love will cure impure lust. Follow peace with them that call on the Lord. The keeping up of the communion of saints, will take us off from all fellowship with unfruitful works of darkness. See the character of Christians; they are such as call on the Lord Jesus Christ, out of a pure heart.

Observe, Christ is to be prized to. It is the character of all Christians, that they call upon him; but
II. TIMOTHY, III.

1. The apostle foretells Timo\-thy what the last days would be, with the reasons thereof. (v. 1-9.) II. Prescribes various remedies against them. (v. 10, to the end,) particularly his own example, (But thou last fully known my doctrine, &c.) and the knowledge of the holy scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation, and to be the best antidote against the corrupting influence of the times we live in. In this chapter, Paul tells Timo\-thy how bad others would be, and therefore how good he should be; and this use we should make of the badness of others, thereby to engage us to build our own integrity so much the faster.

Timothy must not think it strange if there were in the church bad men; for the net of the gospel was to enclose both good fish and bad. Matt. 13. 47, 48. Jesus Christ had foretold (Matt. 24.) that there would come seducers, and therefore we must not be offended at it, or think the worse of religion or the church for it.

Even in gold ore there will be dross, and a great deal of chaff among the wheat when it lies on the floor. Timothy must know that in the last days, (v. 1.) in gospel-times, there would come perilous times. Though gospel-times were times of reformation in many respects, let him know that even in gospel-times there would be perilous times; so much on the account of persecution from without as on the account of corruptions within. These would be difficult times, wherein it would be difficult for a man to keep a good conscience. He does not say, a man who is blameless; a man who is without a single defect. A man who is blameless, without a single defect, would be a great rarity. It would be as rare as the chaff in the wheat. But, perilous times shall come, for such as have the form of godliness (v. 5.) shall be corrupt and wicked, and do a great deal of damage to the church. Two traitors within the garrison may do more hurt to it than two thousand besiegers without.

3. The coming of perilous times is an evidence of the truth of scripture-predictions; if the event in this respect did not answer to the prophecy, we might be tempted to question the divinity of the Bible. We are all concerned in these things, to believe, and consider it, that we may not be surprised when we see the times perilous; This know also. Then he tells Timothy what would be the occasion of making these times perilous, or what shall be the marks and signs, whereby these times may be known: v. 2, and following verses.

1. Self-love will make the times perilous. Who is there who does not love himself? But this is meant of an immoral, sinful self-love. Men love our prayers to God and Christ are not acceptable or successful, except they come out of a pure heart.

II. He cautions him against contention, and, to prevent that, (v. 23.) cautions him against foolish and unlearned questions, that tend to no benefit, strife of words. They who advanced them, and dated upon them, thought they had eminently learned; but Paul calls them foolish and unlearned. The mischief of these is, that they generate strifes, that they breed debates and quarrels among Christians and ministers. It is very remarkable how often, and with what seriousness, the apostle cautions Timo\-thy against disputes in religion, which surely was not without some such design as this, to shew us that religion consists more in believing and practising what the apostles taught than in disputing about what they taught.

Now the servant of the Lord must not strive, v. 24. Nothing worse becomes the servant of the Lord Jesus, who himself did not strive or cry, (Matt. 12. 19.) but was a pattern of meekness and mildness and gentleness to all, than strife and contention. The servant of the Lord must be gentle to all men, and thereby shew that he is himself subject to the commanding power of that holy religion which he is employed in preaching and promoting: apt to teach. Those are apt un\-to teach, who are apt to strive, and are fierce and föroward. Ministers must be patient, bearing with evil, and in meekness instructing, (v. 25.) not only those who subject themselves, but those who oppose themselves. Observe, 1. Those who oppose themselves to the truth, are to be instructed; for instruction is the scripture-method of dealing with the erroneous, which is made more likely to convince them of their errors than fire and faggot; he does not bid us kill their bodies, under pretence of saving their souls. 2. Such as oppose themselves, are to be instructed in meekness, for our Lord is meek and lowly; (Matt. 11. 29.) and this agrees well with the character of the servant of the Lord, (v. 24.) He must not strive, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient.

This is the way to convey truth in its light and power, and to overcome evil with good, Rom. 12. 21. That which ministers have in their eyes, in instructing those who oppose themselves, must be, their recovery; If God, peradventure, will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth. Observe, (1.) Repentance is God's gift. (2.) It is a gift with a peradventure, in the case of those who oppose themselves; for, though we are not to despair of the grace of God, yet we must take heed of presuming upon it. To the acknowledging of the truth. (3.) The same God who gives us the discovery of the truth, does by his grace bring us to the acknowledging of it, otherwise our hearts would continue in rebellion against it, for we are to confess with our mouths as well as to believe with our hearts, Rom. 10. 9, 10. And thus sinners recover themselves, if it be the will of God. When sinners repent, they who before were led captive by the Devil at his will, come to be led into the glorious liberty of the children of God, and have their wills melted into the will of the Lord Jesus. The good Lord recover us all out of the snare.

Chap. III.

1. These know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. 2. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unhawthateful, unholy, Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such also turn away.

Timothy must know that in the last days, (v. 1.) in gospel-times, there would come perilous times. Though gospel-times were times of reformation in many respects, let him know that even in gospel-times there would be perilous times; so much on the account of persecution from without as on the account of corruptions within. These would be difficult times, wherein it would be difficult for a man to keep a good conscience. He does not say, a man who is blameless; a man who is without a single defect. A man who is blameless, without a single defect, would be a great rarity. It would be as rare as the chaff in the wheat. But, perish times shall come, for such as have the form of godliness (v. 5.) shall be corrupt and wicked, and do a great deal of damage to the church. Two traitors within the garrison may do more hurt to it than two thousand besiegers without.

Perilous times shall come, for men shall be wicked. Note, Sin makes the times perilous. When there is a general corruption of manners, and of the tempers of men, that makes the times dangerous to live in; for it is hard to keep our integrity in the midst of general corruption.

The coming of perilous times is an evidence of the truth of scripture-predictions; if the event in this respect did not answer to the prophecy, we might be tempted to question the divinity of the Bible. We are all concerned in these things, to believe, and consider it, that we may not be surprised when we see the times perilous; This know also. Then he tells Timothy what would be the occasion of making these times perilous, or what shall be the marks and signs, whereby these times may be known: v. 2, and following verses.

their carnal selves better than their spiritual selves. Men love to gratify their own lusts, and make provision for them, more than to please God and do their duty. Instead of Christian charity, which takes care for the good of others, they will mind themselves only, and prefer their own gratification before the church's edification.

2. Covetousness. Observe, Self-love brings in a long train of sins and mischief. When men are lovers of themselves, no good can be expected from them, as all good may be expected from those who love God with all their hearts. When covetousness generally prevails, and every man is for what he can get, and keeping what he has, this makes men dangerous to one another, and obliges every man to stand on his guard against his neighbour.

3. Pride and vain-glory make the times perilous. When men, being proud of themselves, are boasters and blasphemers, boasters before men whom they despise and look upon with scorn, and blasphemers of God and of his name; when men do not fear God, they will not regard man, and so vice versâ.

4. When children are disobedient to their parents, and break through the obligations which they lie under to them both in duty and gratitude, and frequently in interest, having their dependence upon them, and their expectation from them, that makes the times perilous; for what wickedness will they stick at, who will be abusive to their own parents, and rebel against them? Unthankfulness and unholiness make the times perilous, and those two commonly go together.

What is the reason that men are unholy and without the fear of God, but that they are unthankful for the mercies of God? Ingratitude and impiety go together; for call a man ungrateful, and you can call him by no worse name. Unthankful, and impure, defiled with fleshly lusts, which is an instance of great ingratitude to the God who has provided so well for the support of the body; we abuse his gifts, if we make them the food and fuel of our lusts.

6. The times are perilous when men will not be held by the bonds either of nature or common honesty; when they are without natural affection, and truce-breakers. There is a natural affection due to all. Wherever there is the human nature, there should be humanity toward those of the same nature, even their parents.

7. Times are perilous when children are disobedient to their parents. Times are perilous when parents are without natural affection to their children. See what a corruption of nature is, how it deprives men even of that which nature has implanted in them for the support of their own kind; for the natural affection of parents to their children, is that which contributes very much to the keeping up of mankind upon the earth. And those who will not be bound by nature and affection, no marvel that they will not be bound by the most solemn leagues and covenants. They are truce-breakers, that make no conscience of the engagements they have laid themselves under. Again, the times are perilous when men are false accusers of one another. Men lie to one another; having no regard to the good name of others, or to the religious obligations of an oath, but thinking themselves at liberty to say and do what they please, Ps. 12. 4.

4. When men have no government of themselves and their own appetites: not of their own appetites, for they are incontinent; nor of their own passions, for they are fierce; when they have no rule over their own spirits, and therefore are like a city that is broken down, and has no walls; they are soon fired, upon the least occasion.

8. When that which is good and ought to be honoured, is generally despaired and looked upon with contempt. It is the pride of persecutors that they look with contempt upon good people, though they are more excellent than their neighbours.

9. When men are generally treacherous, wilful, and saucy, the times are perilous (v. 4.)—when men are ingrateful, heady, high-minded. Our Saviour has foretold that the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son (Matt. 10. 21.) and those are the worst sort of traitors: those who delivered up their Bibles to persecutors, were called traducers, for they betrayed the trust committed to them. When men are petulant and puffed up, carrying it scornfully to all about them, and when this temper generally prevails, then the times are perilous.

10. When men are generally lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God. When there are more picquederies than true Christians, then the times are bad indeed. God is to be loved above all; that is a carnal mind, and is full of enmity against him, which prefers any thing before him, especially such a sordid thing as carnal pleasure is.

11. All this notwithstanding, all these have the form of godliness, (v. 5.) are called by the Christian name, baptized into the Christian faith, make a shew of religion; but, how plausible soever their form of godliness is, they deny the power of it. When they take upon them the form, which should and would bring along with it the power thereof, they will put asunder what God hath joined together; they will assume the form of godliness, to take away their reproach; but they will not submit to the power of it, to take away their sin.

Observe here, (1.) Men may be very bad and wicked, under a profession of religion; they may be lovers of themselves, &c. yet have a form of godliness. (2.) A form of godliness is a very different thing from the power of it; men may have the one, and be wholly destitute of the other; yea, they deny it, at least practically in their lives. (3.) From such, good Christians must withdraw themselves.

6. For of this sort are they who creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts. 7. Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. 8. Now as James and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobare concerning the faith. 9. But they shall proceed no further; for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as their's also was.

Here Paul warns Timothy to take heed of certain seducers, not only that he might not be drawn away by them himself, but that he might arm those who were under him against the same seduction.

1. He shows how industrious they were to make proselytes; (v. 6.) they applied themselves to particular persons, visited them in their houses, not daring to appear openly; for they that do evil, hate the light, John 3. 20. They were not forced into houses, as good Christians often were by persecution; but they of choice crept into houses, to insinuate themselves into the affections and good opinion of people, and so to draw them over to their party. And see what sort of people they were, that they gained, and made proselytes of; they were such as were weak, silly women; and such as were wicked, laden with sins, and led away with divers lusts; a foolish head and a filthy heart make persons, especially women, an easy prey to seducers.

2. He shows how far they were from coming to the knowledge of the truth, though they pretend to be ever learning, v. 7. In one sense we must all be ever learning, growing in knowledge, following on to know the Lord, pressing forward; but these were sceptics, giddy and unstable, who were forward to imbibe every new notion, under pretence of advancement in knowledge, but never came to a right understanding of the truth. These ministers are likely to do good, and leave lasting fruits of their labours, whose manner of life agrees with their doctrine; as on the contrary those cannot expect to profit the people at all, that preach well and live ill.

3. Timothy fully knew what was the great thing that Paul had in view, both in his preaching and in his conversation; "Thou hast known my purpose, what I drive at, how far it is from any worldly, carnal, secular design, and how sincerely I aim at the glory of God, and the good of the souls of men." Timothy knew that he had the design of a heavenly, which he might gather from his doctrine, manner of life and purpose; for he gave proofs of his faith, that is, of his integrity and fidelity, or his faith in Christ, his faith concerning another world, by which Paul lived, his long-suffering toward the churches to which he preached, and over which he presided, his charity toward all men, and his patience. These were the graces that Paul was eminent for, and Timothy knew.

5. He knew that he had suffered ill for doing well; (v. 11.) "Thou hast fully known the persecutions and afflictions that came unto me;" (he mentions those only which happened to him while Timothy was with him, at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra;) "and therefore let it be no surprise to thee, if thou suffer hard things, it is no more than I have endured before."}

6. He knew what care God had taken of him; notwithstanding, out of them all the Lord delivered me; as he never failed his cause, so his God never failed him. Thou hast fully known my afflictions. When we know the afflictions of good people but in part, they are a temptation to us to decline that cause which they suffer for; when we know only the hardships they undergo for Christ, we may be ready to say, "We will renounce that cause that is too hard to us, so dear in the owning of it;" but when we fully know the afflictions, not only how they suffer, but how they are supported and comforted under their sufferings; then, instead of being discouraged, we shall be animated by them; especially considering that we are told before, that we must count upon such things; (v. 12.) All that evil live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution; and at the same time, he professed the faith of Christ, were more exposed to persecution than at other times; but at all times, more or less, they who will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. They must expect to be despised, and that their religion will stand in the way of their preferment; they who will live godly, must expect it, especially they who will live godly in Christ Jesus, that is, according to the strict rules of the Christian religion, they who will wear the livery and bear the name of the crucified Redeemer; all who will shew their religion in their conversation, who will not only begodly, but live godly, let them expect persecution, especially when they are resolute in it.

(1.) The apostle's life was very exemplary for three things; for his doctrine, which was according to the will of God; for his life, which was according to the strict rules of the Christian religion; and for his persecutions and sufferings. (2.) Though his life was a life of great usefulness, yet it was a life of great sufferings; and none, I believe, came nearer to their great Master for eminent service and great sufferings than St. Paul; he suffered almost in every place; the Holy Ghost witnessed that bonds and afflictions did abide him, Acts 20. 23. Here he enumerates his persecutions and afflictions at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra, beside what he suffered elsewhere. (3.) The apostle mentions the Lord's delivering him out of all, for Timothy's and our encouragement under sufferings. (4.) We have the practice and treatment of true Christians, they live godly in Jesus Christ, that is their practice; and they shall suffer persecution, that is the usage they must expect in this world.

II. He warns Timothy of the fatal end of seducers, as a reason why he should stick close to the truth as it is not only what he should consider, but it shall work worse and worse, &c. Observe, As good men, by the grace of God, grow better and better, so bad men, through the subtlety of Satan and the power of their own corruptions, grow worse and worse. The way of sin is down-hill; for such proceed from bad to worse, deceiving and being deceived. Those who deceive others, do but deceive themselves; those who draw others into error, run themselves into the more incurable mistakes, and they will find it so at last, to their cost.

14. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; 15. And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. 16. All scripture is given by inspiration of God; and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: 17. That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

He directs him to keep close to a good education, and particularly to what he had learned out of the holy scriptures; (v. 14, 15.) Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned. Note, It is not enough to learn that which is good, but we must continue in it, and persevere in it unto the end. Then are we Christ's disciples indeed, John 8. 31.

We should not be any more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive, Eph. 4. 14. Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines; for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace, Heb. 13. 9. And for this reason we should continue in the things we have learned from the holy scriptures; not that we ought to continue in any errors and mistakes which we may have been led into. It is a great happiness to know the certainty of the things wherein we have been instructed, Luke 1. 4. Not only to know what the truths are, but to know that they are of undoubted certainty. What we have learned we must labour to be more and more assured of; that, being grounded in the truth, we may be guarded against error, for certainty in religion is of great importance and advantage; Knowledge, 1 Thes. 4. 13. That thou hast had good teachers; consider of whom thou hast learned them; not of evil men and seducers, but good men, who had themselves experienced the power of the truths they taught thee, and been ready to suffer for them, and thereby would give the fullest evidence of their belief of these truths.

II. "Knowing especially the firm foundation upon which thou hast built, namely, that of the scripture;

(v. 15.) That from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures.

Observe, Those who would acquaint themselves with the things of God, and be assured of them, must know the holy scriptures, for those are the summary of divine revelation. Observe, It is a great happiness to know the holy scriptures from our childhood, who should betimes get the knowledge of the scriptures. The age of childhood is the learning age; and those who would get true learning, must get it out of the scriptures.

Observe further, The scriptures we are to know, are the holy scriptures; they came from the holy God, were delivered by holy men, contain holy precepts, treat of holy things, and were designed to make us holy, and to lead us in the way of holiness. The appearance of these scriptures, they are by that distinguished from profane writings of all sorts, and from those that only treat of morality, and common justice and honesty, but do not meddle with holiness. If we would know the holy scriptures, we must read and search them daily, as the noble Bercans did, Acts 17. 11. They must not be by us neglected, and seldom or never looked into.

Now here observe, 1. What is the excellency of the scripture? The scripture is given by inspiration of God, (v. 16.) and therefore is his word. It is a divine revelation, which we may depend upon as infallibly true. The same Spirit that breathed reason into us, breathes revelation among us.

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men speak, as they were moved or carried forth by the Holy Ghost, 2 Pet. 1. 21. The prophets and apostles did not speak from themselves, but what they received of the Lord that they delivered unto us. That the scripture was given by inspiration of God, appears by the majesty of its style; from the truth, purity, and sublimity, of the doctrines contained in it; from the harmony of its several parts; from its power and efficacy on the minds of multitudes that converse with it; from the accomplishment of many prophecies relating to things beyond all human foresight; and from the uncontrollable miracles that were wrought in proof of its divine original; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will, Heb. 2. 4.

2. What use it will be to us.

(1.) It is able to make us wise to salvation; that is, it is a sure guide in our way to eternal life. Note, These are wise words to salvation. The scriptures are able to make us truly wise, wise for our souls and another world; to make us wise to salvation through faith. Observe, The scriptures will make us wise to salvation, if they be mixed with faith, and not otherwise, Heb. 4. 2. For if we do not believe their truth and goodness, they will do us no good.

(2.) It is profitable to us for all the purposes of the Christian life, for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. It teaches all the ends of divine revelation. It instructs us in that which is true, reproofs us for that which is amiss, directs us in that which is good. It is of use to all, for we all need to be instructed, corrected, and reproved; it is of special use to ministers, who are to give instruction, correction, and reproof; and whence can they fetch it better than from the scriptures? That the man of God must meddle with, v. 17. The Christian, the minister, is the man of God. That which finishes a man of God in this world, is the scripture. By it we are thoroughly furnished for every good work. There is that in the scripture, which suits every case. Whatever duty we have to do, whatever service is required from us, we may find enough in the scriptures to furnish us for it.

Vol. VI.—4 P.
II. TIMOTHY, IV.

[1.] We see the scripture has various uses, and answers divers ends and purposes: it is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction of all errors in judgment and practice, and for instruction in righteousness. [2.] The scripture is a perfect rule of faith and practice, and was designed for the man of God, the minister as well as the Christian who doth vote to be God, for it is fit for doctrine, &c. [3.] If we consult the scripture, which was given by inspiration of God, and follow its directions, we shall be made men of God, perfect, and thoroughly furnished to every good work. [4.] We further learn, there is no occasion for the writings of the philosopher, nor for rabbinical fables, nor popish legends, nor unwritten traditions, to make us perfect men of God, since the scripture answers all these ends and purposes. [5.] If we may love our bibles more, and keep closer to them than ever! and then shall we find the benefit and advantage designed thereby, and shall at last attain the happiness therein promised and assured to us.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, St. Paul with great solemnity and earnestness presseth Timothy to the diligent and conscientious discharge of his work as an office, and as a minister of God, to whom he is charge given, to all the apostles were to take to themselves, v. 1. 3. 11. The reason of his concern in this case, Why must Timothy be so instant in season, &c. in a particular manner he saith as if the church were likely to be deprived of the apostolic labours, for his departure was at hand, v. 6. 8. III. Divers particular matters, with a hint and caution, about Alexander the coppersmith, v. 9. 15. IV. He informs him of what befell him at his first answer; though men forsook him the Lord stood by him, and that encouraged him to hope for future deliverance, v. 16. 18. And then he concludes with salutations and a benediction, v. 19, to the end.

1. I CHARGE thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; 2. Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. 3. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; 4. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. 5. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry. 6. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. 7. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

1. Observe how awfully this charge is introduced; (v. 1.) I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom. Observe, The best of men have need to be saved into the discharge of their duty. The work of a minister is not an indifferent thing, but absolutely necessary. Woe be to him if he preach not the gospel; (1 Cor. 9. 16.) I charge thee. To induce him to faithfulness, he must consider,

1. That the eye of God and Jesus Christ was upon him; I charge thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ; that is, As thou tendest the favour of God and Jesus Christ; as thou wilt approve thyself to God and Jesus Christ, by the obligations both of natural and revealed religion; as thou wilt make them return to the God of his fathers, and the Lord Jesus Christ who redeemed thee.

2. He charges him as he will answer it at the great day: reminding him of the judgment to come, which is committed to the Lord Jesus. He shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, that is, when he appears in his kingdom. It concerns all, both ministers and people, seriously to consider the account that they must shortly give to Jesus Christ of all the trusts reposed in them. Shall judge the quick and the dead; that is, those that at the last day shall be found alive, and those who shall be raised to life out of the grave.

Note, (1.) The Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the quick and dead. God hath committed all judgment unto the Son, and hath appointed him the Judge of quick and dead, Acts 10. 42. (2.) He will appear; he will come the second time, and it will be 9. (3.) Then his kingdom shall appear in his glory, at his appearing and kingdom, for he will then appear in his kingdom, sitting on a throne, to judge the world.

II. What is the matter of the charge, v. 2—5. He is charged,

1. To preach the word. That is ministers’ business; a dispensation is committed to them. It is not their own notions and fancies which they are to preach, but the precise plain word of God; and they must not corrupt it, but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God, they speak in Christ, 2 Cor. 2. 17.

2. To urge what he preached, and to press it with all earnestness upon his hearers; “Be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort; do this work with all fervency of spirit. Call upon those under thy charge to take heed of sin, to do their duty; call upon them to repent and believe, and live a holy life, and do all things, and every thing, in season and out of season. In season, when they are at leisure to hear thee; when some special opportunity offers itself of speaking to them with advantage. Nay, do it out of season, even when there is not that apparent probability of fastening something upon them, because thou dost not know but the Spirit of God may fasten upon them; for the wind and the current to which it listeth; and in the morning we must sow our seed, even in the evening we must withhold our hand,” Exod. 11. 6.

3. We must do it in season, that is, let slip no opportunity; and do it out of season, that is, not shift off the duty, under pretence that it is out of season.

3. He must tell people of their faults; “Reprove them, rebuke them. Convince wicked people of the evil and danger of their wicked courses. Endeavour, by dealing plainly with them, to bring them to repentance. Rebuke them with gravity, and affectionately, in Christ’s name, that they may take the displeasure against them as an indication of God’s displeasure.”

6. He must direct, encourage, and quicken those who began well. “Exhort them; persuade them to hold on, and endure to the end, and this with all long-suffering and doctrine.”

1. He must do it very patiently, with all long-suffering. “They that作风e of the charge by rebuke patiently, yet do not therefore give them cause; be not weary of speaking to them.” While God shews to them all long-suffering, let ministers exhort with all long-suffering.

2. He must do it rationally, not with passion, but with doctrine, that is, “In order to the reducing of them to good practices, instil into them good principles. Teach them the truth as it is in Jesus, reduce them to a firm belief of that, and that will be a means both to reclaim them from evil and to bring them to good."

(1.) A minister's work has various parts; he is to preach the word, to refute, rebuke, and exhort.

(2.) He is to be very diligent and careful; he must be instant in season and out of season; he must spare no pains or labour, but he must be urgent with them to take care of their souls and their eternal concerns.

5. He must watch in all things; "Seek an opportunity among them a kindness; let no fair occasion slip through the negligence. Watch to thy work; watch against the temptations of Satan, by which thou mayest be diverted from it; watch over the souls of those who are committed to thy charge."

6. He must count upon afflictions, and endure them; make the best of them.

Endure patiently, be not discouraged by the difficulties thou meetest with, but bear them with an evenness of spirit. Inure thyself to hardships.

7. He must remember his office, and discharge that; Do the work of an evangelist. The office of the evangelists was, as the apostles' deputies, to water the churches that they planted. They were not settled pastors, but for some time resided in, and presided over, the churches that the apostles had planted; till they were settled under a standing ministry. The work of an evangelist is, (3.) He must fulfill his ministry; Make full proof of it. It was a great trust that was reposed in him, and therefore he must answer it, and perform all the parts of his office with diligence and care.

Observe, (1.) A minister must expect afflictions in the faithful discharge of his duty. (2.) He must endure them patiently, like a Christian hero. (3.) These must not discourage him in his work, for he must fulfill his ministry. (4.) The best way to make full proof of our ministry, is to fulfill it, to fill it up in all its parts with proper work.

III. The reasons to enforce the charge.

1. Because errors and heresies were likely to creep into the church, by which the minds of many professing Christians would be corrupted; (v. 3, 4.) For the time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine. Therefore improve the present time, when they will endure it; be busy now, for it is seed-time; when the fields are white unto the harvest, put in the sickle, for the present gate of opportunity will be soon over. They will not endure sound doctrine. There will be those who will heap themselves corrupt teachers, and will turn away their ears from the truth; and therefore secure as many as thou canst, that when these storms and tempests do arise, they may be well fixed, and their apostasy may be prevented; hear, and ministers must preach, for the time to come, and guard against the miscarriages that are likely to arise hereafter, though they do not yet arise. They will turn away their ears from the truth, they will grow weary of the old plain gospel of Christ, and then they will be greedy of fables, and take pleasure in them, and God shall give them up to those strong delusions, that they may perish in the vanity of the truth in the last time. Thess. 2. 11, 12. Observe, (1.) These teachers were of their own heaping up, and not of God's sending; but they chose them, to gratify their lusts, and to please their itching ears.

(2.) People do so when they will not endure sound doctrine, that preaching which is searching, plain, and to the purpose; then will they have teachers of their own. (3.) There is a wide difference between the word of God, and the words of such teachers; the one is sound doctrine, the word of truth, the other is only fables.

4. (4.) They that are turned unto fables, first turn away their ears from the truth, for they cannot hear and mind both, any more than they can serve two masters. Nay further, it is said, They shall be turned unto fables. God justly suffers those that turn to fables, who grow weary of the truth, and gives them up to be led aside from the truth by fables.

2. Because Paul for his part had almost done his work; Do thou make full proof of thy ministry, for I am now ready to be offered, v. 6. And,

(1.) Therefore there will be the more occasion for thee. When labourers are removed out of the vineyard, it is no time for them to be idle, that are left behind, but to double their diligence. The fewer hands there are to work, the more industrious those hands must be, that are at work.

(2.) I have done the work of my day and generation; do thou in like manner do the work of thy day and generation.

3. The comfort and cheerfulness of Paul, in the prospect of his approaching departure, might encourage Timothy to the utmost industry and diligence and seriousness in his work. Paul was an old soldier of Jesus Christ, Timothy was but newly enlisted. "Come," says Paul, "I have found our Master kind, the cause good, and I can look back upon my warfare with a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction, and therefore be not afraid of the difficulties thou must meet with. The crown of life is as sure to thee as if it were already upon thy head, and therefore endure afflictions, and make full proof of thy ministry; be not afraid of the reproaches of the saints and ministers, and especially dying martyrs, are a great confirmation of the truth of the Christian religion, and a great encouragement to living saints and ministers in their work. Here,

1. He looks forward, upon his death approaching; I am now ready to be offered. The Holy Ghost witnessed in every city, that bonds and afflictions did abide him, Acts 20. 23. He was not at Rome, and it is probable that he had particular intimations of the Spirit, that there he should seal the truth with his blood; and he looks upon it now as near at hand; I am already poured out; so it is in the original, ἐκβιβασμένος; that is, I am already a martyr in affection. It alludes to the pouring out of the drink offerings; for the blood of the martyrs, though it was not a sacrifice of atonement, yet it was a sacrifice of acknowledgment to the hand and travail of his Spirit, Thus, With what pleasure he speaks of dying. He calls it his departure; though it is probable that he foresaw he must die a violent, bloody death, yet he calls it his departure or his release. Death to a good man is his release from the imprisonment of this world, and his departure to the enjoyments of another world; he does not cease to be, but is only removed from one world to another.

2. Observe, he was not afraid to talk so, because he lived a good fight. He had done the service, gone through the difficulties of his warfare, and had been instruental in the establishment of the Gospel among the Gentiles. He had wrought the salvation of many souls, and was the{3} exalted Redeemer over the powers of darkness. His life was a course, and he had now finished it; his warfare was accomplished, so his race was run. "I have kept the faith. I have kept the doctrine of the gospel, and never betrayed any of them."

Note, First, The life of a Christian, but especially of a minister, is a warfare and a race, sometimes compared to the one in the scripture, and sometimes to the other. Secondly, It is a good fight, a good warfare; the cause is good, and the victory is sure,
II. TIMOTHY, IV.

9. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: 10. For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia. 11. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry. 12. And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. 13. The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments. 14. Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works. 15. Of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood our words.

1. He bids him hasten to him, if possible; (v. 9.) Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. For Timothy was an evangelist, one who was not fixed pastor of any one place, but attended the motions of the apostles, to build upon their foundation. Paul wanted Timothy's company and help; and the reason he gives, is, because several had left him, v. 10. One from an ill principle, Demas, who abides under an ill name for it; Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world. He quitted Paul and his interest, either for fear of suffering, (because Paul was now a prisoner, and he was afraid of coming into trouble upon his account,) or being called off from his ministry by secular affairs, which he entangled himself in; his first love to Christ and his gospel was forsaken and forgotten, and he fell in love with the world. Note, Love to this present world is altogether a false heart to Christ and all the lines and waves of Jesus Christ. He is gone off, is departed to Thessalonica; called thither perhaps by trade, or by some other worldly business. Crescens's gone one way and Titus another way, and only Luke was with Paul, v. 11, 12. Was not that enough? Paul did not think it so; he loved the company of his friends.

2. He speaks respectfully concerning Mark: He is profitable to me for the ministry. It is supposed that this Mark was he about whom Paul and Barnabas contended, Acts 15. 39. Paul would not take him with him to the work, because he had once fainched and drawn back: but now, says he, "Take Mark, and bring him with thee." By this it appears that Paul was now reconciled to Mark, and had a better opinion of him than he had had formerly. Do this teaches us to be of a forgiving spirit; those that are profitable and useful, though they may have done amiss, we must not therefore disclaim for ever making use of them.

3. Paul orders Timothy to come to him, bids him as he came through Troas to bring with him from thence those things which he had left behind him there; (v. 13.) the cloak he had left there, which, it may be, Paul had the more occasion for in a cold place; and the parchments, which usually wore, in a plain dress. Some read it, the roll of parchments I left at Troas; others, the desk that I left. Paul was guided by divine inspiration, and yet he would have his books with him. Whereas he had exhorted Timothy to give attendance to reading, so he did himself, though he was now ready to be offered. As long as we live, we must he still learning. But especially the parchments, which some think were the originals of the catechisms from the others think they were the skins of which he made his tents, whereby he got a livelihood, working with his own hands.

4. He mentions Alexander, and the mischief that he had done him, v. 14, 15. This is he who is spoken of Acts 19. 33. It should seem, he had been a professor of the Christian religion, a forward professor, for he was particularly mentioned by Paul as a shipper of Diana, and yet he did Paul much evil. Paul was in as much danger from false brethren, (2 Cor. 11. 26.) as from open enemies. Paul foretels that God would reckon with him. It is a prophetical denunciation of the just judgment of God that would befall him; The Lord will reward him according to his works. He cautions Timothy to take heed of him. Of whom be thou ware, is, the charge of the greater pretence of friendship, betray thee to mischief. It is dangerous having anything to do with those who would be enemies to such a man as Paul. Observe,

(1.) Some who were once Paul's hearers and admirers, did not give him reason to remember them.
II. TIMOTHY, IV.

with much pleasure; for one forsook him, and another did him much evil, and greatly withstood his works. Yet, (2) At the same time he mentions some with pleasure; the badness of some did not make him forget the goodness of others; such as Timothy, Titus, Mark, and Luke. (3) The names and memory of two persons: the one is Demas, who forsook him, having loved the present world, and the other is Alexander, who greatly withstood his words. (4) God will reward evil-doers, particularly apostates, according to their works. Lastly, Of such as are Alexander's spirit and temper we should beware; for they will do no good, but all the mischief that is in their power.

16. At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.

17. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear; and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.

18. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. 19. Salute Prisca and Aquila, and the household of Onesiphorus. 20. Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

21. Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren. 22. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

Here he gives Timothy an account of his own present circumstances. He had lately been called to appear before the emperor, upon his appeal to Caesar; and then no man stood with him, (v. 16.) to plead his cause, to bear testimony for him, or so much as to keep him in countenance, but all men forsook him. This was strange, that so good a man as he should have no body to own him, even at Rome, where there were many Christians, whose faith was spoken of throughout all the world, Rom. 1. 8. But men are but men. The Christians at Rome were forward to go and meet him; (Acts 28.) but when it came to the pinch, and they would be in danger of suffering with him, then they all forsook him. He prays that God would not lay it to their charge; intimating, that it was a great fault, and God might justly be angry with them, but he prays God to forgive them. See what distinction is put between sins of presumption and sins of infirmity: Alexander the coppersmith, who maliciously withstood Paul, he prays against him; The Lord reward him according to his works; but respecting these Christians, who through weakness shrank from Paul in time of trial, he says, The Lord lay it not to their charge.

3. St. Paul had his trials in his friends forsoaking him in a time of danger, as well as in the opposition made by enemies; all forsook him. 2. It was their sin not to appear for the good apostle, especially at his first answer; but it was a sin of weakness, and therefore the more excusable. Yet, 3. God might lay it to their charge, but St. Paul endeavours to prevent it by his earnest prayers; Let it not be laid to their charge.

Notwithstanding this, God stood by him, (v. 17.) gave him extraordinary wisdom and courage, to enable him to speak so much the better himself. When he had nobody to keep him in countenance, God made his face to shine: that by me the preaching might be fully known, that is, God brought back the Gentiles from their sinfulness, that I might preach the gospel, which is my business. He should see, that he might preach the gospel at that time, for Paul knew how to preach at the bar as well as in the pulpit: and that all the Gentiles might hear; the emperor himself and the great men, who would never have heard Paul preach, if he had not been brought before them. And I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion, that is, of Nero, (as some think,) or some other judge. Some understand it only as a proverbial form of speech, to signify that he was in imminent danger. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work. See how Paul improved his experiences; He that hath delivered, doth deliver, and we trust he shall yet deliver; shall deliver me from every evil work, from doing any ill myself, and having any ill done to me by others. And shall preserve me to his heavenly kingdom. And v 5. He gives glory to God, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.

(1.) If the Lord stands by us, he will strengthen us, in a time of difficulty and danger, and his presence will more than supply every one's absence. (2.) When the Lord preserves his servants from great and imminent danger, it is for eminent work and service. Paul was preserved, that by him the preaching might be fully known, &c. (3.) Former deliverances show that God will preserve us. There is a heavenly kingdom, to which the Lord will preserve his faithful, witnessing or suffering servants. Lastly, We ought to give God the glory of all past, present, and future deliverances; To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

He sends salutations to Aquila, and Priscilla, and the household of Onesiphorus, v. 19. He mentions his leaving Trophimus sick at Miletum, (v. 20.) by which it appears that though the apostles healed all manner of diseases miraculously, for the confirmation of their doctrine, yet they did not exert that power upon their own friends, lest it should have looked like a collusion.

He hastens Timothy to come to him before winter, (v. 21.) because he longed to see him, and because in the winter the journey or voyage would be more dangerous.

He sends commendations to him from Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, Claudia, and all the brethren. One of the heathen writers at this time mentions one Pudens and his wife Claudia, and says, that Claudia was a Briton; whence some have gathered, that it was this Pudens, and that Claudia here was his wife, and that they were eminent Christians at Rome.

He concludes with a prayer, that the Lord Jesus would be with his spirit. We need no more to make us happy than to have the Lord Jesus Christ with our spirits; for in him all spiritual blessings are summed up. And it is the best prayer we can put up for our friends, that the Lord Jesus Christ may be with their spirits, to sanctify and save them, and at last to receive them to himself; as Stephen the proto-martyr prayed, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit, Acts 7. 59. Lord Jesus, receive that spirit which thou hast been with while it was united to the body, do not now leave it in its separate state.

Grace be with you. Amen. This was our apostle's token in every epistle; so he wrote: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen. 2 Thess. 3. 17, 18. And if grace be with us here to convert and change us, to make us holy, to keep us humble, and to enable us to persevere to the end, glory will crown us hereafter: for the Lord is a Sun, TITUS, I.

Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God our Saviour, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

AN EXPOSITION,

WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS

OF THE

EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO TITUS.

Completed by Mr. J. Smith.

THIS Epistle of Paul to Titus is much of the same nature with those to Timothy; both were converts of Paul, and his companions in labours and sufferings; both were in the office of evangelists, whose work was to water the churches planted by the apostles, and to set in order the things that were wanting in them: they were vice-apostles, as it were, working the work of the Lord, as they did, and mostly under their direction, though not despotic and arbitrary, but with the concurring exercise of their own prudence and judgment, 1 Cor. 16. 10, 12. We read much of this Titus, his titles, character, and active usefulness, in many places: he was a Greek, Gal. 2. 3. St. Paul called him his son, (Tit. 1. 4.) his brother, (2 Cor. 2. 13.) his partner and fellow-helper, (2 Cor. 8. 23.) one that walked in the same Spirit, and in the same steps with himself. He went up with the apostles to the church at Jerusalem, (Gal. 2. 1.) was much conversant at Corinth, for which church he had an earnest care, 2 Cor. 8. 16. Paul's second epistle to them, and probably his first also, was sent by his hand, 2 Cor. 8. 16—18, 23. 9. 2—4. 12, 18. He was with the apostle at Rome, and thence went into Dalmatia, (2 Tim. 4. 10.) after which no more occurs of him in the scriptures. So that by them he appears not to have been a fixed bishop; if such he were, and in those times, the church of Corinth, where he most attended, had the best title to him. In Crete (now called Candia, formerly Hecatombolis, from the hundred cities that were in it) a large island at the mouth of the Ægean Sea, the gospel had got some footing; and here were Paul and Titus in one of their travels, cultivating this plantation; but the apostle of the Gentiles, having on him the care of all the churches, could not himself tarry long at this place: he therefore left Titus some time there, to carry on the work which had been begun; wherein, probably meeting with more difficulty than ordinary, Paul wrote this epistle to him; and yet perhaps not so much for his own sake, as for the people's, that the endeavours of Titus, strengthened with apostolic advice and authority, might be more significant and effectual among them. He was to see all the cities furnished with good pastors; to reject and keep out the unmeet and unworthy; to teach sound doctrine, and instruct all sorts in their duties; to set forth the free grace of God in man's salvation by Christ; and withal to show the necessity of maintaining good works by those who have believed in God, and hope for eternal life from him.

TITUS, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The preface or introduction to the epistle, shewing from and to whom it was written, with the apostle's salutation and prayer for Titus, wishing all blessings to him, v. 1—4. 2. Entrance into the matter, by shewing that the end of Titus's being left at Crete, v. 5—III. And how the same should be pursued in reference both to good and bad ministers, from v. 6, to the end.

1. PAUL, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness; 2. In hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began; 3. But hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, which is communicated unto me according to the commandment of God our Saviour; 4. To Ti-ius mine own son after the common faith: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour.

Here is the preface to the epistle: shewing,

1. The writer. Paul, a Gentile name taken by the apostle of the Gentiles, Acts 15. 9, 46, 47. Ministers will accommodate even small words, so that they may gain the ear of the hearers. When the Jews rejected the gospel, and the Gentiles received it, we read no more of this apostle by his Jewish name Saul, but by his Roman one, Paul.

A servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ. Here he is described by his relation and office; a servant of God, not in the general sense only, as a minister of God and his relations, but in a special sense, as ministering God in the gospel of his Son. Rom. 1. 9.

This is a high honour; it is the glory of angels that they are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be the heirs of salvation, Heb. 1. 14.

Paul is described more especially as a chief minister, an apostle of Jesus Christ; one who had seen the Lord, and was immediately called and commissioned by him, and had his doctrine from him. Observe, True ministers of the church of God are his disciples; (Much divinity and devotion are comprehended in the inscriptions of the epistles.) The apostles of Jesus Christ, who were employed to spread and propagate his religion, were therein also the servants of God; they did not set up any thing inconsistent with the truths and duties of natural religion.

Christianity, which they preached, was in order to clear and enforce these natural principles, as well as to advance them, and to supply what was fit and necessary in man's degenerate and revolted state: therefore the apostles of Jesus Christ were the servants of God, according to the faith of God's elect. Their doctrine agreed with the faith of all the elect from the beginning of the world, and was for propagating and promoting of the same. Observe, There are elect of God, (1 Pet. 1. 2.) and in these the Holy Spirit works precious divine faith, proper to those who are chosen to eternal life; (2 Thess. 2. 13. 14.)

God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth: whereby he called you by our gospel. Faith is the first principle of sanctification. And the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness. The gospel is truth; the great, sure, and saving truth, (Col. 1. 5.) the word of the truth of the gospel, but not on feasible reason, or probable opinions, but on the infallible word, the truth itself, which is after godliness, of a godly nature and tendency, pure, and purifying the heart of the believer. By this mark judge of doctrines and of spirits, whether they be of God or not; what is pure, and prejudicial to true piety and practical religion, cannot be of divine original; all gospel-truth is after godliness, teaching and nourishing reverence to God, and docility to him; truth not only to be known, but acknowledged; it must be held forth in word and practice, Phil. 2. 15. 16. With the heart man believes to righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation, Rom. 10. 10. Such as retain the truth in unrighteousness, neither know nor believe as they ought.

To bring to this knowledge and faith, and to the acknowledging and profession of the truth which is after godliness, is the great end of the gospel-ministry, even of the highest degree and order in it; their teachings should have this chief aim, to beget faith and confirm in it. In (or for) hope of eternal life,

v. 2. This is the further intent of the gospel, to beget hope as well as faith; to take off the mind and heart from the world, and to raise them to heaven and the things above. The faith and godliness of Christians have eternal life, and give hope and well-grounded expectation of it; for God, they cannot lie, hath promised it. It is the honour of God that he cannot lie or deceive; and this is the comfort of believers, whose treasure is laid up in his faithful promises.

But, How is he said to promise before the world began? Answer, By promise some understand his decree, he purposed it in his eternal counsels, which he has as it were, in the hands of God, and mercy, or rather, he prefigured it in courage; or rather, he said, so say I say, that is before ancient times, or many ages ago, referring to the promise distinctly delivered, Gen. 3. 15. Here is the stability and antiquity of the promise of eternal life to the saints; God, who cannot lie, hath promised before the world began, many ages since. How excellent then is the gospel, which was the matter of divine promise, so early to be esteemed by us, and what thanks due for our privilege beyond those before us! Blessed are your eyes, for they see, &c. No wonder if the contempt of it be punished severely, since he has not only promised it of old; but (v. 3.) hath in due time manifested his word through preaching, that is, made that promise so distinctly delivered of old, in due time, (the proper season before appointed,) more plain by preaching; that phrase some understand of the renewing of the law; this has been thus honoured. Faith comes by hearing and by the word of God, by the word preached. Which is committed unto me. The ministry is a trust; none taketh this honour, but he who is therunto appointed; and whose is appointed and called, must preach the word; (1 Cor. 9. 16.) Whence is committed unto me if I preach not the gospel. Unpreaching ministers are none of the apostles' successors. According to the commandment of God our Saviour; preaching is a work appointed by God as a Saviour. See 1 Pet. here of Christ's deity, for by him was the gospel committed to Paul when he was converted, (Acts 9. 15. 17. and ch. 22. 10. 14. 15.) and again when Christ appeared to him, v. 17-21. He therefore is this Saviour, not but that the whole Trinity concur therein; the Father saves by the Son, through the Spirit, and all concur in sending ministers. Let us observe the great use of men's calling and converting in the name of God's; he furnishes, inclines, authorises, and gives opportunity for the work.

II. Here is the person written to, described,

1. By his name, Titus, a Gentile Greek, yet called both to the faith and ministry. Observe, The grace of God is free and powerful. What worthiness or preparation was there in one of heathen sons and education?

2. He is described by his spiritual relation unto the apostle; Mine own (or my genuine) son, not by my natural generation, but by supernatural regeneration. I have begotten you through the gospel, said he to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 4. 15. Ministers are spiritual fathers to those whom they are the means of converting, and will tenderly affect and care for them, and must be answerably regarded by them. Mine own son after the common faith; that faith which is common to all the regenerate, and which then hath in truth, and expresseth to the life. This might be said, to distinguish Titus from hypocrites and false teachers, and to recommend him to the regard of the Cretians, as being among them a lively image of the apostle himself, in faith, and life, and heavenly doctrine. To this Titus, deservedly so clear to the apostle.

III. The salutation and prayer, wishing all blessings to him; Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour. Here are,

1. The blessings wished; Grace, mercy, and peace. Grace, the free favour of God, and acceptance with him. Mercy, the fruits of that favour, in pardon of sins, and freedom from all miseries by it, both here and hereafter. And peace, the positive effect, and fruit, of mercy. Peace with God through Christ, who is our Peace, and with the creatures and ourselves; outward and inward peace, comprehending all good whatsoever, that God bestows on his creatures. Observe, Grace is the fountain of all blessings. Mercy, and peace, and all good, spring out of this. Get into God’s favour, and all must be well; for,

2. These are the persons from whom blessings are said to be given. From God the Father, the Fountain of all good. Every blessing and comfort comes to us from God as a Father; he is the Father of all our creation, but of the good by adoption and regeneration, And the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour, as the Way and means of procurement and conveyance. All is from the Father by the Son, who is Lord by nature, Heir of all things, and our Lord, Redeemer, and Head, ordering and ruling his members. All are put under him; we hold of him, as in capite, and owe submission and obedience to him who is also Jesus and Christ, the anointed Saviour, especially with regard to those who believe in him, delivering us from sin and hell, and bringing us to heaven and happiness.

Thus far is the preface to the epistle; then follows, The entrance into the matter, by signifying the end of Titus’s being left in Crete.

5. For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee:

Here is the end expressed,

I. More generally; For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting. This was the business of evangelists, (in which office Titus was,) to water where the apostles had planted; (1 Cor. 3. 6.) furthering and finishing what they had begun; so much is depending on imports, to order after another. Titus was to go on in setting what the apostle himself had not time for, in his short stay there. 1. Observe the apostle’s great diligence in the gospel; when he had set things on foot in one place, he hastened away to another. He was debtor to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, and laboured to spread the gospel as far as he could among them all. And, 2. Observe, too, his faithfulness and prudence. He neglected not the places that he went from; but left some to cultivate the young plantation, and carry on what was begun. 3. Observe his humility; he disdained not to be helped in his work, and that by such as were not of so high a rank in the ministry, nor of so great gifts and furniture, as himself; so that the gospel might be furthered and the church edified, he willingly used the hands of others in it; a fit example for exciting zeal and industry, and engaging to faithfulness and care of the flock, and, present or absent, living and dying, for ministers, as much as in them lies, to provide for the spiritual edification and comfort of their people. We may here also, 4. Observe, that Titus, though inferior to an apostle, yet was above the ordinary pastor or bishop, who were to tend particular churches as their peculiar stated charge; but Titus was in a higher sphere, to ordain such ordinary pastors where wanting, and sette things in their first state and form, and then to pass to other places for like service as there might be need. Titus was not only a minister of the catholic church, (as all others also are,) but a catholic minister. Others had power habitual, and in actu primo, to minister any where, upon call and opportunity; but evangelists, such as Titus was, had power in actu secundo et exercito, and could exercise their ministry wherever they came, and claim maintenance of the churches; they were every where actual in their diocese or province, and had right to direct and preside among the ordinary pastors and ministers of the church. Thus an apostle could act as an apostle, an evangelist could act as an evangelist; For they worked the work of the Lord, as they did, (1 Cor. 16. 10.) in a like unfixed and itinerant manner.

Here at Crete Titus was but occasionally, and for a short time; Paul willed him to despatch the business he was left for, and come to him at Nicopolis, where he purposed to winter; after this he was sent to Corinth, was with the apostle at Rome, and was with them in the discharge of his ministry, in that last week of his life, in the writing of this Epistle, and in the writing of Ephesus. For men are not to find episcopacy in him does appear; he left Crete, and we find not in scripture that he returned thither any more.

But, What power had either Paul or Titus here? Was not what they did, an encreagement on the rights of rulers? Answer, In no sort, they came not to meddle with the civil rights of any; (Luke 12. 14.) and what have you? Their work was spiritual, to be carried on by conviction and persuasion, no way interfering with, or prejudicing, or weakening, the power of magistrates, but using and strengthening it rather; the things wanting were not such as civil magistrates are the fountains or authors of, but divine and spiritual ordinances, and appointments for spiritual ends, derived from Christ the King and Head of the church; for setting these was Titus’s work, and observe, No easy thing is it to raise churches, and bring them to perfection. Paul had himself been here labouring, and yet were there things wanting; materials are out of square, need much hewing and fitting, to bring them into right form, and, when they are set therein, to hold and keep them so. The best are apt to decay and to go out of order. Ministers are to help against this, to get what is and observe, and what is wanting supplied. This in general was Titus’s work in Crete; and, In special; To ordain elders in every city, that is, ministers, who were mostly out of the elder, and most understanding and experienced Christians; or if younger in years, yet such as were grave and solid in their deportment and manners. These were to be set where there was any fit number of Christian and devout persons, (as there was in Crete,) without the necessity of elders which the ordinary case; though villages too might have them where there were Christians enough for it. These presbyters or elders were to have the ordinary and stated care and charge of the churches; to feed and govern them, and perform all pastoral work and duty in and toward them. The word was sometimes more largely for any who bear ecclesiastical function in the church, and so the apostles were presbyters or elders; ( Acts 20. 17.) but in the Primitive Church, ministers, generally fixed pastors, who laboured in the word and doctrine, and were over the churches in the Lord; such as are described here throughout the chapter. This word presbyter some use in the same sense as sacerdos, and translate it priest; a term not given to gospel-ministers, unless in a figurative or allusive way, as all God’s people are said to be made kings and priests (Rom. 13. 1.) to offer spiritual sacrifices of prayers, praises, and alms. But properly we have no priests under the gospel, except Christ alone, the High Priest of our profession, (Heb. 3. 1.) who offered up himself a sacrifice to God for us, and ever lives, in virtue thereof, to make intercession in our behalf. Presbyters here therefore are not proper priests, to offer sacrifices, either typical or real; but only gospel-ministers, to dispense Christ’s ordinances, and to feed the church;
1. Their qualifications respecting their life and manners, are,

1. More general; If any be blameless; not absolutely without fault, so none are, for there is none living and sin not; nor altogether unblamed, that is rare and hard; Christ himself and his apostles were blamed, though not worthy of it; in Christ there was certainly nothing blameable; and his apostles were not such as their enemies charged them to be. But the meaning is, He must be one who lies not under an ill character; but rather must have a good report, even from those that are without; not grossly or scandalously guilty, so as would bring reproach upon the holy function; he must not be such a one.

2. More particularly:

(1.) There is his relative character; in his own person he must be of congregual chastity; the husband of one wife. The church of Rome says the husband of no wife, but from the beginning it was not so; marriage is an ordinance from which no profession of the calling is a bar; (1 Cor. 9. 5.) Have I, says St. Paul, not forsook to dwell about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles? Forbidding to marry is one of the erroneous doctrines of the antichristian church, 1 Tim. 4. 3. Not that ministers must be married, that is not meant; but the husband of one wife, may be either not having divorced his wife and married another, (as was too common among them of the circumscription, even for slight causes,) or the husband of one wife, that is, at one and the same time, no bigamist; not that he might not their divorce from one wife to another, (as one wife successively; but, being married, he [the apostle] has another wife at once, not two or more, according to the too common sinful practice of those times, by a perverse imitation of the patriarchs, from which evil custom our Lord taught a reformation. Polygamy is scandalous in any, as also having a harlot or concubine with his lawful wife; such sin, or any wanton libidinous carriage, must be very remote from such as would enter into so sacred a function. And as to his children, having faithful children, obedient and good, brought up in the true Christian faith, and living according to it, at least as the endeavours of the parents can avail. It is for the honour of ministers, that their children be faithful and pious, and such as become their religion. Not accused of riot, or unruly; not justly so accused, as having given ground and occasion for it; for otherwise the most innocent may be falsely so charged; they must look to it therefore that there be no colour for such censure. Children so faithful and obedient and temperate, will be a good sign of faithfulness and diligence in the parent, who has so educated and instructed them; and from his faithfulness in the less, there may be encouragement to commit to him the greater, the rule and government of the church of God.

The ground of this qualification is shewn from the nature of his office; (v. 7.) For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God. Those before termed presbyters, or elders, are in this verse styled bishops, and such they were, having no ordinary fixed and standing officers above them. Titus's business here, it is plain, was but occasional, and his stay short, as was before noted. Having ordained elders, and settled them in their doctrine, he went and left all (for aught that appears in scripture) in the hands of those elders whom the apostle here calls bishops and stewards of God. We read not in the sacred writings of any successor he had in Crete;
but to those elders or bishops was committed the full charge of feeding, ruling, and watching over, their flock; they wanted not any powers necessary for carrying on religion and the ministry of it among then, and deriving it down to succeeding ages. Now, being such bishops and overseers of the flock, who were to be examples to them, and God's stewards to take care of the affairs of his house, to provide for and dispense to them things needful, here is great reason that their character should be clear and good, that they should be blameless. How could it be, but that religion must suffer, their work be hindered, and souls prejudiced and endangered, whom they were set to save? These are the qualifications, relative, with the ground of them.

(2.) The more absolute ones are expressed:

[1.] Negatively, shewing what an elder or bishop must not be; not self-willed. The prohibition is of large extent, excluding self-opinion, or overweening conceit of parts and abilities, and abounding in one's own sense; self-love, and self-seeking, making self the centre of all; also self-confidence and trust, and self-pleasing, little regarding or setting by others; not proud, stubborn, froward, inflexible, set on one's own will and way; or churlish, as Nahum: such is the sense expositors have affixed to the term. A great honour it is to a minister not to be thus affected, to be ready to ask and to take advice, to be ready to bow the knee to the wisdom of the aged and of others, and will of others, becoming all things to all men, that they may gain some. Not soon angry, not given to anger, not one of a hasty angry temper, soon and easily provoked and inflamed. How unfit are they to govern a church, who cannot govern themselves, or their own turbulent and unruly passions! The minister must be meek and gentle, and patient towards all men. Not given to wine; there is no greater reproach with entertaining strangers. (As one who loves it, and gives himself undue liberty this way, who continues at the wine or strong drink till it inflames him). Seasonable and moderate use of this, as of the other good creatures of God, is not unlawful; Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities, said Paul to Timothy, 1 Tim. 5. 23. But excess therein is shameful in all, especially in a minister. Wine takes away the heart, turns the mind to wantonness; he that exudes of the wine, is and will be drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit. Here is no exceeding, but in the former too easily there may take: he need thereof, of going too near the brink. No striker, in any quarrelsome or contentious manner, not injuriously or out of revenge, with cruelty or unnecessary roughness. Not given to filthy lucre; not greedy of it, (Acts 20. 35.) whereby is not meant receiving a just return for their labours, in order to their necessary support and comfort; but not making gain their first or chief end; entering into the ministry or managing of it with base worldly views. Nothing is more unbecoming a minister, who is to direct his own and others' eyes to another world, than to be too intent upon this. It is called filthy lucre, from its defiling the soul that inordinately affects or greedily looks after it, as if it were any otherwise desirable than for the good and lawful uses of it. Thus of the negative part of the bishop's character. But, [2.] Positively he must be, (v. 8.) A lover of hospitality, as an evidence that he is not given to filthy lucre, but is willing to use what he has to the best purposes, not laying up for himself, so as to hinder charitable layoutting for the good of others; receiving (as the word imports,) a great and necessary office of love, especially in those times of affliction and distress, when Christians were made to fly and wander for safety from persecution and enemies, or in travelling to and fro where there were not such public houses for reception as in our days; nor, it may be, have so many poor saints sufficiency of their own for such an end, then to receive and entertain them was good and pleasing to God. And such a spirit and practice, according to ability and occasion, is very becoming such as should be examples of good works. A lover of good men, or of good things; ministers should be exemplary in both; this will evidence their open piety, and likeness to God and their Master Jesus Christ. Do good to all, but especially to them of the household of faith, those who are the excellent of the earth, in whom should be all our delight. Sober, or prudent, as the word signifies; a needful grace in a minister both for his ministerial and personal carriage and management. He should be a wise steward, and one who is not rash, or foolish, or heady; but who can govern well his passions and affections. Just, in things belonging to civil life, and moral righteousness and equity in dealings, giving to all their due. Holy, in what concerns religion; one who reverences and worships God, and is of a spiritual and heavenly conversation. Temperate; it comes from a word that signifies strength, and denotes one who has power over his appetite and affections, or, in things lawful, can, for good ends, restrain and hold them in. Nothing is more becoming a minister than such things as these; sobriety, temperance, justice, and righteousness of life, in respect of himself, just and righteous towards all men, and holy toward God. And thus of the qualifications respecting the minister's life and manners; relative and absolute, negative and positive; what he must not, and what he must, be and do. Now, II. As to doctrine.

1. Here is his duty; holding fast the faithful word, as he has been taught; keeping close to the doctrine of Christ; his testimony, and his preaching, according to the instructions he has received; holding it fast in his own belief and profession, and in teaching others. (1.) Observe, The word of God, revealed in the scripture, is a true and infallible word; the word of him that is the Amen, the true and faithful Witness, and whose Spirit guided the penmen of it. Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (2.) Observe, Ministers must hold fast, and hold forth, the faithful word in teaching and life. I have kept the faith, was Paul's comfort, (2 Tim. 4. 7.) and not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God; there was his faithfulness, Acts 20. 27.

2. Here is the end; that he be able by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainersays, to persuade and draw others to the true faith, and convince the contrary-minded. How should he do this, if he himself were uncertain or unstable, Neither fast that faithful word and sound doctrine, which should be the matter of this teaching, and the means and ground of convincing those that oppose the truth? We see here summarily the great work of the ministry—to exhort those who are willing to know and do their duty; and so convince them that contradicte; both which are to be done by sound doctrine, in a rational instructive way, by scripture-arguments and testimonies, which are the infaillible words of truth, what all may and should rest and be satisfied in and determined by. And thus of the qualifications of the elders whom Titus was to ordain.

The apostle's directory shews whom he should reject or avoid—men of another character, the mention of whom is brought in as a reason of the care he had recommended about their qualifications. He directs his ministers, why they should be such, and only such, as he had described. The reasons he takes both from bad teachers and hearers among them, from v. 10, to the end.
I. Here is the witness; (v. 12.) One of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said; one of the Cretians, and a Heathen, to Titus, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies, to a proverb, they were infamous for falsehood and lying. 13. This witness is true. Wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith; 14. Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth.

II. Here is the matter of his testimony, ἐν τῇ ἱδρυσιν, καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀκροκολουθίᾳ εἰς τὸν καιρόν. The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies; to a proverb, they were infamous for falsehood and lying. γινομένοις, to play the Cretian, or to lie, is the same; and they were compared to evil beasts, for their sly hurtfulness and savage nature; and called slow bellies, for their laziness and sensuality, more inclined to eat than to work and live by some honest employment. 12. But content that they should be, for the apostles said of Christ, false teachers, falsehood and lying, invidious craft and cunning, beastly and sensual practices, and idleness and sloth, are sins condemned by the light of nature; for these were the Cretians taxed by their own poets. And, 13. Here is the verification of this by the apostle himself; (v. 13.) This witness is true. The apostle now explains and proves that character. The temper of some nations is more requisite to teach than others. The Cretians were too generally such as here described, slothful and ill-natured, false and perfidious, as the apostle himself vouches. And, 14. IV. He instructs Titus how to deal with them, Wherefore rebuke them sharply. When Paul wrote to Timothy, he bade him instruct with meekness; but now with Titus, he bids him rebuke them sharply. The reason of the difference may be taken either from the different temper of Timothy and Titus; the former might have more keenness in his disposition, and apt to be warm in reproving, whom therefore he bids to rebuke with meekness; and the latter (Titus) might be one of more mildness, therefore he quickens him, and bids him rebuke sharply. Or rather it was from the difference of the case and place, the apostle had a more polite people to deal with, and therefore he must rebuke them with meekness; and Titus was to do with those who were more rough and uncultivated, and therefore he must rebuke them sharply; their corruptions were many and gross, and committed without shame or molestly, and therefore should be dealt with accordingly. There must in reproving be a distinguishing between sins and sins; some are more grievous and heavy, than others; and, or in the manner of their commission, with open and boldness, to the greater dishonour of God, and danger and hurt to men: and between sinners and sinners; some are of a more tender and tractable temper, apter to be wrought on by gentleness, and to be sunk and discouraged by too much roughness and severity; others more hard and stubborn, and need more sharp and urgent management to beget remorse and shame. Wisdom therefore is requisite to deal and manage reproofs aright, as may be most likely to do good; (Judg. 22, 23.) Of some have compassion, making a difference; and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire. The Cretians' sins and corruptions were many, great, and habitual; therefore they must be rebuked sharply. But that such directness might not be misconstrued, V. Here is the extent of it not, they may be sound in the faith; (v. 14.) not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth; that they may be, and shew themselves, truly and effectually changed from such evil temper and manners as those Cretians in their natural state lived in, and might not adhere to or regard (as some who were converted might be too ready to do) the Jewish traditions, and superstitions of the Pharisees, which would be apt to make them despise the gospel, and the sound and wholesome truths of it. 1. Observe, The sharpest reproofs must aim at the good of the reproved; they must not be of malice or hatred or ill-will, but of love; not to gratify pride, passion, or any evil affection in the reprover, but to reclaim and reform the erroneous and the guilty. 2. Observe, Soundness in the faith is most desirable and necessary. This is the soul’s health and vigour, pleasing to God, comfortable to the Christian, and what makes ready to be cheerful and constant in duty. 3. Observe, A special means to soundness in the faith, is, to turn away the ear from fables and the fancies of men; (1 Tim. 1. 4.) Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, that minister questions rather than edifying, which is in faith. So ch. 4. 7. Refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather to godliness. Fancies and devices of men in the worship of God are contrary to truth and piety. Jewish ceremonies and rites, that were at first divine appointments, the substance being come, and their season and use over, are now but unwarranted commands of men, which not only stand not with, but turn from, the truth, the pure gospel-truth and spiritual worship, set up by Christ, instead of that bodily service under the law.

4. Observe, A fearful judgment it is, to be turned away from the truth; to leave Christ for Moses, the spiritual worship of the gospel for the carnal ordinances of the law, or the true divine institutions and precepts for human inventions and appointments. Who hath bewitched you, (said Paul to the Galatians, ch. 3. 1.) that the truth of God is unto you, but, when ye were without law, ye are made perfect by the flesh? Thus having shown the end of sharply reproving the corrupt and vicious Cretans, that they might be sound in the faith, and not heed Jewish fables and commands of men.

VI. He gives the reasons of this, from the liberty we have by the gospel from legal observances, and the evil and mischief of a Jewish spirit under the Christian dispensation, in the two last verses:

15. Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled. 16. They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work rebuke.

To good Christians that are sound in the faith and thereby purified, all things are pure; meats and drinks, and such things as were forbidden under the law, which observances some still maintain, in these there is now no such distinction, all are pure, lawful and free in their use; but to them that are defiled and unbelieving, nothing is pure; things lawful and good they abuse and turn to sin; they shut poison out of that from which others draw sweetness; because their mind and conscience, those leading faculties, are defiled, a taint is derived to all they do. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 15. 8. And ch. 21. 4. The plagueing of the wicked is sin, not in itself, but as done by him; the carnality of the mind and heart mars all the labour of the hand.

2. But are not these judicators, (as ye call them,) men who profess religion, and speak well of God and Christ, and righteousness of life, and should they be so severely taxed? Answer, (v. 16.) They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and to every good work rebuke. There are many who in word and tongue profess to know God, and yet in their lives and conversations deny and reject him, their practice is a contradiction to their profession. They come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my profile, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them; with their mouths they shew much love, but their heart goth after their covetousness, Ezek. 33. 31. Being abominable, and disobedient, and to every good work rebuke. The apostle, instructing Titus to rebuke sharply, does himself rebuke sharply; he gives them very hard words; yet doubtless no harder than their case warranted, and their need required. Being abominable—ἀβαρεῖς, deserving that God and good men should turn away their eyes from them as nauseous and offensive. And disobedient—ἀποφαίνεται, unpersuadable and unbelieving. They might do divers things, but it was not the obedience of faith, not what was commanded or short of the command. To every good work rebuke, without skill or judgment to do anything aright. See the miserable condition of hypocrites, such as have a form of godliness, but without the power; yet let us be so ready to fix this charge on others, as careful that it agree not to ourselves, that there be not in us an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God; but that we be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ, being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God, Phil. 1. 10, 11.

CHAP. II.

The apostle here directs Titus about the faithful discharge of his own office, generally, (v. 1.) and particularly, as to several sorts of persons; (v. 2. 10.) and gives the grounds of these directions for following, (v. 11. 14.) with a summarily direction in the close, v. 15.

1. But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine:

Here is the third thing in the matter of the epistle. In the chapter foregoing, the apostle had directed Titus about matters of government, and to set in order the things that were wanting in the church. Now here he exhorts him,

1. Generally, to a faithful discharge of his own office. His ordering others to preach, would not excuse himself from preaching, nor might he take care of ministers and elders only, but he must instruct private Christians also in their duty. The adverbial particle (but) here, points back to the corrupt teachers, who vented fables, things vain and unprofitable; in opposition to them, says he, "But speak thou the things that become sound doctrine, what is agreeable to the word, which is pure and uncorrupt, healthful and nourishing to eternal life." (1.) Observe, The true doctrines of the gospel are sound doctrines, formally and effectively; they are in themselves good and holy, and make the believers so; they make fit, and vigorous in, the service of God. (2.) Observe, Ministers must be careful to teach only such truths. If the common talk of Christians must not encroach on the use of edifying, such as may minister grace to the hearers, (1. 6.) much more must ministers preaching be such. Thus the apostle exhorts Titus generally, and then,

2. Specially and particularly, he instructs him to apply this sound doctrine to several sorts of persons, from v. 2—10. Ministers must not stay in generals, but must deal with every one according to the case belonging to his age or place or condition of life; they must be particular as well as practical in their preaching; they must teach men their duty, and must teach all and each his duty. Here is an excellent Christian directory, accommodated to the old and to the young; to men and women; to the preacher himself and unto servants.

2. That the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience:

By aged men some understand elders by office, it

cluding deacons, &c. But it is rather to be taken of the aged in point of years. Old disciples of Christ must conduct themselves in every thing agreeably to the Christian doctrine. That the aged men be sober; not thinking that the decays of nature, which they feel in old age, will justify them in any inordinacy or intemperance, whereby they conceive to repair their strength; but on the contrary, must keep from all those things, both for health and for fitness, for counsel and example to the younger. Grave levity is unbecoming in any, but especially in the aged; they should be composed and stayed, grave in habit, speech, and behaviour; gaudiness in dress, levity and vanity in the behaviour, how unbecoming in their years! Temperate: moderate and prudent, one who governs well his passions and affections, so as not to be hurried away by them to any thing that is evil or indecent. Sound in the faith, sincere and steadfast, constantly adhering to the truth of the gospel, not fond of novelities, or ready to run into corrupt opinions or parties, or to be taken with Jewish fables or traditions, or the dotages of their Rabbins. Those who are full of years should be full of grace and goodness, the inner man renewing more and more as the outer decays. In charity, or love of God and men, used as a kind of faith, what is thus done must be seen in love, love to God and men, and soundness therein; it must be sincere love, without dissimulation; love of God for himself, and of men for God's sake; the duties of the second table must be done in virtue of those of the first; love to men as men, and to the saints as the excellency of the earth, in whom must be special delight; and love at all times, in adversity as well as prosperity. Thus must it be soundness in charity or love, and in patience. Aged persons are apt to be peevish, fretful, and passionate; and therefore need to be on their guard against such infirmities and temptations. Faith, love, and patience, are three main Christian graces, and soundness in these is much of gospel-perfection. There is enduring and waiting patience, both must be looked after; to bear evils becomingly, and contentedly to want the good till we are fit for it and it for us, being followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Thus as to the aged men.

3. The aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh holiness, not false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things;

These also must be instructed and warned. Some by these aged women understand the deaconesses, who were mostly employed in looking after the poor and tending the sick; but it is rather to be taken (as we render it) of all aged women professing religion, they must be in behaviour as becometh holiness; both men and women must accommodate their behaviour to their years and capacities, the virtues both of charity, sobriety, gravity, temperance, soundness in the faith, charity, and patience, recommended to aged men, are not proper to them only, but applicable to both sexes, and to be looked to by aged women as well as men; women are to hear and learn their duty from the word, as well as the men; there is not one way of salvation for one sex or sort, and another for another; and which therefore they must improve in instructing the young women, especially, that is, the aged wives, for he speaks of their duty to their husbands and children. These young women the more aged must teach.

4. That they may teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children. 5. To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed.

For teaching such things aged women have often better access than the men, even than ministers and elders; and which therefore they must improve in instructing the young women, especially, that is, the aged wives; for he speaks of their duty to their husbands and children. These young women the more aged must teach.

1. To bear a good personal character; To be sober and discreet, contrary to the vanity and rashness which younger years are subject to: discreet in their judgments, and sober in their affections and behaviour. Discreet and chaste stand well together; must be instructed in their duties of love and subjection to them. And to love their children, not with a natural affection only, but a spiritual; a love springing from a holy sanctified heart, and regulated by the word; not a fond foolish love, indulging them in evil, neglecting due reproof and correction where necessary; but it must be a regular, wise, Christlike shewing itself in their pious education, forming their life and manners aright, taking care of their souls as well as of their bodies, of their spiritual welfare as well as of their temporal; of the former chiefly and in the first place. The reason is added—that the word of God may not be blasphemed. Failures in such relative duties would be greatly to the reproach of marriage, and not only to the temple, but to this their new religion? Would the infidels be ready to say. The word of God and gospel of Christ are pure, excellent, and glorious, in themselves; and their excellency should be expressed and shewn in the lives and conduct of their professors, especially in relative duties; failures here bring disgrace.
Rom. 2. 24. The name of God is blasphemed among them through you. "Judge what a God he is," they would say; "by these luxurants; and what his word, and doctrine, and relingence, are by these his followers." Thus would Christ be avouched in the house of his friends. Thus of the duties of the younger women.
Here is the duty of young men.
6. Young men likewise exhort to be sober-minded:
They are apt to be eager and hot, thoughtless and precipitate; therefore must be earnestly called upon and exhorted, to consider, not rash; advisable and submissive, not wilful and headstrong; humble and mild, not haughty and proud; for there are more young people ruined by pride than by any other sin. The young should be grave and solid in their department and manners, joining the seriousness of age with the liveliness and vigour of youth. This will make even those younger years to pass to good purpose, and yield matter of comforts and reflection, when the days come, it will be preventive of much sin and sorrow, and lay the ground for doing and enjoying much good. Such shall not mowm at the last, but have peace and comfort in death, and after it a glorious crown of life. Now with these instructions to Titus, respecting what he should teach others—the aged men and women, and the younger of both sexes, (Titus himself probably at least:) and to a young man also:) the apostle inserts some directions to himself. He could not expect so successfully to teach others, if he did not conduct himself well both in his conversation and preaching.
7. In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, & sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he who is of the contrary part, may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

Here is direction for his conversation; In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works.
Without this he would pull down with one hand what he built with the other. Observe, Preachers of good works must be patterns of them also; good discipline and good life must go together. What that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? A defect here is a great blemish and a great hindrance.
In all things; some read above all things, or above all men. Instructing and being instructed in the partictulars of their duty, is necessary, and, above all things, example, especially that of the teacher him-
more likely to go together. "Let them see a lively image of those virtues and graces in thy life, which must be in their's. Example may both teach and impress the things taught; when they see the excellency of sobriety and gravity, sobriety and all good life in thee, they may be more easily won and brought thereto themselves; they may become pious and holy, sober and righteous, as thou art. Ministers must be examples to the flock, and the people followers of them, as they are of Christ. And here is direction, 2. For his teaching and doctrine, as well as for his life; In doctrine, showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned. The doctrine must be such that the design of the preaching is purely to advance the honour of God, the interest of Christ and his kingdom, and the welfare and happiness of souls; that this office was not entered into, or used, with secular views, not from ambition or covetousness, but a pure aim at the spiritual ends of its institution. In their preaching therefore, the display of wit or parts, or of human learning or oratory, is not to be affected; but sound speech must be used, which cannot be condemned; scripture-language, as far as well may be, in expressing scripture truths. This is sound speech, that cannot be condemned. We have more than once thee duties of a minister set together; (1 Tim. 4. 16.) Take heed to thyself, and to thy doctrine; and 12. of the same chapter, "Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. Show thyself an example to the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. In the preaching, that it be the pure word of God, or what is agreeable to it, and founded on it; thus be an example in word; and in conversation; the life corresponding with the doctrine. In doing this, thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." In 2 Tim. 3. 10. Thou hast fully known my doctrine and manner of life, (says the same apostle,) how agreeable it was to the character of Christ. And so must it be with others; their teaching must be agreeable to the word, and their life with the teaching. This is the true and good minister; (1 Thess. 2. 9. 10.) Labouring night and day, we preached to you the gospel of God; and ye are our witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly, and unblamably, we behaved ourselves among you. This must be looked to, as the qualifications of all ministers. 3. The reason both for the strictness of the minister's life, and the gravity and soundness of his preaching; That he who is of the contrary part, may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you. Adversaries would be seeking occasion to reflect, and would do so, could they find any thing amiss in doctrine or life; but if both were right and good, such ministers might set calumny itself at defiance; they would have no evil thing to say justly, and so must be ashamed of their opposition. Observe, Faithful ministers will have enemies watching for their halting; such as will endeavour to find or pick holes in their teaching or behaviour; the more need therefore for them to look to themselves, that no just occasion be found against them. Opposition and calumny perhaps may not be escaped, men of corrupt minds will resist the truth, and often reproach the preacher and his preachers of their iniquities; but let them see, that with well-doing they put to silence the ignorance of foolish men; that when they speak evil of them as evil-doers, they may be ashamed, who falsely accuse their good conversation in Christ. This is the direction to Titus himself, and so of the duties of free persons, male and female, old and young. Then follow the directions respecting servants. 9. Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again; 10. Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Servants must not think that their mean and low state puts them beneath God's notice, or the obligations of his laws; that, because they are servants of men, they are thereby discharged from serving of God. No; servants must know and do their duty to their earthly masters, but with an eye to the heavenly one; and Titus must not only instruct and warn earthly masters of their duties, but servants also of theirs, both in his public preaching and private admonitions. Servants must attend the ordinances of God for the instruction of both, as well as the masters themselves. In this direction to Titus there are the duties themselves, to which he must exhort servants, and a weighty consideration, wherewith he was to enforce them. 1. The duties themselves are these: 1. To be obedient to their own masters. This is the prime duty, that by which they are characterized. Rom. 6. 16. His servants ye are to whom ye obey. There must be inward subjection, and dutiful respect and reverence in the mind and thoughts. "If I be a master, where is my fear, the dutiful affection you shew to me, together with the suitable outward significations and expressions of it, in doing what I command you." This must be in servants; their will must be subject to their master's will, and their time and labour at their master's disposal and command. 2. Servants be subject to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the forward. The duty results from the will of God, and the relation in which, by his providence, he has put such; not from the quality of the person. If he be a Master, the duties of a servant are to be paid to him as such. Servants therefore are to be exorted to be obedient to their own masters. And 2. To please them well in all things, in all lawful things, and such as belong to them to command; or at least as are not contrary to the will of their great and superior Lord. We are not to understand it either of obeying or pleasing them absolutely, without any limitation; but always with a reserve of God's right, which may in no case be intrenched upon. His command and the earthly master's come in competition, we are instructed to obey God rather than man. Exhortation now only the subjection of servants on grounds in this, that there is an inconsistency, else are they not held to be excused. And not only must the will of God be the measure of the servant's obedience, but the reason of it also, all must be done with a respect to him, in virtue of his authority, and for pleasing him primarily and chiefly; (Col. 3. 22— 24.) Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; with all respect and pleasing; but in singleness of heart, fearing God. And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ. In serving the earthly master according to Christ's will, He is served; and such shall be rewarded by him accordingly. But how are servants to please their masters in all things, and so be obnoxious of God? Unpleasers, in the faultless, are such as eye men alone, or chiefly, in what they do, leaving God out, or subordinating him to man; when the will of man shall carry it, though against God's will, or man's pleasure more is regarded than his; when that can content them, that the earthly master is pleased, though God be displeased; or more care, or more satisfaction, is taken in man's being pleased than in God's; this is sinful man-pleasing, which all must take heed of; (Eph. 6. 5—7.) "Servants, be obedien to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, with singleness of your heart, as unto Christ. Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, who look at nothing but the favour or displeasure of men, or nothing so much as that; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service as to the Lord, and not to men; not to them chiefly, but to the Lord, and who will reward, any good done, whether by bond or free. Observe therefore, Christian liberty stands well with civil service and subjection. Persons may serve men, and yet be the servants of Christ; these are not contrary, but subordinate; so far as serving men is according to Christ's will, and for his sake. Christ came not to destroy or prejudice civil order and differences; Art thou called, being a servant? Care not for it. 1 Cor. 7. 21. Let not that trouble thee, as if it were a condition unworthy of a Christian, or wherein the person so called is less pleasing unto God; for he is that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman, not free from that service, but free in it; free spiritually, though not in a civil sense. Likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant; he is bound to him, though he be not under civil bond, as the servant of a man, to one master, under another, or one in Christ. Servants therefore should not regret or be troubled at their condition, but be faithful and cheerful in the station wherein God hath set them; striving to please their masters in all things. Hard it may be under some churlish Nabals, but it must be endeavoured all that they are able.

(3.) Not answering again; not contradicting them, or disputing with them; not giving them any disrespectful or provoking language. Job compares one of his servants, that he called them, and they gave him no answer; that was faulty another way; Non respondere pro convito est;—Such silence is contempt; but here it is respect, rather to take a check or reproof with humble silence, not making any confident or bold replies. When conscious of a fault, to palliate or stand in justification of it, doubles it. Yet this not answering again excludes not turning away wrath with a soft answer, when season and circumstances admit. Good and wise masters will be ready to hear and do right; but answering unseasonably, or in an unseemly manner, or, where the case admits not excuse, to be pert or confident, shews a want of the humility and meekness, which such relation requires.

(4.) Not forbearing, but shewing all good fidelity. This is another great essential of good servants, to be honest; never converting that to their own use, which is their masters', nor wasting the goods they are intrusted with; that is forbearing. They must be just and true, and do for them as they would or should for themselves. Prov. 28. 24. Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression, the same is the companion of a destroyer; he will be repaid the same; and the light thought of taking beyond what is right, though it be from a parent or master, is likely to harden conscience to go further; it is both wicked in itself, and it tends to more. Be it so that the master is hard and strait, scarcely making sufficient provision for servants; yet they must not be their own carvers, or go about by theft to right themselves; they must be happy serving God for righting and providing for them. I speak most of cases of extremity, for preserving life, the necessaries for which the servant has a right to. Not forbearing, but shewing all good fidelity; he must not only not steal or waste, but must improve his master's goods, and promote his prosperity and thriving, to his utmost. He that increaseth not his master's talent, is accused of unfaithfulness, though he had not embiggled or lost it. Faithfulness in a servant lies in the ready, punctual, and thorough execution of his master's orders; keeping his secrets and counsels, dispatching his affairs, and managing with frugality, and to as much just advantage for his master as he is able; looking well to his trusts, and preventing, as far as he can, all spoil, or loss, or damage.

This is a way to bring a blessing upon himself, as contrary to the spirit of the Saviour, which is given to destroy the works of the devil, (Luke 16. 12.) If we have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own? Thus of the duties themselves, to which servants are to be exhorteth. Then,

2. Here is the consideration with which Titus was to enforce them; That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things; that they may recommend the gospel and Christ's holy religion to the good opinion of them that are without, by their speech, humble, obedient, and faithful conduct in all things.

Even servants, though they may think that such as they, in so low and inferior a condition, can do little to bring repute to Christianity, or adorn the doctrine of Christ, and set forth the excellencies of his truth and ways; yet, if they are careful to do their duty, it will redound to the glory of God and the credit of religion. The unbelieving masters would think the best of their servants, if they thought them Christians, but would think ill of them, if they were not. Likewise, everywhere spoken against, when they found that their servants, who were Christians, were better than their other servants; more obedient and submissive, more just and faithful and diligent in their places. True religion is an honour to the professors of it; and they should see that they do not any dishonour to it, but adorn it rather in all that they are able. Our light must shine among men, so that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father who is in heaven. And thus of the apostle's directions to Titus, about the discharge of his office, in reference to several sorts of persons. Next follow,

3. The grounds or considerations upon which all the directions are urged, taken from the nature and design of the gospel, and the end of Christ's death.

11. For the grace of God, that brings salvation, hath appeared to all men, 12. Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; 13. Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; 14. Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

1. Here are motives from the nature and design of the gospel. Let young and old, men and women, masters and servants, and Titus himself; let all sorts of people, the poor and rich, think upon this, this is the very aim and business of Christianity, to instruct, and help, and form persons, under all distinctions and relations, to a right frame and conduct. For this,

(1.) They are put under the dispensation of the grace of God, so the gospel is called, Eph. 3. 2. It is grace in respect of the spring of it—the free favour and good will of God, not any merit or desert in the creature. This is the very aim and business of Christianity, to instruct, and help, and form persons, under all distinctions and relations, to a right frame and conduct. For this,

(2.) This gospel grace brings salvation; it reveals and offers and ensures it to believers; salvation from sin and wrath, from death and hell; whence it is called the word of life; it brings to faith, and so to life; the life of holiness now, and of happiness hereafter. The law is the ministration of death, but the gospel the ministration of life and peace. This therefore must be received as salvation, its rules minded, it formed in the heart, and the end of it may be contained, the salvation of the soul. And more inexcusable will the neglecters of this grace of God bringing salvation, now be, since,

(3.) It hath appeared, or shone out, more clearly and illustriously than ever before. The old dispensation was comparatively dark and shadowy; this is a clear and shining light; and as it is now more bright, so more diffused and extensive also. For,

I. As it concerns the Jews only, as the glory of God appeared at mount Sinai to that particular people, and out of the view of all others; but gospel-grace is open to all, and all are invited to come and partake of the benefit of it;

Gentiles as well as Jews. The publication of it is free and general; Disciple all nations: Preach the gospel to every creature. The pale is broken down, there is no such enclosure now as formerly: (Rom. 16. 26.) This proves, first, God hath kept secrets since the world began, now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith. The doctrine of grace and salvation by the gospel is for all ranks and conditions of men; slaves and servants, as well as masters; therefore engaging and encouraging all to receive and believe it, and walk suitably to it, adorning it in all things.

(3.) This gospel-revelation is to teach, and not by way of information and instruction only, as a schoolmaster doth his scholars; but by way of precept and command, as a sovereign who gives laws unto his subjects. It directs what to shun, and what to follow; what to avoid, and what to do. The gospel is not for speculation only or chiefly, but for practice and right ordering of life. It teaches,

[1.] To abandon sin; Denying ungodliness, and worldly lusts; to renounce and have no more to do with these, as we have had; Put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt; the whole body of sins distributed here unto ungodliness and worldly lusts. "Put away ungodliness and irreverence, all unbelief, neglect or disesteem of the Divine Being, not loving, or fearing, or trusting in him, or obeying him, as we should, neglecting his ordinances, slighting his worship, profaning his name or day. Thus deny ungodliness, hate and put it away; and worldly lusts; all corrupt and vicious desires and affections that prevail in worldly men, and carry out to worldly things: the lusts of the flesh also, and of the eye, and the pride of life; all sensuality and fitchiness, covetous desires and ambition, seeking and valuing more the praise of men than of God; put away all these." An earthly sensual conversation sitteth not a heavenly, that which is heavenly. The carnal mind is enmity against God. Christ's, have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. They have done it by covenant-engage ment and promise, and have initially and prevailingly done it in act; they are going on in the work, cleansing themselves more and more from all fitchiness of flesh and spirit. Thus the gospel first teaches that which is evil, to abandon sin; and then,

[2.] To make conversion of that which is good: To make conversion of that which is righteous, and godly, in this present world. Religion is not made up of negatives only, there must be doing good as well as eschewing evil; in these conjunctly is sincerity proved, and the gospel adored. We should live soberly, with respect to ourselves, in the due government of our appetites and passions, keeping the limits of moderation and temperance, avoiding all inordinate excesses, righteously, towards all men; rendering to all their due, and injuring none, but rather doing good to others, according to our ability and their need. This seems a part of justice and righteousness, for we are not born for ourselves alone, and therefore may not live only to ourselves. We are members one of another, and should love one another; Rom. 12. 10. "Be of good comfort, ye fellow servants, and hold fast the confession of your faith, and the things which ye have learned, and have been assured of; knowing the hope of your calling, and the rich glory of the majesty of the Son of God, of whom ye are partakers; guarding yourselves in the faith, being armoured with the gospel of God, which is the sword of the Spirit, which is the power of God." 1 Cor. 10. 54.—12. 25. The public, especially, which includes the interests of all, must have the regards of all. Selfishness is a sort of insensitiveness, it robs others of that share in us which is their due. How amiable then will just and righteous conduct be! It secures and promotes all interests, not particular only, but general and public, and so makes for the peace and happiness of the world. Live righteously, and the word of God shall come forth in all its power and light, and shall go forth from the work of the Lord, and shall prosper in his hand. Amen. 6 Cor. 2. 9. 10. Therefore, as of the gospel, so of the word of God, it is to be received and known, so as to be published, and not published in darkness, but in the light, 31.) and in the hearing of all, that it may be heard by all, that the fruits thereof may appear from the heaven to the earth, and the world to the rest of the heavens. 6 Cor. 12. 9. 10. Then shall the sight of the Lord's word be the light of the world. Amen. Amen. Amen. 6 Cor. 12. 9. 10.
pearing of Christ, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels, Luke 9. 26. His own glory which he had before the world was; and his Father's, being the express Image of his person, and as God-man, his delegated Ruler and Judge; and of the holy angels, as his ministers and glorious attendants. His first coming was in meekness, to satisfy justice, and purchase happiness; his second will be in glory, to instate his people in it. Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation, Heb. 9. 28. The great God and our Saviour (or even our Saviour) Jesus Christ; for they are not two subjects, but one only, as appears by the single article, τό Θεός Οίδαί Εγώ και Σωτήρ, not το Θεός τι και Σωτήρ, and he is not understood to be looked upon as an ordinary ruler, but he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; το Θεός ο Πατής. Christ then is the great God, not figuratively, as magistrates and others are sometimes called gods, or as appearing and acting in the name of God, but properly and absolutely the true God, 1 John 3. 20. The mighty God, Isa. 9. 6. Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, Phil. 2. 6. In his second coming, he shall come in glory and power, and bring them to glory with him. First, Observe, There is a common and blessed hope for all true Christians in the other world. If in this life only they had hope in Christ, they were of all men the most miserable, 1 Cor. 15. 19. By hope is meant the thing hoped for, that is, Christ himself, who is called our Hope, (1 Tim. 1. 1.) and blessedness in and through him, even riches of glory, Eph. 1. 18. Hence fully termed here that blessed hope. Secondly, Observe, The design of the gospel is, to stir up all to a good life by this blessed hope; (1 Pet. 1. 13.) Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. To the same purport here, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for the blessed hope; not as mercenaries, but as dutiful and thankful Christians. What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening to the coming of the day of God? 2 Pet. 3. 11, 12. Looking and hastening, expecting and diligently preparing for it. Thirdly, Observe, At, and in, the glorious appearing of Christ will the blessed hope of Christians be attained; for their felicity will be that, To be where he is, John 14. 3. and for him, John 17. 24. The glory of the great God and our Saviour will then break out as the sun. Though in the exercise of his judicial power he will appear as the Son of Man, yet will he be mightily declared to be the Son of God too. The Divinity, that on earth was much veiled, will shine out then as the sun in its strength. Hence the work and design of the gospel are, to raise the light and glory of Christ, we are begotten, for this second appearing of Christ. We are therefore called, beloved, chosen, and sanctified, (1 Thess. 1. 2.) turned to serve the living God, and wait for his Son from heaven, (1 Thess. 1. 10.) Christians are marked by this, expecting their Master's coming, Matt. 24. 14. Looing his appearance, 2 Tim. 4. 8. Let us then look to this hope; let our loins be girt, and our lights burning, and ourselves like those who wait upon a candle; the day or hour we know not, but look to it shall come. Many will not carry, Heb. 10. 37. Fourthly, Observe, The coming joy of Christians are, that their Saviour is the great God, and will gloriously manifest himself at his second coming. Power and love, majesty and mercy, will then appear together in the highest lustre, to the terror and confusion of the wicked, but to the everlasting triumph and rejoicing of the goodly. Were we not thus the great God, and not a mere creature, he could not be their Saviour, or their Hope. Thus of the considerations to enforce the directions for all sorts to their respective duties from the nature and design of the gospel, which is to teach and persuade to those things. And herewith is connected another ground. 2. From the end of Christ's death; (v. 14.) Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from the wrath of God? He gave himself for a peculiar people, zealous of good works. To bring us to holiness and happiness was the end of Christ's death, as well as the scope of his doctrine. Here we have, (1.) The Purchaser of salvation; Jesus Christ, that great God and our Saviour, who saves not simply as God, much less as Man alone; but as God-man, two natures in one person; Man, that he might serve in the office of a mediator, and God, that he might support the manhood, and give worth and efficacy to his undertakings, and have due regard to the rights and honour of the Deity, as well as the good of his creatures, and bring about the latter to the glory of the former. Such a one became us, and this was, (2.) The price of our redemption; He gave himself for us, that he might give himself also; and in the freeness and voluntariness as well as the greatness of the offering, lay the acceptableness and merit of it; (John 10. 17, 18.) Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. So John 17. 19. "For their sakes I sanctify myself, separate and devote myself to this work, to be both a Priest and a Saviour to God for the sins of men." The human nature was the offering, and the divine the altar, sanctifying the gift, and the whole the act of the Person. He gave himself a Ransom for all, 1 Tim. 2. 6. Once in the end of the world hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. He was the Priest and Sacrifice too. We are redeemed, not with silver and gold, but the precious blood of Christ, (1 Pet. 1. 18, 19.) called the blood of God, (Acts 20. 28.) of him who is God. (3.) The persons for whom; For us, poor believing sinners, gone off from God, and turned rebels against him. He gave himself for us, not only for our good, but in our stead. Messiah was cut off, not for himself, but for us. He suffered, the Just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. He was made Sin for us, an Offering and Sacrifice for sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. Wonderful condescension and grace! He loved us, and gave himself for us; what can we do less than love and give up ourselves to him? Especially considering, (4.) The ends of his giving himself for us, [1.] That he might redeem us from all iniquity. This is fitted to the first lesson, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts. Christ gave himself to redeem us from these, they are attributed to the people, and in live in, is to trample under foot redeeming blood, to despise and reject one of the greatest benefits of it, and to act counter to its design. But how could the short sufferings of Christ redeem us from all iniquity? Answer, Through the infinite dignity of his person. He who was God, suffered, though not as God. The acts and properties of either nature are attributed to the person. God put up his church with his own blood, Acts 20. 28. Could payment be made at once, no need of suffering for ever. A mere creature could not do this, from the finiteness of his nature; but God-man could. The great God and our Saviour gave himself for us; that accounts for it. By one offering he hath for ever perfected them that are sanctified, Heb. 9. 25, 26.—10. 14. He needed not to offer himself often, nor could he be holden of death, when he had once undergone it. Happy end and fruit of Christ's death, redemption from all iniquity! Christ died for this: and,

[12.] To exhort to himself a peculiar people. This enforces the second lesson; To live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Christ died to purify, as well as to pardon; to obtain grace, to heal the nature, as well as to free from guilt and condemnation. He gave himself for his church, to cleanse it. Thus does he make to himself a peculiar people, by purifying them. Thus are they distinguished from the world, that lies in wickedness; that is, of God, and assimilated to him, bear his image, are holy as their heavenly Father is holy. Observe, Redemption from sin and sanctification of the nature go together, and both make a peculiar people unto God: freedom from guilt and condemnation, and from the power of lusts, and purification of soul by the Spirit. These are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, and so a peculiar people. And,

[3.] Zealous of good works. This peculiar people, as they are made so by grace purifying them, so must they be seen to be so, by doing good, and a zeal therein. Observe, The gospel is not a doctrine of licentiousness, but of holiness and good life. We are redeemed from our vain conversation, to serve God in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life. Let us see then that we do good, and have zeal in this: so there will be need to be guided by knowledge and spirited with love, directed to the glory of God, and always in some good thing. And thus of the motive to the duties directed, from the end of Christ's death. Then,

[4.] The apostle closes the chapter (as he began it) with a summary direction to Titus upon the whole.

15. These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee.

Here is the matter and manner of ministers' teaching, and a special instruction to Titus in reference to himself.

1. The matter of ministers' teaching; These things, that is, the before-mentioned: not Jewish fables and traditions, but the truths and duties of the gospel, of avoiding sin, and living soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Observe, Ministers in their preaching must keep close to the word of God; (1 Pet. 4. 11.) If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God, and not the figments and inventions of his own brain.

2. The manner; by doctrine, and exhortation, and reproof with all authority, (2 Tim. 3. 16.) All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness; to teach sound doctrine, to convince of sin, and refute error, to reform the life, and to carry forward in what is just and good, that the man of God, Christian or minister, may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to all good works, that are to be practised by himself, or to be taught others. Here is what will furnish for all parts of his duty, and the right discharge of them. "These things speak, or teach; shun not to declare the whole counsel of God." The great and necessary truths and duties of the gospel, especially, these speak and exhort, especially, press with much earnestness. Ministers must not be cold and lifeless in delivering heavenly doctrine and precepts, as if they were indifferent things or of little concern; but they must urge them with earnestness suitable to their nature and importance; they must call upon persons to mind and heed, and not be hearers only, deceiving themselves; but doers of the word, that they may be blest therein. And rebuke; convince and reprovesuch as contradict or gainsay, or neglect and receive not, the truth, as they should, or retain it, in unrighteousness; those who hear it not with such a believing and obedient mind and heart as they ought; but, instead of that, (it may be,) live in contrary practices, shewing themselves stubborn and disobedient, and to every good work reprobathe. Rebuke with all authority, as being in the name of God, and armed with his threatenings and discipline, which whoever make light of, at their peril it will be. Ministers are reprovers in the gate.

Here is a special instruction to Titus in reference to himself; "Let no man despise thee; give no occasion to do so, nor suffer it without reproof, considering that he who despiseth, despiseth not man, but God." Or thus, "Speak and exhort these things; press them upon all, as they may respectively be concerned; with boldness and faithfulness reprovesin; and carefully look to thyself and thy own conduct, and then none will despise thee." The most effectual way for ministers to secure themselves from contempt, is, to keep close to the doctrine of Christ, and imitate his example; to preach and live well, and do their duty with prudence and courage; this will best preserve both their reputation and comfort.

Perhaps too an admonition might be here intended to the people; that Titus, though young, and but a substitute in the apostle, yet so as not be confounded by them, but consider, and respect, as a faithful minister of Christ, and encouraged and supported in his work and office; (1 Thess. 5. 12, 13.) "Know them that labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. Mind their teaching, respect their persons, support them in their function, and, what in yea lies, further their endeavours for the honour of God and the salvation of souls.

CHAP. III.

Of duties which concern Christians more in common, and the reasons of them, v. 1...8. What Titus in teaching should avoid, and how he should deal with a heretic, with some other directions; (v. 9...14.) and salutations in the close, v. 15.

1. Put them in mind to be subject to principalties and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work. 2. To speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness unto all men.

Here is the fourth thing in the matter of the epistle. The apostle had directed Titus in reference to the particular and special duties of several sorts of persons; now he bids him exhort to what concerned them more in common—to quietness and submission to magistracy, and readiness to do good, and to equitable and gentle behaviour towards all men; things comely and ornamental of religion; he must therefore put them in mind of such things. Ministers are people's remembrancers of their duty. As they are remembrancers for the people to God in prayers, (Isa. 62. 6.) so are they from God to them in preaching; (2 Pet. 1. 12.) I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance. Forgetfulness of duty is a great sin of frailty; there is need therefore of reminding and quickening them thereto. Here are the duties themselves, and the reasons of them.

I. The duties themselves, which they were to be reminded of.

1. Put them in mind to be subject to principlities and and powers, to obey magistrates. Magistracy is God's ordinance for the good of all, and therefore must be regarded and submitted to by all; not for wrath and by force only, but willingly and for conscience-sake. Principalities, and powers and magistrates, all civil rulers, whether supreme and chief, or subordinate, in the government under which they live, of whatever form it be; that they be subject to them and obey them, in things lawful and honest, and which it belongs to their office to require. The Christian religion was never approved by its adversaries, as prejudicial to the rights of princes and civil powers, and tending to faction and sedition, and to rebellion against lawful authority; therefore to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men, and stop the mouths of malicious enemies, Christians must be reminded to shew themselves examples rather of all due subjection and obedience to civil authority, and of keeping peace, and doing what is right, and the righteous life; as nature desires of liberty must be guided and bounded by reason and scripture. Spiritual privileges do not make void or weaken, but confirm and strengthen, their obligations to civil duties: Remind them therefore to be subject to principalities and powers, and to obey magistrates. And,

To be ready to every good work. Some refer this to such good works as are required by magistrates, and not only to bring them to good order, and to promote and secure public tranquility and peace, be not backward, but ready, to promote such things.” But though this be included, if not first intended, yet is it not to be hereeto restrained. It regards doing good in all kinds, and on every occasion that may offer, whether respecting God, ourselves, or our neighbours; what may bring credit to religion in the world. Whatever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report; if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on those things, (Phil. 4. 8.) to do and follow and further them. Mere harmlessness, or good words and good meanings only, are not enough without good works. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, and keep unspotted the body of Christ. Not only take, but seek, occasion for doing good, 2 Cor. 9. 7. Whatever things tend to good order, and to promote and secure public tranquility and peace, be not backward, but ready, to promote such things.”

To speak evil of no man: μηδένις ἀμαρτιάσῃ, to revile, or curse, or blaspheme none: or (as our translation more generally) to speak evil of none, unjustly and falsely or unnecessarily, without call, and when it is not but good to go to the person himself or any other. If no good can be spoken rather than speak evil unnecessarily, say nothing. We must never take pleasure in speaking ill of others, or make the worst of any thing, but the best that we can. We must not go up and down as tale-bearers, carrying ill-natured stories, to the prejudice of our neighbour's good name, and destruction of brotherly love. Misrepresentations or ill insinuations of bad intent, or evil purport, is a sin that tends things out of our reach or cognizance, these come within the reach of this prohibition. As this evil is too common, so is it of great malignity; (Jam. 1. 26.) If any man speaketh to be religious, and brideth not his tongue, that man's religion is vain: such loose uncharitable talk is displeasing to God, and hurtful among men; (Prov. 19. 11.) He that covereth a transgression, seeketh love, that is, to himself by this tenderness and charity; or rather he that receiveth a matter, that blazes and tells the faults of another abroad, separateth very friends; he raises dissensions, and alienates his friend from himself, and perhaps from others. This is among the sins to be put off; (Eph. 4. 31.) for, if indulged, it unfiteth for Christian communion here, and the society of the blessed in heaven; (1 Cor. 6. 10.) remind them therefore to avoid this. And,

To be no brawlers: μη μετα τοις καθεστάσεις, no scrapping together with hand or tongue, no quarrelling contentious persons, apt to give or return ill and provoking language. A holy contending there is for matters good and important, and in a manner suitable and becoming, not with wrath or injurious violence. Christians must follow the things that make for peace, and that the people be pure, and is not unseemly honorary and hurtful way, but as becomes the servants of the God of peace and love; (Rom. 12. 18.) Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather let place unto wrath; this is the Christian's wisdom and duty. The glory of a man is to pass over a transgression; it is the duty of a reasonable, and therefore certainly of a Christian man, whose reason is improved and advanced by religion; such may not, will not, presently fall foul on one who has offended him most, like God, will be slow to anger, and ready to for give. Contention and strife arise from men's lusts, and exorbitant unruly passions, which must be curbed and moderated, not indulged; and Christians need to be reminded of these things, that they do not by a wrathful contentious spirit and behaviour displease and dishonour God, and discredit religion. Promoting feuds in the flesh is to curtail one's own life and happiness: it is sin to anger, is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city. Wherefore it follows,

But gentle: ἕμπαθεν, equitable and just, or candid and fair in constructions of things, not taking words or actions in the worst sense; and for peace sometimes yielding somewhat of strict right. And,

Shewing all meekness to all men. We must be of a mild disposition, and not only have goodness in our hearts, but show it in our speech and conduct. All meekness, meekness in all instances and occasions, not toward friends only, but to all men, though still with wisdom, as James admonishes, ch. 3. 13. “Distinguish the person and the sin; pity the one and hate the other. Distinguish between sin and sin; look not on all alike, there are natures and beams. Distinguish also between sinner and sinner; of some here, coveting riches with fear, pulling them out of the fire, thus making a difference, Jude 22. 23. Mind these things; the wisdom that is from above, is pure and peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreat ed.” Meekness of spirit and demeanour renders religion amiable; it is a commanded imitation of Christ the grand Exemplar, and what brings its own reward with it, in the ease and comfort of the disposition in itself and the blessings accompanying of it. Thus shall all be glad and rejoice, shall be taught and guided in their way, and satisfied with bread, and beautified with salvation. Thus of the duties themselves, which Titus was to put people in mind of; for which,

He adds the reasons:

For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

The reasons are derived from their own past condition. Consideration of men's natural condition is a great means and ground of equity and gentleness, and all meekness toward those who are yet in such a state. This has a tendency to abate pride, and work in and base in reference to those who are yet unconverted; “We ourselves also were so and so corrupt and sinful, therefore we should not be impatient and bitter, hard and severe, toward those who are but as ourselves once were. Should we then have been willing to be contained, and proudly and rigorously dealt with? No, but treated with gentleness and humanity; and therefore we should now treat those who are unconverted, according to that rule of equity: Quod tibi non vis fieri, alteri ne feceris—What you would not have done to you, that do not you to another. Their past natural condition is set forth in divers particulars. We ourselves also were sometimes, (1.) Foolish; without true spiritual understanding and knowledge, ignorant of heavenly things. Observe, They should be most disposed to bear with others' follies, who may remember many of their own; they should be meek and gentle, and patient toward them, who once needed and doubted them exactly as we say. We ourselves also were sometimes foolish. And, (2.) Disobedient; heady and persuadable, resisting the word, and rebellious even against the natural laws of God, and those which human society requires. Well are these set together, foolish and disobedient. For what folly like this, to disobey God and his laws, natural or revealed? This is contrary to right reason, and men's true and greatest interest, and what so foolish as to violate and go counter to these? (3.) Deceived, or wandering; that is, out of the ways of truth and holiness. Man in this degenerate state is of a straying nature, thence compared to a lost sheep; this must be sought and brought back, and guided in the right way, Ps. 119. 176. He is weak, and ready to be imposed upon by the wiles and subtleties of Satan, and of men lying in wait to seduce and mislead. (4.) Serving divers lusts and pleasures; as vassals and slaves under them. [1.] Observe, Men deceived are easily entangled and insnared; they would not otherwise serve divers lusts and pleasures as they do, were they not blinded and beguiled into it. See here too what a different notion the word gives of a sensual and fleshly life from what the world generally has of it. Few people think they enjoy their pleasures; the word calls it servitude and vassalage; they are very drudges and bond-slaves under them; so far are they from freedom and felicity in them, that they are captivated by them, and serve them as task-masters and tyrants. [2.] Observe, It is the misery of the servants of sin, that they have many masters; one lust hurrying them one way, and another another; pride commands one thing, contemptuousness another, and often a contrary. What vile slaves are sinners, while they conceal themselves free! The lusts that tempt them, promise them liberty, but in yielding they become the servants of corruption; for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought into bondage. (5.) Living in malice; one of those lusts that bear rule in them. Malice desires hurts to another, and rejoices in it. (6.) And envy; which grudges and repines at another's good, frets at his prosperity and success in any thing; both roots of bitterness, whence many evils spring; evil thoughts and suspicions, tongues set on fire of hell, detractions from, and impairing, the just and due praises of others. Their words are swords, wherewith they slay the good name and honour of their neighbour: the sin of Satan, and of Cain, which have a brother there, and wherefore slew he him, but of this envy and malice? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous. These were some of the sins in which we lived in our natural state. And, (7.) Hateful, or odious; deserving to be hated. (8.) And hating one another. Observe, Those that are sinful, living and allowing themselves in sin, are hateful to God and all good men. Their temper and ways are so, though not simply their persons. It is the misery of sinners, that they hate one another, as it is the duty and happiness of saints to love one another. What contentions and quarrels flow from men's corruptions; such as were in the nature of those who by conversion are now good, but in their unconverted state made them ready to run like furious wild beasts upon one another. The consideration of its having been thus with us, should moderate our spirits, and dispose us to be more equal and gentle, meek and tender-hearted, toward those who are such. This is the argument from their own past condition here described. And he reasons, 2. From their present state, "We are delivered out of that our miserable condition by no merit or strength of our own; but only by the mercy and free grace of God, and merit of Christ, and operation of his Spirit: therefore we have no ground, in respect of ourselves, to condemn those who are yet unconverted, but rather to pity them, and cherish hope concerning them, that they, though in themselves as unworthy and unmeet as we were, yet may obtain mercy, as we have: and so upon this occasion the apostle again opens the causes of our salvation, v. 4—7.

4. But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared, 5. Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; 6. Which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour; 7. That, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

I. We have here the prime Author of our salvation; God the Father, therefore termed here God our Saviour. All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ; 2 Cor. 5. 18. All things belonging to the new creation, and recovery of fallen man to life and happiness, of which he is there speaking, all these things are of God the Father, as Contriver and Beginner of this work. There is an order in acting, as in subsisting; the Father begins, the Son manages, and the Holy Spirit works and perfects all. God, the Father, is a Saviour by Christ, through the Spirit. John 3. 16. God so loved the world, as to give his only begotten Son, that whoever believes in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. He is the Father of Christ, and through him the Father of mercies; all spiritual blessings are by Christ from him, Eph. 1. 3. We joy in God through Jesus Christ, Rom. 5. 11. And with one mind, and with one mouth, glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

II. The spring and rise of it, the divine philanthropy, or kindness and love of God to man. By grace we are saved from first to last; this is the ground and motive; God's pity and mercy to man in misery were the first wheel, or rather the Spirit in the wheels, that sets and keeps them all in motion. God is not, cannot, be moved by any thing out of himself; the occasion is in man, his misery and wretchedness. But sin bringing that misery, wrath and hatred are rather than compassion; but God knowing how to adjust all, that his Name and perfections, would pity and save rather than destroy. He delights in mercy; where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. We read of riches of goodness and mercy, Rom. 2. 4. Eph. 2. 7. Let us acknowledge this, and give him the glory of it, not turning it to wantonness, but to thankfulness and obedience.

III. Here is the means, or instrumental cause; the shining out of this love and grace of God in the gos-
TITUS, III.

Baptism, called therefore the washing of regeneration. The work itself is inward and spiritual, but this is outwardly signified and sealed in this ordinance. Water is of a cleansing and purifying nature, does away the filth of the flesh, and so was apt to signify the doing away of the guilt and defilement of sin by the blood and Spirit of Christ; though that aptness alone, without Christ's institution, had not been sufficient. This it is that makes it of this significance on God's part, a seal of righteousness and faith, as circumcision was, in the place of which it succeeds; and on our's, an engagement to be the Lord's. Thus baptism saves figuratively, and sacramentally, where it is rightly used; (Acts 22. 16.) Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord. So Eph. 5. 26. That he might sanctify and cleanse us by the washing of water by the word. Slight not this outward sign and seal, where it may be had according to Christ's appointment; yet rest not in the outward washing only, but look to the answer of a good conscience, without which the external washing will avail nothing. The covenant sealed in baptism binds to duties, as well as exhibits and conveys benefits and privileges; if the former be not minded, in vain are the latter expected. Savor not what God has joined; in both the outer and inner part is baptism. This is the second seal which God annexed to the former, that the debtor to the whole law, (Gal. 5. 3.) so he is that is baptized, to the gospel, to observe all the commands and ordinances thereof, as Christ appointed; (Matt. 28. 19.) Disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. This is the outward sign and seal of salvation, baptism, called here the washing of regeneration.

VII. Here is the principal efficient; the Spirit of God, it is the renewing of the Holy Ghost; not excluding the Father and the Son, who in all works without themselves are concurring; nor the mean of means, the word and sacraments, by which the Spirit works; through his operation it is that they have their saving effect. In the economy of our salvation, the applying and effecting part is especially understood in baptism, and not the whole. We know it cannot be figuratively, to be born of the Spirit; to be quickened and sanctified by the Spirit; to be led and guided, strengthened and helped, by the Spirit. Through him we mortify sin, perform duty, walk in God's ways; all the acts and operations of the divine life in us, the works and fruits of righteousness without us, all are through this blessed and holy Spirit, who is therefore called the Spirit of life; and of grace and holiness; all grace is from him. Earnestly therefore is he to be sought, and greatly to be heeded by us, that we quench not his holy motions, nor resist and oppose him in his workings. Res delicatius est Spiritus—The Spirit is a tender thing; as we act toward him, so may we expect he will act to us; if we slight and resist and oppose his workings, he will slacken them; if we continue to vex him, he will retire. Grieve not therefore the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption, Eph. 4. 30. The Spirit seals by his renewing and sanctifying, his witnessing and assuring work; he distinguishes and marks out for salvation, fits for it, is his work: we could not turn to God by any strength of our own, any more than we can be justified by any righteousness of our own.

VIII. Here is the manner of God's communicating this spirit in the gifts and graces of it: not with a scanty and niggardly hand, but most freely and plentifully; which he shed on us abundantly. More of the Spirit in its gifts and graces is poured out under the gospel than was under the law; whence it is eminently styled the ministration of the Spirit.
Cor. 3. 8. A measure of the Spirit the church has had in all ages, but more in gospel-times, since the coming of Christ, than before. The promises of the old covenant were fulfilled by Christ; that is, a more plentiful effusion of grace, fulfilling the promises and prophecies of old; (Isa. 54. 3.) I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground. I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon them: this greatest and best of blessings, an effusion of grace and of the sanctifying gifts of the Spirit. Joel 2. 28. I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. Verses 11, 12. Gentiles also. This was to be in gospel-times; and accordingly, (Acts 2. 17, 18, 32.) speaking of Christ risen and ascended, having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, that ye now see and hear: and ch. 10. 44, 45. The Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the word, Gentiles as well as Jews. Those indeed were, in a great measure, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, but not without the sanctifying graces of it also accompanying many if not all of them. There was then great abundance of common gifts of illumination, outward calling and profession, and general faith, and of more special gifts of sanctification too, such as faith, and hope, and love, and other graces of the Spirit. Let us get a share in these. What will it signify if much be shed forth, and we remain dry? Our condemnation will but be aggravated the more, if under such a dispensation, we have a share in the Spirit, but not filled with the Spirit, says the apostle; it is duty as well as privilege, because of the means which God in the gospel is ready to bless and make effectual; this is the manner of God's communicating grace and all spiritual blessings under the gospel, plentifully; he is not straitened towards us, but we toward him and in ourselves.

IX. Here is the procuring Cause of all, namely, Christ, The sucking Jesus Christ our Saviour. He is who purchased the Spirit and his saving gifts and graces; all come through him, and through him as a Saviour, whose undertaking and work it is to bring to grace and glory; he is our Righteousness and Peace, and our Heid, from whom we have all spiritual life and influences. He is made of God to us Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification, and Redemption. Let us praise God for him above all, let us praise God for his wisdom, power, and purpose in all sanctifying and saving purposes. Have we grace? Let us thank him with the Father and Spirit for it; account all things but loss and dung for the excellency of the knowledge of him, and grow and increase therein more and more.

X. Here are the ends why we are brought into this new spiritual condition, namely, justification, and heirship, and hope of eternal life: That, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. Justification in the gospel-sense is the free remission of a sinner, and accepting him as righteous through the righteousness of Christ received by faith. In it there is removing guilt that bound to punishment, and accepting and dealing with the person as one that now is righteous in God's sight. This God does freely as to us, yet through the intervention of Christ's sacrifice and Mediation. Acts 13. 39, 40. By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified; but through the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: (Rom. 3. 20, &c.) By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified; but through the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: (Rom. 3. 24.) We are said to be justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ; whom God hath set forth to be a Propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins; that he might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. God, in justifying a sinner in the way of the gospel, is gracious to him, and yet just to himself and his law; forgiveness being through a perfect righteousness, and satisfaction made to justify Christ, who died a propitiation for sin, and not merited by the sinner himself. So it is here; Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy, he saved us: that, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. It is by grace, as the spring and rise, (as was said,) though through the redemption that is in Christ, as making the way, God's law and justice being thereby satisfied; and by faith apportioning the redemption. Acts 13. 39. By him (by Christ) all that believe are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. Whence the apostle desires to be found in him, not having his own righteousness, which was of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith. Let us not trust therefore in our own righteousness for merit of good works, but in Christ's righteousness alone, received by faith for justification and acceptance with God. Inherent righteousness we must have, and the fruits of it in works of obedience; not however as our justifying righteousness before God, but as fruits of our justification, and evidences of our interest in Christ, and qualification for life and happiness, and the very beginning and part of it; but the procuring of all that is by Christ, that, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs. Observe, our justification is by the grace of God, and our justification by that grace is necessary in order to our being made heirs of eternal life; without such justification there can be no adoption and sonship, and so no right of inheritance. John 1. 12. Whosoever received him, (namely, Christ,) to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Eternal life is set before us in the promise, the Spirit works faith in us, and hope of that life, and so are we made heirs of it, and have a kind of possession of it even now; faith and hope bring it near, and fill with joy in the well-grounded expectation of it. The meanest believer is a great heir; though he have not his portion in hand, he has good hope through grace, and may bear up under all difficulties; there is a better state in view, he is waiting for an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for him. Now our faith may comfort themselves with these words! And now all this gives good reason why we should shew all meekness to all men, because we have experienced so much benefit by the kindness and love of God to us, and many hope that they, in God's time, may be partakers of the like grace as we are. And thus of the reasons of equal and gentle, meek and tender behaviour towards others; from their own bad condition in time past, and the present more happy state into which they are brought, without any merit or deservings of their own, and whereinto by the same grace others may be brought also.

The apostle, having opened the duties of Christians in common, with the reasons respecting themselves, adds another from their goodness and useful ness to men.

8. This is a faithful saying; and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they who have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

1. Observe, When he has opened the grace of God toward us, he immediately presses the necessity of good works; for we must not expect the benefit of God's mercy, unless we make conscience of our duty. This is a faithful saying, and these things
TITUS, III.

1. That the apostle’s meaning here might be more clear and full, and especially fitted to the time and state of things there, and the many Jews among them, he tells Titus what, in teaching, he should shun. There are needful questions to be discussed and cleared, such as make for improvement in useful knowledge: but idle and foolish inquiries, tending neither to God’s glory nor the edification of men, these must be shunned. Some may have a show of wisdom, but are vain, as many among the Jewish doctors, as well as of later school-men, who abound with questions of no moment or use to faith or practice; avoid these. And genealogies of the gods, say some, that the heathen poets made such noise about; or rather those that the Jews were so curious in; some lawful and useful inquiries might be made into these things, to see the fulfilling of the scriptures in some cases, and especially in the descent of Christ the Messiah; but all that served to pomp only, and to feed vanity, in boasting of a long pedigree, and much more such as the Jewish teachers were ready to busy themselves in, and trouble their hearers with, even since Christ was come, and that distinction of families and tribes had been taken away, as if they would build again that polity which now is abolished; these Titus must withstand as foolish and vain. And contents, and strivings about the law. There were those who were for the Mosaic rites and ceremonies, and would have them continued in the church; though by the gospel and coming of Christ there is an end to them, and is done away. Titus must give no countenance to these, but avoid and oppose them; for they are unprofitable and vain: this is to be referred to all those foolish questions and genealogies, as well as those strivings about the law. They are so far from instructing and building up in godliness, that they are hinderers of it rather: the Christian religion and good works, which are to be wrought, will thereby be weakened and prejudiced; the peace of the church, and the progress of the gospel staid. Observe, Ministers must not only teach things good and useful, but shun and oppose the contrary, what would corrupt the faith, and hinder godliness and good works; nor should people have itching ears, but love and embrace sound doctrine which tends most to the use of edifying.

2. But because, after all, there will be heresies and heretics in the church, the apostle next directs Titus what to do in such a case, and how to deal with such.

10. A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition reject; 11. Knowing that he that is such, is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

He who forsakes the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and broaches false doctrines, and propages them to the corrupting of the faith in weighty and momentous points, and breaks the peace of the church about them, let such a one be rejected, after due means used to reclaim him. Admonish him once and again, and if possible, he may be brought back, and thou mayest gain thy brother; but if that will not reduce him, that others be not hurt, cast him out of the communion, and warn all Christians to avoid him. Knowing that he that is such, is subverted, turned off from the foundation, and sinneth grievously, being self-condemned. Those who will not be reclaimed by admonitions, but are obstinate in their sins and errors, are subverterd and self-condemned; they inflict that punishment upon themselves that the governors of the church should inflict upon them: they throw themselves out of the church, and throw off its communion, and so are self-condemned. 1. Observe, How great an evil proper heresy is, not lightly therefore to be charged upon any, though greatly to be taken heed of by all. Such a one is subverted or perverted; a metaphor from a building so ruined, as that it is hard, if possible, to repair and raise it again. Propagators of such opinions have seldom been recovered to the true faith: not so much defect of judgment, as perverseness of the will, being in the case, through pride, or ambition, or self-willfulness, or covetousness, or such like corruption, which therefore must be taken heed of; “Be humble, love the truth, and practise it, and damning heresy will be escaped.” 2. Observe, It means as a patience must be used about these heresies, most grievously. They are not easily and soon to be given up and cast off, but competent time and means must be tried for their recovery. 3. Observe, The church’s means even with heresies are persuasive and rational. They must be admonished, instructed, and warned; so much vexatius import. 4. Observe, Upon continued obstinacy and irreclaimableness, the church has power, and is obliged, to receive such as its own member, who disobeys; such a corrupt member, which discipline may by God’s blessing become effectual to reform the offender, or leave him the more inexusable in his condemnation. The apostle subjoins some further directions.

12. When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter. 13. Bring Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them. Here are two personal things enjoined: 1. That Titus should hold himself ready to come to Paul at Nicopolis, (a city of Thrace, as is reckoned, on the borders of Macedonia,) so soon as Artemas or Tychicus should be sent to Crete, to supply his place, and take care of the churches there while he should leave them. This message would be the more urgent and weak state he be without one or other of chief-sufficiency, to guide and help them. Titus, it seems, was not their ordinary fixed bishop or pastor, but an evangelist, otherwise Paul would not have called him so much from his charge. Of Artemas we read little, but Tychicus is mentioned in many occasions with respect. Paul calls him a beloved brother, and faithful minister, and fellow-served in the Lord: one fit therefore for the service intimated. When Paul says to Titus, Be diligent to come to me to Nicopolis, for I have determined there to winter, it is plain that the epistle was not written from Nicopolis, as the postscript would have it, for then he would have said, I determined here, not there, to winter.

2. The other personal charge to Titus, is, that he would bring two of his friends on their journey diligently, and see them furnished, so that nothing should be wanting to them. This was to be done, not as a piece of common civility only, but of Christian piety, out of respect both to them and the work they were sent about, which probably was to preach the gospel, or to be some way serviceable to the churches. Zenas is styled the lawyer, whether in reference to the Roman or the Mosaic law, as having some time been his profession, is doubtful. Apollos was an eminent and faithful minister. Accompanying such part of their way, and accommodating them for their work and journeys, was a pious and needful service. And to further this, and lay in for it, what the apostle had before bid Titus teach, (v. 8,) he repeats here.

14. And let our's also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful.

Let Christians, those who have believed in God, learn to maintain good works, especially such as these, supporting ministers in their work of preaching and spreading the gospel, hereby becoming fellow-workers to the truth, 2d epistle of John, v. 6—8. That they be not unfruitful. Christianity is not a fruitless profession; the professors of it must be filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, to the glory and praise of God. It is not enough that they be harmless, but they must be profitable, doing good, as well as eschewing evil. "Let ours's set up and maintain some honest labour and employment, to provide for themselves and their families, that they be not unprofitable burdeners on the earth," so some understand it. Let them not think that Christianity gives them a writ of ease; no, it lays an obligation upon them to seek some honest work and calling, and therein to abide with God. This is of good report, will credit religion, and be good to mankind; they will not be unprofitable members of the body, or hurtful and chargeable to others, but enabled to be helpful to those in want. To maintain good works for necessary uses, not living like drones on the labours of others, but themselves fruitful to the common benefit. The apostle concludes with salutations and benedictions.

15. All that are with me, salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

Though perhaps not personally known, (some of them at least,) yet all by Paul testify their love and good wishes to Titus, owning him thereby in his work, and heartening him to go on therein. Great comfort and encouragement it is to have the heart and prayers of other Christians with and for us. Greet them that love us in the faith, or for the faith, who are our loving fellow-Christian's. Holiness, or the image of God in any, is the great endearing thing, what gives strength to all other bonds, and is itself the best. Grace be with you all. Amen. This is the closing benediction, not to Titus alone, but to all the faithful with him: which shows, that though the epistle bears the single name of Titus in the inscription, yet it was for the use of the churches there, and they were in the eye, and upon the heart, of the apostle, in the writing of it. "Grace be with you all, the love and favour of God, with the fruits and effects thereof, according to need; spiritual ones, especially, and the increase and feeling of them more and more in your souls." This is the apostle's wish and prayer, shewing his affection to them, his desire of their good, and a means of obtaining for them, and bringing down upon them, the thing requested. Observe, Grace is the chief thing to be wished and begged for, with respect to ourselves or others; it is, summarily, all good. Amen shuts up the prayer, expressing desire and hope, that so it may, and so it shall be.

WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,
OF THE
EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO PHILEMON.
Completed by Mr. J. Smith.

THIS epistle to Philemon is placed the last of those with the name of Paul to them, perhaps because the shortest, and of an argument peculiar and different from all the others; yet such as the Spirit of God, who indited it, saw would, in its kind, be very instructive and useful in the churches. The occasion of it was this—Philemon, one of note, and probably a minister in the church of Colosse, a city of Phrygia, Vol. vi. — 1 S had a servant named Onesimus, who, having purloined his goods, ran away from him, and in his rambles came to Rome, where Paul was then a prisoner for the gospel, and providentially coming under his preaching there, was, by the blessing of God, converted by him; after which he ministered awhile to the Apostle in bonds, and might have been further useful to him; but understanding him to be another man's servant, he would not, without his consent, detain him, but sends him back with this letter commendatory, wherein he earnestly sues for his pardon and kind reception.

Before we enter on the exposition, such general things as follow may be taken notice of from the epistle, and what relates to it; namely,

I. The goodness and mercy of God to a poor wandering sinner, bringing him by his gracious providence under the means, and making them effectual to his conversion. Thus came he to be sought of him that asked not for him, and to be found of him that sought him not, Isa. 65. 1.

II. The great and endeared affection between a true convert and him whom God used to be the instrument of his conversion. Paul regards this poor fugitive now as his son in the faith, and terms him his own bowels; and Onesimus readily serves Paul in prison, and would gladly have continued to do so, would duty have permitted; but, being another's servant, he must return and submit himself to his master, and be at his disposal.

III. The tender and good spirit of this blessed apostle Paul. With what earnestness does he concern himself for the poor slave! Being now, through his preaching, reconciled to God, he labours for reconciliation between him and his master. How pathetic a letter does he here write in his behalf! Scarcely any argument is forgotten, that could possibly be used in the case; and all pressed with such force, that, had it been the greatest favour to himself that he was asking, he could not have used more.

IV. The remarkable providence of God in preserving such a writer as this, that might be thought of little concern to the church, being not only a letter to a particular person, (as those to Timothy, and Titus, and Gaius, and the Elect Lady, likewise were,) but of a private personal matter, namely, the receiving of a poor fugitive servant into the favour and family of his injured master. What in this is there that concerns the common salvation? And yet over this has there been a special divine care, it being given (as the other scriptures were) by inspiration of God, and, in some sort, as they are, profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness. God would have extant a proof and instance of his rich and free grace for the encouragement and comfort of the meanest and vilest of sinners, looking to him for mercy and forgiveness; and for instruction to ministers and others not to despise any, much less to judge them as to their final state, as if they were utterly cast-aways; but rather to attempt their conversion, hoping they may be saved; likewise how to behave toward them. Joy must be on earth, as well as there is in heaven, over one sinner who repenteth; they must now be loved and helped and confirmed in good, and furthered in it; and in their outward concerns, their comfort and welfare must be consol'd and promoted as much as possible. And on their part, they must be humble and grateful, acknowledging God and his instruments, in what good they have received, ready to all suitable returns, making what reparation they can in case of injuries, and living a life of thankfulness and obedience. To such purposes may this epistle have been written and preserved. And perhaps,

V. There may be something further in all this; at least, by way of allusion, it is applicable to the mediation and intercession of Christ for poor sinners. We, like Onesimus, were revolters from God's service, and had injured him in his rights; Jesus Christ finds us, and by his grace works a change in us, and then intercedes for us with the Father, that we may be received into his favour and family again, and past offences may be forgiven; and we are sure that the Father heareth him always. There is no reason to doubt but Paul prevailed with Philemon to give and receive Onesimus; and more reason have we to be confident that the intercession of Christ with the Father is prevalent for the acceptance of him. From these general observations we come to the epistle itself.

PHILEMON.

In this epistle, we have, 1. The preface, v. 1. 7. II. The substance and body of it, v. 8. 21. And then the conclusion, v. 22, to the end.

1. Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer, 2. And to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellow-soldier, and to the church in thy house.

In these two first verses of the preface are the persons from and to whom it is written, with some annexed note or title, implying somewhat of argument to the purpose of the letter:

I. The person writing: Paul, the principal, who calls himself a prisoner of Jesus Christ, that is, for Jesus Christ. A prisoner simply is no comfort or honour; but such as Paul was, for the faith and preaching of the gospel, this was true glory, and proper to move Philemon upon the request made to him by such a one. A petition from one suffering for Christ and his gospel, surely would be tenderly regarded by a believer and minister of Christ, and especially when strengthened too with the concurrence of Timothy, one eminent in the church, sometimes called by Paul his son in the faith, but now, it is likely, grown more in years, he styles him his brother. What could be denied to two such petitioners? Paul is not slight in serving a poor convert; he gets all the additional help he could in it.

2. The persons written to, are, Philemon and Apphia, and with them Archippus, and the church in Philemon's house. Philemon, the master of Onesimus, was the principal, to whom the letter is inscribed; the head of the family, in whom were the authority and power of taking in or shutting out, and whose property Onesimus was: with him therefore chiefly lay the business. To Philemon, our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer; a good man he was, and probably a minister, and on both accounts dearly beloved by Paul. A lover of good men is one property of a good minister, (Tit. 1. 8) and especially must such love those who labour with them in the work of the gospel, and who are faithful therein. To the general herd, they are but mere members of the church, who are Christians; but when conjunction in the special calling as ministers is added, this will be further enduring. Paul, in the highest degree of ministry, not only calls Timothy, an evangelist, his brother, but Philemon, an ordinary pastor, his dearly beloved fellow-labourer; an example of humility and condescension, and of all affectionate regards, even in those that are highest in the church, towards others that are labourers in the same special way of calling. With Philemon Apphia is joined, probably his yoke-fellow; and having a concern in the domestic affairs, the apostle directs to her likewise. She was a party offended and injured by Onesimus, and therefore proper to be taken notice of in a letter for reconciliation and forgiveness. Justice and prudence would direct Paul to this express notice of censure, and the gratuitous grace and interest which he had in the establishment of the church, for the good ends of his writing. She is set before Archippus, as more concerned, and having more interest. A kind conjunction there is in domestic matters between husband and wife, whose interests are one, and affections and actions must be according. These are the principal parties written to. The less principal are, Archippus, and the church in Philemon’s house. Archippus was a minister in the church of Colosse, Philemon’s house from hence called, and probably connected with him; Paul might think him one whom Philemon would advise with, and who might be capable of furthering the good work of peace-making and forgiveness, and therefore might judge fit to put him in the inscription of the letter, with the adjunct of fellow-soldier. He had called Philemon his fellow-labourer. Ministers must look on themselves as labourers and soldiers, who must therefore take pains, and endure the common guard, and make good their post: must look on one another as fellow-labourers, and fellow-soldiers, who must stand together, and strengthen one another’s hands and hearts in any work of their holy function and calling: they need see to, that they be provided with spiritual weapons, and skill to use them; as labourers, they must minister the word, and sacraments, and discipline, and watch over souls; those that must give an account of them; and as soldiers, they must fight the Lord’s battles, and not entangle themselves in the things of this life, but attend to the pleasing of him who hath chosen them to be soldiers, 2 Tim. 2. 4. To these it is added, And to the church in thy house, his whole family, in which the worship of God was kept up, so that he had, as it were, a church in his house. Observe, The sentiments in this letter are not set or expressed, for the most part, in plain and instructive terms, but are either implied, or put in the least common form; and yet they may, after all, amount to the highest degree of affection, though not named. This tender is not set forth in his own name, but in his family’s, not only as Jesus and Christ, but as Lord also. In 2 Cor. 13. 14. the apostle’s benediction is full; The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen. Observe, Spiritual blessings are first and especially to be sought for ourselves and others. The favour of God and peace with him, as in itself it is the best and most desirable good, so is it the cause of all other, and what puts sweetness into every mercy, and can make happy even in the want of all earthly things. Though there be no herb in the stall, and the labour of the olive fail, yet may such rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of their salvation, Hab. 3. 17. 18. There are many that say, Who will shew us any good? But if God lift up the light of his countenance, that will put our joy and gladness into the heart, than all worldly increase. Ps. 6. 6. 7. And Num. 6. 26. The Lord lift up the light of his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. In this is summarily all good, and from this one Fountain, God the Father, Son, and Spirit, all comes. After this salutation of the apostle to Philemon, and his friends and family, for better making way still for his suit to him, he expresses the singular affection he had for him, by thanksgiving and prayer to God in his behalf, and the great joy for the many good things he knew and heard to be in him, in the four next following verses.

4. I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers.

nurseries for hell, as good ones are for heaven. Masters and others of the family may think it enough to be good, singly and severally in their personal capacities, but they must be socially so; as here Philemon’s house was a church: and Paul, for some concern that all might have in this matter of Onesimus, directs to them all; that their affection, as well as Philemon’s, might return to him; and that in their way and place they might further, and not need to hinder, the matter, as wished and sought. Desirable it is, that all in a family be well affected towards one another, for furthering their particular and the common good and benefit of all. On such accounts might it be, that Paul inscribes his letter here so generally, that all might be the more ready to own and receive this poor convert, and to behave affectionately toward him. Next to this inscription is, the apostle’s salutation of those named by him.

3. Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

This is the token in every epistle; so the apostle writes. He is a hearty well-wisher to all his friends, and wishes for them the best things; not gold or silver, or any earthly good, in the first or chief place, because he knows they have these already. He is the grace of God, the Spring and Fountain of all blessings: and peace, all good, as the fruit and effect of that grace. To you, that is, be bestowed on you, and continued to you, with the comfortable feeling and sense of it in yourselves. From God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit also is understood, though not named; Holy and toward the creatures are of the whole Trinity: from the Father, who is our Father in Christ, the first in order of acting as of subsisting; and from Christ, his favour and good-will as God, and the fruits of it through him as Mediator God-man; it is in the beloved that we are accepted, and through him we have peace and all good things; who is, with the Father and Spirit, to be looked to, and blessed and praised, him alone amongst us; not only as Jesus and Christ, but as Lord also. In 2 Cor. 13. 14. the apostle’s benediction is full; The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen. Observe, Spiritual blessings are first and especially to be sought for ourselves and others. The favour of God and peace with him, as in itself it is the best and most desirable good, so is it the cause of all other, and what puts sweetness into every mercy, and can make happy even in the want of all earthly things. Though there be no herb in the stall, and the labour of the olive fail, yet may such rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of their salvation, Hab. 3. 17. 18. There are many that say, Who will shew us any good? But if God lift up the light of his countenance, that will put our joy and gladness into the heart, than all worldly increase. Ps. 6. 6. 7. And Num. 6. 26. The Lord lift up the light of his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. In this is summarily all good, and from this one Fountain, God the Father, Son, and Spirit, all comes. After this salutation of the apostle to Philemon, and his friends and family, for better making way still for his suit to him, he expresses the singular affection he had for him, by thanksgiving and prayer to God in his behalf, and the great joy for the many good things he knew and heard to be in him, in the four next following verses.

4. I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers.
thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints; 6. That the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus. 7. For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother.

The apostle's thanksgiving and prayer here for Philemon are set forth by the object, circumstance, and manner of the thing, with the way whereby much of the knowledge of Philemon's goodness came to him.

1. Here is the Object of Paul's praises and prayers for Philemon; I thank my God, making mention of thee in my prayers. (1.) Observe, God is the Author of all the good that is in, or that is done by them, (Hos. 14. 8.) From me is thy fruit found. (2.) Observe, To him therefore is all the praise due; (1 Chron. 29. 12, 14.) But [or for] who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? For all things come of thee, both wherewith to offer, and the will and heart to do it. On this account (says he) we thank thee our God, and praise thy glorious name. (3.) Observe, It is the privilege of good men, that in their praises and prayers they come to God as thry God: Our God, we thank thee, said David; and what thank you God, said Paul. (4.) Observe, Our prayers and praises should be offered up to God, not for ourselves only, but for others also. Private addresses should not be altogether with a private spirit, minding our own things only, but others must be remembered by us; we must be affected with joy and thankfulness for any good in them, or done by them, or bestowed on them, as far as is known to us, and seek for them what they need. In this lies no little part of the communion of saints. St. Paul, in his private thanksgivings and prayers, was often particular in remembering his friends; I thank my God, making mention of thee in my prayers; sometimes it may be by name, or however having them particularly in his thoughts; and God knows who is meant, though not named. This is a means of exercising love, and obtaining good for others. (5.) Observe, This is what he desired for himself he surely practised on behalf of others; so should all. Pray one for another, says St. James, 5. 16.

2. Here is the circumstance; Always making mention of thee. Always, usually, not once or twice only, but frequently. So must we remember Christian friends, much and often, as their case may need, bearing them in our thoughts, and upon our hearts, before our God.

3. Here is the matter both of his praises and prayers, in reference to Philemon.

[1.] He thanks God for the love which he heard Philemon had toward the Lord Jesus. He is to be loved as God superlatively, as his divine perfections regarded; a God for me, said the angel; and what he desired for himself he surely practised on behalf of others; so should all. Pray one for another, says St. James, 5. 16.

[2.] For his faith in Christ also. Love to Christ, and faith in him, are prime Christian graces, for which there is great ground of praise to God, where he has blessed us by him with them, (Rom. 1. 8.) I thank my God because your faith is published throughout the world; and in reference to the Colossians, (ch. 1. 3, 4.) We give thanks to God since we heard of your faith in Christ. This is a saving grace, and the very principle of Christian life and of all good works.

[3.] He praises God likewise for his love to all the saints. The two must go together, for he who loves him that begot, must and will love them also, that are begotten of him. The apostle joins them in that, (Col. 1. 3, 4.) We give thanks to God since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which we have to all the saints. These bear the image of Christ, which will be loved by every Christian. Different sentiments and ways in what is not essential, will not make difference of affection, as to the truth; though difference in the degrees of love will be according as more or less of that image is discerned. More external differences are nothing here. Paul calls a poor converted slave his brothers. We must love, as God does, all saints. Paul thanked God for the good that was not only in the churches, but in the particular persons he wrote to; though this too was known to him merely by report; Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints. This was what he inquired after concerning his friends, the truth, and growth, and fruitfulness of their graces, their faith in Christ, and love to him and to all the saints. Love to saints, if it be sincere, will be catholic and universal love towards all saints; but faith and love, though in the heart they are hidden things, are known by the effects of them. Therefore,

(2.) The apostle joins prayer with his praises, that the fruits of Philemon's faith and love might be more and more conspicuous, so as that the communication of them might constrain others to the acknowledgment of all the good things that were in him and in his house toward Christ Jesus; that their light might shine before men, that they, seeing their good works, might be stirred up to imitate them, and to glorify their Father which is in heaven. Good works must be done, not of vain-glory to be seen, yet such as may be seen to God's glory and the good of men.

4. He adds a reason, both that of his prayer and praises; (v. 7.) For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother. The good thou hast done and still dost, is abundant matter of joy and comfort to me and others, who therefore desire ye may continue and abound in such good fruits more and more, to the glory of God and the comfort of relaters. (2 Cor. 9. 12.) The ministration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God.

Thus far is the preface to this epistle. Now, He comes to that which is the main business of it—to plead with Philemon in behalf of Onesimus, to receive him and be reconciled to him. Many arguments he urges to this purpose, from v. 8, to 21, inclusive.

8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient, 9. Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such a one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

Here is the 1st Argument, from what was before noted, and is carried in the illative wherefore: Seeing so much good is reported of thee and found in thee, especially thy love to all saints, now let me see it on a fresh and further occasion; refresh the bowels of Onesimus and mine also, in forgiving and receiving him who is now a convert, and so a saint indeed, and meet for thy favour and love. Observe, A disposition to do good, together with that instances and expressions of it, is a good handle to take hold on for pressing unto more: "Be not weary of well-doing, go on, as thou art able, and as new objects and occasions occur, to do the same still."

2d Argument, is, from the authority of him that is now making this request to him: "I might be much hold in Christ, to entice thee that which is convenient. The apostles had under Christ great power in the church over the ordinary ministers, as well as the members of it, for directions; they might require of them what they took in hand, and were therein to be guided, which Philemon should consider; this was a matter within the compass of the apostle's power to require, though he would not in this instance act up to it. Observe, Ministers, whatever their power be in the church, are to use prudence in the exercise of it; they may not unreasonably, or, further than is requisite, put it forth; in all they must use godly wisdom and discretion. Wherefore this may be a

3d Argument, Waving the authority which yet he had to require, he chooses to entreat of it him: (v. 9.) Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee. Observe, It is no disparagement for those who have power to be condescending, and sometimes even to beseech, where, in strictness of right, they might command; so does Paul here, though an apostle: he enters where he might enjoin, he argues from love rather than authority, which doubtless must carry engaging influence with it. And especially which may be a

4th Argument, When any circumstance of the person pleading gives additional force to his petition, as here; Being such a one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ. Years bespeak respect; and the motions of such, in things lawful and fit, should be received with regard. The request of an aged apostle, and now suffering for Christ and his gospel, should be tenderly considered. "If thou wilt do any thing for a poor aged prisoner, to comfort me in my bonds, and make my chain lighter, grant me this which I desire; hereby in a manner you will do honour to Christ, in the person of an aged suffering servant of his, which doubtless he will take as done to himself." He makes also a strong appeal from the spiritual relation now between Onesimus and himself.

10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds: "Though of right and in civil respect he be thy servant; yet in a spiritual sense he is now a son to me, God having made me the instrument of his conversion, even here where I am a prisoner for Christ's sake." So does God sometimes honour and comfort his suffering servants, not only working good in themselves by their sufferings, exercising and improving thereby their own graces, but making them a means of much spiritual good to others, either in their own time, or in the prospect of their confirmation and strengthening, as Phil. 1. 14. Many brethren, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word of the Lord without fear. When God's servants are bound, yet his word and Spirit are not bound; spiritual children may then be born to them. The apostle lays an emphasis here: My son whom I have begotten in my bonds; he was dear to him, and he hoped would be so to Philemon, under that consideration. Prison-mistresses are sweet, and much set by. Paul makes an argument to Philemon from this dear relation that now was between Onesimus and him, his son begotten in his bonds. And a 5th Argument, is, from Philemon's own interest.

11. Which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me:

(1.) Observe, Unsanctified persons are unprofitable persons; they answer not the great end of their being and relations. Grace makes good for some what; "In time past unprofitable, but now profitable, inclined and fitted to be so, and will be so to thee, his master, if thou receive him, as he has since his conversion been here to me, ministering to me in my confinement." There seems an allusion to the name Onesimus, which signifies profitable. Now he will answer to himself. It may be noted also how the apostle speaks in this matter, not as Onesimus's former case and conduct might warrant; he had wronged his master, and ran away from him, and lived as if he were his own, and not his; yet as God covers the sins of penitents, forgives and does not upbraid, so should men. How softly does Paul here speak! Not that Onesimus's sin was small, or that he would have any, much less himself, to take it so; but, having been humbled for it, and doubtless taken shame to himself on account thereof, the apostle now would not sink his spirit by continuing to load and burthen him therewith, but speaks thus tenderly when he was pleading with Philemon not to make severe reflections on his servant's misconduct, but to forgive. (2.) Observe, What happy changes conversion makes; of evil, good; of unprofitable, useful! Religious servants are a treasure in a family. Now profitable to thee and to me. Such will make conscience of their time and trusts, promoting the interests of those whom they serve, and managing all they can for the best. This is the argument here urged: "It will now be for thy advantage to receive him: thus changed, as he is, thou mayest expect him a dutiful and faithful servant, though in time past he was not so." Whereupon

7th Argument, He urges Philemon from the strong affection that he had to Onesimus. He had mentioned the spiritual relation before, my son been gotten in my bonds; and now he signifies how dear he was to him.

12. Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is mine own bowels,

"I love him as I do myself, and have sent him back to thee for this end, that thou shouldst receive him: do it therefore for love's sake, receive him as one thus dear to me." Observe, Even good men may sometimes need great earnestness and entreaty to lay their passions, let go their resentments, and forgive those who have injured and offended them. Some have thought it to look this way, when Paul is so pathetic and earnest, mustarding up so many pleas and arguments to gain what he requires. Perhaps, if this were so, might perhaps be naturally of a rougher and more difficult manner, and hence need no little pains in touching all the springs that might move him to forgiveness and reconciliation; but rather we should strive to be like God, who is slow to anger, and ready to forgive, and abundant in pardons. And again, an

8th Argument, is, from the apostle's denying himself in sending back Onesimus; though he might have preserved upon Philemon's leave to detain him longer, yet he would not.

13. Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel:

14. But without thy mind would I do no thing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

Paul was now in prison, and wanted a friend or servant to act for him, and assist him, for which he found Onesimus. It is another, and therefore would have him, his friend, to minister to him, instead of Philemon himself, whom if he had requested to have come to him in person for such purpose, he might have presumed he would not have refused; much less might he have reckoned that he would be unwilling his servant should do this in his stead; yet he would not take this liberty, though his circumstances needed it. I have sent him back to thee, that so thou mayest know in these things, as to necessity, but willingly. Observe, Good deeds are most acceptable to God and man, when done with most freedom. And Paul herein, notwithstanding his apostolical power, would shew what regard he had to civil rights, which Christianity does by no means supersede or weaken, but rather confirm and strengthen. Onesimus, he knew, was Philemon's servant, and therefore without his consent not to be detained from him; in this unconverted state he had violated that right, and withdrawn himself, to his master's wrong; but now that he had seen his sin and repented, he was willing and desirous to return to his duty, and Paul would not hinder this, but rather further it. He might indeed have presumed on Philemon's willingness; but, notwithstanding his need, he would deny himself rather than take that way. And he argues further.

10th Argument. That such a change was now wrought in Onesimus, that Philemon needed not fear his ever running from him, or injuring him any more. There are those of whom Solomon says, If thou deliver them, thou must do it again; (Prov. 19. 19.) but the change wrought in Onesimus was such that he would never again need one thus to intercede for him.

15. For perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever;

Charity would so hope and judge, yea, so it would be; yet the apostle speaks cautiously, that none might injure Paul, or God by an unnecessary experiment of a like gracious issue. (1.) Observe, In matters that may be wrested to ill, ministers must speak warily, that kind providences of God towards sinners be not abused, to encouragements to sin, or abatements of just abhorrence of it; Perhaps he therefore departed from thee for a season, &c. (2.) Observe, How softly the sins of penitents are spoken of; he calls it a departure for a season, instead of giving it the term that it deserved; as overruled and ordered by God, it was a departure; but in itself, and in respect of the disposition and manner of the act, it was a criminal going away. When we speak of the nature of any sin or offence as against God, the evil of it is not to be lessened; but in the person of a penitent sinner, as God corrects it, so must we. He departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever; that upon conversion he may return, and be a faithful and useful servant to thee as long as he lives. Bragg a fool in a mortar, yet will not his folly depart from him. But it is not so with true penitents, they will not return to folly. (3.) Observe, The wisdom and goodness and power of God, in causing that to end so happily, which was begun and carried on for some time so wickedly; thus regarding a poor vassal, one of such low rank and condition, and so little regarded by men, working so good and great a change in him who was so far gone in evil ways, who had wronged a master so good, had run from a family so pious, from the means of grace, the church in his house, that he should be led into the way of salvation, who had fled from it, and find means made effectual at Rome, who had been hardened under them at Colosse. What riches are duty and faithfulness in it to his life's end; his interest therefore it will be now to receive him. So God often brings gain to his people out of their losses. And beside interest, a

16. Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord!

"Not now as a servant, that is, not merely or so much, but above a servant, in a spiritual respect, a brother beloved, one to be owned as a brother in Christ, and to be loved as such, upon account of this holy change that is wrought in him, and one therefore who will be useful unto thee upon better principles and in a better manner than before; who will love and promote the best things in thy family, be a blessing in it, and help to keep up the church that is in thy house. (1.) Observe, There is a spiritual brotherhood between all true believers, however differed in civil and outward respects; they are all children of the same heavenly Father, have a right to the same spiritual privileges and benefits, must love and do all good offices to and for one another as brethren, though still in the same rank, and degree, and station, wherein they were called. Christianity does not nullify or confound the respective distinctions which God has appointed, and directs to a right discharge of them. (2.) Observe, Religious servants are more than mere ordinary servants; they have grace in their hearts, and have found grace in God's sight, and so will in the sight of religious masters; (Ps. 101. 6.) Mine eyes are upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me. He that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me. Onesimus being now become a servant, receive and affect him as one that is partaker of the same common faith, and so a brother beloved, specially to me who have been the instrument of his conversion." Good ministers love not so much according to the outward good which they receive, as the spiritual good which they do. Paul called Onesimus his own boxebs, and other converts his joy and crown. A brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more to thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord; by a double tie therefore, both civil and religious; thy servant, thy property, one of thy house and family, and, in a spiritual respect, now thy brother in Christ; which heightens the engagement, he is God's servant and thine too; here are more ties than he is under to me. How reducibly therefore should he be received and loved by thee, as one of thy family and one of the true faith, one of thy house and one of the church in thy house? This argument is strengthened by another, the 11th Argument. From the communion of saints.

There is a fellowship among saints; they have interest one in another, and must love and act accordingly. "Now shew thy love to me, and the interest I have in thee, by loving and receiving one another, as I have done to you, even as myself; own and treat him as thou wouldest me, with a like ready and true, though perhaps not equal, affection."

But why such concern and earnestness for a servant, a slave, and such a one as had misbehaved? Answer, Onesimus being now penitent, it was doubtless to encourage him, and to support him against the fears he might have in returning to a master whom he had so much abused and wronged, to keep him from sinking into dependence and dejection, and hearten him to his duty. Wise and good masters will have great and tender care of young converts, to encourage and hearten them what they can to and in their duty. Objection, But Onesimus had wronged as well as offended his master. The answer to this makes a 13th Argument, A promise of satisfaction to Philemon.

13. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that on mine account; 19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit, I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

Here are three things:

(1.) The confession of Onesimus's debt to Philemon: If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught. It is not an if of doubting, but of omission and concession; seeing he hath wronged thee, and thereby is become indebted to thee; such an if as Col. 3. 1. and 2 Pet. 2. 4, &c. Observe, True penitents will be ingenuous in owning their faults, as doubtless Onesimus had been to Paul, upon his being awakened, and being brought to repentance; and especially is this to be done in cases of injury to others. Onesimus by Paul owns the wrong. And,

(2.) Paul here engages for satisfaction; Put that on my account; I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it. Whence, [1.] Observe, The communion of saints does not destroy distinction of property; Onesimus, now converted, and become a brother beloved, is yet Philemon's servant still, and indebted to him for wrongs that he had done, and not to be discharged but by free and voluntary remission, or on reparation made by himself, or some other in his behalf; which part, rather than fail, the apostle undertakes for him. Upon which, [2.] Observe, Suretyship is not in all cases unlawful, but is some to a good and merciful undertaking. Only know the person and case, be not surety for a stranger, (Prov. 11. 13.) and go not beyond ability; help thy friend thou must, as far as will answer with justice and prudence. And how happy for us that Christ would be made the surety of a better covenant, (Heb. 7. 22.) that he would be made Sin for us, whom know no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him! And, [3.] Observe, Formal securities by writing, as well as by word and promise, may be required and given. Persons die, and contracts are mistak'n; writing betters preserves right and peace. Observe, It is well to use with good persons, as well as others, in all ages, Jer. 32. 9, &c. Luke 16. 5-7. It was much that Paul, who lived on contributions himself, would undertake to make good all loss by an evil servant to his master; but hereby he expresses his real and great affection for Onesimus, and his full belief of the propriety of his conversion; and he might have hoped, that notwithstanding this generous offer, Philemon would not insist on it, but freely remit all; considering,

(3.) The reason of things between him and Philemon; "Albeit, I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides; thou wilt remember, without my reminding thee, that thou art on other accounts more in debt to me than this comes to." Modesty in self-praise is true praise. The apostle glances at the benefits he had conferred on Philemon: That thou art any thing in grace and acceptance with God, or enjoyest any thing in a right and comfortable manner, it is, under God, owing to my ministry; I have been the instrument in his hand of all that spiritual good to thee; and what thy obligation to me on this account is, I leave to thee to consider. Thy forgiving a pecuniary debt to a poor penitent for my sake and on my request, and which, however, I now take away myself to answer, thy remitting it to him, or to me, now his surety, thou wilt confess, is not so great a thing; here is more fair contr—thou owest to me even thine own self besides." Observe, How great the endeavours are between ministers and those toward whom their endeavours have been blessed to their conversion or spiritual edification! If it had been possible, (said Paul,) I would have freely flowered out your own eyes, and have given them to thee. (Hosea 14. 14.)

On the other hand he calls them his children, of whom he travailed again, till Christ was formed in them, that is, the likeness of Christ more fully. So 1 Thes. 2. 8. We are willing to have imparted to you not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us. By way of allusion, this may illustrate Christ's undertaking for us; we were released from our bonds by Christ's sufferings, and not by himself, but Christ undertakes to make satisfaction, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us unto God. "If the sinner owes thee aught, put it upon my account, I will pay the debt; let his iniquity be laid on me, I will bear the penalty." Further, a 13th Argument, is, from the joy and comfort the apostle hereby would have on Philemon's own account, as well as on Onesimus's, in such a reasonable and acceptable fruit of Philemon's faith and obedience.

20. Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refresh my bowels in the Lord.

Philemon was Paul's son in the faith, yet he entreats him as a brother; Onesimus a poor slave, yet he solicits for him as if he were seeking some great gift for himself. How pathetic is he! Yea, brother, or O Philemon! (it is an address to; or desiring;) let me have joy of thee in the Lord. Thou knowest that I am now a prisoner of the Lord, for his sake and cause, and need all the comfort and support that my friends in Christ can give me: now this will be joy to me, I shall have joy of thee in the Lord, as seeing such an evidence and fruit of thy own Christian faith and love, and on Onesimus's account, who had been a good servant, and "Thou wilt remember;" and may the hearts of one another, both people and ministers reciprocally; and ministers of their brethren. From the world they expect trouble; and where may they look for comfort and joy but in one another? (2.) Observe, Fruits of faith and obedience in people are the minister's greatest joy, especially the more they appear in them to Christ and his members, forgiving sinners, giving up the right and justice of punishment, being merciful as their heavenly Father is merciful. "Refresh my bowels in the Lord. It is not any carnal selfish respect I am actuated by, but what is pleasing to Christ, and that he may have honour therein. [1.] Observe, The Lord's honour and service are a Christian's chief aim in all things. And, [2.] Observe, It is meat and drink to a good minister to see people ready and zealous in what is good, especially in acts of charity and beneficence, as occasions occur, forgiving injuries, and remitting somewhat of their right and the like. And once more, his last, which is,

14th Argument, Lies in his good hope and opinion which he expresses of Philemon.

21. Having confidence in thy obedience, I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

22. But withal prepare me also a lodging: for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you.

Saluting is wishing health and peace. Christianity is no enemy to courtesy, but enjoins it, 1 Pet. 3. 8. It is a mere expression of love and respect, and a means of preserving and nourishing it. There salute thee Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus. He was of Colosse, and so countryman and fellow-citizen with Philemon; by office he seems to have been an evangelist, who laboured among the Colossians, if he was not the first converter of them, for whom he had special affection. Our dear fellow-servant, (said St. Paul,) and for you a faithful minister of Christ, (Col. 1. 7.) and (ch. 4. 12, 13,) A servant of Christ, always labouring for you in prayers. I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, &c. A very eminent person therefore that was so much esteemed by him, and so engaged in Paul, and labouring in the same work of preaching and propagating the gospel, was confined in the same prison, and for the same cause; both termed prisoners in Christ Jesus, intimating the ground of their imprisonment, not any crime or wickedness, but for the faith of Christ and their service to him. An honour it is to suffer shame for Christ's name, My fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus, is mentioned as an address to the apostle and the apostle's comfort; not that he was a prisoner, and so hindered from his work; (that was matter of affliction;) but that, seeing God thus permitted and called him to suffer, his providence so ordered it that they suffered together, and so had the benefit and comfort of one another's prayers, and help, it may be, in some things; this was a mercy. So God sometimes lightens the sufferings of his servants by the communion of saints, the sweet fellowship they have one with another in their bonds. Never more enjoyment of God have they found than when suffering together for God. So Paul and Silas, when their feet were fast in the stocks, had their tongues set at liberty, and their hearts tuned for the praises of God. Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers. Did the latter three of the apostle's party and the apostles, (as we have here,) desire and procure them, the least may this way be helpful to the greatest. Yet, at Jerusalem, (Col. 4. 10. Acts 12. 12.) and whose house was the place of meeting for prayer and worship of God. Though some failing seems to have been in him when Paul and he parted, yet in conjunction with Barnabas he went on with his work, and here Paul and he, we perceive, were reconciled, and differences forgotten, 2 Tim. 4. 11. He bids Mark to be brought to him, for he is profitable to me for the ministry, that is, of an evangelist. Aristarchus is mentioned with Marcus, (Col. 4. 10.) and called there by Paul his fellow-prisoner; and speaking there of Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, he adds, touching whom ye received commandments, if he come unto you, receive him: an evidence that he himself had received him, and was reconciled to him. Next is Demas, who hitherto, it seems, appeared not faulty, though (2 Tim. 4. 10.) he is censured as having forsaken Paul, from love of this present world. But how far his forsaking was, whether total from his work and profession, or partial only; and whether he repented, and returned to his duty, scripture is silent, and so must we be: no mark of disgrace lay on him here, but he is joined with others who were faithful, as he is also in Col. 4. 14. Lucas is the last, that beloved physician and evangelist, who came to Rome, companion with Paul, Col. 4. 14. 2 Tim. 4. 11. He was Paul's associate in his greatest dangers, and his fellow-labourer. The ministry is not a matter of carnal ease or pleasure, but of pains; if any are idle in it, they answer not their calling. Christ bids to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers, not loiterers, into his harvest, Matt. 9. 38. And the people are bid to know them that labour among them, and are over them in the Lord, and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake, 1 Thess. 5. 12, 13. My fellow-labourers, says the apostle: ministers must be helpers together of the truth; they serve the same Lord, in the same holy work and function, and are expectants of the same glorious reward; therefore they must be assistants to each other in furthering the interest of their great and common Master. Thus of the salutations, and then,

3. Here is the apostle's closing prayer and benediction.

25. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

Here is,

(1.) What is wished and prayed for; grace, the free favour and love of God, together with the fruits and effects of it in all good things, for soul and body, for time and eternity. Observe, Grace is the best wish for ourselves and others; with this the apostle begins and ends.

(2.) From whom; our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, second Person in the Trinity, Lord by natural right, by whom, and for whom, all things were created, (Col. 1. 16. John 1. 1—5.) and who is Head of all things, and as God-man and Mediator, who purchased us, and to whom we are given by the Father, Jesus, the Saviour, Matt. 1. 21. We were lost and undone; he recovers us, and repairs the ruin; he saves by merit, procuring pardon and life for us; and by power, rescuing us from sin, and Satan, and hell, and renewing us to the likeness, and bringing us to the enjoyment, of God; thus is he Jesus, and Christ the Messiah, or anointed, consecrated and fitted to be King, Priest, and Prophet, to his church. To all these offices were there appointed under the law with oil, and to them was the Saviour spiritually anointed with the Holy Ghost, Acts 10. 38. In none but him were all these together and in such eminence: He was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, Ps. 45. 7. This Lord Jesus Christ is our's by original title to us, and by gospel-offers and gift, his purchase of us, and our own acceptation of him, resignation to him, and mystical union with him: Our Lord Jesus Christ. Observe, All grace to us is from Christ: he purchased, and he bestows it. Of his fulness we all receive, and grace for grace, John 1. 16. He filleth all in all, Eph. 1. 23.

(3.) To whom; Your spirit, μὴ τί σεμνάθαι ἡσυχία; not Philemon's only, but of all those who were named in the inscription. With your spirit, with you; the soul or spirit being the immediate seat of grace, whence it influences the whole man, and flows out in gracious and holy actings. All the house saluted here are joined in the closing benediction, the more to remind and quicken all to further the end of the epistle.

Amen is added, not only for strong and affectionate summing up the prayer and wish, so let it be; but as an expression of faith that it will be heard, so shall it be. And what need we more to make us happy, than to have the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ with our spirit? This is the usual benediction, but it may be taken here to have some special respect also to the occasion; the grace of Christ with their spirits, Philemon's especially, would sweeten and mollify them, and take off too deep and keen resentments of injuries, and dispose to forgive others as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us.

Vol. vi. —4 T
EXPOSITION, WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,
OF THE
EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

Completed by Mr. W. Tong.

CONCERNING this epistle we must inquire,
I. Into the divine authority of it; for this has been questioned by some, whose distempered eyes could not bear the light of it, or whose errors have been confused by it; such as the Arians, who deny the Godhead and Self-existence of Christ; and the Socinians, who deny his Satisfaction: but after all the attempts of such men to disparage this epistle, the divine original of it shines forth with those strong and unclouded rays, that he who runs may read it as an eminent part of the canon of scripture. The divinity of the matter, the sublimity of the style, the excellency of the design, the harmony of this with other parts of scripture, and its general reception in the church of God in all ages—these are the evidences of its divine authority.

II. As to the divine amanuensis, or penman of this epistle, we are not so certain; it does not bear the name of any in the front of it, as the rest of the epistles do, and there has been some dispute among the learned to whom they should ascribe it. Some have assigned it to Clemens of Rome; others to Luke; and many to Barnabas, thinking that the style and manner of expression is very agreeable to the zealous, authoritative, affectionate temper that Barnabas appears to be of; in the account we have of him in the Acts of the Apostles; and one ancient father quotes an expression out of this epistle, as the words of Barnabas. But it is generally assigned to the apostle Paul; and some later copies and translations have put Paul’s name in the title. In the primitive times it was generally ascribed to him, and the style and scope of it very well agree with his spirit, who was a person of a clear head and a warm heart, whose main end and endeavour was to exalt Christ. Some think that the apostle Peter refers to this epistle, and proves Paul to be the penman of it, by telling the Hebrews, to whom he wrote, of Paul’s having written to them, 2 Pet. 3. 15. We read of no other epistle that he ever wrote to them but this. And though it has been objected, that since Paul put his name to all his other epistles, he would not have omitted it here; yet others have well answered, that he, being the apostle of the Gentiles, who were odious to the Jews, might think fit to conceal his name, lest their prejudices against him might hinder them from reading and weighing it as they ought to do.

III. As to the scope and design of this epistle, it is very evident that it was very clearly to inform the minds, and strongly to confirm the judgment, of the Hebrews in the transcendent excellency of the gospel above the law, and so to take them off from the ceremonies of the law, to which they were so wedded, of which they were so fond, that they even doted on them. Those of them who were Christians, retained too much of the old leven, and needed to be purged from it; the design of this epistle was to persuade and press the believing Hebrews to a constant adherence to the Christian’s faith, and perseverance in it, notwithstanding all the sufferings they might meet with in so doing. In order to this, he speaks much of the excellency of the Author of the gospel, the glorious Jesus, whose honour he advances, and whom he justly prefers before all others, shewing him to be All in all, and this in lofty strains of holy rhetoric. It must be acknowledged that there are many things in this epistle hard to be understood, but the sweetness we shall find therein will make us abundant amends for all the pains we take to understand it. And, indeed, if we compare all the epistles of the New Testament, we shall not find any of them more replenished with divine, heavenly matter than this to the Hebrews.

HEBREWS, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, we have a twofold comparison stated: 1. Between the evangelical and legal dispensation; and the excellency of the gospel above that of the law is asserted and proved, v. 1. 3. 2. Between the glory of Christ and that of the highest creatures, the angels; where the pre-eminence is justly given to the Lord Jesus Christ, and clearly demonstrated to belong unto him, v. 4, to the end.

1. GOD, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, 2. Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds;
3. Who, being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high;

Here the apostle begins with a general declaration of the excellency of the gospel-dispensation above that of the law, which he demonstrates from the different way and manner of God's communicating himself and his mind and will to men, in the one and in the other; both these dispensations were of God, and both of them very good, but there is a great difference in the way of their coming from God. Observe,

1. The way wherein God communicated himself and his will to men under the Old Testament. We have here an account, 1. Of the persons by whom God spake his mind under the Old Testament; they were the prophets, that is, persons chosen of God, and qualified by him, for that office of revealing the will of God, and in so doing he design had them to himself, unless called; and whoever are called of God, are qualified by him. 2. The persons to whom God spake by the prophets; to the fathers, to all the Old-Testament saints who were under that dispensation. God favoured and honoured them with much clearer light than that of nature, under which the rest of the world were left. 3. The order in which God spake to men in those times that went before the gospel, those past times; he spake to his ancient people at sundry times and in divers manners. (1.) At sundry times, or by several parts, as the word signifies, which may refer either to the several ages of the Old-Testament dispensation— the patriarchal, the Mosaical, and the prophethical; or to the several gradual openings of his mind concerning the Redeemer: to Adam, that the Messiah should come of the seed of the woman; to Abraham, that he should spring from his loins; to Jacob, that he should be of the tribe of Judah; to David, that he should be of his house; to Micah, that he should be born at Bethlehem; to Isaiah, that he should be born of a virgin. (2.) In divers manners, according to the different ways in which God thought fit to communicate his mind to his prophets; sometimes by the visions of his Spirit, sometimes by dreams, sometimes by visions, sometimes by an audible voice, and both of them by legible characters appear in his own hand, as when he wrote the ten commandments on tables of stone. Of some of these different ways God himself gave an account in Numb. 12. 6, 7. If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known to him in a vision, and will speak to him in a dream. Not so with my servant Moses: With him I will speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches. Observe, If God's method of communicating himself and his mind and will under the New-Testament dispensation, these last days as they are called, that is, either toward the end of the world, or the end of the Jewish state. The times of the gospel are the last times, the gospel-revelation is the last we are to expect from God: there was first the natural revelation; then the patriarchal, by dreams, visions, and voices; then the Mosaical, in the law given from the mount. He shall speak what the law and the voice of the Lord are, and shew plainer the law, and giving clearer discoveries of Christ: but now we must expect no new revelation, but only more of the Spirit of Christ to help us better to understand what is already revealed. Now the excellency of the gospel-revelation above the former consists in two things:

1. It is the final, the finishing revelation, given forth in the last days of divine revelation, to which nothing is to be added, but the canon of scripture is to be settled and sealed. So that now the minds of men are no longer kept in suspense by the expectation of new discoveries, but they rejoice in a complete revelation of the will of God, both preceptive and providential, so far as is necessary for them to know, in order to their direction and comfort. For the gospel includes a discovery of the great events that shall befall the church of God to the end of the world. 2. It is a revelation which God has made by his Son, the most excellent Messenger that was ever sent into the world, far superior to all the ancient patriarchs and prophets, by whom God communed with them in former times. And here we have an excellent account of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

(1.) The glory of his office, and that in three respects:

[1.] God hath appointed him to be Heir of all things. As God, he was equal to the Father; but as God-man and Mediator, he was appointed by the Father to be the Heir of all things; that is, the Mediator between God and man, the Lord of all, the absolute Disposer, Director, and Governor of all persons and of all things, Ps. 2. 6, 7. All power in heaven and earth is given to him; all judgement is committed to him, Matt. 28. 18. John 5. 22.

[2.] By him God made the worlds, both visible and invisible, the heavens and the earth; not as an instrumental Cause, but as his essential Word and Wisdom. By him he made the old creation, by him he makes the new creature, and by him he rules and governs both.

[3.] He upholds all things by the word of his power; he keeps the world from dissolving, by him all things consist; the weight of the whole creation is laid upon Christ, he supports the whole and all the parts. When, upon the apostacy, the world was breaking to pieces under the wrath and curse of God, the Son of God, undertaking the work of redemption, bound it up again, and established it by his almighty power and goodness. None of the ancient prophets sustained such an office as this, none was sufficient for it.

(2.) From hence the apostle passes to the glory of the person of Christ, who was able to execute such an office; he was the Brightness of his Father's glory, and the express Image of his person, v. 2. This is a high and lofty description of the glorious person of the Saviour, this is an account of his personal excellency.

[1.] He is, in person, the Son of God, the only-begotten Son of God, and as such he must have the same nature. This personal distinction always supposes one and the same nature. Every son of man, is man; were not the nature the same, the generation would be monstrons.

[2.] The person of the Son is the glory of the Father, shining forth with a truly divine splendour. As the beams are effulgent emanations of the sun, the father and fountain of light, Jesus Christ in his person is God manifest in the flesh, he is Light of light, the true Shechinah.

[3.] The person of the Son is the true image and character of the person of the Father; being of the same nature, he must bear the same image and likeness. In bothing the power, wisdom, and good- ness, of the Lord Jesus Christ, we behold the power, wisdom, and goodness, of the Father; for he hath the nature and perfections of God in him. He that hath seen the Son, hath seen the Father; that is, he hath seen the same Being. He that hath known the Son, hath known the Father, John 14. 7—9. For the Son is in the Father, and the Father in the Son; the personal distinction is no other than will consist with essential union. This is the glory of the person of Christ; the fulness of the Godhead dwells, not typically, but really, in him. 3. From the glory of the person of Christ he proceeds to mention the glory of his grace; his condescension itself was truly glorious. The sufferings of Christ had this great honour in them, to be a full satisfaction for the sins of his people; by himself he purged away our sins, that is, by the proper innate merit of his death and bloodshed, by their infinite intrinsic value; as they were the sufferings of himself, he has made atonement for himself, the glory of his person and nature, gave to his sufferings such merit as was a sufficient reparation of honour to God, who had suffered an infinite injury and affront by the sins of men.

(4.) From the glory of his sufferings we are at length led to consider the glory of his exaltation; when by himself he had purged away our sins, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, at his Father's right hand. As Mediator and Redeemer, he is invested with the highest honour, authority, and activity, for the good of his people; the Father now does all things by him, and receives all the services of his people from him. Having assumed our nature, and suffered in it on earth, he has taken it up with him to heaven, and there it has the high honour to be next to God, and this was the reward of his humiliation.

Now it was by no means a Person than this, that God has in these last days spoken to men; the dignity of the Messenger gives authority and excellency to the message, and therefore the dispensations of the gospel must needs exceed, very far exceed, the dispensation of the law.

4. Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. 5. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? and again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? 6. And again, when he brings in the First-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. 7. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. 8. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. 9. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

The apostle, having proved the pre-eminence of the gospel above the law, from the pre-eminence of the Lord Jesus Christ above the prophets, now proceeds to show that he is not only much superior to the prophets, but to the angels themselves. In this he obviates an objection that the Jewish zealous would be ready to make, that the law was once delivered by God, and eternally confirmed, (Gal. 3. 19.) That they attended at the giving forth of the law, the hosts of heaven were drawn forth to attend the Lord Jehovah on that awful occasion. Now the angels are very glorious beings, far more glorious and excellent than men; the scripture always represents them as the most excellent of all creatures, and we know of no being but God himself that is higher than the angels; and therefore that law that was ordained by angels, ought to be held in great esteem.

To take off the force of this argument, the pen man of this epistle proceeds to state the argument from the very nature of Christ, both of his person and office, and to prove that Christ was vastly superior to the angels themselves. Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. Here observe,

I. The superior nature of Christ is proved from his superior name. The scripture does not give high and glorious titles without a real foundation and real merit, and this is one that such great things have been said of our Lord Jesus Christ, if he had not been as great and excellent as those words import. When it is said, that Christ was made so much better than the angels, we are not to imagine that he was a mere creature, as the angels are; the word ἀγγέλος, when joined with an adjective, is no where to be rendered creature, and here may very well be read, being more excellent, as the Syriac version hath it. We read ἀγγέλος ὁ ἀληθινός, let God be true, not made so, but acknowledged to be so.

II. The superiority of the name and nature of Christ above the angels is declared in the holy scriptures, and to be deduced from thence. We should have known little or nothing either of Christ or of the angels, without the scriptures; and we must therefore be determined by them in our conceptions of the one and the other.

Now here are several passages of scripture cited, in which those things are said of Christ that were never said of the angels.

1. It was said of Christ, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; (Ps. 2. 7.) which refers either to his eternal generation, or to his resurrection, or to his solemn inauguration into his glorious kingdom at his ascension and session at the right hand of the Father. Now this was never said concerning the angels, and therefore by inheritance he has a more excellent nature than they have.

2. Concerning Christ, but never concerning the angels, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son; taken from 2 Sam. 7. 14. Not only, "I am his Father, and he is my Son, by nature and eternal preordination," but, "I will be his Father, and he shall be my Son, by wonderful conception, and this his Sonship shall be the fountain and foundation of every gracious relation between me and fallen man."

3. It is said of Christ, When God brought his First-begotten into the world, let all the angels of God worship him: that is, either when he is brought into this lower world, at his nativity, let the angels attend and honour him; or when he is brought into the world above, at his ascension, to enter upon his mediatorial kingdom, or when he shall bring him again into the world, to judge the world, then let the highest creatures worship him. God will not suffer his Son to be profaned by angels, who will not be subjunct to Jesus Christ, and pay adoration to him; and he will at last make the fallen angels and wicked men to confess his divine power and authority, and to fall before him; they who would not have him to reign, must then he brought forth and slain before him.

5. God has said concerning Christ, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c. &c. v. 8—12. But of the angels he has only said, that he hath made them spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire, v. 7. Now, upon comparing what he here says of the angels with what he says to Christ, the vast inferiority of the angels to Christ will plainly appear.

6. What does God say here of the angels? He maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame.
of fire. This we have in Ps. 104. 4, where it seems to be more immediately spoken of the winds and lightning, but is here applied to the angels, whose agency the Divine providence makes use of in the winds, and in thunder and lightning. Here, [1.] The office of the angels; they are God’s ministers, or servants, to do his pleasure; it is the glory of God that he has such servants; it is yet more so that he does not need them. [2.] How the angels are qualified for this service; he makes them spirits and a flame of fire, he endows them with light and zeal, with activity and ability, readiness and resolution, to do his pleasure; they are no more than what God has made them to be, and they are servants to the Son, the Mediator. [3.] The quality of this service; it is a service of the Son, of the Mediator, (finding himself so absolutely sufficient for it,) and also that joy which was set before him as the reward of his service and sufferings, that crown of glory and gladness which he should wear for ever after the suffering of death.

(2.) Observe, How much greater things are said of Christ by the Father. Here two passages of scripture are quoted, one out of Ps. 45. 6, 7, where God declares of Christ, [1.] His true and real divinity, and that with much pleasure and affection, not grudging that him glory; Thy throne, O God, Here one Person calls another Person God, O God. And if God the Father declares him to be so, he must be greater than any angels; or, that he be employed in the service of God on earth, and things as they are. And now let who will deny him to be essentially God at their peril, but let us own and honour him as God; for if he had not been God, he had never been fit to have done the Mediator’s work, or to have worn the Mediator’s crown. [2.] God declares his dignity and dominion, as having a throne, a kingdom, and a sceptre of that kingdom. He has all right, rule, authority, and power, both as God, of nature, grace, and glory, and as Mediator; and so he is adequate and sufficient to all the intents and purposes of his mediatorial kingdom. [3.] God declares the eternal duration of the dominion and dignity of Christ, founded upon the divinity of his person; Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, from everlasting to everlasting, through all the ages of time, measure all the attempts of earth and hell to undermine and overthwart it, and through all the endless ages of eternity, when time shall be no more. This distinguishes Christ’s throne from all earthly thrones, which are tottering, and will at length tumble down; but the throne of Christ shall be as the days of heaven. [4.] God declares of Christ the perfect equity of his administration, and of the execution of his power, through all the parts of his government; A sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. He comes in to the sceptre, and he uses it in perfect righteousness; the righteousness of his government proceeds from the righteousness of his person, from an essential eternal love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity, not merely from considerations of prudence or interest, but from an inward and immovable principle; Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest iniquity, etc., etc., and it is to be utterly in vain, or it is to be in everlasting righteousness; and God calls persons in all his ways, and holy in all his works. He has recommended righteousness to men, and restored it among them, as a most excellent and amiable thing. He came to finish transgression, and to make an end of sin as a hateful as well as hurtful thing. [5.] God declares of Christ how he was qualified for the office of Mediator, and how he was installed and confirmed in it. [v. 10.] God calls persons in all his ways, and holy in all his works. He has recommended righteousness to men, and restored it among them, as a most excellent and amiable thing. He came to finish transgression, and to make an end of sin as a hateful as well as hurtful thing. [5.] God declares of Christ how he was qualified for the office of Mediator, and how he was installed and confirmed in it. [v. 10.] God calls persons in all his ways, and holy in all his works. He has recommended righteousness to men, and restored it among them, as a most excellent and amiable thing. He came to finish transgression, and to make an end of sin as a hateful as well as hurtful thing.

First, Christ has the name Messiah from his being anointed. God’s anointing of Christ signifies both his qualifying of him for the office of the Mediator with the Holy Spirit and all his graces, and likewise his inauguration of him into the office, as prophets, priests, and kings, by being anointed. God, even thy God, imports the confirmation of Christ in the office of Mediator by the covenant of redemption and peace, that was between the Father and the Son. God is the God of Christ, as Christ is Man and Mediator.

Secondly, This anointing of Christ was with the oil of gladness, which signifies both the gladness and cheerfulness with which Christ undertook and went through the office of Mediator, (finding himself so absolutely sufficient for it,) and also that joy which was set before him as the reward of his service and sufferings, that crown of glory and gladness which he should wear for ever after the suffering of death.

Thirdly, This anointing of Christ was above the anointing of his fellows; God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. Who are Christ’s fellows? Has he any equals? Not as God, except the Father and Spirit, but these are not here meant. As Man, he has his fellows, and as an anointed Person; but his union is beyond all their’s. 1. Above the angels, who may be said to be his fellows, as they are the sons of God by creation, and God’s messengers, whom he employs in his service. 2. Above all prophets, priests, and kings, that ever were anointed with oil, or employed in the service of God on earth. 3. Above all the saints, who are his brethren, children of the same father, as he was a Partaker with them of flesh and blood. 4. Above all those who were related to him as Man, above all the house of David, all the tribe of Judah, all his brethren and kinsmen in the flesh. All God’s other anointed ones had only the Spirit in a certain measure; Christ had the Spirit above measure, and went through his work as Christ did, none takes so much pleasure in it as Christ does; for he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows.

The other passage of scripture in which is the superior excellence of Christ to the angels, is taken out of Ps. 102. 25—27. and is thus recited here.

10. And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands: 11. They shall perish; but thou remainest; and they shall all wax old as doth a garment; 12. And as a vesture shall thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.

In these verses the omnipotence of the Lord Jesus Christ is declared, as it appears both in creating the world, and in changing it. 1. In creating the world; (v. 10.) And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thy hands. The Lord Christ has the original right to govern the world, because he made the world in the beginning; his right, as Mediator, was by commission from the Father; his right, as God with the Father, was absolute, resulting from his creating power. This power he had before the beginning of the world, and he exerted it in giving a beginning and being to the world. He must therefore be no part of the world himself, for then he must go through the world. He must go through the world, for all things, and by him all things consist, Col. 1. 17. He was not only above all things in condition, but before all things in existence; and therefore must be God, and self-existent. He laid the foundations of the earth, did not only introduce new forms into pre-existent matter, but made out of nothing the foundations of the earth, the primordia rerum—the first principles of things; he not only founded the earth, but the heavens too are the work of his hands, both the habitation and the inhabitants, the hosts of heaven, the an gels themselves; and therefore he must needs be infinitely superior to them.

3. In changing the world that he has made; and here the mutability of this world is brought in to illustrate the immutability of Christ.

(1.) This world is mutable, all created nature is so; this world has passed through many changes, and shall pass through more; all these changes are by the permission and under the direction of Christ, who made the world; (v. 11, 12.) They shall perish, the shall all wax old as doth the garment; as a vesture shall thou fold them up, and they shall be changed. This our visible world (both the earth and visible heavens) is growing old. Not only men and beasts and trees grow old, but this world itself grows old, and is hastening to its dissolution; it changes like a garment, has lost much of its beauty and strength; it grew old betimes on the first apostasy, and it has been waxing older and growing weaker ever since; it bears the symptoms of a dying world. But then its dissolution shall not be its utter destruction, but its change. Christ will fold up this world as a garment not to be abused any longer, not to be any longer used so as it has been. Let us not then set our hearts upon that which is not what we take it to be, and will not be what it now is. Sin has made a great change in the world for the worse, and Christ will make a great change in it for the better.

We shall have new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Let us consider the wean us from the present world, and make us watchful, diligent, and desirous of that better world, and let us wait on Christ to change us into a meetness for that new world that is approaching; we cannot enter into it till we be new creatures.

(2.) Christ is immutable. Thus the Father testifies of him, Thou remainest, thy years shall not fail. Christ is the same in himself, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever, and the same to his people in all the changes of time. This may well support all who have an interest in Christ under all the changes they meet with in the world, and under all they feel in themselves. Christ is immutable and immortal, his years shall not fail. This may comfort us under all decays of nature that we may observe in ourselves or in our friends, though our flesh and heart fail, and our days are hastening to an end. Christ lives to take care of us while we live, and of our when we are gone, and this should quicken us all to make our interest in him clear and sure, that our spiritual and eternal life may be hid with Christ in God.

13. But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? 14. Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

This concludes the comparison between Christ and the angels, and the preference of Christ to them. God never said to the angels what he has said to Christ.

1. What has God said to Christ? He has said, “Sit thou at my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool;” (Ps. 110. 1.) Receive thou glory, dominion, and rest; and remain in the administration of thy mediatorial kingdom until all thine enemies shall be either made thine enemies by conversion, or thy footstool.” Note, (1.) Christ Jesus has his enemies, (Would one think it?) enemies even among men; enemies to his sovereignty, to his cause, to his people; such as will not have him to reign over them. Let us not think it strange then if we have our enemies. Christ never did any thing to make men his enemies; he has done a great deal to make them all his friends and his Father’s friends, and yet he has his enemies. (2.) All the enemies of Christ shall be made his footstool, either by humble submission and entire submission to his will, casting themselves down at his feet, or by utter destruction; he shall trample upon those who continue obstinate, and shall triumph over them. (3.) God the Father has undertaken for this, and he will see it done, yea he will do it himself; and though it be not now, presently, it shall certainly be done, and Christ waits for it; and so must Christians wait till God has wrought all their works in them, for them, and by them. (4.) Christ shall go on to rule and reign till this is done; he shall not leave any of his great designs unfinished, he shall go on conquering and to conquer. And it becomes his people to go on in their duty, being what he would have them to be, doing what he would have them to do; and though it be not now, presently, it would have them to avoid, bearing what he would have them to bear, till he makes them conquerors and more than conquerors over all their spiritual enemies.

2. What has God said of the angels? He never said to them as he said to Christ, Sit ye at my right hand; but he has said of them here, that they are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.

(1.) What do the angels do? They are ministering spirits. Christ, as Mediator, is the great Minister of God in the great work of redemption. The Holy Ghost is the great Minister of God and Christ in the application of this redemption. Angels are ministering spirits under the blessed Trinity, to execute the divine will and pleasure, they are the ministers of Divine Providence.

(3.) The angels are sent forth for this end—to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation. Here observe, (1.) The description given of the saints— they are heirs of salvation; at present they are under the law, and are children, or heirs, in bondage. They are heirs because they are children of God; if children, then heirs. Let us make sure that we are children by adoption and regeneration, having made a covenant-resignation of ourselves to God, and walking before him in a gospel-conversation, and then are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. (2.) The dignity and privilege of the saints—the angels are sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation. This they have done in attending and acting at the giving forth of the law, in fighting the battles of the saints, in destroying their enemies. They still minister for them in opposing the malice and power of evil spirits, in protecting and keeping their bodies, pitching their tents about their’s, instructing, quickening, and comforting their souls under Christ and the Holy Ghost; and thus they shall do in gathering all the saints together at the last day. (3.) Christ is the minister of the covenant; he is the executor of the covenant, he is the executor of God’s way, and take the comfort of this promise, that he will give his angels charge over you, to keep you in all your ways. They shall bear you up in their hands, lest you dash your feet against a stone, Ps. 91. 11, 12.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, the apostle, I. Makes some application of the doctrine laid down in the chapter foregoing, concerning the excellency of the person of Christ, both by way of exhortation and argument, v. 1. 4. II. Embarks further upon the pre-eminent character of Christ and his angels, v. 5. 11. III. Proceeds to remove the scandal of the cross, v. 10. 16. IV. Asserts the incarnation of Christ, taking upon him not therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. 2. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; 3. How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; 4. God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

The apostle proceeds in the plain profitable method of doctrine, reason, and use, through this epistle. Here we have the application of the truths before asserted and proved; this is brought in by the illusive particle therefore, with which this chapter begins, and which shews its connexion with the former; whereas the apostle having proved Christ to be such, and made the angels by whose ministry the law was given, and therefore that the gospel-dispensation must be more excellent than the law, he now comes to apply this doctrine both by way of exhortation and argument.

I. By way of exhortation; (v. 1.) Therefore we ought to give the more diligent heed to the things which we have heard. This is the first way by which we are to shew our esteem of Christ and of the gospel. It is the great concern of every one under the gospel, to give the most earnest heed to all gospel-discoveries and directions; to prize them highly in his judgments as matters of the greatest importance; to hearken to them diligently in all the opportunities he has for that purpose; to read them frequently, to meditate on them closely, and to mix faith with them; to embrace them in our hearts and affections, to retain them in our memories, and frequently to regulate our words and actions according to them.

II. By way of argument, he adds strong motives to enforce the exhortation:

1. From the great loss we shall sustain, if we do not take this earnest heed to the things we have heard—we shall let them slip. They will leak, and run out of our heads, lips, and lives, and we shall be great losers by our neglect. Learn, (1.) When we have received gospel-truths into our minds, we are in danger of letting them slip. Our minds and memories are like a leaky vessel, they do not without much care retain what is poured into them; this proceeds from the corruption of our natures, the enmity and subtlety of Satan, he steals away the word; from the entanglements and snares of the world, the thorns that choke the good seed. (2.) These meet with an inconceivable loss, while gospel-truths, which they had received, slip out of their minds; they have lost a treasure far better than thousands of gold and silver; the seed is lost, their time and pains in hearing lost, and their hopes of a good harvest lost; all is lost, if the gospel be lost. (3.) This consideration should be a strong motive both to our attention to the gospel, and our retention of it; and indeed if we do not well attend, we shall not long retain, the word of God; slighty hearers will soon be forgetful hearers.

2. Another argument is taken from the dreadful punishment we shall incur, if we do not do this duty: a more dreadful punishment than those fell under, who neglected and disobeyed the law, v. 2, 3. Here observe,

(1.) How the law is described: it was the word spoken by angels, and declared to be steadfast; it was the word spoken by angels, because given by the ministration of angels, they sounding the trumpet, and perhaps forming the words according to God’s direction; and God, as Judge, will make use of the angels to sound the trumpet a second time, and gather all to his tribunal, to receive their sentence, as they have conformed or not conformed to the law. And this law is declared to be steadfast; it is like the promise, yea and amen; it is truth and faithfulness, and it will abide and have its force whether men obey it or no; for every transgression and disobedience will receive a just recompense of reward. If men trifle with the law of God, the law will not trifle with them; it has taken hold of the sinners of former ages, and will take hold of them in all ages. God, as a righteous Governor and Judge, when he had given forth the law, would not let the contempt and breach of it go unpunished; but he has from time to time reckoned with the transgressors of it, and recompensed them according to the nature and aggravation of their disobedience. Observe, The severest punishment God ever inflicted upon sinners, is no more than what sin deserves; it is a just recompense of reward; punishments are as just, and as much due to sin, as rewards are to obedience, yea more due, because rewards are of the goodness, and grace, and mercies of God. (2.) How the gospel is described: it is salvation, a great salvation; so great salvation, that no other salvation can compare with it; so great, that none can fully express, no, nor yet conceive, how great it is. It is a great salvation that the gospel discovers, for it discovers a great Saviour, one who has manifested God to be reconciled to our nature, and reconcilable to our persons: it shews how we may be saved from so great sin and so great deservings, and restored to so great holiness and so great happiness. The gospel discovers to us a great Sanctifier, to qualify us for salvation, and to bring us to the Saviour; the gospel unfolds a great and excellent dispensation of grace, a new covenant; the great charter-deed and instrument is settled and secured to all those who come into the bond of the covenant. (3.) How sinning against the gospel is described; it declared to be a great sin, a negation of salvation, it is a contempt put upon the saving grace of God in Christ, making light of it, not caring for it, not thinking it worth their while to acquaint themselves with it, not regarding either the worth of gospel-grace, or their own want of it, and undone state without it; not using their endeavours to discern the truth of it, and assent to it, nor to discern the goodness of it, so as to approach of it, or apply it to themselves. In these things they despise and slight the great respect of this great salvation. Let us all take heed that we be not found among those wicked wretched sinners who neglect the grace of the gospel.

(4.) How the misery of such sinners is described; it is declared to be unavoidable; (v. 3.) How shall we escape? This intimates, [1.] That the despisers of this salvation are condemned already, under arrest and in the hands of justice already. The sentence of the sin by the sin of Adam; and they have strengthened their bonds by their personal transgression; (John 3. 18.) He that believeth not, is condemned already. [2.] There is no escaping out of this condemned state, but by accepting the great salvation discovered in the gospel; as for those who neglect it, the wrath of God is upon them, and it abides upon them; they cannot, or will not, or do not disengage themselves, they cannot, or will not, or do not come out of it. [3.] That there is a yet more aggravated curse and condemnation waiting for all those who despise the grace of God in Christ, and that most heavy curthey cannot escape; they can neither conceal their persons, at the great day, nor deny the fact, nor bridle the judge, nor break the prison. There is no door of mercy left open for them, there shall be no more sacrifice for sin, they are irrecoverably lost. The unavoidableness of the misery of such is here expressed by the question, where will we escape? It is an appeal to universal reason, to the consciences of sinners themselves; it is a challenge to all their power and policy, to all their interest and alliances, whether they, or any for them, can find out, or can force out, a way of escape from the vindictive justice and wrath of God. It intimates, that the neglecters of this great salvation will be left not only without occasion of repentance, but without plea and excuse, at the judgment-day; if they supposed they had to pay only half of the debt, they are to be found guilty; if they supposed that the sentence should not be executed upon them, they will be speechless, and self-condemned by their own consciences, even to a greater degree of misery than those fell under, who neglected the authority of the law, or sinned without the law.

3. Another argument to enforce the extortion is taken from the dignity and excellency of the Person by whom the gospel began to be spoken; (v. 3.) It began at first to be spoken by the Lord, that is, the Lord Jesus Christ, who is Jehovah, the Lord of life and glory, Lord of all, and as such possessed of unerring and infallible wisdom, infinite and inexhaustible goodness, unquestionable and unchangeable veracity and faithfulness, absolute sovereignty and authority, and irresistible power. This great Lord of all was the first who began to speak it plainly and fully, and with simplicity and sublimity, as it was, before he came. Now surely it may be expected that all will reverence this Lord, and take heed to a gospel that began to be spoken by one who spake so as never man spake.

4. Another argument is taken from the character of those who were witnesses to Christ and the gospel; (v. 4.) It was confirmed to us by them that heard him, God also bearing them witness. Observe, (1.) The promulgation of the gospel was continued and confirmed by those who heard Christ, by the evangelists and apostles, who were eye and ear-witnesses of what Jesus Christ began both to do and to teach, Acts 1. 1. These witnesses could have no worldly end or interest of their own to serve hereby. Nothing could induce them to give in their evidence but the Redeemer's glory, and their own and others' salvation; they exposed themselves by their testimony to the loss of all that was dear to them in this life, and many of them sealed it with their blood. (2.) God himself bore witness to those who were witnesses for Christ; he testified that they were authorized and sent by him to preach Christ and salvation by him to the world. And how did he bear them witness? Not only by giving them great grace in their own minds, great patience under all their sufferings, and unspeakable courage and joy; (though these, in themselves, were trials) but he bore them witness by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his will. [1.] With signs: signs of his gracious presence with them, and of his power working by them. [2.] Wonders: works quite beyond the power of nature, and out of the course of nature, filling the spectators with wonder and admiration, stirring them up to ask, and wonder at, and to inquire into, the mystery of the doctrine preached, and to inquire into it. [3.] Divers and mighty works, in which an Almighty agency appeared, vindicated all reasonable controversy. [4.] Gifts of the Holy Ghost, qualifying, enabling, and exciting them to do the work to which they were called; divisions or distributions of the Holy Ghost, diversities of gifts, 1 Cor. 12. 4, &c. And all this according to God's own will. It was the will of God that we should have sure footing for our faith, and a strong foundation for our hope in receiving the gospel. As at the giving forth of the law there were signs and wonders, by which God testified the authority and excellency of it; so he witnessed to the gospel by more and greater miracles, as to a more excellent and abiding dispensation.

5. For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him; or the son of man, that thou visitest him? 7. Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands: 8. Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all things in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him. 9. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.

The apostle having made this serious application of the doctrine of the personal excellency of Christ above the angels, he now returns to that pleasant subject again, and pursues it further; (v. 5.) For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. I. Here the apostle lays down a negative proposition, including a positive one—that the state of the gospel-church, which is here called the world to come, is not subjected to the angels, but under the special care and direction of the Redeemer himself. Neither the state in which the church is at present, nor that more completely restored state at which it shall arrive when the prince of this world is cast out and the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdom of Christ, is left to the government of the angels; but Jesus Christ will take to him his great power, and will reign. He does not make that use of the ministration of angels, to give the gospel as he did the law, which was the state of the old or antient world. This new world is committed to Christ, and only put in absolute subjection to him in all spiritual and eternal concerns. Christ has the administration of the gospel-church, which at once speaks Christ's honour, and the church's happiness and safety. It is certain that neither the first creation of the gospel-church, nor its after-edification or administration, nor its final judgment and perfection, is committed to the angels, but to Christ. God would not put so great a trust in his holy ones; his angels were too weak for such a station.

II. We have a scripture-account of that blessed Jesus to whom the gospel-world is put into subjection. It is taken from Ps. 8. 4—6. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him; or the Son of man, that thou visitest him? &c. These words are to be considered both as applicable to mankind in general, and as applicable here to the Lord Jesus Christ, or mankind in general; where we have an affectionate, thankful expostulation with the great God concerning his wonderful condescension and kindness to the sons of men. (1.) In remembering them, or being mindful of them, when yet they had no being but in the counsels of divine love. The favours of God to men all spring up out of his eternal thoughts and purposes of mercy for them; as all our duty regards to God spring forth from our remembrance of him. God is always mindful of us, let us never be forgetful of him. (2.) In visiting him. God's purpose of favours for man is productive of gracious visits to them; he comes to see us, how it is with us, what we all, what we want, what dangers we are exposed to, what difficulties we have to encounter; and by his visitation our spirit is preserved. Let us therefore be continually daily to approach him in a way of duty. (3.) In making him the head of all creatures, and also the children of God—This is the whole that is here said, can only be applied to him, v. 8, 9. And here you may observe, (1.) What is the moving cause of all the kindness God shews to men in giving Christ for them and to them; and that is, the grace of God. For what is man? (2.) What are the fruits of this free grace of God with respect to the gift of Christ for us and to us, as related in this scripture-testimony. (1.) That God was mindful of Christ for us in the covenant of grace; v. 1. (2.) That God visited Christ on our account; and it was concluded between them, that in the fulness of time Christ should come into the world, as the great archetypal Sacrifice. (3.) That God had made him a little lower than the angels, in his being made man, that he might suffer and humble himself to death. (4.) That God crowned the human nature of Christ with glory and honour, in his being made holy, and having the Spirit without measure, and by an ineffable union with the divine nature in the second Person of the Trinity, the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in him bodily; that by his sufferings he might make satisfaction, tasting death for every man, sensibly feeling and undergoing the bitter agonies of that shameful, painful, and cursed death of the cross; hereby putting all mankind into a new state of trial. (5.) That, as by the death of Christ, the way of his humiliation being accomplished, suffering death, he was crowned with glory and honour, advanced to the highest dignity in heaven, and having absolute dominion over all things; thus accomplishing that ancient scripture in Christ, which never was so accomplished or fulfilled in any mere man that ever was upon earth. And now, having mentioned the death of Christ, the apostle proceeds.

10. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. 11. For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; 12. Vol. vi.—4 U

The apostle here prevents and removes the scandal of the cross; this he does by shewing both how it became God, that Christ should suffer, and how much man should be benefited by those sufferings.

1. How it became God, that Christ should suffer; (v. 10.) For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons to glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. Where. 1. God is described as the Father, who is the first cause of all things, and as such it became him to secure his own glory in all that he did, not only to act so that he might in nothing dishonour himself, but that he might from every thing have a revenue of glory. 2. He is declared to have acted up to this glorious character in the work of redemption, as to the choice both of the end and of the means.

(1.) In the choice of the end; and that was, to bring many sons to glory, to present glory in enjoying the glorious privileges of the gospel, and to future glory in heaven, which will be glory indeed, an exceeding eternal weight of glory.

Here observe, [1.] We must be the sons of God both by adoption and regeneration, before we can be brought to the glory of heaven. Heaven is the inheritance; and only those that are the children, are heirs of that glory. What are the children of God? those are the children of God; to them he has granted the power and privilege of being the Children of God, even as many as believe on his name, John 1. 12. 3. Though the sons of God are but a few in one place, and at one time; yet, when they shall be all brought together, it will appear that they are many. Christ is the First-born among many brethren. 5. All the sons of God, how many soever they are, or however dispersed and divided, shall at length be brought together to glory.

(2.) In the choice of the means. [1.] In finding out such a Person as should be the captain of our salvation; those that are saved must come to that salvation under the guidance of a Captain and Leader sufficient for that purpose; and they must be all enlisted under the banner of this Captain; they must endure hardship as good soldiers of Christ; they must follow their Captain, and they that do so shall be brought safely off, and shall inherit great glory and honour. [2.] In making this Captain of our salvation perfect through sufferings. God the Father made the Lord Jesus Christ the Captain of our salvation; that is, he consecrated, he appointed to that office, he gave him a commission for it, and he made him a perfect Captain; he had perfection of wisdom, and courage, and strength, by the Spirit of the Lord, which he had without measure; he was made perfect through sufferings; that is, he perfected the work of our redemption by shedding his blood, and was thereby perfectly qualified to be a Mediator between God and man. He found his way to the crown by the cross, and so must his people too. The excellent Dr. Owen observes, that the Lord Christ, being consecrated and perfected through suffering, has consecrated the way of suffering for all his followers to pass through unto glory; and hereby their sufferings are made necessary and unavoidable, they are hereby made honourable, useful, and profitable.

II. He shews how much they would be benefited by the cross and sufferings of Christ; as there was noeming unhonoured for God and Christ, so it was that which would be very beneficial to men, in these sufferings. Hereby they are brought into a near union with Christ, and into a very endearing relation.

1.Into a near union; (v. 11.) Both he that sanctifieth and they that are sanctified are all of one. Observe, Christ is he that sanctifieth; he has purchased and sent the sanctifying Spirit; he is the Head of all sanctifying influences. The Spirit sanctifieth as the Spirit of Christ. True believers are they who are sanctified, endowed with holy principles and powers, separated and set apart from mean and vile uses to high and holy uses and purposes; for so they must be before they can be brought to glory. Now Christ, who is the Agent in this work of sanctification, and Christians, who are the recipient subjects, are all of one. How? Why, (1.) They are all of one heavenly Father, and that is, God. God is the Father of Christ by eternal generation, and by miraculous conception; of Christians by adoption and regeneration. (2.) They are of one earthly father. (3.) They hold the same human nature. (4.) Of one Spirit, holy and heavenly disposition; the same mind is in them that was in Christ, though not in the same measure; the same Spirit informs and actuates the Head and all the members.

2. Into an endearing relation. This results from the union. And here first he declares what this relation is, and then he quotes three texts out of the Old Testament to illustrate and prove it. (1.) He declares what this relation is; he and believers being all of one, he therefore is not ashamed to call them brethren. Observe, [1.] Christ and believers are brethren; not only bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, but spirit of his Spirit; brethren by the whole blood, in what is heavenly as well as in what is earthly. [2.] Christ is not ashamed to own this relation; he is not ashamed to call them brethren, which is wonderful goodness and condescension in him, considering their meanness by nature, and vileness by sin; but he will never be ashamed of any that are not ashamed of him, and who take care not to be a shame and reproach to him and to themselves. (2.) He illustrates this from three texts of scripture. The first is out of Ps. 22. 22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praises unto thee. This psalm was an eminent prophecy of Christ; it begins with his words on the cross, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me? Now here it is foretold, [1.] That Christ should have a church or congregation, in the world, a company of volunteers, freely willing to follow him. [2.] That these should not only be brethren to one another, but to Christ himself. [3.] That he would declare his Father's name to them and his brethren, his mind and will; this he did in his own person, while he dwelt among us, and by his Spirit poured out upon his disciples, enabling them to spread the knowledge of God in the world from one generation to another, to the end of the world. [4.] That Christ would sing praises to his Father in the church. The glory of the Father was what Christ had in his eye; his heart was set upon it, he laid out himself for it, and he would have his people to join with him in it.

The second scripture is quoted from Ps. 18. 2. And again, I will put my trust in him. That psalm sets forth the troubles that David, as a type of Christ, met with, and how he in all his troubles put his trust in God. Now this shews, that beside his divine nature, which needed no supports, he was to take and transfer upon him, he would want those supports which no other God could give. He suffered and trusted as our Head and President. Owe in locum. His brethren must suffer and trust too.

The third scripture is taken from Isa. 8. 18. Behold, I and the children which God hath given me. This proves Christ really and truly Man, for parents and children are of the same nature; children were given him, in the fulness of his eternal love, and that covenant of peace that was between them. And they are given to Christ at their conversion. When they take hold of his covenant, then Christ receives them, rules over them, rejoices in them, perfects all their affairs, takes them up to heaven, and there presents them to his Father, Behold, I and the children which thou hast given me.

14. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; 15. And deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage. 16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. 17. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people: 18. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

Here the apostle proceeds to assert the incarnation of Christ, as taking upon him not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham; and he shew's the reason and design of his so doing.

I. That Christ was thus asserted; (v. 16.) Verily he took upon him not the nature of angels, but he took upon him the seed of Abraham. He took part of flesh and blood; though as God he pre-existed from all eternity, yet in the fulness of time he took our nature into union with his divine nature, and became really and truly Man. He did not lay hold of angels, but he laid hold of the seed of Abraham. The angels fell, and he left them go, and lie under the descent, divestment, and dominion of their sin, without hope or help. Christ never designed to be the Saviour of the fallen angels; as their tree fell, so it lies, and must lie to eternity, and therefore he did not assume their nature; the nature of angels could not be an atoning sacrifice for the sin of man. Now Christ resolving to recover the seed of Abraham, and raise them up from their fallen state, he laid upon him the human nature from one descended from the line of Abraham, that the same that had sinned, might suffer, to restore human nature to a state of hope and trial; and all that accepted of mercy, to a state of special favour and salvation. Now there is hope and help for the chief of sinners in and through Christ. Here is a price paid sufficient for all, and suitable to all, for it was in our nature. Let us all then know the day of our gracious visitation, and improve that distinguishing mercy which has been shown to fallen men, not to the fallen angels.

II. The reasons and designs of the incarnation of Christ are declared, 1. Because the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he must take part of the same, and be made like his brethren, v. 14, 15. For no higher nor lower nature than man's that had sinned, could so suffer for the sin of man as to satisfy the justice of God, and Christ is to a state of hope, and make believers the children of God, and so brethren to Christ. 2. He became Man, that he might die; as God, he could not die, and therefore he assumes another nature and state. Here the wonderful love of God appeared, that, when Christ knew what he must suffer in our nature, and how he must die in it, yet he consecutively took it upon him. The legal sacrifices and offerings God could not accept as a propitiation; a body was prepared for Christ, and he said, I do. I come, I delight to do thy will. 3. That through death he might destroy him... that had the power of death, that is, the Devil, v. 14.

The Devil was the first sinner, and the first tempter to sin, and sin was the procuring cause of death; and he may be said to have the power of death, as he draws men into sin, the ways whereby are death, and as he is often permitted to terrify the consciences of men with the fear of death, and as he is the execcrator of human sin, he casts their souls from their bodies to the tribunal of God, there to receive their doom; and then being their tormentor, as he was before their tempter; in these respects he may be said to have had the power of death. But now Christ has so far destroyed him who had the power of death, that he can keep none under the power of spiritual death; nor can he draw any into sin, (the procuring cause of death,) nor make them the subject of any form, nor execute the sentence upon any but those who choose and continue to be his willing slaves, and persist in their enmity to God.
4. That he might deliver his own people from the slavish fear of death that they are often subject to.
This may refer to the Old Testament saints, who were more under a spirit of bondage, because life and immortality were not so fully brought to light as they are to the New. Christ had delivered them from all the people of God, whether under the Old Testament or the New, whose minds are often in perplexing fears about death and eternity. Christ became Man, and died, to deliver them from those perplexities of soul, by letting them know that death is not only a conquered enemy, but a reconciled friend, not sent to hurt the soul, or separate it from the love of God, but to put an end to all their grievances and complaints, and to give them a passage to eternal life and blessedness; that death now to them is not in the hand of Satan, but in the hand of Christ; not Satan's servant, but Christ's servant, has not hell following it, but heaven to all who are in Christ. 5. Christ must be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to the justice and honour of God, and to the support and comfort of his people. He must be faithful to God, and mercicful to men.

1. In things pertaining to God, to his justice, and to his honour; to make reconciliation for the sins of the people, to make all the attributes of the divine nature, and all the persons subsisting therein, harmonize in man's recovery, and fully to reconcile God and man. Observe, [1.] There was a great breach and quarrel between God and man; he required the ransom of men. [2.] Christ, by becoming Man and dying, has taken up the quarrel, and made reconciliation so far, that God is ready to receive all into favour and friendship, who come to him through Christ.

2. In things pertaining to his people, to their support and comfort; (v. 18.) In that he suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted. [1.] Christ, as Man, was tempted, he suffered being tempted; and his temptations were not the least part of his sufferings, he was in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin, ch. 4. 15.
[2.] Christ's compassion—he is able to succour them that are tempted. He is touched with a feeling of our infirmities, a sympathizing Physician, tender and skilful; he knows how to deal with tempted, sorrowing men, because he has had the experience of the same disease, not of sin, but of temptation and trouble of soul. The remembrance of his own sorrows and temptations makes him mindful of the trials of his people, and ready to help them. Here observe, First, The best of Christians are subject to temptations, to many temptations, while in this world; let us never count upon an absolute freedom from temptations in this world. Secondly, Temptations bring our souls into such distress and danger, that they need support and succour. Thirdly, Christ is ready and willing to succour those who under their temptations apply themselves to him; and he became Man, and was tempted, that he might be ever way qualified to succour his people.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter, the apostle applies what he said, in the chapter foregoing, concerning the priesthood of Christ. 1.
In a serious pathetic exhortation, that this great High Priest, who was discovered to them, might be seriously considered, and approved, and every man might be continued in the Christian profession, v. 1. — 6. He then adds many weighty counsels and cautions, from v. 7, to the end.

1. WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; 2. Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house. 3. For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, in as much as he who hath built the house, hath more honour than the house. 4. For every house is builded by some man, but he that built all things, is God. 5. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testi mony of those things which were to be spoken after; 6. But Christ as a Son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

In these verses we have the application of that doctrine laid down in the close of the last chapter, concerning the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ.
And observe,
1. The honourable compulsion used toward those to whom he wrote; Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling; (1.) Brethren, not only spiritual brethren, but brethren of Christ, in him hebrethren to all the saints; all the people of Christ, and should love and live like brethren.
(2.) Holy brethren; holy not only in profession and title, but in principle and practice, in heart and life. This has been turned by some into scorn;
"These," say they, "are the holy brethren;" but it is dangerous jesting with such edge-tools; be not mockers, lest your bands be made strong. Let those who are this drawn near, labour to be holy brethren indeed, and approve themselves so to God; and they need not to be ashamed of the title, nor dread the scoffs of the profane. The day is coming, when those that make this a term of reproach, would count it their greatest honour and happiness to be taken into this sacred brotherhood.
(5.) Partakers of the heavenly calling; partakers of the name of grace, and of the Spirit of grace, that came from heaven, and by which Christians are effectually called out of darkness into marvellous light; that calling which brings down heaven into the souls of men, raises them up to a heavenly temper and conversation, and prepares them to live for ever with God in heaven.

2. The titles he gives to Christ, whom he would have them consider;
(1.) As the Apostle of our profession, the prime Minister, of the gospel-church, a Messenger, and a Principal Messenger, sent of God to men, upon the most important errand, the great Revealer of that faith which we profess to hold, and of that hope which we profess to have. (2.) Not only the Apostle, but the High Priest too, of our profession, the Chief Officer of the Old Testament as well as that for the church under each dispensation, upon whose satisfaction and intercession we profess to depend for pardon of sin, and acceptance with God. (3.) As Christ, the Messiah anointed and every way qualified for the office both of Apostle and High Priest. (4.) As Jesus, our Saviour, our Healer, the Great Physician of souls, typified by the brazen serpent that Moses lifted up in the wilderness, that those who were stung by the fiery serpents, might look to him, and be saved.

II. We have the duty we owe to him who bears all these high and honorable titles, and that is, to consider him as thus characterized. Consider what he is in himself, what he is to us, and what he will be to us hereafter and for ever; consider him, fix your thoughts upon him with the greatest attention, and act towards him as Jesus, the Author and Finisher of your faith. Here observe,

1. Many that profess faith in Christ, have not a due consideration for him; he is not so much thought of as he deserves to be, and desires to be, by those that expect salvation from him. 2. Close and serious consideration of Christ would be of great advantage to us, to increase our acquaintance with him, and to engage our love and our obedience to him, and reliance on him. 3. Even those that are holy brethren, or the people of the heavenly calling, have need to stir up one another to think more of Christ than they do, to have him more in their minds; the best of his people think too seldom and too slightly of him. 4. We must consider Christ as he is described to us in the scriptures, and form our apprehensions of him from thence, not from any vain conceptions and fancies of our own.

III. We have several arguments drawn up to enforce this duty of considering Christ the Apostle and High Priest of our profession. The first is taken from his fidelity, v. 2. He was faithful to him that appointed him, as Moses was in all his house. 1. Christ is an appointed Mediator; God the Father has sent and scaled him to that office, and therefore his mediation is acceptable to the Father. 2. He is faithful to that appointment, punctually observing all the rules and orders of his mediation, and fully executing the trust reposed in him by his Father and by his people. 3. That he is as faithful to him that appointed him, as Moses was in all his house. Moses was faithful in the discharge of his office to the Jewish church in the Old Testament, and so is Christ under the New; this was a proper argument to urge upon the Jews, who had so high an opinion of Moses, to live up to all he had been, as was but typical of Christ's. Another argument is taken from the superior glory and excellence of Christ above Moses; (v. 5–6) therefore they were more obliged to consider Christ. (1.) Christ was a Maker of the house, Moses but a member in it. By the house we are to understand the church of God, the people of God incorporated together under Christ, the Head and High Priest, and other subordinate officers, according to his law, observing his institutions. Christ is the Maker of this house of the church in all ages: Moses was a minister in the house, he was instrumental under Christ, in governing and edifying the house, but Christ is the Maker of all things; for he is God, and no one less than God could build the church, either lay the foundation, or carry on the superstructure. No less power was requisite to make the church than to make the world; the world was made out of nothing, the church made out of materials altogether unfit for such a building. Christ, who is God, drew the platform of the church, provided the materials, and by almighty power disposed them to receive the form; he has compacted and united this his house, has settled the orders of it, and crowned all with his glory and majesty, in the highest state of honor that the children of God can enjoy. (2.) Christ was the Master of this house, as well as the Maker, v. 6. This house is styled his house, as the Son of God. Moses was only a faithful servant, for a testimony of those things that were to be spoken after; Christ, as the eternal Son of God, is the rightful Owner and Sovereign Ruler of the church. Moses was only a typical governor, and representative of all things relating to the church, which would be more clearly, completely, and comfortably revealed in the gospel by the Spirit of Christ; and therefore Christ is worthy of more glory than Moses, and of greater regard and consideration. This argument the apostle concludes, [1.] With a comfortable accommodation of it to himself and all true believers; (v. 6.) whose house we are; each of us personally, as we are the members of the Holy Church, and Christ dwells in us by faith; all of us jointly, as we are united by the bonds of graces, truths, ordinances, gospel-discipline, and devotions. [2.] With a characteristic description of those persons who constitute this house; "if we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm to the end; if we maintain a bold and open profession of the truths of the gospel, upon which our hopes of grace and glory are built, and live upon and up to those hopes, so as to have a hearty rejoicing in them, which shall abide firm to the end, notwithstanding all that we may meet with in so doing." So that you see there must not only be a setting out well in the ways of Christ, but a steady fastness and perseverance therein unto the end. We have here a direction what those must do, who would partake of the dignity and privileges of the household of Christ. First, They must take the truths of the gospel into their heads and hearts. Secondly, They must build their hopes of happiness upon those truths. Thirdly, They must make an open profession of those truths. Fourthly, They must live so up to them as to keep their evidences clear, and may rejoice in hope, and then they must in all perseverance to the end. In a word, they must walk closely, comfortably, courageously, and consistently, for the faith and practice of the gospel, that their Master, when he comes, may own and approve them.

7. Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day if ye will hear his voice, 8. Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness; 9. When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works, forty years. 10. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. 11. So I sware in my wrath, They shall not enter into my rest.) Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. 12. But exhort one another daily while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. 13. For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end; 15. While it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. 16. For some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses. 17. But with whom was he grieved forty years? Was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcases fell in the wilderness? 18. And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? 19. So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

Here the apostle proceeds, pressing upon them serious counsels and cautions, to the close of the chapter; and he recites a passage out of Ps. 95. 7, &c. where observe,

I. What he counsels them to—give a speedy and present attention to the call of Christ. “Hear his voice, assent to, approve of, and consider, what God in Christ speaks unto you; apply it to yourselves with suitable affections and endeavours, and set about it this very day, for to-morrow it may be too late.”

II. What he cautions them against—hardening their hearts, turning the deaf ear to the calls and counsels of Christ. “When he calleth you;” When, i.e. if, they hear the voice of God through Christ or his word, they should not harden their hearts. The hardness of sin, the excellency of holiness, the necessity of receiving him by faith as your Saviour, do not shut your ear and heart against such a voice as this.”

III. Whose example he warns them by—that of the Israelites their fathers in the wilderness, as in the provocation and day of temptation; this refers to that remarkable passage Massah Meribah, Exod. 17. 7-8. Observe,

1. Days of temptation are often days of provocation. 2. To provoke God, when he is trying us, and letting us see that we entirely depend and immediately live upon him, is a provocation with a witness. 3. The hardening of our hearts is the spring of all our other sins. 4. The sins of others, especially our relations, should be a warning to us. Our fathers’ sins and punishments should be remembered by us, to deter us from following their evil example. Now as to the sin of the fathers of the Jews, here reflected upon, observe, (1.) The state in which these fathers were, when they thus sinned; they were in the wilderness, brought out of Egypt, but not got into Canaan, the thoughts wherof should have restrained them from sin. (2.) The sin they were guilty of; they tempted and provoked God; they distrusted God, murmured against Moses, and would not attend to the voice of God. (3.) The aggravations of their sin; they sinned in the wilderness, where they had a more immediate dependence upon God; they sinned when God was trying them; they sinned when they saw his works—works of wonder wrought for their deliverance out of Egypt, and their support and supply in the wilderness from day to day. They continued thus to sin against God forty years. These were their present aggravations. (4.) The source and spring of such aggravations which were, [1.] They erred in their hearts; and these heart-errors produced many other errors in their lips and lives. [2.] They did not know God’s ways, though he had walked before them; they did not know his ways; neither those ways of his providence, in which he had walked toward them, nor those ways of his precepts, in which they ought to have walked toward God; they did not observe either his providences or his ordinances in a right manner. (5.) The just and great resentment God had at their sins, and yet the great patience he exercised toward them; (v. 10.) Wherefore I am grieved with that generation. Note, [1.] All sin, especially sin committed by God’s professing privileged people, does not only anger and afford God, but it grieves him. [2.] God is loth to destroy his people in or for their sin, he waits long to be gracious to them. [3.] God keeps an exact account of the time that people go on sinning against him, and in grieving him by their sins; but at length, if they by their sins continue to grieve the Spirit of God, their sins shall be made grievous to their own spirits, either in a way of judgment or mercy. (6.) The irreversible doom passed upon them at last for their sins. God, in the midst of his wrath, that should not enter into his rest; the rest either of an earthly or of a heavenly Canaan. Observe, [1.] Sin, long continued in, will kindle the divine wrath, and make it flame out against sinners. [2.] God’s wrath will discover itself in its righteous resolution to destroy the impenitent; he will swear in his wrath, not rashly, but righteously, and his wrath will make their condition a restless condition; there is no resting under the wrath of God.

IV. What use the apostle makes of their awful example, v. 12, 13, &c. He gives the Hebrews a proper caution, and enforces it with an affectionate compellation.

1. He gives the Hebrews a proper caution; the word is, Take heed, βραται—look to it; “Look about you; be upon your guard against enemies both within and without.” When he calls you, he calls you with a view to see what kept many of your forefathers out of Canaan, and made their carcases fall in the wilderness; take heed lest you fall into the same sin and snare and dreadful sentence. For you see Christ is head of the church, a much greater person than Moses, and your contempt of him must be a greater sin than their contempt of Moses; and so you are in danger of falling under a severer sentence than they. Observe, The ruin of others should be warnings to us to take heed of the rock they split upon; Israel’s fall should for ever be a warning to all who come after them; for all these things happened to them for ensamples. (1 Cor. 10. 11.) and should be remembered by us. Take heed; all who would get safe to heaven must look about them.

2. He enforces the admonition with an affectionate compellation; “Brethren, not only in the flesh, but in the spirit, to whom I love, and for whose welfare I labour and long.” And here he enlarges upon the matter of the admonition; Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. Where observe, (1.) A heart of unbelief is an evil heart. Unbelief is a great sin, it vitriolizes the heart of man. (2.) An evil heart of unbelief is at the bottom of all our sinful departures from God; it is a leading step to apostasy; if we are allowed to depart to distrust God, we may soon desert him. (3.) Christian brethren have need to be cautioned against apostasy. Let them that think they stand, take heed lest they fall.

3. He subjoins good counsel to the caution, and advises them to that which would be a remedy against this evil heart of unbelief—that they should carefully observe one another’s hearts. Observe, v. 13. Observe, (1.) We should be doing all the good we can to one another while we are together, which will be but a short and uncertain time. (2.) Since to-morrow is none of our’s, we must make the best improvement of this day. (3.) If Christians do not exeunt one another daily, they will be in danger of being hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Note, [1.] There is a great deal of deceitfulness in sin; it appears fair, but is filthy; it appears pleasant, but is pernicious; it promises much, but performs nothing. [2.] The deceitfulness of sin is of a hardening nature to the soul; one sin allowed prepares for another; every act of sin confirms the habit; sinning against conscience is the way to weary the conscience; and therefore it should be the great concern of every one to exhort himself and others to beware of sin.

4. He comforts those who not only set out well, but hold on well, and hold out to the end; (v. 14.) We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end. Here observe, (1.) The saints' privilege; they are made partakers of Christ, that is, of the spirit, nature, graces, righteousness, and life of Christ; they are interested in all that is Christ's, in all that he is, in all that he has done, or can do. (2.) The danger with which that privilege, and that is, their perseverance in the bold and open profession and practice of Christ and Christianity unto the end. Not but they shall persevere, being kept by the mighty power of God through faith to salvation, but to be pressed thus to it, is one means by which Christ helps his people to persevere. This tends to make them watchful and diligent, and so keeps them from apostasy.

5. The apostle resumes what he had said before from Ps. 95. 7, &c. and he applies it close to those of that generation, v. 15, 16, &c. While it is said, To-day if ye will hear, &c. as if he should say, ‘What was recited before from that scripture, belonged not only to former ages, but to you now, and to all who shall come after you; that you heed you fall not into the same sins, lest you fall under the same condemnation.’ The apostle tells them, that though some who had heard the voice of God, did provoke him, yet all did not so. Observe, (1.) Though the majority of hearers provoked God by unbelief, yet some there were who believed the report. (2.) Though the hearing of the word be the ordinary means of salvation, yet, if it be not hearkened to, it will expose men more to the anger of God. (3.) God will have a remnant that shall be obedient to his voice, and he will take care of such, and make mention of them with honour. (4.) If these should fall in a common calamity, yet they shall partake of eternal salvation, while disobedient hearers perish for ever.

6. And Lastly, The apostle puts some queries upon what had been before mentioned, and gives proper answers to them; (v. 17—19.) How he who was forty years? With them that sinned. And to whom did he swear? &c. From whence observe, (1.) God is only grieved with those of his people who sin against him, and continue in sin. (2.) God is grieved and provoked most by sins publicly committed by the generality of a nation; when sin becomes epidemic, it is most provoking. (3.) God grieved and provoked most by sins committed with the weight of general and prevailing wickedness; yet he will at length cease himself of public offenders by public judgments. (4.) Unbelief (and rebellion which is the consequent of it) is the great damning sin of the world, especially of those who have a revelation of the mind and will of God. This sin shuts up the heart of God, and shuts up the gate of heaven, against them; it lays them under the wrath and curse of God, and leaves them there; so that in truth and justice to himself he is obliged to cast them off for ever.

CHAP. IV.

The apostle, having in the chapter foregoing set forth the sin and punishment of the ancient Jews, proceeds in this, I. To declare that our privileges by Christ under the gospel exceed the privileges of the Jewish church under Moses, as a reason why we should make a right improvement of them, v. 1—4. II. He assigns the cause why the ancient Hebrews did not profit by their religious privileges, v. 2. Then, III. Confirms the privileges of those who persevere, and the consequences of those who continue in unbelief, v. 3—10. IV. Concludes with proper and powerful arguments and motives to faith and obedience.

1. Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. For we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, If they shall enter into my rest; although the works were finished from the foundation of the world. For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, And God did rest the seventh day from all his works. And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest. Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief: (Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, To-day, after so long a time; as it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.)

Here, 1. The apostle declares that our privileges by Christ under the gospel are not only as great, but greater than those enjoyed under the Mosaic law. He specifies this, that we have a promise left us of entering into his rest; that is, of entering into a covenant relation to Christ, and a state of communion with God through Christ, and of growing up therein, till we are made partakers of glory. We have discoveries of this rest, and proposals, and the best directions how we may attain unto it. This promise of spiritual rest is a promise left us by the Lord Jesus Christ in his last will and testament, as a precious legacy. Our business is to see to it, that we be the legates; that we lay our claim to that rest and freedom from the dominion of sin, Satan, and the flesh, by our most humble and lowly subjection, and deprival of the true rest of the soul, and may be also set free from the yoke of the law and all the toilsome ceremonies and services of it, and may enjoy peace with God in his ordinances and providences, and in our own consciences, and so have the prospect and earnest of perfect and everlasting rest in heaven. 2. He demonstrates the truth of his assertion, that we have as great advantages as they. For, says he, (v. 2.) To us was the gospel preached as well as unto them; the same gospel for substance was preached under both Testaments, though not so clearly; not in so comfortable a manner under the Old as under the New. The best privileges the ancient Jews had, were, their gospel-privileges; the sacrifices and ceremonies of the Old Testament were the gospel of that dispensation; and whatever was excellent in it, was, the respect it had to Christ. Now if this was their highest privilege, we are not inferior to them; for we have the gospel as well as they, and in greater purity and perspicuity than they had.

3. He assigns the reason why so few of the ancient Jews profited by that dispensation of the gospel; the word preached did not profit them because it was not mixed with faith in them that heard him, v. 2. Observe, (1.) That the word is preached to us, that we may profit by it, that we may gain spiritual riches by it; it is a price put into our hands to get wisdom, the rich endowment of the soul. (2.) There have been in all ages a great many unprofitable hearers; many who seem to deal much in seriousness, in securing the word of God, but gain nothing to their souls thereby; and they who are not gainers by hearing, are great losers. (3.) That which is at the bottom of all our unprofitableness under the word, is, our unbelief; we do not mix faith with what we hear; it is faith in the hearer that is the life of the word. Though the preacher believes the gospel, and endeavours to mix faith with his preaching, and earnestly labours to make it the word of grace, yet if the hearers have not faith in their souls to mix with the word, they will be never the better for it. This faith must mingle with every word, and be in act and exercise while we are hearing; and when we have heard the word, assenting to the truth of it, approving of it, accepting the mercy offered, applying the word to ourselves with suitable affections, then we shall find great profit and gain by the word preached.

4. On these considerations the apostle grounds his repeated and earnest caution and counsel, that they who enjoy the gospel should maintain a holy fear and jealousy over themselves, lest latent unbelief should rob them of the benefit of the word, and of that spiritual rest that is discovered and tendered in the gospel; (v. 1.) Let us fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. Observe, (1.) That all the glory and rest that are attainable by all under the gospel: there is an offer, and a promise to those who shall accept the offer. (2.) Those who may attain them, may also fall short. They who might have attained salvation by faith, may fall short by unbelief. (3.) It is a dreadful thing so much as to seem to fall short of the gospel-salvation, to seem to themselves, to lose their comfortable hope; and to seem so to others, so losing the honour of their holy profession. But if it be so dreadful to seem to fall short of this rest, it is much more dreadful really to fall short. Such a disappointment must be fatal. (4.) One good mean to prevent either our real falling short, or seeming to fall short, is, to maintain a holy and religious fear lest we should fall short. This will make us vigilant and diligent, sincere and serious; this will put us upon exerting our faith, and exercising it; whereas presumption is the high road to ruin.

5. The apostle confirms the happiness of all those who truly believe the gospel; and that he does, (1.) By asserting so positively the truth of it, from the experience of himself and others; (v. 3.) "We who have believed, do enter into rest. We enter into a blessed union with Christ, and into a communion with God through Christ; in this state we actually enjoy many sweet communications of pardon of sin, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, increase of grace and earnest of glory, resting from the servitude of sin, and reposing ourselves in God till we are prepared to rest with him in heaven." (2.) He illustrates and confirms it, that no one who believes, are thus happy, and do enter into rest. [1.] From God's finishing his work of creation, and so entering into his rest, (v. 3, 4.) appointing our first parents to rest the seventh day, to rest in God. Now as God finished his work, and then rested from it, and acquitted in it, so he will cause those who believe, to finish their work, and then to enjoy their rest. [2.] From God's continuing the covenants of the Sabbath after the Fall, and the revelation of a Redeemer. They were to keep the seventh day a holy sabbath to the Lord, wherein praising him who had raised them up out of nothing by creating power, and praying to him that he would create them anew by his Spirit of grace, and direct their faith to the promised Redeemer and Restorer of all things, by which faith they find rest in their souls. [3.] From God's proposing Canaan as a typical rest for the Jews who believed: and as those who did believe, Caleb and Joshua, did actually enter into Canaan; so those who now believe, shall enter into rest. [4.] From the certainty of another rest besides that seventh day of rest instituted and observed both before and after the Fall, and besides that typical Canaan—rest which most of the Jews fell short of by unbelief; for the Psalmist has spoken of another day of rest that is to come, on which there is a rest, that is better than that; there is a more spiritual and excellent sabbath remaining for the people of God, than that into which Joshua led the Jews; (v. 6—9.) and this rest remaining is, First, A rest of grace and comfort and holiness in the gospel-state. This is the rest wherewith the Lord Jesus, our Joshua, causes weary souls and awakened consciences to rest, and this is the refreshing. Secondly, A rest in glory; the everlasting sabbath of rest, which is the repose and perfection of nature and grace too, where the people of God shall enjoy the end of their faith and the Object of all their desires. [5.] This is further proved from the glorious Fore-runners who have actually taken possession of this rest—God and Christ. It is certain that God, after the creating of the world in six days, entered into his rest; and it is certain that Christ, when he had finished the work of his redemptive office, and his work of redemption, and dead these were not only examples, but earnests, that believers shall enter into their rest; (v. 10.) He that hath entered into rest, has also ceased from his own works as God did from his. Every true believer hath ceased from his own works of sin, from relying on his own works of righteousness, and from the burthensome works of the law; as God and Christ have ceased from their works of creation and redemption.

6. The apostle confirms the misery of those who do not believe: they shall never enter into this spiritual rest, either of grace here or glory hereafter. This is as certain as the word and oath of God can make it; as sure as God is entered into his rest, so sure it is that obstinate unbelievers shall be excluded; as sure as the unbelieving Jews fell in the wilderness, so sure are the unbelievers of this present age, that unbelievers shall fall into destruction, and never reach heaven; as sure as Joshua, the great captain of the Jews, could not give them possession of Canaan because of their unbelief, notwithstanding his eminent valour and conduct, so sure it is that even Jesus himself, the Captain of our salvation, notwithstanding all that fulness of grace and strength that dwelleth in him, will not admit, give to find unbelievers either spiritual or eternal rest; it remains only for the people of God; others by their sin abandon themselves to eternal restlessness.
11. Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. 12. For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. 13. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. 14. Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

15. For we have not a high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. 16. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

In this latter part of the chapter the apostle concludes, first with a serious repeated exhortation, and then with proper and powerful motives.

1. Here we have a serious exhortation; (v. 11.) Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest. Observe, 1. The end proposed—rest spiritual and eternal; the rest of grace here, and glory hereafter, in Christ on earth, with Christ in heaven. 2. The way to this end prescribed—labour, diligent labour; this is the only way to rest; they who will not work now, shall not rest hereafter. After due and diligent labour, sweet, and satisfying rest shall follow; and labour now will make that rest more pleasant when it comes; the sleep of the labouring man is sweet, Eccl. 5. 12. Let us therefore labour, let us all agree, and be unanimous in this, and let us quicken one another, and call upon one another, to this diligence. It is the truest act of friendship, when we see our fellow-Christians labour, to call upon them to mind their business, and labour at it in earnest. "Come, Sirs, let us all go to work; why do we sit still? Why do we loiter? Come, let us labour, now is our working time, our rest remains." Thus should Christians call upon themselves, and one another, to be diligent in duty; and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

2. Here we have proper and powerful motives to make the advice effectual, which are drawn, 1. From the dreadful example of those who have already perished by unbelief—lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. To have seen so many fall before us, will be a great aggravation of our sin, if we will not take warning by them: their ruin calls loudly upon us; their lost and restless souls cry to us from their torments, that we do not, by sinning as they did, make ourselves miserable as they are. 2. From the great help and advantage we may have from the word of God to strengthen our faith, and excite our diligence, that we may obtain this rest; (v. 12.) The word of God is quick and powerful. By the word of God we may understand either the essential or the written word; the essential Word, that in the beginning was with God, and was God. (John 1. 1.) the Lord Jesus Christ, and indeed what is said in this verse is true concerning him; but most understood it of the written word, the holy scriptures, which are the word of God. Now of this word it is said, (1.) That it is quick; it is very lively and active, in all its efforts, in seizing the conscience of the sinner, in cutting him to the heart, and in comforting him, and binding up the wounds of the soul. They know not the word of God, who call it a dead letter, as the Papists and the Quakers.

see whether they were sound at heart; so all things are thus dissected, and lie open to the piercing eye of our great High Priest. And he who now tries our sacrifices, will at length, as Judge, try our state. We shall have, doth him as one who will determine our everlasting state. Some read the words, to whom with us there is an account or reckoning. Christ has an exact account of us all; he has accounted for all who believe on him; and he will account with all; our accounts are before him. This omniscience of Christ, and the account we owe to ourselves, should engage us to live hereafter with the same fidelity, as he has kept account of all our affairs. (2) We have an account of the excellency and perfection of Christ, as to his office, and this particular office of our High Priest. The apostle first instructs Christians in the knowledge of their High Priest, what kind of Priest he is, and then puts them in mind of the duty they owe on this account.

What a kind of High Priest Christ is; (p. 14.) Seeing we have such a High Priest: that is, First, A great High Priest, much greater than Aaron, or any of the priests of his order. The high priests under the law were accounted great and venerable persons; but they were but faint types and shadows of Christ. The greatness of our High Priest is set forth, 1. By his being passed into the heavens. The high-priest under the law, once a year, in the last day of the year, went into the holy of all, where were the sacred signals of the presence of God; but Christ once for all is passed into the heavens, to take the government of all upon him, to send the Spirit to prepare a place for his people, and to make intercession for them. Christ executed one part of his priesthood on earth, in dying for us; the other he executes in heaven, by pleading the cause, and presenting the prayers of his people. 2. The greatness of Christ is set forth by his name, Jesus; a Physician and a Saviour, and one of a divine nature, the Son of God by eternal generation; and therefore, having divine perfection, able to save to the uttermost all who come to God by him. Secondly, He is not only a great, but a gracious High Priest, merciful, compassionate, and sympathizing with his people, v. 15. We have not a High Priest of flesh, to draw near to our infirmities, v. 16. But we have a Physician to draw near to our infirmities, feeling of our infirmities. Though he is so great, and so far above us, yet he is very kind, and tenderly concerned for us; he is touched with the feeling of our infirmities in such a manner as none else can be; for he was himself tried with all the affliction and trouble that are incident to our nature in its fallen state; and this not only that he might be able to satisfy for us, but to sympathize with us. But then, Thirdly, He is a sinless High Priest. He was in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin. He was tempted by Satan, but he came off without sin. We seldom meet with temptations but they give us some shock. We are apt to give back, though we do not yield; but our great High Priest came off clear in his encounter with the Devil, who could neither find any sin in him, nor fix any stain upon him. He was tried severally; Father. It pleased the Lord to bruise him; and yet he sinned not, either in thought, word, or deed. He had done no violence, neither was there any deceit in his mouth. He was holy, harmless, and undefiled; and such a High Priest became us. Having thus told us what a one our High Priest is, the apostle proceeds to shew us, [2.] How we should demean ourselves toward him.

First, Let us hold fast our profession of faith in him, v. 14. Let us never deny him, never be ashamed of him before men. Let us hold fast the enlightening doctrines of Christianity in our heads, the enlivening principles of it in our hearts, the open profession of it in our lips, and our practical and universal subscription to it in our lives. Observe here, 1. We ought to be possessed of the doctrines, principles, and spirit of the Christian life. We are so, we may be in danger of losing our hold, from the corruption of our hearts, the temptations of Satan, and the allurements of this evil world. 3. The excellency of the High Priest of our profession would make our apostasy from him most heinous and inexusable, it would be the greatest folly and the basest ingratitude. 4. Christians must not only set out well, but they must hold out; they who endure to the end, shall be saved, and none but they. Secondly, We should encourage ourselves by the excellency of our High Priest, to come boldly to the throne of grace, v. 16. Where observe, 1. There is a throne of grace set up; a way of worship instituted, in which God may with honour meet poor sinners, and treat with them, and they may with hope draw nigh to him, repeating and believing. God might have set up a tribunal of strict and inexorable justice, dispensing death, the wages of sin, to all who are convicted before it; but he has chosen to set up a throne of grace. A throne speaks authority, and bespeaks awe and reverence. A throne of grace speaks great encouragement even to the chief of sinners. There grace reigns, and acts with sovereign freedom, power and bounty. 2. It is our duty and interest to be often found before this throne, waiting on the Lord in all the duties of his worship, private and public. It is good for us to be there. 3. Our business and errand at the throne of grace should be, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. Mercy and grace are the things we want; mercy to pardon all our sins, and grace to purify our souls. 4. That the daily dependence we have upon God for present supplies, the assurance we have of his grace and mercy, the wisdom and guidance of his counsel, the wisdom and benevolence of his providence, the wisdom and strength of his assistance, and the wisdom and interest of his grace, will be great encouragements to bring our requests before his throne, and to receive the Divine answer in faith, or by faith, and at last in fullness. 5. We should apply ourselves with a strong and continual endeavor to come in the state of prayer, and in the state of a heart in faith; being not afraid or ashamed to bring our requests before the throne of grace; being not ashamed to own the Lord as our own Father, or our own God, and to bring our requests before him. 6. That the office of Christ, as being our High Priest, and such a High Priest, should be the ground of our confidence in all our approaches to the throne of grace. Had we not a Mediator, we could have no boldness in coming to God; for we are guilty and polluted creatures; all we do is polluted; we cannot go into the presence of God alone; we must either go in the hand of Christ, or with him as our Advocate, and our intercessor, and our friend, and our surety. We have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus; he is our Advocate, and while he pleads for his people, he pleads with his price in his hand, by which he purchased all that our souls want or can desire.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, the apostle continues his discourse upon the priesthood of Christ, a sweet subject, which he would not too soon dismiss. And here, 1. He explains the nature of the priestly office in general, v. 1. 3. II. The requisite qualifications for the work, v. 7. 9. IV. The peculiar order of the priesthood of Christ; it was not after the order of Aaron, but of Melchisedec, v. 6, 7, 10. V. He reproves the Hebrews, that they had not made those improvements in knowledge, which might have made them capable of looking into the more abstruse and mysterious parts of Scripture, v. 11, 12.

I. For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men, in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: 2. Who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity: 3. And by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins. 4. And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron: 5. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. 6. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

7. Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard, in that he feared; 3. Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; 9. And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; 1. We have here an account of the nature of the priestly office in general, though with an accommodation to the Lord Jesus Christ; where we are told what kind of being the High Priest must be. He must be taken from among men; he must be a man, one of ourselves, bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh, and spirit of our spirits, a partaker of our nature, and a standard-bearer among ten thousand. This includes, 1. That man had sinned. 2. That God would not admit sinful man to come to him immediately and alone, without a High Priest, who must be taken from among men. 3. That God was pleased to take one from among men, by whom they might approach God in holiness, and he might receive them with honour. 4. That every one shall now be welcome to God, that comes to him by this High Priest.

II. For whom every High Priest is ordained—men in things pertaining to God, for the glory of God and the good of men, that he might come between God and man. So Christ did; and therefore let us never attempt to go to God but through Christ; nor expect any favour from God but through Christ.

III. For what purpose was every High Priest ordained—by what may be offered to God and his services for sin. 1. That he might offer gifts, or free-will offerings, brought to the High Priest, so offered for the glory of God, and as an acknowledgment that our all is of him and from him; we have nothing but what he is pleased to give us, and of his own we offer to him an obligation of acknowledgment. This intimates, (1.) That all we bring to God must be free and not forced; it must be given and not taken away again. (2.) That all we bring to God must go through the High Priest's hands, as the great Agent between God and man. 2. That he might offer sacrifices for sin; that is, the offerings that were appointed to make atonement, that sin might be pardoned, and sinners accepted. Thus Christ is constituted a High Priest for both these ends. Our good deeds must be presented by Christ, to render ourselves and them acceptable; and our ill deeds must be expiated by the sacrifice of himself, that they may not condemn and destroy us. And now as we value acceptance with God and pardon, we must apply ourselves by faith to this our great High Priest.

IV. How this High Priest must be qualified, v. 2. 1. He must be one that can have compassion on two sorts of persons. (1) On the ignorant, or those that are guilty of sins of ignorance; he must be one who can find in his heart to pity them, and intercede with God for them; one that is willing to instructed that are dull of understanding. (2) On those that are out of the way, out of the way of truth, duty, and happiness; and he must be one who has tendency enough to lead them back from the by-paths of the road, into the right way: this will require great patience and compassion, even the compassion of a God. 2. He must also be compassed with infirmity; and so be able from himself feelingly to consider our frame, and to sympathize with us. Thus Christ was qualified; he took upon him our sinless infirmities; and this gives us great encouragement to apply ourselves to him under every affliction; for in all the afflictions of his people he is afflicted. 3. Thus this High Priest must be qualified. He must have both an internal and an external call to his office; for no man taketh this honour to himself; (v. 4.) that is, no man ought to do it, no man can do it legally; if any does it, he must be reckoned an usurper, and treated accordingly. Here observe, 1. The office of the priesthood was a very great honour; to be employed to stand between God and man, one while representing God, and his will to men, and another, representing man and himself to God; and dealing between them about matters of the highest importance, intrusted on both sides with the honour of God, and the happiness of man, must render the office very honourable. 2. The priesthood is an office and honour that no man ought to take to himself; if he does, he can expect no success in it, nor any reward for it, only from himself. He is an intruder, who is not called of God, as was Aaron. Observe, (1.) God is the Fountain of all honour, especially true spiritual honour. He is the Fountain of true authority, whether he calls any to the priesthood in an extraordinary way, as he did Aaron, or in an ordinary way, as he called his successors. (2.) Those only can expect assistance from God, and acceptance with him, and his presence and blessing on them and their administrations, that are called by God; others may expect a blast instead of a blessing.

V. How this is brought home and applied to Christ; (v. 5.) So Christ glorified not himself. Observe here, Though Christ reckoned it his glory to be made a High Priest, yet he would not assume that glory to himself. He could truly say, I seek not mine own glory, John 8. 50. Consider him as God; he was not capable of any additional glory, but as Man he was not set up in a spirit of pride, as Mediator. But if he did not, surely others should be afraid to do it.

VII. The apostle prefers Christ before Aaron, both in the manner of his call, and in the holiness of his person. 1. In the manner of his call, in which God said unto him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, (quoted from Ps. 2. 7.) referring both to his eternal generation as God, his wonderful conception as Man, and his mission as Mediator. Thus God solemnly declares his dear affection to Christ, his authoritative appointment of him to the office of a Mediator, his instatement and approbation of him in that office, his acceptance of him, and of all he had done or should do in the discharge of it. Now God never said thus to Aaron. Another expression that God used in the call of Christ, we have in Ps. 110. 4. Thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec, v. 6. God the Father appointed him a Priest of a higher order than that of Aaron; the priesthood of Aaron was to be but temporary, the priesthood of Christ was to be perpetual; the priesthood of Aaron was to be successive, descending from the fathers to the children, the priesthood of Christ, after the order of Melchisedec, was to be personal, and the High Priest immortal as to his office, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, as it is more largely described in the seventh chapter, and will be opened there. 2. Christ is here preferred to Aaron in the holiness of his person. Other priests were to offer up sacrifices, as for the sins of others, so for themselves, v. 3. But Christ needed not to offer for sins for himself, for he had done no violence, neither was there any deceit in his mouth, Isa. 53. 9. And such a High Priest that Christ offered up, were joined with strong cries and tears; herein setting us an example how we should reckon our's. Were we to reckon our lives by days, it would be a means to quicken us to do the work of every day in its day. (2.) Christ, in the days of his flesh, subjected himself to death; he hungered, he was a tempted, bleeding, dying Jesus! His body is now in heaven, but it is a spiritual glorious body. (3.) Christ was able to save his brethren from death; he could have prevented his dying, but he would not; for then the great design of his wisdom and grace must have been defeated. What would have become of us, if God had saved Christ from dying? The Jews reproachfully said, Let him deliver him now, if he will have him, Matt. 27. 43. But it was in kindness to us, that the Father would not suffer that bitter cup to pass away from him; for then we must have been left to save our own selves from sin; he could have prevented his dying, but he would not; for then the great design of his wisdom and grace must have been defeated. (4.) Christ, in the days of his flesh, offered up prayers and supplications to his Father, as an earnest of his intercession in heaven. A great many instances we have of Christ's praying. This refers to his prayer in his agony, (Matt. 26. 39. and ch. 27. 46.) and to that before his agony, (John 17.) which he put up for his disciples, and all who should believe on his name. (5.) The prayers and supplications he had an awful sense of the guilt and dishonour of sin, of God, of the weight of sin. His human nature was ready to sink under the heavy load, and would have sunk, had he been quite forsaken in point of help and comfort from God; but he was heard in this, he was supported under the agonies of death. He was carried through death; and there is no real deliverance from death but to be carried well through it. We may have many recoveries from sickness, but we are never saved from death till we are carried well through it. And they that are thus saved from death shall be fully delivered at last by a glorious resurrection, of which the resurrection of Christ was the earnest and first-fruits. 2. The consequences of this discharge of his office, v. 8, 9, &c. (1.) By these his sufferings he learned obedience, though he was a Son, v. 6. He observe, [1.] The privilege of Christ; he was a Son; therefore begotten of the Father. One would have thought this might have exempted him from suffering, but it did not. Let none then, who are the children of God by adoption, expect an absolute freedom from suffering. What son is he whom the Father chasteth not? [2.] Christ made improvement by his sufferings. He learned obedience by his passive obedience; he learned and grew obedient; that is, he practised that great lesson, and made it appear that he was well and perfectly learned in it; though he never was disobedient, yet he never performed such an act of obedience as when he became obedient to death, even to the death of the cross. Here he has left us an example, that we should learn by all our afflictions a humble obedience to the will of God. We need affliction, to teach us submission. (2.) By these his sufferings he was made perfect, and became the Author of eternal salvation to all who obey him, v. 9. [1.] Christ by his sufferings was consecrated to his office, consecrated by his own blood. [2.] By his suffering he consummated that part of his office which was to be performed on earth, making reconciliation for iniquity; and in this sense he si said to be made perfect, a perfect Propitiation. [3.] Hereby he has become the Author of eternal salvation to men; he has purchased a full deliverance from sin and misery, and a full fruition of holiness and happiness for his people. Of this salvation he has given notice in the gospel; he has made a tender of it in the new covenant, and has sent the Spirit to enable men to accept this salvation. (4.) This salvation is actually bestowed on none but those who obey Christ. It is not sufficient that we have some spiritual knowledge of Christ, or that we make a profession of obedience to him, but we must hearken to his word, and obey him. He is called to be a Prince to rule us, as well as a Saviour to deliver us; and he will be a Saviour to none but to those to whom he is a Prince, and who are willing that he should reign over them; the rest he will account his enemies, and treat them accordingly. But to those who obey him, devoting themselves to him, despising themselves, and taking up their cross, and following him, he will be the Author, xiii.—the grand Cause of their salvation, and they shall own him as such for ever.

10. Called of God, a high-priest after the order of Melchisedec. 11. Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. 12. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which are the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. 13. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. 14. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

Here the apostle returns to what he had in v. 6. cited out of Ps. 110, concerning the peculiar order of the priest of Christ, that is, the order of Melchisedec. And here, 1. He declares he had many things, which he could not say to them concerning this mysterious person called Melchisedec, whose priesthood was eternal; and therefore the salvation procured thereby should be eternal also. We have a more particular account of this Melchisedec in ch. 7. Some think the things which the apostle means, that were hard to be uttered, were not so much concerning Melchisedec himself, as concerning Christ, of whom Melchisedec was the type. And doubtless this apostle had many things to say concerning Christ, that were very mysterious, hard to be uttered; there are great mysteries in the person and offices of the Redeemer; Christ is the greatest mystery of God.

2. He assigns the reason why he did not say all those things concerning Christ, our Melchisedec, that he had to say, and what it was that made it so difficult for him to utter them, and that was, the dulness of the Hebrews to whom he wrote; Ye are dull of hearing. There is a difficulty in the things themselves, and there may be a weakness in the ministers of the gospel to speak clearly about these things, but generally the fault is in the hearers; dull hearers make the preaching of the gospel a difficult thing, and even those who have some fault, may be dull hearers; dull of understanding, and slow to believe; the understanding is weak, and does not apprehend these spiritual things; the memory is weak, and does not retain them.

3. He insists upon the faultiness of this infirmity of the Hebrews, that they are naturally dull; he speaks of this as a not unnatural infirmity, but it was a sinful infirmity, and more in them than others, by reason of the singular advantages they had enjoyed for improving in the knowledge of Christ; (v. 19.) For when, for the time, ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which are the first principles of the oracles of God. Where observe, (1.) What proficiency might have been reasonably expected from these Hebrews—that they might have had a greater profit in the doctrine of the gospel, as to have been teachers of others. Hence learn, (1.) God takes notice of the time and helps us for gaining scripture-knowledge. (2.) From those to whom much is given, much is expected. (3.) Those who have a good understanding in the gospel, should be teachers of others, if not in a public, yet in a private station. (4.) None should take upon them to be teachers of others, but those who have made a great progress in spiritual knowledge themselves. (2.) Observe the sad disappointment of those just expectations; Ye have need that one should teach you again, &c.

Here note, (1.) In the oracles of God there are some first principles, plain to be understood, and necessary to be learned. (2.) There are also deep and sublime mysteries, which those should search into, who have learned the first principles; that so they might stand in the whole will of God. (3.) Some persons, instead of going forward in Christian knowledge, forget the very first principles that they had learned long ago; and indeed they that are not improving under the means of grace, will be losing. (4.) It is a sin and shame for persons that are men for their age and standing in the church, to be children and babes in understanding.

The apostle shows how the various doctrines of the gospel must be dispensed to different persons. There are in the church babes, and persons of full age; (v. 12—14.) and there are in the gospel milk and strong meat. Observe, (1.) Those that are babes, unskilful in the word of righteousness, must be fed with milk; they must be entertained with the plainest truths, and these delivered in the plainest manner; there must be line upon line, and deep things successively set forth, here a little, and there a little, Isa. 28. 10. Christ despises not his babes; he has provided suitable food for them. It is good to be babes in Christ, but not always to continue in that childish state; we should endeavour to pass the infant state; we should always remain in Malcolm children, but in understanding we should grow up to a manly maturity. (2.)

There is strong meat for those that are of full age, v. 14. The deeper mysteries of religion belong to those that are of a higher class in the school of Christ, who have learned the first principles, and well improved them; so that by reason of use they have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil, duty and sin, truth and error. Observe, (1.) There have been always in the Christian state children, young men, and old men, (v. 12.) Every true Christian being received a principle of spiritual life from God, stands in need of nourishment to preserve that life. (3.) The word of God is food and nourishment to the life of grace; as new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby. (4.) It is the wisdom of ministers rightly to divide the word of truth, and to give to every one his portion; milk to babes, and strong meat to those of full age. (5.) There are spiritual senses, as men are of those that are natural. There is a spiritual eye, a spiritual appetite, a spiritual taste; the soul has its sensations as well as the body; these are much depraved and lost by sin, but they are recovered by grace. (6.) It is by use and exercise that these senses are improved, made more quick and strong to taste the sweetness of what is good and true, and the bitterness of what is false and evil. Not only is the natural sense, but the spiritual sense, will teach men to distinguish between what is pleasing and what is provoking to God, between what is helpful and what is hurtful to our own souls.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter, the apostle proceeds to persuade the Hebrews to make a better proficiency in religion than they had done, as the best way to prevent apostasy, the dreadful nature and consequences of which sin he sets forth in a serious manner; (v. 1—8.) and then expresses his hope concerning them, that they would persevere in faith and holiness, to which he exhorteth them, and sets before them the great encouragement they have from God, both with respect to their duty and happiness, from v. 9, to the end.

1. THEREFORE leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, 2. Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. 3. And this will we do, if God permit. 4. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, 5. And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, 6. If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. 7. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God: 8. But that which beareth thorns and briers, is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

1. We have here the apostle's advice to the Hebrews—that they would grow up from a state of childhood to the fulness of the stature of the new man in Christ; and he declares his readiness to assist them all he could in their spiritual progress; for
This ordinance of baptism is a foundation to be rightly laid, and daily remembered, but not repeated.

[4.] Laying on of hands; either on persons passing solemnly from their initiated state by baptism to the confirmed state, by returning the answer of a good conscience toward God, and sitting down at the Lord's table. This passing from incomplete to complete church-membership, was performed by laying on of hands, with the extraordinary presence of the gift of the Holy Ghost continued. This work being done, all are obliged to abide by, and not to need another solemn admission, as at first, but to go on, and grow up, in Christ. Or by this may be meant, ordination of persons to the ministerial office, who are duly qualified for it, and inclined to it; and this by fasting and prayer, with laying on of the hands of the presbytery: and this is to be done but once.

[5.] These are the great foundation-principles which ministers should clearly and convincingly unfold, and closely apply. In these the people should be well instructed and established, and from these they must never depart; without these, the other parts of religion have no foundation to support them.

III. The apostle declares his readiness and resolution to assist the Hebrews in building themselves up on these foundations till they arrive at perfection; (v. 3.) And this we will do, if God permit. And hereby he teaches them, 1. That right resolution is very necessary in order to progress and proficiency in religion. 2. That that resolution is right, which is not only made in the sincerity of our hearts, but in a humble dependence upon God, both for strength, for assistance and righteousness, for acceptance and for time and opportunity. 3. That ministers should not only teach people what to do, but go before them, and along with them, in the way of duty.

III. He shews that this spiritual growth is the surest way to prevent that dreadful sin of apostasy here from the faith. And here,

1. He shews how far persons may go in religion, and after all fall away and perish for ever, v. 4, 5. (1.) They may be enlightened. Some of the ancients understand this of their being baptized; but it is rather to be understood of notional knowledge and common illumination, of which persons may have a great deal, and yet come short of heaven.

Belaam was the man whose eyes were opened, (Numb. 24. 8.) and yet with his eyes opened he went down to utter evil and wicked things. (2.) They may acquire many gifts, feel something of the efficacy of the Holy Spirit in his operations upon their souls, causing them to taste something of religion, and yet be like persons in the market, who taste of what they will not come up to the price of, and so but take a taste, and leave it. Persons may taste religion, and seem to like it, if they could have it upon easier terms than denying themselves, and taking up their cross, and following Christ. (3.) They may act without experience of the Spirit, or without the aid of the Spirit, in acts of piety and devotion; they may cast out devils in the name of Christ, and do many other mighty works. Such gifts in the apostolical age were sometimes bestowed upon those who had no true saving grace. (4.) They may taste of the good word of God; they may have some relish of gospel-doctrines, may hear the word with pleasure; they may remember much of it, and talk well of it, and yet never be cast into the form and mould of it, nor has it dwelt richly in them. (5.) They may have tasted of the powers of the world to come; they may have been under strong impressions concerning heaven and hell; have felt some desires of heaven, and dread of going to hell. These lengths of doctrine may go on without apostasy. Now hence observe, [1.] Those great things are spoken here of those who may fall away; yet it is not here said of them, that they were truly converted, or that they were justified; there is more in true saving grace than in all that is here said of apostates. [2.] This therefore is no proof of the final apostasy of true saints. These indeed may fall frequently and solely, but yet they shall not totally nor in fact fall from God; they know not and the power of God, the purchase and the prayer of Christ, the promise of the gospel, the everlasting covenant that God has made with them, ordered in all things sure, the indwelling of the Spirit, and the immortal seed of the word, these are their security. But the tree that has not these roots, will not stand.

2. The apostle describes the dreadful case of such as fall away, if they had gone so far in the progress of religion. (1.) The greatness of the sin of apostasy. It is crucifying the Son of God afresh, and putting him to open shame. They declare that they approve of what the Jews did in crucifying Christ, and that they would be glad to do the same thing again, if it were in their power. They pour the greatest contempt upon the Son of God, and therefore upon God himself, who expects all should reverence his Son, and honour him as they honour the Father. They do what in them lies to represent Christ and Christianity as a shameful thing, and would have him to be a public Shame and Reproach. This is the nature of apostasy. (2.) The great misery of apostates. [1.] It is impossible to renew them again unto repentance; it is extremely hazardous; very few instances can be given of those who have gone so far and fallen away, and yet have ever been brought to true repentance, such a repentance as is indeed a renewal of the soul. Some have thought this is the sin against the Holy Ghost, but without ground. The sin here mentioned, is plainly apostasy both from the truth and the ways of Christ. God can renew them to repentance, but he seldom does it; and with men themselves it is impossible. [2.] Their misery is exemplified by a proper similitude, taken from the ground that after much cultivation, the fruit is gathered, but it bears only thorns and briers; and therefore is nigh unto cursing, and its end is to be burned. v. 8. To give this the greater force, here is observed the difference that there is between the good ground and the bad, that these contraries, being set one over against the other, may illustrate each other.

First, Here is a description of the good ground; it dranketh in the rain that cometh upon it. Believers do not only taste of the word of God, but they drink it in; and this good ground bringeth forth fruit answerable to the cost laid out, for the honour of Christ, and the comfort of his faithful ministers, who are, under Christ, dressers of the ground. And this fruit-field or garden receives the blessing. God declares fruitful Christians blessed, and all wise good men account them blessed: they are blessed with all things temporal and with further establishment and glory at last.

Secondly, Here is the different case of the bad ground: it bears briers and thorns; it is not only barren of good fruit, but fruitful in that which is bad, briers and thorns, fruitful in sin and wickedness, which are troublesome and hurtful to all about them, and will be most so to sinners themselves at last; and then such ground is rejected. God will concern himself no more about such wicked apostates; he will let them alone, and cast them out of his care; he will command the clouds that they rain no more upon them. Divine influences shall be restrained; and that is not all, but such ground is nigh unto cursing; so far is it from receiving the blessing, that a dreadful curse hangs over it; though yet, through the patience of God, the curse is not fully executed. Lastly, Its end is to be burned. Apostasy will be punished with everlasting burnings, the fire that shall never be quenched. This is the sad end to which apostasy leads, and therefore Christians should go on and grow in grace, lest, if they do not go forward, they should go backward, till they bring matters to this woeful extremity of sin and misery.

9. But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak. 10. For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister. 11. And we desire, that every one of you do shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end: 12. That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. 13. For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself. 14. Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. 15. And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. 16. For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. 17. Whereas God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: 18. That by two unmutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: 19. Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that which within the vail; 20. Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

The apostle, having applied himself to the fears of the Hebrews, for the exciting of their diligence, and preventing of their apostasy, now proceeds to apply himself to their hopes, and candidly declares the good hope he had concerning them, that they would persevere; and proposes to them the great encouragements they had in the way of their duty.

1. He freely and openly declares the good hope he had concerning them, that they would endure to the end; (v. 9.) But beloved, we are persuaded better things of you. Observe, 1. There are things that accompany salvation; things that are never separated from salvation; things that shew the person to be in a state of salvation, and will issue in eternal salvation. 2. The things that accompany salvation, are better things than ever any hypocrite or apostate enjoyed. They are better in their nature and in their issue. 3. It is our duty to hope well of those in whom nothing appears to the contrary. 4. Ministers must sometimes speak by way of caution to those of whose salvation they have good hopes to show them they have in themselves good hopes, as to their eternal salvation, should yet consider seriously how fatal a disappointment it would be if they should fail short. Thus they are to work out their salvation with fear and trembling.

II. He proposes arguments and encouragements to them to go on in the way of their duty. 1. That God had wrought a principle of holy love and charity in them, which, though they were not yet suited well to it, which could not be forgotten of God; (v.
10.) God is not unrighteous to forget your labour of love. Good works and labour, proceeding from love to God, are commendable; and what is done to any in the name of God, shall not go unrewarded.
What is done to the saints as such, God takes as done to himself. 2. Those who expect a gracious reward for their labour of love, must continue in it as long as they have ability and opportunity; Ye have ministered to the saints, and ye do stand in need, and we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence. 3. Those who persevere in a diligent discharge of their duty, shall attain to the full assurance of hope in the end. Observe, (1.) Full assurance of a higher degree of hope; is full assurance of hope; differ not in nature, but only in degree. (2.) Full assurance is attainable by great diligence and perseverance to the end.

III. He proceeds to act before them caution and counsel how to attain this full assurance of hope to the end. 1. That they should not be slothful; that will clothe a man with rags: they must not love their ease, nor lose their opportunities. 2. That they would follow the good examples of those who had gone before, v. 12. Where learn, (1.) There are some who from assurance are gone to inherit the promises. They believed them before, now they inherit them; they are got safe to heaven. (2.)
The way by which they came to the inheritance, was that of faith and patience. Those graces were implanted in their souls, and drawn forth into act and exercise in their lives. If we ever expect to in-hit as they do, we must follow them in the way of faith and patience. And those do thus follow them in the way, shall overtake them at the end, and be partakers of the same blessedness.
If we speak about this in our own persons, that which speaks of the promises to come, let them be held at their assurance, with a clear and full account of the assured truth of the promises of God, v. 13, to the end. They are all confirmed by the oath of God, and they are all founded in the eternal counsel of God, and therefore may be depended upon.

1. They are all confirmed by the oath of God. He has not only given his people his word, and his hand and seal, but his oath. And here you will observe, he specifies the nature of the oath of God: Abraham; which, being a heathen, was not able to be called him as the father of the faith; the same remains in full force and virtue to all true believers;
When God made a promise unto Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swear by himself.
Observe, (1.) What was the promise—Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. The blessing of God is the blessedness of his people; and those whom he has blessed indeed, he will go on to bless, and will multiply blessings, till the long-continued blessing of the blessedness. (2.) What was the oath by which this promise was ratified—He swear by himself. He staked down his own being and his own blessedness upon it; no greater security can be given or desired.
(3.) How was that oath accomplished—Abraham, in due time, obtained the promise. It was made good to him after he had patiently endured. [1.]

There is always an interval, and sometimes a long one, between the promise and the performance.
[2.] That interval is a trying time to believers, whether they have patience to endure to the end.
[3.] Those who patiently bear it, have the promise, and obtain the blessings promised, as sure as Abraham did. [4.] The end and design of an oath is to make the promise sure, and to encourage those to whom it is made, to wait with patience till the time for performance comes, v. 16. An oath with men is for confirmation, and is an end of all strife. This is the nature and design of an oath, in which men swear by the greater, not by creatures, but by the greater. God has promised his faithful children about the matter, either to disputes within our own breasts, doubts and distrusts, or disputes with others, especially with the Promiser. Now if God would condescend to take an oath to his people, he will surely remember the nature and design of it.

2. The promises of God are all founded in his eternal counsel; and this counsel of his is an immutable counsel. (1.) The promise of blessedness which God has made to believers, is not a rash and hasty thing, but the result of God’s eternal purpose.
(2.) This purpose of God was agreed upon in council, and settled there between the eternal Father, Son, and Spirit. (3.) These counsels of God can never be altered; they are immutable; God never needs to change his counsels; for nothing new can arise to him who sees the end from the beginning.

3. The promises of God, which are founded upon these unalterable counsels of God, and confirmed by the oath of God, may safely be depended upon for here we have two immutable things, the counsel and the oath of God, in which it is impossible for God to lie, contrary to his nature, as well as to his will. Here observe, (1.) Who they are, to whom God has given such full security of happiness. [1.] They are the heirs of the promise: such as have a title to the promises by inheritance, by virtue of their new birth, and union with Christ. We are all by nature children of wrath. The curse is the inheritance we are born to: it is by a new and heavenly birth that any are born heirs to the promise. [2.] They are such as have fled for refuge to the hope set before them.
Under the law there were cities of refuge provided for those who were pursued by the avenger of blood.
Here is a much better refuge prepared by the gospel; a refuge for all sinners who shall have the power of the promise to come to it; yea, though they have been the chief of sinners.

(2.) What God’s design toward them is, in giving them such securities—that they might have strong consolation. Observe, [1.] God is concerned for the consolation of believers, as well as for their sanctification; he would have his children walk in the fear of the Lord, and in the comforts of the Holy Ghost. [2.] The consolations of God are strong enough to support his people under their strongest afflictions. They are apt to be able to bear up the soul under temptation, persecution, and death; but the consolations of the Lord are neither few nor small.

(3.) What use the people of God should make of their hope and comfort, that most refreshing and comfortable hope of eternal blessedness that God has given them. This is, and must be, unto them, for an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, &c. v.
19. There is a proper use of the consolations of God; they are safe vessels, which are able to bear up and abide in the most disturbed sea, liable to be tossed up and down, and in danger of being cast away. Our souls are the vessels; the comforts, expectation, graces, and happiness of our souls are the precious cargo with which these vessels are loaded; heaven is the harbour to which we sail; the temptations, persecutions, and afflictions that we encounter, are the winds and waves that threaten our shipwreck. [2.] We have need of an anchor to keep us sure and steady, or we are in continual danger. [3.] Gospel-hope is our anchor; as in our day of battle it is our helmet, so in our stormy passage through this world it is our anchor. [4.] It is sure and steadfast, or else it could not keep us so. First, It is sure in its own nature; for it is the special work of God in the soul, it is good hope through the blood; it is not a believing hope made out of the spider’s web, but it is a true work of God, it is a strong and substantial thing. Secondly, It is steadfast as to its object; it is an anchor that has taken good hold, it enters into that which is within the veil, it is an anchor that is cast upon the rock, the Rock of ages; it does not fasten in the sands, but enters within the veil, and fixes there upon Christ; he is the Object, he is the Anchor-hold of the believer’s hope. As an unseen glory within the veil, is what the believer is hoping for; so an unseen Jesus within the veil, is the great foundation of his hope; the free grace of God, the merits and mediation of Christ, and the powerful influences of his Spirit, are the grounds of his hope, and so it is a steadfast hope. Jesus Christ is the Object and Ground of the believer’s hope in several respects. 1. As he is entered within the veil and given in the covenants with God, in virtue of that sacrifice which he offered up without the veil, hope fastens upon his sacrifice and intercession. 2. As he is the Forerunner of his people, gone within the veil, to prepare a place for them, and to assure them that they shall follow him, he is the Eternity and First-fruits of believers, both in his resurrection and in his ascension. 3. And he abides there, a High Priest after the order of Melchisedec, a Priest for ever, whose priesthood shall never cease, it shall never fail, till it has accomplished its whole work and design, which is the full and final happiness of all who have believed on Christ. Now this should engage us all to clear up our interest in Christ, that we may fix our hopes in him as our Forerunner, that he is entered thither for us, for our sakes, for our safety, to watch over our highest interest and concerns. Let us then love heaven the more on his account, and long to be there with him, where we shall be for ever, and for ever safe.

CHAP. VII.

The doctrine of the priestly office of Christ is so excellent in itself, and so essential a part of the Christian faith, that the apostle loves to dwell upon it. Nothing made the Jews so fond of that system at the expense of the true system they had of their priesthood, and it was doubtless a sacred and most excellent institution; it was a very severe threaten against the Jews, (Hos. 3. 4.) That the children of Israel should abide many days without a prince or a priest, and without a sacrifice, and without an ephod, and without teraphim. Now the apostle assures them that by receiving the Lord Jesus they would have a more excellent High Priest, a priesthood of a higher order, and consequently a better dispensation or covenant, a better law and testament; this he shews in this chapter, where, 1. We have a more particular account of Melchisedec, the. Superior Priest of the New Testament, and of the superiority of Aaron, v. 4. 10. 11. An accommodation of all to Christ, to shew the superior excellency of his person, office, and covenant, from v. 11, to the end.

1. FOR this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; 2. To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is King of peace; 3. Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually.

The chapter foregoing ended with a repetition of what had been cited once and again before out of Ps. 110. 4. Jesus, a High Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec. Now this chapter is as a sermon upon that text; here the apostle sets before us a second reason why the strong meat he had spoken of before, hoping they would by greater diligence be better prepared to digest it.

The great question that first offers itself is, Who was this Melchisedec? All the account we have of him in the Old Testament, is in Gen. 14. 18, 19, &c. and in Ps. 110. 4. Indeed we are much in the dark about him; God has thought fit to leave us so, that this Melchisedec might be a more lively type of him whose generation none can declare. If we will not be satisfied with what is revealed, they must move about in the dark in endless conjectures, some fancying him to have been an angel, others the Holy Ghost; but the opinions concerning him, that are best worthy our consideration, are these three.

1. The rabbins, and most of the Jewish writers, think he was Shem the son of Noah, who was king and priest to those they descended from, after the manner of the other patriarchs; but it is not probable that he should thus change his name. Besides, we have no account of his settling in the land of Canaan.

2. Many Christian writers have thought him to be Jesus Christ himself, appearing by a special dispensation and privilege to Abraham in the flesh, and who was known to Abraham by the name Melchisedec, which agrees very well to Christ, and to what is said, John 8. 56. Abraham saw his day and rejoiced. Much may be said for this opinion, and what is said in v. 3. does not seem to agree with any mere man; but then it seems strange to make Christ a type of himself.

3. The most received opinion is, that he was a Canaanite king, who reigned in Salem, and kept up religion and the worship of the true God; that he was raised to be a type of Christ, and was honoured by Abraham as such.

But we shall leave these conjectures, and labour to understand, as far as we can, what is here said of him by the apostle, and how Christ is represented thereby, v. 1—3.

(1.) Melchisedec was a king, and so is the Lord Jesus; a King of God’s anointing; the government is laid upon his shoulders, and he rules over all for the good of his people.

(2.) That he was king of righteousness: his name signifies the righteous king. Jesus Christ is a rightful and a righteous King; rightful in his title, righteous in his government. He is the Lord our Righteousness, he has fulfilled all righteousness, and brought in an everlasting righteousness, and he is the righteousness and righteous persons, and hates iniquity.

(3.) He was king of Salem, that is king of peace; first king of righteousness, and after that, king of peace. So is our Lord Jesus; he by his righteousness is peace. Christ speaks peace, creates peace, he is our Peace-Maker.

(4.) He was priest of the most high God, qualified and anointed in an extraordinary manner to be his priest among the Gentiles. So is the Lord Jesus; he is the Priest of the most high God, and the Gentiles must come to God by him; it is only through his priesthood that we can obtain reconciliation and remission of sin.

(5.) He was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, v. 5. This must not be understood according to the letter; but the scripture has chosen to set him forth as an extraordinary person, without giving us his genealogy, that he might be a fitter type of Christ, who as Man was without father, as God without mother; whose priesthood is without descent, did not descend to him from another, nor from him to another, but is personal and perpetual.

(6.) That he met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him. The incident is recorded Gen. 14. 18, &c. He brought forth bread and wine to refresh Abraham and his servants when they were weary; he gave as a king, and blessed as a priest. Thus our Lord Jesus meets his people in their spiritual conflicts, refreshes them, renews their strength, and blesses them.

(7.) That Abraham gave him a tenth part of all, (v. 2.) that is, as the apostle explains it, of all the spoils; and this Abraham did, either as an expression of his gratitude for what Melchisedec had done for him, or as a testimony of his homage and subjecttion to him as a king, or as an offering vowed and dedicated to God, to be presented by his priest.

And thus we are obliged to make all possible returns of love and gratitude to the Lord Jesus for all the rich and royal favours we receive from him, to pay our homage and subjecttion to him as our King, and to put all our offerings into his hands, to be presented by him to the Father in the incense of his own spiritual sacrifice.

(8.) And lastly, That this Melchisedec was made like unto the Son of God, and abideth a priest continually. He bore the image of God in his piety and authority, and stands upon record as an immortal high-priest; the ancient type of him who is the eternal and only begotten of the Father, who abideth a Priest for ever.

4. Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils. 5. And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham: 6. But he whose descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises. 7. And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better.

8. And here men that die, receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth. 9. And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, paid tithes in Abraham. 10. For he was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchisedec met him.

Let us now consider (as the apostle advises) how great this Melchisedec was, and how far his priesthood was above that of the order of Aaron; (v. 4, 5, &c.) Now consider how great this man was, &c. The greatness of this man and his priesthood appear.

1. From Abraham's paying the tenth of the spoils unto him; and it is well observed, that Levi paid tithes to Melchisedec in Abraham, v. 10. Now Levi received the office of the priesthood from God, and was to take tithes of the people, yet even Levi paid tithes to Melchisedec, as to a greater and higher priest than himself; therefore that High Priest who should afterward appear, of whom Melchisedec was a type, must be much superior to any of the Levitical priests, who paid tithes, in Abraham, to Melchisedec. And now by this argument of persons doing things that are matters of right or injury in the loins of their predecessors, we have an illustration how we may be said to have sinned in Adam, and fallen with him in his first transgression. We were in Adam's loins when he sinned, and the guilt and depravity contracted by the human nature when it was in our first parents, are equitably imputed and derived to the same nature, as it is in all other persons naturally descended from them. They justly adhere to the nature, and it must be by an act of grace if ever they be taken away.

2. From Melchisedec's blessing of Abraham, who had the promises; (v. 6, 7.) And without contradiction, the less is blessed of the greater. Where, (1.) Observe Abraham's great dignity and felicity—that he had the promises. He was one in covenant with God, to whom God had given exceeding great and precious promises. That man is rich and happy indeed, who has an estate in bills and bonds under God's own hand and seal. These promises are both of the life that now is, and of that which is to come; this honour have all those who receive the Lord Jesus, in whom all the promises are yea and amen. (2.) Melchisedec's greater honour—in that it was his place and privilege to bless Abraham; and it is an incontestable maxim, that the less is blessed of the greater, v. 7. He who gives the blessing, is greater than he who receives it; and therefore Christ, the Antitype of Melchisedec, the Meritor and Mediator of all blessings to the children of men, must be greater than all the priests of the order of Aaron.

11. If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? 12. For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. 13. For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. 14. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. 15. And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest, 16. Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment but after the power of an endless life. 17. For he testifieth, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. 18. For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. 19. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by which we draw nigh unto God. 20. And in as much as not without an oath he was made priest; 21. (For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: 22. By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament. 23. And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death: 24. But this man, because he continued ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. 25. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. 26. For such a high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; 27. Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did but once, when he offered himself. 28. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity: but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore.

Observe the necessity there was of raising up another priest, after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron, by whom that perfection should come, which could not come by the Levitical priesthood; which therefore must be changed, and the whole economy with it, v. 11, 12, &c. Here, it is asserted, that perfection could not come by the Levitical priesthood and the law: they could not put those who came to them, into the perfect enjoyment of the good things they pointed out to them; they could only direct them to look further, they could only shew them the way. 2. That therefore another Priest must be raised up, after the order of Melchisedec, by whom, and his law of faith, perfection might come to all who obey him. Here, it is asserted, that we may have perfect holiness and perfect happiness by Christ in the covenant of grace, according to the gospel, for we are complete in him. 3. It is asserted, that the priesthood being changed, there must of necessity be a change of the law; there being so near a relation between the priesthood and the law, the dispensation could not be the same under another priesthood; a new priesthood must be under a new regulation, managed in another way, and by rules proper to its nature and order. 4. It is not only asserted, but proved, that the priesthood and law are changed, v. 13, 14. The priesthood and law by which perfection could not come, are abolished, and a Priest is risen, and a dispensation now set up, by which true believers may be made perfect. Now that there is such a change, is obvious.

It is change in the tribe of which the priesthood comes: before, it was the tribe of Levi; but our great High Priest sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning the priesthood, v. 14. This change of the family shews a real change of the law of priesthood.

(2.) There is a change in the form and order of making the priests: before, in the Levitical priesthood, they were made according to the law of a carnal commandment; but our present High Priest was made after the power of an endless life. The former law appointed that the office should descend, upon the death of the father, unto his eldest son, according to the order of carnal or natural generation; for none of the high priests under that law were without father or mother, or without descent, they had not life and immortality in themselves. They had both beginning of days and end of life; and so the law of the covenant or law of Melchisedec directed their succession, as it did in matters of civil right and inheritance. But the law by which Christ was constituted a Priest after the order of Melchisedec, was the power of an endless life. The life and immortality which he had in himself, were bright and title to the priesthood, not his descent from former priests. This makes a great difference in the priesthood, and in the economy too, and gives the preference infinitely to Christ and the gospel. The very law which constituted the Levitical priesthood, supposed the priests to be weak, frail, dying, creatures, not able to preserve their own natural lives, but who must be content and glad to survive in their posterity after the flesh; much less could they by any power or authority they had, convey spiritual life and blessedness to those who were not of their tribe. But the law of Christ holds his office by that innate power of endless life, which he has in himself, not only to preserve himself alive, but to communicate spiritual and eternal life to all those who duly rely upon his sacrifice and intercession. Some think the law of the carnal commandment refers to the external rites of consecration, and the carnal offerings that were made; but the power of endless life, to the spiritual living and working effects of the(?). But it seems to the grace and eternal privileges purchased by Christ, who was consecrated by the eternal Spirit of life that he received without measure.

(3.) There is a change in the efficacy of the priesthood: the former was weak and unprofitable, made nothing perfect; the latter brought in a better hope, by which we draw near to God, v. 18, 19. The Levitical priesthood brought nothing to perfection; it could not change men's hearts, it could not sanctify them from inward pollution; it could not cleanse the consciences of the worshippers from dead works; all it could do, was, to lead them to the antitype. But the priesthood of Christ carries in it, and brings along with it, a better hope; it shews us the true foundation of all the hope we have toward God for pardon and salvation; it more clearly discovers the great objects of our hope; and so it shews us a more certain and lively hold of acceptance with God. By this hope we are encouraged to draw nigh unto God; to enter into a covenant-union with him; to live a life of converse and communion with him. We may now draw near with a true heart, and with the full assurance of faith, having our minds sprinkled from an evil conscience. The former priesthood rather kept men at a distance, and under a high fence; the High Priest of our profession holds his office by that innate power of endless life, which he has in himself, not only to preserve himself alive, but to communicate spiritual and eternal life to all those who duly rely upon his sacrifice and intercession.

(4.) There is a change in God's way of acting in this priesthood. He has taken an oath to Christ, which he never did to any of the order of Aaron. God never gave them any such assurance of their continuance, never engaged himself by oath or promise that their's should be an everlasting priesthood, and therefore gave them no reason to expect the perpetuity of it, but rather to look upon it as a temporary law. But Christ was made a Priest with the oath of God; The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, v. 21. Here God has upon oath declared the immutability, excellency, efficacy, and eternity, of the priesthood of Christ.

(5.) There is a change in that covenant of which the priesthood was a security, and the priest a surety; that is, a change in the dispensation of that covenant. The gospel-dispensation is more full, free, perspicuous, spiritual, and efficacious, than that of the law. Christ is in this gospel-covenant a Surety for us to God, and for God to us, to see that the articles be performed on both parts. He, as surety, has tied the divine and human nature together in his own person, and therein given assurance of reconciliation; and he has, as surety, tied God and man together in the bond of the everlasting covenant. He pleads with men to keep their covenant with God, and he pleads with God that he will fulfill his promises to men, which he is always ready to do in a way suitable to his majesty and glory, that is the office of a Mediator.

(6.) There is a remarkable change in the number of the priests under these different orders. In that of Aaron there was a multitude of priests, of high priests, not at once, but successively; but in this of Christ there is but one and the same. The reason is plain, The Levitical priests were many, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death, and the high priests were chosen out of them. But the Christian Priest is chosen out of the whole Church, and he remains in his office without a vacancy. He is unchangeable, one, that does not pass from one to another, as the foriner did; it is always in the same hand; there can be no vacancy in this priesthood, no high or not high priest in this nature. It is not given to a Prince to negotiate their spiritual concerns in heaven; such a vacancy might be very dangerous and prejudicial to them; but this is their safety and happiness, that this everlasting High Priest is able to save to the utmost, in all times, in all cases, in every juncture, all who come to God by him, v. 25. So that here is a manifest alteration much for the better.

(7.) There is a remarkable difference in the moral qualifications of the priests; those who were of the order of Aaron, were not only mortal men, but sinful men, who had their sinful as well as natural infirmities; they needed to offer up sacrifices first for their own sins, and then for the people. But our High Priest, who was consecrated by the word of the oath, needed only to offer up once for the people, never at all for himself; for he has not only an immutable consecration to his office, but an immutable sanctification of his person. He is such a High Priest as becomes us, holy, harmless, and undefiled, &c. v. 26-28. Here observe, [1.] Our case, as sinners, needed a high-priest to make satisfaction and intercession for us. [2.] No priest could be suitable or sufficient for our reconciliation to God, but one who was perfectly righteous in his own person; he must be righteous in himself, or he could not be a propitiation for our sin, or our own, though with the Father. [3.] The Lord Jesus was exactly such a High Priest as we wanted, for he has a personal holiness, absolutely perfect. Observe the description we have of the personal holiness of Christ expressed in various terms; some learned divines think that they all of them relate to his perfect purity.

First, He is holy; perfectly free from all the habits or principles of sin, not having the least disposition to it in his nature; no sin dwells in him, though it does in the best of Christians, not the least sinful inclination.

Secondly, He is harmless, perfectly free from all actual transgression, has done no violence, nor is there any defect in his mouth, never did the least wrong to God or man.

Thirdly, He is undefiled, he was never necessary to make atonement by sacrifice, since the best of Christians have need to pray that God would forgive them their other men's sins. It is a difficult thing to keep ourselves pure, so as not to partake in the guilt of other men's sins, by contributing some way toward them, or not doing what we ought to prevent them. Christ was undefiled; though he took upon him the guilt of our sins, yet he never involved himself in the fact and fault of them.

Fourthly, He is separate from sinners, not only in his present state, having entered as our High Priest into the holiest of all, into which nothing defiled can enter; but in his personal purity he has no such union with sinners, either natural or federal, as can derive upon him original sin. This comes upon us by virtue of our natural and federal union with the first Adam, breaking in upon him in the ordinary way. But Christ was, he is in no respect in any way, separate from sinners; though he took a true human nature, yet the miraculous way in which it was conceived, set him upon a separate foot from all the rest of mankind.

Fifthly, He is made higher than the heavens. Most expositors understand this concerning his state of exaltation in heaven, at the right hand of God, to present the designs of his priesthood; but Dr. Goodwin thinks this may be very justly referred to the personal holiness of Christ, which is greater and more perfect than the holiness of the hosts of heaven, that is, the holy angels themselves, who, though they are free from sin, yet are not in themselves free from all possibility of sinning. And therefore we read, God putteth no trust in his holy ones, and he chargeth his angels with folly, (Job 4. 18.) that is, that they are so weak as not to be able to keep their own holiness, and may be angels one hour, and devils another, as many of them were; and that the holy angels shall not now fall, does not proceed from an indecency of nature, but from the election of God; they are elect angels.

It is very probable that this explanation of the words, made higher than the heavens, may be thought too much strained, and that it ought to be understood of the dignity of Christ's state, and not his personal presence; for it is said, he was made higher, and well known that word is used in a neutral sense, as where it is said, Let God be true.

The other characters in the verse plainly belong to the personal perfection of Christ in holiness, as opposed to the sinful infirmities of the Levitical priests; and this must be true, so too, if it may be fairly taken in such a sense; and it appears yet more probable, since the validity and prevalency of Christ's priesthood in v. 27. are placed in the impartiality and disinterestedness of it. He needed not to offer up for himself, it was a disinterested mediation; he mediated for that mercy for others, which he did not need for himself; had he mediated it to himself, he had been a party, and could not have been a Mediator; a criminal, and could not have been an Advocate for sinners. Now to render his mediation the more impartial and disinterested, it seems requisite not only that he had no present need of that favour for himself, which he mediated for in behalf of others, but that he never could stand in need of it. Though he needed it not today, yet if he knew he might be in such circumstances as to need it tomorrow, or in any future time, he must have been thought to have had some eye upon his own interest, and therefore could not act with impartial regard and pure zeal for the honour of God on one hand, and tender pure compassion for poor sinners on the other. I pretend not here to follow the notes of our late excellent expositor, into his labours we have entered, but have taken in the general and inductive notion of the learned Dr. Goodwin from the exceptions that I know have been made to it; and I have the rather done it, because if it will hold good, it gives us further evidence how necessary it was that the Mediator should be God, since no mere creature is of himself possessed of that impeccability which will set him above all possible need of favour and mercy for himself.
HEBREWS, VIII.

CHA. VIII.

In this chapter, the apostle pursues his former subject, the priesthood of Christ. And, I. He sums up what he had already said, v. 1, 2. II. He sets before them the necessary parts of the priestly office, v. 3. 5. And, III. Largely illustrates the excellency of the priesthood of Christ, by considering the excellency of that new dispensation of covenant for which Christ is the Mediator, v. 6, to the end.

1. NOW of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; 2. A minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.

Here is a summary recital of what had been said before concerning the excellency of Christ's priesthood, shewing both what we have in Christ, where he now resides, and what sanctuary he is the Minister of. 1. What we have in Christ; we have a High Priest, and such a High Priest as no other people ever had. 2. The sanctuary of the Church, ever produced; all others were but types and shadows of this High Priest. He is adequately fitted and absolutely sufficient to all the intents and purposes of a High Priest, both with respect to the honour of God, and the happiness of men and himself; the great honour of all those who have an interest in him. 2. Where he now resides; he is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty on high, that is, of the glorious God of heaven. There the Mediator is placed, and he is possessed of all authority and power both in heaven and upon earth; this is the reward of his humiliation; this authority he exercises for the glory of his Father, for his own honour, and for the happiness of all who belong to him; and he will by his almighty power bring every one of them in their own order to the right hand of God in heaven, as members of his mystical body, that where he is they may also. 3. What is that sanctuary, of which he is a Minister; of the true tabernacle, which the Lord hath pitched, and not man, v. 2. The tabernacle which was pitched by man, according to the appointment of God. There was an outer part, in which was the altar where they were to offer their sacrifices; this typified Christ dying; and there was an interior part within the vail, which typified Christ interceding for the people in heaven. Now this tabernacle Christ never entered into; but having finished the work of satisfaction in the true tabernacle of his own body, he is now a Minister of the sanctuary, the holy of holies, the true tabernacle in heaven, there taking care of his people's affairs, interceding with God for them, that their sins may be pardoned, and their persons and services accepted, through the merit of his sacrifice. He is not only in heaven enjoying great dignity, but, as the High Priest of his church, executing this office for them all in general, and every member of the church in particular.

3. For every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. 4. For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law: 5. Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle. For see (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount.

Here the apostle sets before the Hebrews the necessary parts of Christ's priesthood, or what it was that belonged to that office, in conformity to what every high-priest is ordained to. 1. Every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices, whatever was brought by the people to be presented to God, whether expiatory sacrifices, or peace-offerings, or thank-offerings; these must be offered by the priest, who was to expiate their guilt by the blood of the sacrifice, and perfume their gifts and services by his holy incense, to render their persons and performances typically acceptable; so then it necessarily belongs to the priesthood of Christ, that he should have somewhat to offer; and he, as the Antitype, had himself to offer, his human nature upon the altar of his divine nature, as the great atoning Sacrifice that finished transgression, and made an end of sin once for all; and he has the incentive of his own righteousness and merits too, to offer with all that his people offer up to God by him, to render them acceptable. We must not dare to approach to God, or to present any thing to him, but in and through Christ, depending upon his merits and mediation; for if we are accepted, it is in the Beloved. 2. Christ must now execute his priesthood in heaven, in the holy of holies, the true tabernacle which the Lord hath fixed. Thus the type must be fully answered; having finished the work of sacrificing here, he must go into heaven, to present his righteousness, and to make intercession there. For, (1.) If Christ were on earth, he should not be a Priest, (v. 4.) that is, not according to the Levitical law, as not being of the line of that priesthood; and so long as that priesthood continued, there must be a strict regard had to the divine institution in every thing. (2.) All the services of the priest, under the law, and every thing in that tabernacle which was framed according to the pattern in the mount, were only exemplars and shadows of heavenly things, v. 5. Christ is the Substance and End of the law of righteousness. Something therefore there must be in Christ's priesthood, that answers to the high-priest's entering within the vail to make intercession, without which he could not have been a perfect Priest; and what is that but the ascension of Christ into heaven, and his appearance there in the sight of God? For his person, he ascended to the heavens, and pleased his cause? So that if he had continued on earth, he could not have been a perfect Priest; and an imperfect one he could not be.

6. But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. 7. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. 8. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: 9. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. 10. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days
This covenant contains in it promises of assistance and acceptance in duty, promises of progress and perseverance in grace and holiness, of bliss and glory in heaven, which were more obscurely shadowed forth by the promises of the land of Canaan, a type of heaven. 5. It is a new covenant, even that new covenant that God long ago declared he would make with the house of Israel, that is, all the Israel of God; this was promised in Jer. 31. 31, 32, and accomplished in Christ. This will always be a new covenant with all who believe it. The promises therein shall be always found preserved by the power of God; it is God's covenant; his mercy, love, and grace moved for it; his wisdom devised it; his Son purchased it; his Spirit brings souls into it, and builds them up in it. 4. The articles of this covenant are very extraordinary, which are sealed between God and his people by baptism and the Lord's supper; whereby they bind themselves to their part, and God assures them he will do his part; and his is the main and principal part, on which his people depend for grace and strength to do their's. Here,

(1) God articles with his people, that he will put his laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts, v. 10. He once wrote his laws to them, now he will write his laws in them; that is, he will give them understanding to know and to believe his covenant; he will give them memories to retain them; he will give them hearts to love them, and consciences to recognise them; he will give them courage to profess them, and power to put them in practice; the whole habit and frame of their souls shall be a table and transcript of the law of God. This is the foundation of the covenant; and when this is laid, duty will be done wisely, sincerely, readily, easily, resolutely, constantly, and comfortably.

(2) He articles with them to take them into a near and very honourable relation to himself. [1.] He will be to them a God; he will be all that to them, and do all that for them, that God can be and do. Nothing more can be said in a thousand volumes than is comprehended in these few words, I will be a God to them. [2.] They shall be to him a people, to love, honor, serve; and, as much as, he shall be to them God. Here, God's covenant was ever his; his covenant, in that respect, continued ever his; he regarded them not, v. 9. They dealt ungratefully with their God, and cruelly with themselves, and fell under God's displeasure. God will regard those who remain in his covenant, but will reject those who cast away his yoke from them. 4. That it is decayed, grown old, and vanished away; (v. 13.) it is antiquated, canceled, out of date, of no more use in gospel-times than candles are when the sun is risen. Some think the covenant of peculiarity did not quite decay till the destruction of Jerusalem, though it was forfeited at the death of Christ, and was made old, and was now to vanish and perish, and the Levitical priesthood vanished with it.

[1.] The apostle observes, with respect to this covenant, that it was his father's, and in his father's name he had written his will, v. 9. So he also supposes, that the Levitical priesthood had their priestly privileges of the old dispensation in obedience thereto; 2. That it is established upon better promises, more clear and express, more spiritual, more absolute; the promises of spiritual and eternal blessings are in this covenant positive and absolute, the promises of temporal blessings with a wise and kind proviso, as far as shall be for God's glory and his people's good.

In this part of the chapter, the apostle illustrates and confirms the superior excellency of the priesthood of Christ above that of Aaron, from the excellency of that covenant, or that dispensation of the covenant of grace, of which Christ was the Mediator; (v. 6.) his ministry is more excellent, by how much he is the Mediator of a better covenant. The body and soul too of all divinity (as some observe) consist very much in rightly distinguishing between the two covenants. He is enabled to contrast the covenant of grace; and between the two dispensations of the covenant of grace—that under the Old Testament, and that under the New. Now observe,

I. What is here said of the old covenant, or rather of the old dispensation of the covenant of grace: of this it is said, 1. That it was made with the fathers of the Jewish nation at mount Sinai; (v. 9.) and Moses was the Mediator of that covenant, when God spoke to them from the cloud, v. 21. from the land of Egypt, which speaks the great affection, condescension, and tender care of God toward them. 2. That this covenant was not found faultless; (v. 7, 8.) it was a dispensation of darkness and dread, tending to bondage, and only a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; it was perfect in its kind, and fitted to answer its end, but very imperfect in comparison of the gospel. 3. That it was not sure or steadfast; for the Jews continued not in that covenant, v. 8. But the Lord regarded them not, v. 9. They dealt ungratefully with their God, and cruelly with themselves, and fell under God's displeasure. God will regard those who remain in his covenant, but will reject those who cast away his yoke from them. 4. That it is decayed, grown old, and vanished away; (v. 13.) it is antiquated, canceled, out of date, of no more use in gospel-times than candles are when the sun is risen. Some think the covenant of peculiarity did not quite decay till the destruction of Jerusalem, though it was forfeited at the death of Christ, and was made old, and was now to vanish and perish, and the Levitical priesthood vanished with it.

II. What is here said of the New-Testament dispensation, to prove the superior excellency of Christ's ministry. It is said, 1. That it is a better covenant, (v. 6.) a covenant of, we may say, new dispensation and discovery of the grace of God to sinners, bringing in holy light and liberty to the soul; it is without fault, well ordered in all things; it requires nothing but what it promises grace to perform; it accepts of godly sincerity, accounting it gospel perfection; every transgression does not turn us out of covenant, all is put into a good and safe hand. 2. That it is established upon better promises, more clear and express, more spiritual, more absolute; the promises of spiritual and eternal blessings are in this covenant positive and absolute, the promises of temporal blessings with a wise and kind proviso, as far as shall be for God's glory and his people's good.
to their windows, and such a plentiful effusion of the Spirit of God, to make the ministration of the gospel effectual, that there shall be a mighty increase and spreading of Christian knowledge in persons of all sorts, of each sex, and of all ages. O that this promise might be fulfilled in our days, that the hand of God may be with his ministers, that a great number may believe, and be turned to the Lord!

(4.) God with them about the pardon of their sins, and that which accompanies the true knowledge of God; (v. 12.) For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, &c. Observe, [1.] The freeness of this pardon; it does not result from merit in man, but from mercy in God; he pardons for his own name-sake. [2.] The fulness of this pardon; it extends to their unrighteousness, sins, and iniquities; to all kinds of sin, to sins highly aggravated. [3.] The fixeness of this pardon; it is so final and so fixed, that God will remember their sins no more; he will not recall his pardon; he will not only forgive their sins, but forget them, treat them as if he had forgotten them. This pardoning mercy is connected with all other spiritual mercies; unpardonable sin prevents mercy, and pulls down judgments, but the pardon of sin prevents judgment, and opens a wide door to all spiritual blessing; it is the effect of that mercy, which is built upon the sacrifice of Christ, and the shedding of his blood; and of that mercy that shall be everlasting. This is the excellency of the new dispensation, and these the articles of it; and therefore we have no reason to repine, but great reason to rejoice, that that former dispensation is antiquated and vanished away.

CHAP. IX.

The apostle, having declared the Old Testament dispensation antiquated and vanished away, proceeds to set the Hebrew sanctuary as the type of the New Testament and the New; and that whatever was excellent in the Old, was typical and representative of the New; which therefore must as far exceed the Old as the substance does the shadow. The Old Testament was never intended to be restored in, but to prepare for, the institutions of the gospel. And here he treats. I. Of the tabernacle, the place of worship, from v. 1. to v. 5. II. Of the worship and services performed in the tabernacle, v. 6. to v. 7. III. He delivers the spiritual sense and the main design of all, v. 8. to the end.

1. THEN verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. 2. For there was a tabernacle made, the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary. 3. And after the second veil, the tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all; 4. Which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; 5. And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

The apostle gives an account here of the tabernacle, that place of worship which God appointed to be pitched on earth, it is called a worldly sanctuary, wholly of this world, as to the materials of which it was built, and a building that must be taken down; it is called a worldly sanctuary, because it was the court and palace of the King of Israel. God was their King, and, as other kings, had his court or palace of residence, and attendants, furniture, and provision, suitable thereto. This tabernacle (of which we have the model, Exod. 25.—27.) was a moving temple, shadowing forth the unsettled state of the church militant, and the human nature of the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily. Now of this tabernacle it is said, 1. That it was divided into two parts, called a first and a second tabernacle, an inner and an outer part; representing the two states of the church militant and triumphant, and the two natures of Christ, human and divine. 2. We are told what was placed in each part.

(1.) In the outer part; and there were several things, of which you have here a sort of schedule.

[1.] The candlestick; doubtless not an empty and unlighted one, but where the lamps were always burning. And there was need of it, for there were no windows in the sanctuary; and this was to convince the Jews of the darkness and mysterious nature of that dispensation. Their light was only candle-light, in comparison of the fulness of light which Christ, the Sun of righteousness, would bring along with him, and communicate to his people; for all our light is derived from him, the Fountain of light.

[2.] The table and the shew-bread set upon it. This table was set directly opposite to the candlestick, which shews that by light from Christ we must understand, not our own houses, but the sanctuary itself. We must not come in the dark to his table, but by light from Christ must discern the Lord's body. On this table were placed twelve loaves for the twelve tribes of Israel; a loaf for a tribe, which stood from sabbath to sabbath, and on that day were renewed. This shew-bread may be considered either as the provision of the palace, (though the King of Israel needed it not, yet, in resemblance of the palace of earth, kings there must be this provision laid in weekly,) or the provision made in Christ for the souls of his people, suitable to the wants and to the relief of their souls. He is the Bread of life; in our Father's house there is bread enough and to spare; we may have fresh supplies from Christ, especially every Lord's day. This outer part is called the sanctuary or holy, because erected to the worship of a holy God, to represent a holy house, and to entice a holy people, for their further improvement in holiness.

(2.) We have an account of what was in the inner part of the sanctuary, which was within the second vail, and is called the holiest of all. This second vail, which divided between the holy and the most holy place, was a type of the body of Christ; by the rending whereof not only a view, but a way, was opened into the innermost sanctuary of all, the type of heaven itself. Now in this part we have:

[1.] The golden censer, which was to hold the incense, or the golden altar set up to burn the incense upon; both the one and the other were typical of Christ, of his pleasing and prevailing intercession which he makes in heaven, grounded upon the merits and satisfaction of his sacrifice, upon which we are to depend for acceptance and the blessing from God.

[2.] The ark of the covenant overlaid round about with pure gold, v. 4. This typified Christ, his perfect obedience to the law, and his fulfilling of all righteousness for us. Now here we are told what was in this ark, and what was over it. First, What was in it. 1. The golden pot that had manna, which, when preserved by the Israelites in the palace of earth, typified the present state of God, presently putrified; but now, being by God's appointment deposited here in his house, was kept from putrefaction, always pure and sweet; and this to teach us, that it is only in Christ that our persons, our graces, our performances, are pure; pure is also a type of the bread of life we have in Christ, the true ambrosia that gives immortality.
This was also a memorial of God's miraculously feeding his people in the wilderness, that they might never forget such signal favour, nor distrust God for the time to come. 2. Aaron's rod that budded; and thereby shewed that God had chosen him of the tribe of Levi, to minister before him of all the tribes of Israel, and so an end was put to the murmuring of the people, and the threatening enemies. 17. Thus is that rod of God with which Moses and Aaron wrought such wonders; and this was a type of Christ, who is styled the Man, the Branch. (Isa. 11. 1.) by whom God has wrought wonders for the spiritual deliverance, defence, and supply of his people, and for the destruction of their enemies. It was a type of divine justice, by whom Christ the Rock was smitten, and from whose cool refreshing waters the people of God do drink to the very profoundness of our souls. 3. The tables of the covenant, in which the moral law was written, signifying the regard God has to the preservation of his holy law, and the care we all ought to have, that we keep the law of God; that this we can only do in and through Christ, by strength from him, nor can our obedience be accepted but through him. 2ndly. What was over the ark, v. 5. Over it the cherubim overshadowed the mercy-seat. 1. The mercy-seat, which was the covering of the ark; it was called the prefigurative, and it was of pure gold, and long as and broad as the ark in which the tables of the law were laid; it was an eminent type of Christ, and of his perfect righteousness, ever adequate to the dimensions of the law of God, and covering all our transgressions, interposing between the Shechinah, or symbol of God's presence, and our sinful failures, and covering them. 2. The cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy-seat, representing the holy angels of God, who take pleasure in looking into the great work of our redemption by Christ, and are ready to perform every good office, under the Redeemer, for those who are the heirs of salvation. The angels attended Christ at his birth, in his temptation, under his agonies, at his resurrection, and in his ascension, and will attend his second coming. God manifest in the flesh, was seen, observed, visited, by the angels. 6. Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. 7. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself and for the errors of the people: From the description of the place of worship in the Old Testament dispensation, the apostle proceeds to speak of the duties and services performed in the second. When the several parts and furniture of the tabernacle were thus settled, then what was to be done there? 1. The ordinary priests went always into the first tabernacle, to accomplish the service of God. Observe, (1.) None but priests were to enter into the first part of the tabernacle, and this to teach us all, that persons not qualified, not called of God, must not intrude into the office and work of the ministry. (2.) The ordinary priests were only to enter into the first part of the tabernacle, it would have been fatal presumption in them to have gone into the holiest of all; and this teaches us that even ministers themselves must know and keep in their proper stations, and not presume to usurp the prerogative of Christ, by offering up incense of their own, or adding their own inventions to the ordinances of Christ, or lording it over men's consciences. (3.) These ordinary priests were to enter into the first tabernacle always; that is, they were to devote themselves and all their time to the work of their office, and not alienate themselves at any time from it; they were to be in an habitual readiness for the discharge of their office; and at all stated appointed times were actually to attend to their work. (4.) The ordinary priests must enter into the first tabernacle, that they might there appreciate the holiest of all; but they must not do the work of God partially or by halves, but stand complete in the whole of his will and counsel: not only beginning well, but proceeding well, and persevering to the end, they fulfill the ministry they have received. 2. Into the second, the interior part, went the high priest alone, v. 7. This part was an emblem of heaven, and Christ's ascension thither. Here observe, (1.) None but the high priest must enter into the holiest; so none but Christ could enter into heaven in his own name, by his own right, and by his own merits. (2.) In entering into the holiest, the high priest must first go through the outer sanctuary, and through the vail; signifying that Christ went to heaven through a holy life and a violent death; the vail of his flesh was rent asunder. (3.) The high priest entered but once a year into the holiest, and in this the Antitype excels the type, (in any thing else,) for he is entered once for all, during the whole dispensation of the gospel. (4.) The high priest must not enter without blood; signifying that Christ, having undertaken to be our High Priest, could not have been admitted into heaven without shedding his blood for us; and that none of us can enter either into God's gracious presence here, or his glorious presence hereafter, but by the blood of Jesus. (5.) The high priest, under the law, entering into the holiest, offered up that blood for himself and his own errors first, and then for the errors of the people, v. 7. This teaches us that Christ is a more excellent Person and High Priest than any under the law, for he has no errors of his own to offer for. And it teaches us that ministers, when in the name of Christ they intercede for others, must first apply the blood of Christ to themselves for their pardon. (6.) When the legal high priest had offered for himself, he must not stop there, but must also offer for the errors of the people. Our High Priest, though he needs not to offer for himself, yet he forgets not to offer for his people; he pleads the merit of his sufferings for the benefit of his people on earth. Observe, (1.) Sins are errors, and great errors, both in judgment and practice. We greatly err when we are not perfectly convinced of all our errors? (2.) They are such errors as leave a guilt upon the conscience, not to be washed away but by the blood of Christ; and the sinful errors of priests and people must be all done away by the same means, the application of the blood of Christ; we must plead this blood on earth, while he is pleading it in heaven for us.
fect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; 12. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood; he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. 13. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; 14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God!

In these verses the apostle undertakes to deliver to us the mind and meaning of the Holy Ghost in all the ordinances of the tabernacle and legal economy, comprehending both place and worship. The scriptures of the Old Testament were given by inspiration of God; holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. And these Old Testament records are of great use and significance, not only to those who first received them, but even to Christians, who ought not to satisfy themselves with reading the institutes of the Levitical law, but should learn what the Holy Ghost signifies and suggests to them thereby. Now here are several things mentioned, as the things that the Holy Ghost signified and certified to his people hereby.

I. That the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while the first tabernacle was standing, ver. 8. This was one lesson the Holy Ghost would teach us by these types; the way to heaven was not so clear and plain, nor so much frequented, under the Old Testament as under the New. It is the honour of Christ and the gospel, and the happiness of those who live under it, that now life and immortality are brought to light. There was not that free access to God then that there is now; God has now opened a wider door, and there is room for more, yea even for as many as are truly willing to return unto him by Christ.

II. That the first tabernacle was only a figure for the time then present, ver. 9. It was a dark dispensation, and but of short continuance, only designed for a while to typify the great things of Christ and the gospel; that was in due time to shine forth in them of higher light and thereby cause all the shadows to flee away, and disappear, as the stars before the rising sun.

III. That none of the gifts and sacrifices offered could make the offerers perfect as pertaining to conscience; (ver. 9) that is, they could not take away either the desert, or defilement, or dominion, of sin; they could not deliver conscience from a dead law directed of God; and these Old Testament records could neither discharge the debts, nor resolve the doubts, of him who did the service. A man might run through them all in their several orders and frequent returns, and continue to do so all his days, and yet not find his conscience either pacified or purified by them; he might thereby be saved from corporal and temporal punishments that were threatened against the non-comformers; but could not be saved by them from sin or hell, as all these are, who believe in Christ.

IV. The Holy Ghost hereby signifies that the Old Testament institutions were but external carnal ordinances imposed upon them until the time of reformation, ver. 10. Their imperfection lay in three things. 1. Their nature; they were but external and carnal meats and drinks, and divers washings; all these were bodily exercises, which profit little; they could only satisfy the flesh, or at best sancify to the purifying of the flesh. 2. They were not such as were left indifferent to them to use or disuse, but they were imposed upon them by grievous corporal punishments, and this was ordered on purpose to make them look more to the promised Seed, and long more for him, ver. 3. They were never designed for a perpetuity, but only to continue till the time of reformation, till the better things provided for them were actually bestowed upon them. Gospel-times are and should be times of reformation, of clearer light as to all things necessary to be known, of greater love, inducing us to bear ill-will to none, but good-will to all, and to have complacency in all that are like God; of greater liberty and freedom both of worship and of conscience, and of more freedom belonging to the rule of the gospel. We have far greater advantages under the gospel than they had under the law; and we must either be better, or we shall be worse than they; a conversation becoming the gospel, is an excellent way of living; nothing mean, or foolish, or vain, or servile becomes the gospel.

V. The Holy Ghost signifies to us hereby, that we never make the right use of types but when we apply them to the Antitype, and whenever we do so, it will be very evident that the Antitype (as in reason it should) greatly excels the type, which is the main drift and design of all that is said. And as he writes to those who believed that Christ was come, and that Jesus was the Christ; so he very justly infers, that he is infinitely above all the legal high priests, (ver. 11, 12.) and he illustrates it very fully. For

1. Christ is the High Priest of good things to come, by which may be understood, (1.) All the good things that were to come during the Old Testament, and now are come under the New. All the spiritual and eternal blessings the Old Testament saints had in their day and under their dispensation, were owing to the Messiah to come, on whom they believed. The Old Testament set forth in shadows what was long since the New Testament is the accomplishment of the Old. (2.) All the good things yet to come and to be enjoyed in a gospel-state, when the promises and prophecies made to the gospel-church in the latter days shall be accomplished; all these depend upon Christ and his priesthood, and shall be fulfilled. (3.) Of all the good things to come in the heavenly state, which will perfect both the Testaments; as the state of glory which will perfect the state of grace, and the two chief and greater perfections of the New Testament, than the New Testament was the perfection of the Old. Observe, All good things past, present, and to come, were, and are, founded upon, and flowing from, the priestly office of Christ.

2. Christ is a High Priest by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, (ver. 11.) a tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building, but of his own hands, that is by the Holy Ghost overshadowing the blessed virgin. This was a new fabric, a new order of building, infinitely superior to all earthly structures, not excepting the tabernacle or the temple itself.

3. Christ, our High Priest, is entered into heaven, not as their high priest entered into the holiest, with the blood of bulls and of goats, but by his own blood typified by theirs, and infinitely more precious. And this

4. Not for one year only, which showed the imperfection of that priesthood, that it did but typically obtain a year's reprieve or pardon. But our High Priest entered into heaven once for all, and has obtained not a yearly respite, but eternal redemption, and so needs not to make an annual entrance. In each of the types there was something that shewed the type, and resembled the antitype, and something that shewed it was but a type, and fell short of the Antitype, and therefore ought by no means to be set up in competition with the Antitype.

5. The Holy Ghost further signified and shewed what was the efficacy of the blood of the Old-Testament sacrifices, and from thence infers the much greater efficacy of the blood of Christ. (1.) The efficacy of the blood of the legal sacrifices extended to the purifying of the flesh; (v. 13.) it freed the outward man from ceremonial uncleanness, and from temporal punishment, and entitled him to, and fitted him for, some external privileges. (2.) He infers very justly from hence the far greater efficacy of the blood of Christ; (v. 14.) How much more shall the blood of Christ, &c. Here observe,

[1.] What it was, that gave such efficacy to the blood of Christ. First, It was his offering himself to God, the human nature upon the altar of his divine nature, he being both Priest, Altar, and Sacrifice, its divine nature serving for the first two, and his human nature for the last; now such a Priest, Altar, and Sacrifice, could not but be propitiatory. Secondly, It was Christ's offering up himself to God through the eternal Spirit, not only as the divine nature supported the human, but the Holy Ghost, which he had without measure, helping him in all, and in this great act of obedience offering himself. Thirdly, It was Christ's offering himself to God without spot, without any sinful stain, either in his nature or life; this was conformable to the law of sacrifices, which were to be without blemish. Now further observe,

[2.] What the efficacy of Christ's blood is; it is very great. For, First, It is sufficient to purge the conscience from dead works, it reaches to the very soul and conscience; the defiled soul, defiled with sin, which is a dead work, proceeds from spiritual death, and tends to death eternal. As the touching of a dead body gave a legal uncleanness, so meddlin with sin gives a moral and real defilement, fixes it in the very soul; but the blood of grace has efficacy to purge it out. Secondly, It is sufficient to enable us to serve the living God, not only by purging away that guilt that separates between God and sinners, but by sanctifying and renewing the soul through Christ, by the blood of Christ, which was purchased by Christ for this purpose, that we might be enabled to serve the living God in a lively manner.

15. And for this cause he is the Mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. 16. For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. 17. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all whilst the testator liveth. 18. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. 19. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people, 20. Saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you. 21. Moreover he sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry. 22. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood: and without shedding of blood is no remission.

In these verses the apostle considers the gospel under the notion of a will or testament, the new or last will and testament of Christ, and shews the necessity and efficacy of the blood of Christ to make this testament valid and effectual.

The testament is considered as a testament, the new and last will and testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is observable, that the solemn transactions that pass between God and man are sometimes called a covenant, here a testament. A covenant is an agreement between two or more parties about things that are in their own power, or may be so; and this either with or without a mediator; this agreement takes effect at such time and in such manner as is therein declared. A testament is a voluntary act and deed of a single person, duly executed and witnessed, bestowing legacies on such legates as are described and characterized by the testator, and which can only take effect upon his death. Now observe,

Christ is the Mediator of a New Testament; (v. 15.) and he is so for several ends and purposes here mentioned. 1. To redeem persons from their transgressions, the transgressions committed against the law or first testament, which makes every transgression a forfeiture of liberty, and makes men debtors, and slaves or prisoners, who need to be redeemed. 2. To qualify all those that are effectually called, to receive the promise of an eternal inheritance. These are the great legacies that Christ by his last will and testament has bequeathed to the truly characterized legates.

11. To make this new testament effectual, it was necessary that Christ should die; the legacies accrue by means of death. This he proves by two arguments.

1. From the general nature of every will or testamentary disposition, v. 16. Where a testament is, where it acts and operates, there must of necessity be the death of the testator; till then the property is still in the testator's hand, and he has power to revoke, cancel, or alter, his will as he pleases; so that no estate, no right, is conveyed by will, till the testator's death has made it unalterable and effectual.

2. From the particular method that was taken by Moses in the ratification of the first testament, which was not done without blood, v. 18, 19, &c. All men by sin were become guilty before God, had forfeited their inheritance, their liberties, and their very lives, into the hands of divine justice; but God, being willing to shew the greatness of his mercy, proclaimed a covenant of grace, and ordered it to be typically administered under the Old Testament, but not without the blood and life of the creature: and God accepted the blood of bulls and goats, as typifying the blood of Christ; and by these means the covenant of grace was ratified under the former dispensation. The method taken by Moses according to the prophecies he had received from God, is here particularly related.

(1.) Moses spake every precept to all the people, according to the law, v. 19. He published to them the tenor of the covenant; both the duties required, the rewards promised to those who did their duty, and the punishment threatened against the transgressors, and he called for their consent to the terms of the covenant; and this in an express manner.

(2.) Then he took the blood of calves, and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and applied this blood by sprinkling it. This blood and water signified the blood and water that came out of our Saviour's pierced side, for justification and sanctification; and also shadowed forth the two sacraments of the New Testament, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, with scarlet wool, signifying the righteousness of Christ with which we must be clothed; the hyssop signifying that faith by which we must apply all. Now with these Moses sprinkled, [1.] The book of the law and covenant; to shew that the covenant of grace is confirmed by the blood of Christ, and made effectual to our good. [2.] The people were struck. This blood, typifying the blood of Christ, is the ratification of the covenant of grace, confirmed to all true believers. [3.] He sprinkled the tabernacle and all the utensils of it, intimating that all the sacrifices offered up, and services performed there, were accepted only through the blood of Christ, which procures the remission of that iniquity that cleaves to our holy things, which could not have been remitted but by that atoning blood.

23. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. 24. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: 25. Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; 26. For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. 27. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment:

28. So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

In this last part of the chapter, the apostle goes on to tell us what the Holy Ghost has signified to us by the legal purifications of the patterns of the things in heaven; inferring from thence the necessity of better sacrifices to consecrate the heavenly things themselves.

I. The necessity of purifying the patterns of the things in heaven, v. 23. This necessity arises both from the divine appointment, which must always be obeyed, and from the reason of that appointment, which was to preserve a proper resemblance between the things typifying and the things typified. It is observable here, that the sanctuary of God on earth is a pattern of heaven, and communion with God in his sanctuary is to his people a heaven upon earth.

II. The necessity that the heavenly things themselves should be purified with better sacrifices than of bulls and goats; the things themselves are better than the patterns, and must therefore be consecrated with better sacrifices. These heavenly things are the privileges of the gospel-state, begun in grace, perfected in glory; these must be ratified by a suitable sanction or consecration; and that was the blood of Christ. Now it is very evident that the sacrifices of Christ are infinitely better than those of the law. 1. From the places in which the sacrifices under the law, and those under the gospel, were offered. Those under the law were the holy places made with hands, which are but figures of the true sanctuary, v. 24. Christ's sacrifice, though offered upon earth, was by himself carried up into heaven, and is there presented in the presence of God for us, in the blood of Christ, in which sense he appears in the presence of God for us. He is gone to heaven, not only to enjoy the rest, and receive the honour, due to him, but to appear in the presence of God for us, to present our persons and our performances, to answer and rebuke our adversary and accuser, to secure our interest, to perfect all our affairs, and to prepare a place for us. 2. From the sacrifices themselves, v. 26. These under the law were the lives and blood of other creatures of a different nature from the offerers—the blood of beasts, a thing of small value, and would have been of none at all in this matter, had it not had a typical respect to the blood of Christ; but the sacrifice of Christ was the oblation of himself; he offered his own blood, truly called, by virtue of the hypothetical union, the blood of God; and therefore of infinite value. 3. From the frequent repetition of the holy sacrifices. This shews the perpetuation of that law; but it is the honour and perfection of Christ's sacrifice, that, being once offered, it was sufficient to all the ends of it; and indeed the contrary would have been absurd; for then he must have been still dying and rising again, and ascending and then again descending and dying; and the great work had been always in fieri—doing, and always doing, but never finished; which would be as contrary to reason as it is to revelation, and to the dignity of his person; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. The gospel is the last dispensation of the grace of God to men. 4. From the inefficacy of the legal sacrifices, and the efficacy of Christ's sacrifice, the legal sacrifices could not of themselves put away sin; neither procure pardon for it, nor power against it. Sin would still have lain upon us, and had dominion over us; but Jesus Christ by one sacrifice has made an end of sin, he has destroyed the works of the Devil.

III. The apostle illustrates the argument from the appointment of God concerning men, (v. 27, 28,) and observes something like it in the appointment of God concerning Christ.

1. The appointment of God concerning men, containing all the things. (1.) That they must once die, or, however, undergo a change equivalent to death. It is an awful thing to die, to have the vital knot loosed or cut asunder, all relations here dropped at once, an end put to our probation and preparation-state, and to enter into another. It is a great work, and it is a work that can be but once done, and therefore had need to be well done. The matter is of such awful importance, that death well, and die but once; but it is matter of terror to the wicked, who die in their sins, that they cannot return again to do that great work better. (2.) It is appointed to men, that after death they shall come to judgment, to a particular judgment immediately after death; for the soul returns to God as to its Judge, to be determined to its eternal state, and men shall be brought to the general judgment, one day. This is the unutterable decree of God, concerning men—they must die, and they must be judged. It is appointed for them, and it is to be believed and seriously considered by them.

2. The appointment of God concerning Christ, bearing some resemblance to the other. (1.) He must be once offered, to bear the sins of many, of all the Father had given to him, of all who should believe in his name. He was not offered for any sin of his own, he was wounded for our transgressions. God laid on him the iniquity of all his people; and these are many, though not so many as the rest of mankind; yet, when they are all gathered to him, he will be the First-born among many brethren. (2.) It is appointed that Christ shall appear the second time without sin, to the salvation of those who look for him. [1.] He will then appear without sin: at his first appearance, though he had no sin of his own, yet he stood charged with the sins of many; he was the Lamb of God that bore upon him the sins of the world; and then he appeared in the form of sinful flesh: but his second appearance will be without any such charge upon him, he having fully discharged it before, and then his visage shall not be marred, but shall be exceedingly glorious. [2.] This will be to the salvation of all who look for him, he will then perfect their holiness, their happiness; their number shall then be accomplished, and their salvation completed. Observe, It is the distinguishing character of true believers, that they are looking for Christ; they look to him by faith; they look for him by hope and holy desires. They look for him in every duty, in every ordinance, in every providence now; and they expect his second coming, and are preparing for it; and though it will be sudden destruction to the rest of the world, who scoff at the report of it, it will be eternal salvation to those who look for it.

CHAP. X.

The apostle knew very well that the Hebrews, to whom he wrote, were strangely fond of the Levitical dispensation, and therefore he fills his mouth with arguments to weaken them from it; and in order thereto proceeds in this chapter. I. To lay low the whole of that priesthood and sacrifice, v. 1. 1. He lays open the priesthood of Christ very high, that he might effectually recommend him and his gospel to them, v. 7. 12. 11. He shews to believers the honours and dignities of their state, and calls them to suitable duties, v. 19. to the end.

1. For the law, having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. 2. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? Because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. 3. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. 4. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. 5. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wast not, but a body hast thou prepared me: 6. In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure.

Here, the apostle, by the direction of the Spirit of God, sets himself to lay low the Levitical dispensation; for though it was of divine appointment, and very excellent and useful in its time and place, yet, when it was set up in competition with Christ, to whom it was only designed to lead the people, it was very proper and necessary to shew the weakness and imperfection of which the apostle does effectually, from several arguments. As

1. That the law had a shadow, and but a shadow, of good things to come; and who would dote upon a shadow, though of good things, especially when the substance is come? Observe, (1.) The things of Christ and the gospel are good things; they are the best things; they are best in themselves, and the best for us: they are realities of an excellent nature. (2.) These good things were, under the Old Testament, only shadowed, not clearly discovered, nor fully enjoyed. (3.) That the Jews then had but the shadow of the good things of Christ, some abominations of them; we under the gospel have the substance.

2. That the law was not the very image of the good things to come. An image is an exact draught of the thing represented thereby. The law did get so far, but was only a shadow, as the image of a person in a looking-glass is but much imperfect representation than his shadow upon the wall. The law was a very rough draught of the great design of divine grace, and therefore not to be so much dotted on.

3. The legal sacrifices, being offered year by year, could never make the comers thereunto perfect; for then there would have been an end of sin, v. 1. 2. Could they have satisfied the demands of justice, and made reconciliation for iniquity; could they have purified and pacified conscience; they then had ceased, as being no farther necessary; since the offerers would have had no more sin lying upon their consciences. But this was not the case; after one day of atonement was over, the sinner would fall again into one fault or other, and so there would be need of another day of atonement, and so every year, beside the daily ministrations. Whereas now under the gospel, the atonement is perfect, and not to be repeated; and the sinner, once pardoned, is ever pardoned as to his state, and only needs to renew his repentance and faith, that he may have a comfortable sense of a continued pardon.

4. As the legal sacrifices did not of themselves take away sin, so it was impossible they should, v. 3. There was an essential defect in them, (1.) They were not of the same nature with us who sinned, (2.) They were not of sufficient value to make satisfaction for the affections done to the justice and government of God, as they were not of the same nature that offended, and so could not be suitable. They were much less of the same nature that was offended: and nothing less than the nature that was offended could make sacrifice a full satisfaction for the offence. (3.) They were offered up under the law could not consent to put themselves in the sinner's room and place. The atoning sacrifice must be one capable of consenting, and must voluntarily substitute himself in the sinner's stead: Christ did so.

5. There was a time fixed and foretold by the gave God, and that time was now come, when these legal sacrifices were no longer accepted by him, or useful to men. God never did design them for themselves, and now he abrogated them; and therefore to adhere to them now, would be resisting God and rejecting him. This time of the repeal of the Levitical laws was foretold by David, (Ps. 40. 7.) and is recited here as now come. Thus industriously does the apostle lay low the Mosaic dispensation.

7. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. 8. Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt-offerings and offering for sin thou wouldst not, neither hadst pleasure therein: (which are offered by the law;) 9. Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. 10. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. 11. And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins: 12. But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God; 13. From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. 14. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. 15. Wherefore the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he hath said before, 16. This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; 17. And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. 18. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

Here the apostle raises up and exalts the Lord Jesus Christ, as high as he had laid the Levitical priesthood low. He recommends Christ to them as the true High Priest, the true atoning Sacrifice, the Antitype of all the rest: and this he illustrates,

1. From the purpose and promise of God concerning Christ, which are frequently recorded in the volume of the books of the Old Testament. God had not only decreed, but declared by Moses and the prophets, that Christ should come and be the great High Priest of the church, and should offer up a perfect and a perfecting sacrifice. It was written of Christ in the beginning of the book of God, that the Seed of the woman should break the serpent's head; and the Old Testament abounds with prophecies concerning Christ. Now since he is the Person so often promised, so much spoken of, so long expected by the people of God, he ought to be received with great honour and gratitude.

2. From what God had done in preparing a body for Christ, that is a human nature, that he might be qualified to be our Redeemer and Advocate; uniting the two natures in his own person, he was a fit Mediator to go between God and man; a Day's-Man to lay his hand upon both, a Peace-Maker, to reconcile them, and an everlasting Band of union between God and the creature—"Mine ears hast thou opened; thou hast fully instructed me, furnished and fitted me for the work, and engaged me in it," Ps. 40.

6. Now a Saviour, thus provided and prepared by God himself in so extraordinary a manner, ought to be received with great affection and gladness.

3. From the readiness and willingness that Christ discovered to engage in this work, when no other sacrifice would be accepted, v. 7—9. Now no lesser sacrifice would be a proper satisfaction to the justice of God than that of Christ himself, then Christ voluntarily came into it; "Lo, I come! I delight to do thy will, O God! Let thy curse fall upon me, but let these go their way. Father, I delight to fulfil thy counsels, and my covenant with thee for them; I delight to perform all thy promises, to fulfil all the purport of thy will in me." God had not done wrong to Christ and our Scribes, to that in Christ we have the fulfilling of the scriptures.

4. From the errand and design upon which Christ came; and that was, to do the will of God, not only as a Prophet to reveal the will of God, not only as a

King to give forth divine laws, but as a Priest to satisfy the demands of justice, and to fulfil all righteousness. Christ came to do the will of God in two instances. (1.) In taking away the first priesthood, which God had no pleasure in; not only taking away the curse of the covenant of works, and cancelling the sentence denounced against us as sinners, but taking away the curse of the covenant of works, and blotting out the hand-writing of ceremonial ordinances, and nailing it to his cross. (2.) In establishing the second, that is, his own priesthood and the everlasting gospel, the most pure and perfect dispensation of the covenant of grace; this is the great design upon which the heart of God was set from all eternity. The will of God centres and terminates in it; and it is not more agreeable to the will of God than it is advantageous to the souls of men; for it is by this will that we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all, v. 10. Observe, [1.] What is the fountain of all that Christ has done for his people—the sovereign will and grace of God. [2.] How we come to partake of what Christ has done for us—by being sanctified, converted, effectually called, wherein we are united to Christ, and so partake of the benefits of his redemption; and this sanctification is owing to the obligation he made of himself to God.

5. To prove the perfect efficacy of the priesthood of Christ; (v. 14.) By one offering he hath for ever perfected them that are sanctified: he has and will perfectly deliver those that are brought over to him, from all the guilt, power, and punishment of sin, and will put them into the sure possession of perfect holiness and felicity. This is what the Levitical priesthood could never do; and if we indeed are aiming at a perfect state, we must receive the Lord Jesus Christ as the only High Priest that can bring us to that state.

6. From the place to which our Lord Jesus is now exalted, the honour he has there, and the further honour he shall have; (v. 12, 13.) This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down at the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. Here observe, (1.) To what honour Christ, as Man and Mediator, ascended; that is, the second or glorious seat of power, interest, and activity: the giving hand; all the favours that God bestows on his people, are handed to them by Christ: the receiving hand; all the duties that God accepts from men, are presented by Christ: the working hand; all in the kingdoms of providence and grace, is administered by Christ; and therefore this is the highest post of honour. (2.) How Christ came to this honour: not merely by the purpose or donation of the Father, but by his own merit and purchase, as a reward due to his sufferings; and as he can never be deprived of an honour so much his due, so he will never quit it, nor cease to employ it for his people's good. (3.) How he enjoys this honour—with the greatest satisfaction and rest; he is for ever sat down there. The Father acquits and is satisfied in him: he is satisfied in his Father's will and presence; this is his rest for ever; here he will dwell: for he hath both desired and deserved it. (4.) He has further expectations, which shall not be disappointed; for they are grounded upon the promise of the Father, who hath said unto him, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool, Ps. 110, 1. One would think such a Person as Christ could have no enemies, except in hell; but it is certain that he has enemies on earth, very many, and very inconstant ones. Let not Christians then wonder that they have enemies, though they desire to live peaceably with all men. But Christ's enemies shall be made his footstool; some by conversion, others by confusion; and which way soever it be, Christ will be honoured; of this Christ is assured, this he is expecting; and his people should rejoice in the expectation of it; for when his enemies are subdued, their enemies, that are so for his sake, shall be subdued also.

7. And lastly, The apostle recommends Christ from the witness the Holy Ghost has given in the scriptures concerning him; this relates chiefly to what should be the happy fruit and consequence of his humiliation and sufferings, which in general is that new and gracious covenant that is formed upon his satisfaction, and sealed by his blood; (v. 15.) whereof the Holy Ghost is a Witness. The passage is cited from Jer. 31. 31. in which covenant God promises, (1.) That God would pour out his Spirit upon his people, so as to give them wisdom, will, and power, to obey his word; he will put his laws in their hearts, and write them in their minds, v. 16. This will make their duty plain, easy, and pleasant. (2.) Their sins and iniquities he will remember no more, (v. 17.) which will alone shew the riches of divine grace, and the sufficiency of Christ's satisfaction, that it needs not be repeated, v. 18. For there shall be no more remembrance of sin against true believers, either to shame them now, or to condemn them hereafter. This was much more than the Levitical priesthood and sacrifices could effect.

And now we have gone through the doctrinal part of the epistle, in which we have met with many things dark and difficult to be understood, which we must impute to the weakness and dulness of our own minds. The apostle now proceeds to apply this great doctrine, so as to influence their affections, and direct their practice, setting before them the dignities and duties of the gospel-state.

19. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, 20. By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the vail, that is to say, his flesh; 21. And having a high priest over the house of God; 22. Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. 23. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised: 24. And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: 25. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching. 26. For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, 27. But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. 28. He that despised Moses' law, died without mercy, under two or three witnesses: 29. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? 30. For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. 31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. 32. But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were enlightened, ye endured a great fight of afflictions; 33. Partly, while ye were a making-stock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, while ye became companions of them that were so used. 34. For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spotting of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance. 35. Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. 36. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. 37. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. 38. Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. 39. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

I. The dignities of the gospel-state. It is fit that believers should know the honours and privileges that Christ has procured them, that, while they take the comfort, they may give him the glory of all. The privileges are, 1. Boldness to enter into the holiest. They have access to God, light to direct them, liberty of spirit and of speech to conform to the direction; they have a right to the privilege, and a readiness for it; assistance to use and improve it, and assurance of acceptance and advantage. They may enter into the gracious presence of God in his holy oracles, ordinances, providences, and covenant, and so into communion with God, where they receive communications from him, till they are prepared to enter into his glorious presence in heaven. 2. A High Priest over the house of God, even this blessed Jesus, who presides over the church militant, and every member thereof on earth, and over the church triumphant in heaven. God is willing to dwell with men on earth, and to have them dwell with him in heaven; but fallen man cannot dwell with God, without a High Priest, who is the Mediator of reconciliation here, and of fruition hereafter.

II. The apostle tells us the way and means by which Christians enjoy such privileges, and, in general, declares it to be by the blood of Jesus, by the merit of that blood which he offered up to God as a sufficient sacrifice: he has, he will, for all those who believe in him, free access to God in the ordinances of his grace here, and in the kingdom of his glory. This blood, being sprinkled on the conscience, chases away slavish fear, and gives the believer assurance both of his safety, and his welcome into the divine presence. Now the apostle having given this general account of the way by which we have access to God, he enters further into the particulars of it, v. 20. As, 1. It is the only way; there is no other left but this; the first way to the tree of life is, and has been, long shut up. 2. It is a new way, both in opposition to the covenant of works, and to the antiquated dispensation of the Old Testament; it is via novissima—the last way that will ever be opened to men; they who will not enter in this way, exclude themselves for ever; it is a way that will always be effectual. 3. It is a living way. It would be death to attempt to come to God in the way of the covenant of works; but it is a way open to God, and live. It is by a living Saviour, who, though he was dead, is alive; and it is a way that gives life and lively hope to those who enter into it.

4. It is a way that Christ has consecrated for us through the vail, that is, his flesh. The vail in the tabernacle and temple signified the body of Christ; when he died, the vail of the temple was rent in sunder, and this as the sign of the opening of the eyes of our faith, thereshold a surprising view into the holy of holies, which they never had before. Our way to heaven is by a crucified Saviour; his death is to us the way of life; to those who believe this, he will be precious.

III. The apostle proceeds to shew the Hebrews the duties which they were obliged to upon the account of these privileges conferred upon them in such a manner, v. 22.

1. They must draw near to God, and that in a right manner. They must draw near to God; since such a way of access and return to God is opened, it would be the greatest ingratitude and contempt of God and Christ, still to keep at a distance from him. They must draw near by conversion, and by taking hold of his covenant; they must draw near in all holy conversation, like Enoch walking with God; they must draw near in humble adoration, like Noah walking in the shipping at his footstool; they must draw near in holy dependence, and in a strict observation of the divine conduct toward them; they must draw near in conformity to God, and communion with him, living under his blessed influence, still endeavouring to get nearer and nearer, till they come to dwell in his presence; but they must see to it, that they make their approach to God after a right manner.

(1. With a true heart, without any allowed guile or hypocrisy. God is the Searcher of hearts, and he requires truth in the inward parts. Sincerity is our gospel-perfection, though not our justifying righteousness. (2.) In full assurance of faith; with a faith grown up to a full persuasion that when we come to God by Christ, we shall have audience and acceptance. We should lay aside all sinful distrust; without faith it is impossible to please God; and therefore the stronger our faith is, the more glory we give to God. And, (3.) Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience by a believing application of the blood of Christ to our souls. They may be cleansed from guilt, from filth, and from sinful fear and torment, from all aversion to God and duty, from ignorance, and error, and superstition, and whatever evils the consciences of men are subject to by reason of sin. (4.) And sealed, with a seal, with the impression of the seal of baptism, by which we are recorded among the disciples of Christ, members of his mystical body, or with the sanctifying virtue of the Holy Spirit reforming and regulating our outward conversation as well as our inward frame; cleansing from the filthiness of the flesh as well as of the Spirit. The priests under the law were to wash, before they went into the presence of the Lord to offer before him. There must be a due preparation for making our approaches to God.

2. The apostle exhorts believers to hold fast the profession of their faith, v. 23. Here observe, (1.) The duty itself—to hold fast the profession of our faith, to embrace all the truths and ways of the gospel; to get fast hold of them, and to keep that hold against all temptation and opposition. Our spiritual enemies will do what they can to wrest our faith, and hope, and holiness, and comfort, out of our hands, but we must hold fast our religion as our best treasure. (2.) The manner how we must do this—without wavering, without doubting, without disputing, without dallying with temptation to apostasy. Having once settled these great things between God and our souls, we must be steadfast and immovable. Those who begin to waver in matters of Christian faith and practice, are in danger of falling away. (3.) The motive or reason enforcing this duty—he is faithful, that hath promised. God has made great and precious promises to believers, and he is a faithful God, true to his word; there is no falseness or fickleness with him, and there should be none with us; his faithfulness should excite and encourage us to be faithful, and we must depend more upon his promises to us than upon our promises to make him, and we must plead with him the promise of grace sufficient.

IV. We have the means prescribed for preventing our apostasy, and promoting our fidelity and perseverance, v. 24, 25, &c. He mentions several; as,

1. That we should consider one another, to provoke to love and good works. Christians ought to have two solemn considerations and concerns for one another; they should affectionately consider what their several wants, weaknesses, and temptations are; and they should do this, not to reproach one another, nor provoke one another to anger, but to promote love and good works, calling upon themselves and one another to love God and Christ more, to love duty and holiness more, to love their brethren in Christ more, and to do all the good offices of Christ to one another both to the saints and the souls of each other. A good example given to others is the best and most effectual provocation to love and good works.

2. Not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together. Christ's disciples should assemble themselves together, sometimes more privately for conference and prayer, and in public for hearing and joining in all the ordinances of gospel-worship. There were in the apostles' times, and should be in every age, Christian assemblies for the worship of God, and for mutual edification. And it seems even in those times there were some who forsake these assemblies, and so began to apostatize from religion itself. The communion of saints is a great help and privilege, and a good means of steadiness and perseverance; whereby those who are friends to one another, and are jealous of ourselves and one another with a glibly jealousy. This managed with a true gospel-spirit, would be the best and most cordial friend to all. deny him to be the Messiah; to trample upon his authority, and undermine his kingdom; to trample upon his members as the off-scourings of all things, and not fit to live in the world, what punishment can be too great for such men?

(2.) They have counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing. The blood of Christ, with which the covenant was purchased and sealed, and wherewith Christ himself was consecrated, or wherewith the apostate is identified, that is, baptized, visibly initiated into the new covenant by baptism, and admitted to the Lord's supper. Observe, There is a kind of sanctification which persons may partake of, and yet fall away; they may be distinguished by common gifts and graces; by an outward profession; by a form of godliness; a course of duties, and a set of privileges, and yet fall away finally. Men who have seemed to have the blessing may come to account it an unholy thing, no better than the blood of a malefactor, though it was the world's ransom, and every drop of it of infinite value.

(3.) They have done despite unto the Spirit of grace; the Spirit that is graciously given to men, and that works grace wherever it is; the Spirit of grace, that should be regarded and attended to with the greatest care; this Spirit they have grieved, nor will they be reconciled to it, and the highest act of wickedness, and makes the case of the sinner desperate; refusing to have the gospel-salvation applied to him. Now he leaves it to the consciences of all, appeals to universal reason and equity, whether such aggravated crimes ought not to receive a suitable punishment, a sorer punishment than they had, who died without mercy? But what punishment can be sorer than to die without mercy? I answer, To be kept alive by the fear of God and grace which they have despised. How dreadful is the case, when not only the justice of God, but his abused grace and mercy, call for vengeance!

4. From the description we have in the scripture of the nature of God's vindictive justice, ver. 30. We know that he has said, Vengeance is mine. This is taken out of Ps. 94. 1. Vengeance belongs unto me; the terrors of the Lord are known both by recompence of the just, and by the destruction of the wicked. Vindictive justice is a glorious, though terrible attribute of God; it belongs to him, and he will use and execute it upon the heads of such sinners as despise his grace; he will avenge himself, and his Son, and Spirit, and covenant, upon apostates. And how dreadful then will their case be! The other quotation is from Dent. 32. 56. The Lord will judge his people; he will search and try his visible church, the church of his own possession, who say they are Jews, but are of the synagogue of Satan; and he will separate the precious from the vile, and will punish the sinners in Zion with the greatest severity. Now those who know him who hath said, Vengeance belongeth to me, I will recompense, must needs conclude, as the apostle does, ver. 31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God; they who know the joy that results are impressed of divine wrath on the soul. When he punishes them by creatures, the instrument abates something of the force of the blow; but when he does it by his own hand, it is infinite misery. This they shall have at God's hand; they shall lie down in sorrow; their destruction shall come from his glorious powerful presence; when they make their woeful bed in hell, they will find that God is there, and his presence will be their greatest terror and torment. And he is a living God; he lives for ever, and will punish for ever.

5. He presses them to perseverance, by putting them in mind of their former sufferings for Christ; (v. 32.) But call to mind the former days, in which, after ye had suffered divers afflictions, God did shew himself unto them by gazing-stocks, and to them that were thus afflicted. In the early days of the gospel, there was a very hot persecution raised up against the professors of the Christian religion, and the believing Hebrews had their share of it; he would have them to remember,

(1.) When they had suffered; in former days, after they were illuminated; that is, as soon as God had breathed life into their souls, and caused divine light to spring up in their minds, and taken them into his favour and covenant; then earth and hell combined all their force against them. Here observe, a natural state is a dark state, and those who continue in that state meet with no disturbance from Satan and the world; but a state of grace is a state of light, and therefore the powers of darkness will violently oppose it. They who will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution.

(2.) It was endured; they endured a great affliction; many and various afflictions united together against them, and they had a great conflict with them. Many are the troubles of the righteous. [1.] They were afflicted in themselves. In their own persons they were made gazing-stocks, spectacles to the world, angels, and men, 1 Cor. 4. 9.

In their names and reputation, (v. 33.) by many reproaches. Christians ought to value their reputation; and they do so especially because the reputation of their religion is concerned. This makes reproach a great affliction; they were afflicted in their estates, by the spoiling of their goods, by fines and forfeitures. [2.] They were afflicted in the afflictions of their brethren; partly, while ye became companions of those that were so used. The Christian spirit is a sympathizing spirit, not a selfish spirit, but a compassionate spirit; it makes every Christian's suffer their own, puts us upon pitying others, visiting them, helping them, and pleading for them. Christians are one body, animated by one spirit, embarking in one common cause and interest, and are the children of that God who is afflicted in all the afflictions of his people. If one member of the body suffers, all the rest suffer with it. And the apostle takes particular notice how they had sympathized with him; (v. 34.) Ye had compassion on me in my bonds. We must thankfully acknowledge the compassions of our Christian friends have shewed for us under our afflictions.

(3.) How they had suffered. They had been mightily supported under their former sufferings; they took their sufferings patiently, and not only so, but joyfully received it from God as a favour and honour conferred upon them, that they should be thought worthy to suffer reproach for the name of Christ. God can strengthen his sufferers with all might in the inner man, to all patience and long-suffering, and that with joyfulness, Col. 1. 11.

(4.) What it was, that enabled them thus to bear up under their sufferings. They knew in themselves that they had in heaven a better and a more enduring substance. Observe, [1.] The happiness of the saints in heaven is substance, something of real weight and worth. All things here are but shadows, [2.] It is an enduring substance, it will outlive time, and run parallel with eternity; they can never lose it; their enemies can never take it from them, as they did their earthly goods.

[4.] This will make a rich amusement for all they can lose and suffer here. In heaven they shall have a better life, a better estate, better liberty, better society, better hearts, better work, every thing better.

[5.] Christians should know this in themselves, they should get the assurance of it in themselves, (the Spirit of God witnessing with their spirits;) for the assured knowledge of this will help them to endure by flight of afflictions they may be encouraged with.

6. He presses them to persevere, from that recompense of reward that waited for all faithful Christians; (v. 35.) Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. Where, (1.) He exhorts them not to cast away their confidence, that is their holy courage and boldness, but to hold fast that profession for which they had suffered so solemnly, as they had done so well before. (2.) He encourages them to this, by assuring them that the reward of their holy confidence would be very great; it carries a present reward in it, in holy peace and joy, and much of God's presence and his power visiting upon them; and it shall have a great recompense of reward hereafter. (3.) He shews them how necessary a grace the grace of patience is in our present state; (v. 36.) Ye have need of patience, else the promise made to God's holy ones, ye might receive the promise; that is, this present reward. Observe, The greatest part of the saints' happiness is in promise; must first do the will of God before they receive the promise; and after they have done the will of God, they have need of patience to wait for the time when the promise shall be fulfilled; they have need of patience to live till God calls them away.

It is a trial of the patience of Christians, to be content to live after their work is done, and to stay for the reward till God's time to give it them is come. We must be God's waiting servants, when we can be no longer his working servants; they who have had and exercised much patience already, must have and exercise more till they die. (4.) To help their patience, he assures them of the near approach of Christ's coming to deliver and to reward them; (v. 37.) For yet a little while, and he shall come will come, and will not tarry. He will soon come to them at death, and put an end to all their sufferings, and give them a crown of life. He will soon come to judgment, and put an end to the sufferings of the whole church, (all his mystical body,) and give them an ample and glorious reward in the most public manner. There is an appointed time for both, and beyond that time he will not tarry, Hab. 2. 3. The Christian's present conflict may be sharp, but it will be soon over.

7. And lastly, He presses them to perseverance, by telling them that this is their distinguishing character, and will be their happiness; whereas apostasy is the reproach, and will be the ruin, of all who are guilty of it; (v. 38, 39.) Ver. the just shall live by faith, &c. (1.) It is the honourable character of just men, that in times of the greatest afflictions, they can live by faith; they can live upon the assured promises they have of the true better life. Faith puts life and vigour into them; they can trust God, and live upon him, and wait his time; and as their faith maintains their spiritual life now, it shall be crowned with eternal life hereafter. (2.) Apostasy is the mark and the brand of those in whom God takes no pleasure; and it is a cause of God's severe displeasure and anger. God never was pleased with the formal profession and external duties of such persons; he permits them to live among such hypocrites of the hearts then; and he is greatly provoked when their formality in religion ends in an open apostasy from religion; he abhors them with great displeasure; they are an offence to him. (3.) The apostle concludes with declaring his good hope concerning himself and these Hebrews, that they should not forfeit the character and happiness of the just, and fall under the brand and misery of the wicked; (v. 39.) But we are not, &c, as if he had said, "I hope we are not of them who draw back. I hope that you and I, who have met with great trials already, and have been supported under them by the grace of God strengthening our faith, shall not be at any time left to ourselves, to draw back to perdition; but that we shall have this mighty power through faith unto salvation." Observe, [1.] Professors may go a great way, and after all draw back; and that drawing back from God is drawing on to perdition: the further we depart from God, the nearer we approach to ruin. [2.] Those who have been kept faithful in great trials for the time past, have reason to hope that the same grace shall be sufficient to help them still to live by faith, till they receive the crown of righteousness and patience, even the salvation of their souls. If we live by faith, and die in faith, our souls are safe for ever.

CHAP. XI.

The apostle having, in the close of the foregoing chapter, recommended the grace of faith and a life of faith as the best preservative against apostasy; he now proceeds upon the nature and fruits of this excellent grace. I. The nature of it, and the honour it reflects upon all who live in the exercise of it, v. 1., 2. II. The great examples we have in the Old Testament of those who lived by faith, and did suffer extraordinary things by the strength of this grace, v. 3. to 8. And, III. The advantages that we have in the gospel for the exercise of this grace above what they had who lived in the times of the Old Testament, v. 39, 40.

1. Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. 2. For by it the elders obtained a good report. 3. Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen are not made of things which do appear.

Here we have, 1. A definition or description of the grace of faith in two parts. (1.) It is the substance of things not seen, faith and hope go together; and the same things that are the object of our hope, are the object of our faith. It is a firm persuasion and expectation, that God will perform all that he has promised to us in Christ; and this persuasion is so strong, that it gives the soul a kind of possession and present fruition of those things; gives them a subsistence in the soul, by the first-fruits and foretastes of them: so that believers in the exercise of faith are full in that which is not, and kings before the time. Christ dwells in the soul by faith, and the soul is filled with the fulness of God, as far as his present measure will admit; he experiences a substantial reality in the objects of faith. (2.) It is the evidence of things not seen. Faith demonstrates to the eye of the mind the reality of those things that cannot be discerned by the eye of the body. Faith is the firm assurance of the things of God, which the body sees not, by faith knows, and finds to be part of it, and sets to its seal that God is true. It is a full approval of all that God has revealed, as holy, just, and good; it helps the soul to make application of all to itself with suitable affections and endeavours; and so it is designed to serve the believer instead of sight, and to be to the soul all that the senses are to the body. That faith is but opinion or fancy, which does not realize invisible things to the soul, to excite the soul to act agreeably to the nature and importance of them.

2. An account of the honour it reflects upon all those who have lived in the exercise of it; (v. 2.) By it the elders obtained a good report; the ancient believers, who lived in the first ages of the world. Observe, (1.) True faith is an old grace, and has the best plea to antiquity; it is not a new invention, a modern fancy; it is a grace that has been planted in the soul of man ever since the covenant of grace was published in the world; and it has been practised from the beginning of the revelation; the eldest and best men that ever were in the world, were believers. (2.) Their faith was their honour; it reflected honour upon them; they were an honour to their faith, and their faith was an honour to them; it put them upon acting in the things that were of good report, and God has taken care that a record should be kept of the excellent things they did in the strength of this grace. The genuine actions of faith will bear to be reported, deserve to be reported, and will, when reported, redound to the honour of true believers.

3. We have here one of the first acts and articles of faith, which has a great influence on all the rest, and which is common to all believers of every age and part of the world, and; that is, the creation of the worlds by the word of God, not out of pre-existent matter, but out of nothing. v. 3. The grace of faith has a retrospect as well as a prospect; it looks not only forward to the end of the world, but back to the beginning of the world. By faith we understand much more of the formation of the world than ever could be understood by the naked eye of natural reason. Far from this not being a matter of conjecture, but a friend and a help to it. Now what does faith give us to understand concerning the worlds, that is, the upper, middle, and lower regions of the universe? (1.) That those worlds were not eternal, nor did they produce themselves, but they were made by another. (2.) That the Maker of the worlds is God, he is the maker of all things, and whoever is, so must be God. (3.) That he made the world with great exactness; it was a framed work, in every thing duly adapted and disposed to answer its end, and to express the perfections of the Creator. (4.) That God made the world by his word, that is, by his essential wisdom and eternal Son, and by his active will, saying, Let it be done, and it was done, Ps. 55. 9. (5.) That the world was thus framed out of nothing, out of no pre-existent matter, contrary to the received maxim, that "out of nothing nothing can be made," which, though true of created power, can have no place with God, who can call things that are not, as if they were, and command them into being. These things we understand by faith. The Bible gives us the truest and most exact account of the origin of all things, and we are to believe it, and not to wrest or run down the scripture-account of the creation, because it does not suit with some fantastic hypothesis. God is an infinite and perfect being; he did learn but conjectured the first remarkable step towards infidelity, and has led them into many more.

4. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh. 5. By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God. 6. But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God, must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. 7. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became and making them the best. Secondly, God must come to us before we come to him. Thirdly, In calling and converting sinners, God appears as a God of glory, and works a glorious work in the soul. Fourthly, This calls us not only to leave sin, but sinful company, and whatever is inconsistent with our devotion to him. God's children are called not only to set out well, but to go on well. Sixthly, He will not have his people take up that rest any where short of the heavenly Canaan.

[2.] The promise of God; God promised Abraham that the place he was called to go he should after ward receive for an inheritance; after a while he should have the heavenly Canaan for his inheritance, and in process of time his posterity should inherit the earth more clearly; God here calls him to an inheritance: by his effectual call he makes them children, and so heirs. Secondly, This inheritance is not immediately possessed by them, they must wait some time for it: but the promise is sure, and shall have its seasonal accomplishment. Thirdly, The faith of parents often procures blessings for their posterity.

(2.) The exercise of Abraham's faith; he yielded himself to God's call. [1.] He went out, not knowing whither he went. He put himself into the hand of God, to send him whithersoever he pleased; he subscribed to God's wisdom, as fittest to direct; and submitted to his will, as fittest to determine every thing that concerned him. Implicit faith and obedience are due to God, and to him only; all that are effectually called, resign up their own will and wisdom to the will and wisdom of God, and it is their wisdom to do so; though they know not always their way, yet they know their guide, and that satisfies them. [2.] He sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country. This was an exercise of his faith. Observe, First, How Canaan is called the land of promise, because yet only promised, not possessed. Secondly, How Abraham lived in Canaan, not as an heir and proprietor, but as a sojourner only; he did not serve an ejection, or raise a war against the old inhabitants, to dispossess them, but contented himself to live as a stranger; to bear their unkindnesses patiently, to receive any favours from them thankfully, and to keep his heart fixed upon his home, the heavenly Canaan. Thirdly, He dwelt in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise. He lived there in an ambulatory moving condition, living in a daily readiness for his removal; and thus should we all live in this world: He had good company with him, and they were a great comfort to him, in his sojourning state. Abraham lived till Isaac was seventy-five years old, and Jacob fifteen. Isaac and Jacob were heirs of the same promise; for the promise was renewed to Isaac, (Gen. 26. 3.) and to Jacob, Gen. 28. 13. All the saints are heirs of the same promise. The promise is made to believers and their children, and to as many as the Lord our God shall call. He had good company with him, and they had great comfort to him, in his sojourning state. Abraham lived till Isaac was seventy-five years old, and Jacob fifteen.

(3.) The supports of Abraham's faith; (v. 10.) He looked for a city that hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. Observe here, [1.] The description given of heaven: it is a city, a regular society, well established, well defended, and well supplied: it is a city that hath foundations, even their inhabitants are built up in the infallible word of God, the infinite merits and mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ; the promises of an everlasting covenant; its own purity, and the perfection of its inhabitants: and it is a city, whose Builder and Maker is God. He contrived the model; he accordingly made it, and he has laid open a new and living way into it, and prepared it for his people; he puts them into possession of it, prefers them in it, and is himself the Substance and Felicity of it. [2.] Observe the due regard that Abraham had to this heavenly city: he looked for it; he believed there was such a state; he waited for it, and in the mean time he conversed in it by faith; he had raised and rejoicing, hopes, that the Lord's promise was true, [3.] The influence this had upon his present conversation; it was a support to him under all the trials of his sojourning state; helped him patiently to bear all the inconveniences of it, and actively to discharge all the duties of it, persevering therein unto the end.

5. In the midst of the story of Abraham, we have inserted an account of the faith of Sarah. Here observe,

(1.) The difficulties of Sarah's faith, which were very great. As, [1.] The prevalency of unbelief for a time; she laughed at the promise, as impossible to be made good. [2.] She had gone out of the way of her duty through unbelief, in putting Abraham upon taking Hagar to his bed, that he might have a posterity. Now this sin of hers would make it more difficult for her to act by faith afterward. [3.] The promise is not removed, but strengthened, that she should be the mother of a child, when she was of sterile constitution naturally, and now past the prolific age.

(2.) The actions of her faith. Her unbelief is pardoned and forgiven, but her faith prevailed and is recorded. She judged him faithful, who had promised, (v. 11.) She received the promise as the promise of God; and being convinced of that, she truly judged he both could and would perform it, how impossible soever it might seem to reason; for the faithfulness of God will not suffer him to deceive his people.

(3.) The fruits and rewards of her faith. [1.] She received strength to conceive seed. The strength of nature, as well as grace, is from God; he can make the barren soul fruitful, as well as the barren womb. [2.] She was delivered of a child, a man-child, a child of the promise, the comfort of his parents' advanced years, and the hope of future ages. [3.] From them, by this son, sprang a numerous progeny of illustrious persons, as the stars of the sky; (v. 12.) a great, powerful, and renowned nation, above all the rest in the world; and a nation of saints, the peculiar church and people of God; and, which was the highest honour and reward of all, of these, according to the flesh, the Messiah came, who is over all God blessed forever. And yet seen their mortal body.

6. The apostle proceeds to make mention of the faith of the other patriarchs, Isaac and Jacob, and the rest of this happy family, v. 13. Where observe,

(1.) The trial of their faith in the imperfection of their present state. They had not received the promises, that is, they had not received the things promised; they had not yet been put into possession of them, nor sojourned in the land promised. But they had not seen Christ in the flesh. Observe, [1.] Many that are interested in the promises, do not presently receive the things promised. [2.] That one imperfection of the present state of the saints on earth, is, that their happiness lies more in promise and reversion than in actual enjoyment and possession. The gospel-state is much nearer to perfection than the patriarchal, because more of the promises are fulfilled. The heavenly state will be most perfect of all; for there all the promises will have their full accomplishment.

(2.) The actions of their faith during this imperfect state of things; though they had not received the promises, yet, [1.] They saw them afar off. Faith has a clear and a strong eye, and can see promised mercies at a great distance. Abraham saw Christ's day, when it was afar off, and rejoiced, John 8. 56. [2.] They were persuaded of them, that they were true and should be fulfilled: Faith sets to its mark, and satisfies the soul. [3.] They embraced them. Their faith was a faith of consent. Faith has a long arm, and can lay hold of blessings at a great distance; can make them present; can love them, and rejoice in them; and thus anoint the enjoyment of them. [4.] They confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on earth. Observe, First, Their condition, strangers and pilgrims. They are strangers as saints, whose home is heaven; they are pilgrims as they are travelling toward their home, though often meanly and slowly. Secondly, Their acknowledgment of this their condition; they were not ashamed to own it; both their lips and their lives confessed their present condition; they expected little from the world; they cared not to engage much in it; they endeavoured to lay aside every weight; to gird up the loins of their minds; to mind their way; to keep company and pace with their fellow-travellers, looking for difficulties, and bearing them, and longing to get home. [5.] Hereby they declared plainly that they sought another country, (v. 14.) heaven, their own country. For their spiritual birth is from thence, there are their best relations, and there is their inheritance. This country they seek; their designs are for it; their desires are after it; their discourse is about it; they diligently endeavour to cleave up to it; to make it their own; to bring their thoughts and conversation to it; to have their conversation in it, and to come to the enjoyment of it. [6.] They gave full proof of their sincerity in making such a confession. For, First, They were not mindful of that country from whence they came, v. 15. They did not hinder after the plenty and pleasures of it, nor regret and repent that they had left it; they had no desire to return to it. Note, Those that are once effectually and sovereignly called out of a sinfull state, have no mind to return into it again; they now know better things. Secondly, They did not take the opportunity that offered itself for their return; they might have had such an opportunity; they had time enough to return; they had natural strength to return; they knew the way; those with whom they sojourned would have been willing enough to have parted with them; their old friends would have been glad to receive them. But they chose rather to part with their congregation, and their journey; and flesh and blood, a corrupt counsellor, would be sometimes suggesting to them a return, but they steadfastly adhered to God and duty under all discouragements, and against all temptations to revolt from it. So should we all do. We shall not want opportunities to revolt from God; but we must shew the truth of our faith and profession by a steady adherence to him to the end of our days. Thirdly, Their sincerity appears, not only in not returning to their former country, but in desiring a better country, that is, a heavenly. Observe, 1. The heavenly country is better than any upon earth; it is better situated, better stored with everything that is good, better secured from everything that is evil; the employments, the enjoyments, the society, and every thing in it, are better than they are in this更好 than they are in this better country. True faith draws forth sincere and fervent desires; and the stronger faith is, the more fervent those desires will be. [7.] They died in the faith of those promises; not only lived by the faith of them, but died in the full persuasion that all the promises should be fulfilled to them and their's, v. 13. That faith held out to the last. By faith, when they were dying, they received the acquiescence in the will of God; they quenched all the fiery darts of the devil; they overcame the terrors of death, disarmed it of its sting, and bade a cheerful farewell to this world, and to all the comforts and crosses of it. These were the actings of their faith. Now observe, 2. The gracious and great reward of this faith; (v. 5.) God is not ashamed to be called God, for he hath prepared for them a city. Note, [1.] God is the God of all true believers; faith gives them an interest in God, and in all his fulness. [2.] He is called their God: he calls himself so; I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; he gives them leave to call him so; and he gives them the spirit of adoption, to enable them to cry Abba, Father. [3.] Not their God; their God is God by nature, wisdom by sin, and the poverty of their outward condition, God is not ashamed to be called their God; such is his condescension, such is his love to them; therefore let them never be ashamed of being called his people, nor of any of those that are truly so, how much soever despised in the world. Above all, let them take care that they be not a shame and reproach to their God, and so provoke him to be ashamed of them: but let them act so as to be to him a name, and for a praise, and for a glory. [4.] As the proof of this, God has prepared for them a city, a happiness suitable to the relation into which he has taken them. For there is nothing in this world commensurate to the love of God in being the God of his people; and if God neither could nor would give his people something better than this world affords, he might be ashamed to be their God. But he takes them into such a relation to himself, he will provide for them accordingly. If he takes to himself the title of their God, he will fully answer it, and act up to it, and he has prepared that for them in heaven, that will fully answer this character and relation, so that it shall never be said, to the reproach and dishonour of God, that he has adopted a people to be his own children, and then take no care to do all that belongs to his relationship towards them. The consideration of this should inflame the affections, enlarge the desires, and excite the diligent endeavours, of the people of God after this city that he has prepared for them. 7. Now after the apostle has given this account of the faith of others, with Abraham, he returns to him again, and gives us an instance of the greatest trial and act of faith that stands upon record, either in the story of the father of the faithful, or in any instance of his spiritual seed; and that was, his offering up of Isaac; (v. 17.) By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promises, offered up his only begotten son. In this great example observe, (1.) The trial and exercise of Abraham's faith; he was tried indeed. It is said, (Gen. 22. 1.) God in this tempted Abraham; he tempted him to see what a man would do, but only tried his faith and obedience to purpose. God had before this tempted or tried the faith of Abraham, when he called him away from his country and father's house; when by a famine he was forced out of Canaan into Egypt; when he was obliged to fight with five kings to rescue Lot; when Sarah was taken from him by Abimelech, and in many other instances. But this trial was greater than all; he was commanded to offer up his son Isaac. Read the account of it, Gen. 22. 2. There you will find every word was a trial; "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt-offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. Take thy son, not one of thy beasts or slaves, thine only son by Sarah; Isaac thy laughter, the child of thy joy, and whom thou lovest as they own soul; take him away to a distant place, three days' journey, the land of Moriah; do not only leave him there, but offer him for a burnt-offering." A greater trial was never put upon any creature. The apostle here mentions some things that very much added to the greatness of this trial. [1.] He was put upon it after he had received the promises, that this Isaac should build up his family, that in him his seed should be called, (v. 18.) and that he should be one of the progenitors of the Messiah, and all nations blessed in him; so that in being called to offer up his Isaac, he seemed to be called to destroy and cut off his own family, to cancel the promises of God, to prevent the coming of Christ, to destroy the whole world, to sacrifice his own soul and his hopes of salvation, and to cut off the church of God at one blow; a most terrible trial! [2.] That this Isaac was his only begotten son by his wife Sarah, the only one he was to have by her, and the only one that was to be the child and heir of the promise. Ishmael was to be put off with earthly greatness. Either the promises of a posterity, and of the Messiah, must be fulfilled by means of this son, or not at all; so that beside his most tender affection to this his son, all his expectations were bound up in him, and if he perished, must perish with him. If Abraham had ever so many sons, this was the only son who could convey to all nations the promised blessing; a son for whom he was willing to go in sacrifice, and to give up in the manner, upon whom his heart was set, to have this son offered up as a sacrifice, and that by his own hand; it was a trial that would have overtop the fittest and the strongest mind that ever animated a human body. [2.] The actions of Abraham's faith in so great a trial; he obeyed; he offered up Isaac; he intentionally gave him up by his submissive soul to God, and was ready to the last willy according to the command of God; he went as far in it as to the very critical moment, and would have gone through with it if God had not prevented him. Nothing could be more tender and moving than those words of Isaac, My father, here is the wood, here is the fire; but where is the lamb for the burnt-offering? little thinking that he was to be the lamb; but Abraham knew it, and yet he went on with the great design. (3.) The fulfillment of this action of his faith; they must be very great, suitable to the greatness of the trial; He accounted that God was able to raise him from the dead, v. 19. His faith was supported by the sense he had of the mighty power of God, who was able to raise the dead; he reasoned thus with himself, and so he resolved all his doubts. It does not appear that he had any expectation of being countermanded, and prevented from offering up his son; the expectation of that would have spoiled the trial, and consequently the triumph of his faith; but he knew that God was able to raise him from the dead; and he believed that God would do so, since such great things depended upon his son, which must have failed if Isaac had not a further life. Observe, [1.] God is able to raise the dead, to raise dead bodies, and to raise dead souls. [2.] The belief of this will carry us through the greatest difficulties and trials that we can meet with. [3.] It is our duty to be reasoning down our doubts and misgivings, by the consideration of the almighty power of God. (4.) The reward of his faith in this great trial; (v. 19.) he received his son from the dead in a figure, in a parable. [1.] He received his son. He had parted with him to God, and God gave him back again. The first way, according to other comforts with comfort, is to resign them up to God, and God will then return them, if not in kind yet in kindliness. [2.] He received him from the dead, for he gave him up for dead; he was as a dead child to him, and the return was to him no less than a resurrection. [3.] This was a figure or parable of something further. It was a figure of the sacrifice and resurrection of Christ, of whom Isaac was a type. It was a figure and earnest of the glorious resurrection of all true believers, whose life is not lost, but hid with Christ in God. We come now to the faith of other Old-Testament saints, mentioned by name, and by the particular trials and actions of their faith.

20. By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come. 21. By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph; and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff. 22. By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, and gave commandment concerning his bones. 23. By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment. 24. By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; 25. Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; 26. Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. 27. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured as seeing him who is invisible. 28. Through faith he kept the passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the first-born should touch them. 29. By faith they passed through the Red sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned. 30. By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days. 31. By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace.

In this roll of believers we have an account,

I. Of the faith of Isaac; something of him we had before interwoven with the story of Abraham. Here we have something of a distinct nature—that by faith he blessed his two sons Jacob and Esau, concerning things to come. Where observe, 1. The actions of his faith; He blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come. He blessed them; that is, he resigned them up to God in covenant; he recommended God and religion to them; he prayed for them; and prophesied concerning them, what would be their condition, and the condition of others in times to come; the account we have of this in Gen. 27. Observe, (1.) Both Jacob and Esau were blessed as Isaac's children, at least as to temporal good things. It is a great privilege to be the offspring of good parents, and often the wicked children of good parents fare the better in this world for their parents' sake: for things present are in the covenant; they are not the best things, and no man knoweth love or hatred by having or wanting such things. (2.) Jacob had the predestination and the principal blessing, which shews that it is grace and the new birth that exalt persons above their fellows, and qualify them for the best blessings; and that it is faith and not flesh that gives the same family one is taken and another left, one loved and the other hated, since all the race of Adam are by nature hateful to God; that if one has his portion in this world, and the other in the better world, it is God who makes the difference; for even the comforts of this life are more and better than any of the children of men deserve.

2. The difficulties Isaac's faith struggled with. (1.) He seemed to have forgotten how God had determined the matter at the birth of these his sons, Gen. 25. 23. This should have been a rule to him all along, but he was rather swayed by nature affection and general custom, which give the double portion of honour, affection, and advantage, to the first-born. (2.) He acted in this matter with some reluctunt, when he came to pronounce the blessings; (Gen. 27. 35.) He trembled very exceedingly, and charged Jacob that he had subtly taken away Esau's blessing, v. 33, 35. But for all this, Isaac's faith recovered itself, and he ratified the blessing; I have blessed him, yea, and he shall be blessed. Rebecca and Jacob are not to be justified in the indirect means they used to obtain this blessing, but God will be justified in overturning all the sins of men to serve the purposes of his glory. Now the faith of Isaac thus prevailing over his unbelief, it has pleased the God of Isaac to pass by the weakness of his faith, to commend the sincerity of it, and record him among the elders, who through faith have obtained a good report. We now go on to,

II. The faith of Jacob, (v. 21.) who, when he was dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph; and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff. There were a great many instances of the faith of Jacob; his life was a life of faith, and his faith met with great trials. But he was not exempt from some two instances out of many of the faiths of this patriarch, beside what has been already mentioned in the account of Abraham. Where observe,

1. The acts of his faith here mentioned, and they are two. (1.) He blessed both the sons of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh; he adopted them into the number of his own sons, and so into the congregation of Israel, though they were born in Egypt, and so was to be joined to the visible church of God in profession and privilege, but more to be so in spirit and truth. (2.) He made them both heads of different tribes, as if they had been his own immediate sons. (2.) He prayed for them, that they might both be blessed of God. (3.) He prophesied that they should be blessed; but as Isaac did before, so now Jacob prefers the younger, Ephraim; and though Joseph had proved himself to be the most worthy of his blessing, he should be laid on Manasseh, the elder, Jacob willingly laid it on Ephraim, and this by divine direction, for he could not see; to shew that the Gentile church, the younger, should have a more abundant blessing than the Jewish church, the elder. (2.) He worshipped, leaning on his staff; that is, he prayed God for what he had done for him, and for the preserved head of the approaching blessedness; he prayed for those who were behind him, that religion might live in his family when he was gone. He did this, leaning on the top of his staff; not as the papists dream, that he worshipped some image of God engraven on the head of his staff; but intimating to us his great natural weakness, that he was not able to support himself so far as to sit up in his bed without a staff; and yet that he would not make this an excuse for neglecting the worshipping of God; he would do it as well as he could with his body, as well as with his spirit, though he could not do it as well as he would. He shewed thereby his dependence upon God, and testified this condition here as a pilgrim with his staff, his journeying in the hardness of the world, and willingness to be at rest.

2. The time and season when Jacob thus acted his faith: when he was dying, he lived by faith, and he died by faith and in faith. Observe, Though the grace of faith is of universal use throughout our whole lives, yet it is especially so when we come to die. Faith has its greatest work to do at last, to help the believer to finish well, to die to the Lord, so as to honour him, by patience, hope and joy, so as to leave a witness behind of the truth of God's word, and the excellency of his ways, for the conviction and establishment of all who attend them in their dying moments. The best way in which parents can finish their course, is, blessing their families and worshipping their God. We are now come to,

III. The faith of Joseph, v. 22. And here also we consider, 1. What he did by his faith; he made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, and gave commandment concerning his bones. The passage is out of Gen. 50. 24, 25. Joseph was eminent for his faith, though he had not enjoyed the helps for it, that the rest of his brethren had; he was sold into Egypt, he was tried by temptations, by sin, by persecution, for retaining his integrity; he was tried by preference and power in the court of Pharaoh, and yet his faith held out and comforted him through to the last. (1.) He made mention by faith of the departing of the children of Israel; the time should come when they should be delivered out of Egypt; and he did this, both that he might caution them against the thoughts of settling in Egypt, which was now a place of plenty and ease to them; and also that he might keep them from sinking under the calamities and distresses which he foresaw for them, their homesick hearts, and to show them that he did it to comfort himself, that though he should not live to see their deliverance, yet he could die in the faith of it. (2.) He gave commandment concerning his bones, that they should preserve them unburied in Egypt, till God should deliver them out of that house of bondage, and that then they should carry his bones along with them into Canaan, and deposit them there. Though believers are chiefly governed by God, and their powers are not, as it were, to neglect their bodies, as being members of Christ and parts of themselves, which shall at length be raised up, and be the happy companions of their glorified souls to all eternity. Now Joseph gave this order, not that he thought his being buried in Egypt would either prejudice his soul, or prevent the resurrection of his body. Some of the Rabbies fancied that all the Jews who were buried out of Canaan, must be conveyed under ground to Canaan before they could rise again. But he gave this order, to testify, 1. That though he had lived and died in Egypt, yet he did not live and die an Egyptian, but an Israelite. 2. That he preferred a significant burial in Canaan before a magnificent one in Egypt. (3.) That he would go as far with his people as he could, though he could not go as far as he would. (4.) That he believed the profession that his soul should presently have with departed saints, as his body had with their dead bodies. (5.) To assure them that God would be with them in Egypt, and deliver them out of it in his own time and way. Observe here what was that the faith of Joseph acted after this manner; that was, as in the case of Jacob, when dying. God often gives his people living comforts in dying moments; and when he does it, it is their duty, as they can, to communicate it to those about them, for the glory of God, for the honour of religion, and for the good of their brethren and friends. We go on now,

IV. The faith of the parents of Moses, which is cited from Exod. 2. 3, &c. Where observe,
1. The acting of their faith; they hid this their son three months. Though the mother of Moses is only mentioned in the history, yet by what is here said, it seems his father not only consented to it, but consulted about it. It is a happy thing where yoke-fellow, so big a shyn of the yoke of faith, as heirs of the grace of God, fear to part with him in a religious concern for the good of their children, to preserve them not only from those who would destroy their lives, but corrupt their minds. Observe, Moses was persecuted betimes, and forced to be concealed; in this he was a type of Christ, who was persecuted almost as soon as he was born, and his parents forced to flee with him into Egypt for his preservation. It is a great mercy to be freed from wicked laws and edicts; but when we do this, we must use all lawful means for our security. In this faith of Moses’s parents there was a mixture of unbelief, but God was pleased to overlook it.

2. The reasons of their thus acting. No doubt, natural affection could not but move them; but there was something further. They saw he was a proper child, a goodly child, (Exod. 2. 2.) exceeding fair, (v. 5.) he possessed a divine beauty, with a divine constitution, a divine soul, and this is more effective than all the ornamental graces of the body, and it is a reason why God appears in the patriarchal history, with his usual goodness and grace; and this is seen here, in his giving such a child to his parents. Christ is considered to have been thus great in the estimation of his parents; it was a reason why they were willing to see him, and to bring him up as their son.

3. The prevalence of their faith over their fear. They were not afraid of the king’s commandment, Exod. 1. 22. That was a wicked and a cruel edict, and all the males of the Israelites should be destroyed in their infancy, and so the name of Israel must be destroyed out of the earth. But they did not so fear as presently to give up their child; they considered that if none of the males were preserved, there would be an end and utter ruin of the church of God and the true religion, and that though in their present state of servitude and oppression, one would praise the dead rather than the living, yet they believed God would preserve his people, and the time was coming when it would be worth while for an Israelite to live. Some must hazard their own lives to preserve their children, and they were resolved to do it; they knew the king’s commandment was evil in itself, contrary to the laws of God and nature, and therefore of no authority or obligation. Faith is a great preservative against the sinful slothful fear of men, as it sets God before the soul, and shows the vanity of the creature, and its subordination to the will and power of God. The apostle next proceeds to,

V. The faith of Moses himself, v. 24, 25, &c. Where observe,
1. Another of his faith in conquering the world. (1.) He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, whose finding he was, and her foundling, too; she had adopted him for her son, and he refused it. Observe, [1.] How great a temptation Moses was under; Pharaoh’s daughter is said to have been his only child, and was herself childless; and having found Moses, and saved him as she did, they resolved to take him and bring him up as her son, and so she should be in the royal family of Egypt, and he might thereby have been serviceable to Israel. He owed his life to this princess; and to refuse such kindness from her, would look not only like ingratitude to her, but a neglect of Providence, that seemed to intend his advancement and his brethren’s advantage. [2.] How glorious was the triumph of his faith in so great a trial! He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, lest he should undervalue the true honour of being a son of Abraham, the father of the faithful; he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, lest it should look like renouncing his religion as well as his relation to Israel; and no doubt both these he might have done if he had accepted this honour; he therefore refused it.

(2.) He chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, v. 25. He was willing to take his lot with the people of God here, though it was a suffering lot, that he might have his portion with them hereafter, rather than to enjoy all the sensual sinful pleasures of Pharaoh’s court, which would be but for a season, and then punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. Herein he acted rationally as well as religiously, and conquered the temptation to worldly pleasure, as he had done before to worldly preference. Here observe, (1.) The pleasures of sin are, and will be, but short; they must end in speedy repentance or in speedy ruin. (2.) The pleasures of this world, and especially those of a court, are too often the pleasures of sin; and they are always so, when we cannot enjoy them without deserting God, and so, our conscience and our character, when they are offered upon such terms. (3.) Suffering is to be chosen rather than sin; there being more evil in the least sin than there can be in the greatest suffering. (4.) It greatly alleviates the evil of suffering, when we suffer with the people of God, embahked in the same interest, and animated by the same Spirit.

2. He esteemed the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, v. 26. See how Moses weighed matters; in one scale he put the worst of religion—the reproaches of Christ; in the other scale the best of the world—the treasures of Egypt; and in his judgment directed by faith, the worst of religion weighed down the best of the world: the reproaches of the church of God are the reproaches of Christ, who is, and has ever been, the Head of the church. Now here Moses conquered riches, which he had before he had conquered his own people; a thing of the first magnitude. Faith accounts himself reproached and his people reproved, and while he thus interests himself in their reproaches, they become riches, and greater riches, than the treasures of the richest empire in the world: for Christ will reward them with a crown of glory that fades not away. Faith discerns this, and determines and acts accordingly.

2. The circumstance of time is taken notice of, when Moses by his faith gained this victory over the world, in all its honours, pleasures and treasures, when he was come to years, v. 24. not only to years of discretion, but of experience, to the age of forty years; when he was great, or come to maturity. Some would take this as an extenuation of his victory, that he gained it so late, that he did not make this choice sooner; but it is rather an enhancement of the honour of his self-denial and victory over the world, that he made this choice when he was grown ripe for judgement and enjoyment, able to know what he did, and why he did it. It was not the act of a child, that prefers counters to gold, but it proceeded from mature deliberation. It is an excellent thing for persons to be seriously religious, when in the midst of worldly business and enjoyments; to despise the world, when they are most capable of relishing and enjoying it.

3. What it was, that supported and strengthened the faith of Moses to that degree, as to enable him to gain such a victory of the world; he had respect to the recompense of reward, that is, say some, the first-born; but doubtless it meant much more—the glorious reward of faith and fidelity in the other world. Observe here, (1.) Heaven is a great reward, surpassing not only all our deservings, but all our conceptions. It is a reward suitable to the price paid for it—the blood of Christ; suitable to the perfections of God, and fully answering to all his promises. It is a recompense of reward, because given by a righteous Judge for the righteousness of Christ to righteous persons, according to the righteous rule of the covenant of grace. (2.) Believers may and ought to have respect to this recompense of reward; they should acquaint themselves with it, approve of it, and live in the daily and delightful expectation of it. Thus it will prove a land-mark to direct their course; a load-stone to draw their hearts; a sword to conquer their enemies; a spur to quicken them to duty; and a cordial to refresh them under all the difficulties of doing and suffering work.

4. We have another instance of the faith of Moses, and that was in forsaking Egypt; v. 27. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king. Twice Moses forsook Egypt; (1.) As a supposed criminal, when the king's wrath was incensed against him for killing the Egyptian; where it was his business to run the greater hazard of being discovered, with fear of dependancy, but of discretion to save his life. (2.) As a commander and ruler in Jeshurun, after God had employed him to humble Pharaoh, and make him willing to let Israel go. Observe here,

[1.] The product of his faith; He forsook Egypt, and all its power and pleasures, and undertook the conduct of Israel out of it.

[2.] The need of his faith. It raised him above the fear of the king's wrath, though he knew that it was great, and levelled at him in particular; that it marched at the head of a numerous host to pursue him; he was not dismayed, and he said to Israel, Fear not, Exod. 14. 13. Those who forsake Egypt, must expect the wrath of men; but they need not fear it, for they are under the conduct of that God who is able to make the wrath of man to praise him, and who is able to make the deepest effects to the ultimate good of them who believe.

[3.] The principle upon which his faith acted in these his motions; He endured, as seeing him that was invisible; he bore up with invincible courage under all danger, and endured all the fatigue of his employment, which was very great; and this by seeing the invisible God. Observe, First, The God with whom we have to do, is an invisible God; he is so to our senses, to the eye of the body: and this shows the folly of those who pretend to make images of God; whom no man hath seen, or can see. Secondly, By faith we may see this invisible God; we may be fully assured of his existence, of his providence, and of his gracious and powerful presence with us. Thirdly, Such a sight of God will enable believers to endure to the end, whatever they may meet with in the way.

5. We have yet another instance of the faith of Moses, in keeping the passover and sprinkling of blood, v. 28. The account of this we have in Exod. 12. 13—23. Though all Israel kept this passover, yet it was by Moses that God delivered the institution of it; and though it was a great mystery, Moses by faith both delivered it to the people, and kept it that night in the house where he lodged. The passover was one of the most solemn institutions of the Old Testament, and a very significant type of Christ. The occasion of its first observation was extraordinary: it was in the same night that God slew the first-born of the Egyptians; but though the Israelites lived among them, the destroying angel passed over their houses, and spared them and their's.

Now, to entitle them to this distinguishing favour, and to mark them out for it, a lamb must be slain; the blood of it must be sprinkled with a bunch of hyssop upon the lintel of the door, and on the two side-posts; the flesh of the lamb must be roasted with fire; and it must be all of it eaten that very night with bitter herbs, in a travelling posture, their loins girt, their shoes on their feet, and their staff in their hand. This was accordingly done, and the destroying angel passed over them, and slew the first-born of the Egyptians. This opened a way for the return of Abraham's posterity into the land of promise.

The accommodation of this type is not difficult. (1.) Christ is that Lamb, he is our Passover, he was sacrificed for us. (2.) His blood must be sprinkled; it must be applied to those who have the saving benefit of it. (3.) It is applied effectually only to the Israelites, the chosen people of God. (4.) It is not owing to our inherent righteousness or best performances, that we are saved from the wrath of God, but to the blood of Christ and his imputed righteousness. If any of the families of Israel had neglected the sprinkling of this blood upon their doors, though they should have spent all the night in prayer, the destroying Angel would have broken in upon them, and slain their first-born. (5.) Wherever this blood is applied, the soul receives a whole Christ by faith, and lives upon him. (6.) This true faith makes sin bitter to the soul, even while it receives the pardon and atonement. (7.) All our spiritual privileges on earth should quicken us to set out early, and get forward, in our way to heaven. (8.) Those who have been marked out, must ever remember and acknowledge free and distinguishing grace.

VI. The next instance of faith is that of the Israelites passing through the Red Sea under the conduct of Moses their leader, v. 29. The story we have in Exodus, ch. 14. Where observe,

1. The preservation and safe passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea, when there was no other way to escape from Pharaoh and his host, who were closely pursuing them. Here we may observe, (1.) Israelites in danger, and with great reason, should fly to God for deliverance. (2.) Though Israel was pursued by chariots and horsemen behind them; steep rocks and mountains on each hand, and the Red Sea before them. (2.) Their deliverance was very glorious. By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; the grace of faith will help us through all the dangers we meet with in our way to heaven.

2. The destruction of the Egyptians. They, presumptuously attempting to follow Israel through the Red Sea, being thus blinded and hardened to their ruin, were all drowned. Their rashness was great, and their ruin was grievous. When God judges, he will overcome; and it is plain that the destruction of sinners is of themselves.

VII. The next instance of faith is that of the Israelites, under Joshua their leader, before the walls of Jericho. The story we have in Josh. 6. 3. where observe, 1. The means prescribed of God to bring down the walls of Jericho, and that was, that they should compass the walls about once a day for seven days together, and seven times the last day, and that the priests should carry the ark when they compassed the walls about, and should blow with trumpets made of rams' horns, and sound a longer blast than before, and then all the people should shout, and the walls of Jericho should fall before them. Here was great trial of faith; the thing prescribed seems very improbable to answer such an end, and would doubtless expose them to the daily contempt of their enemies; the ark of God would seem to be in danger. But this was the way God commanded them to take, and he loves to do great things by small and contemptible means, that his own arm may be made bare. 2. The powerful success of the prescribed means; the walls of Jericho fell before them. This was a frontier-town in the land of Canaan, the first that stood out against the Israelites. God was pleased in this extraordinary manner to shew and dissemble it, in order to magnify himself, to terrify the Canaanites, to strengthen the faith of the Israelites, and to exclude all boasting. God can, and will, in his own time and way, cause all the powerful opposition that is made to his interest and glory, to fall down, and the grace of faith is mighty through God for the pulling down of strong-holds; he will make Babylon fall before the faith of his people, and when he has some great thing to do for them, he raises up great and strong faith in them.

III. The next instance is the faith of Rahab, v. 31. Among the noble army of believing worthies, bravely marshalled by the apostle, Rahab comes in the rear, to shew that God is no respecter of persons. Here consider, 1. Who this Rahab was: (1.) She was a Canaanite, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and had but little help for faith, and yet she was a believer; the power of divine grace greatly appears, when it works without the past means of grace. (2.) She was a harlot, and lived in a way of sin; she was not only a keeper of a public house, but a common woman of the town, and yet she believed that the greatness of sin, if truly repented of, shall be no bar to the pardoning mercy of God. Christ has saved the chief of sinners; where sin has abounded, grace has superabounded. 2. What she did by her faith; she received the spies in peace, the men that Joshua had sent to spy out Jericho. Josh. 2. 7. She not only gave them welcome, but she concealed them from their enemies who sought to cut them off, and she made a noble confession of her faith, v. 9—11. She engaged them to covenant with her to shew favour to her and her's, when God should shew kindness to them, and that they would give her a sign, which they did, a line of scarlet, which she was to hang forth out of the window; she sent them away with prudent and friendly advice. Here, (1.) This woman was a instance in good works, especially to the people of God. (2.) Faith will venture all hazards in the cause of God and his people; a true believer will sooner expose his own person than God's interest and people. (3.) A true believer is desirous, not only to be in covenant with God, but in communion with the people of God, and is willing to cast in his lot with them, and to fare as they fare. 3. Observe what Rahab gained by her faith; she escaped perishing with those that believed not. Observe, (1.) The generality of her neighbours, friends, and fellow-citizens, perished; it was an utter destruction that befell that city; man and beast were cut off. (2.) The cause of the people of Jericho's destruction—unbelief; they believed not that Israel's God was the true God, and that Israel was the peculiar people of God, though they had evidence sufficient of it. (3.) The signal preservation of Rahab. Joshua gave a strict charge that she should be spared, and none but she and her's; and she taking care that the sign, the scarlet-thread, should be hung out, her family were marked out for mercy, and perished not. Singular faith, when the generality are not only unbelievers, but against believers, will be rewarded with singular favours in times of common calamity.

32. And what shall I more say? For the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets: 33. Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, 34. Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. 35. Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. 36. And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment. 37. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. 38. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: 40. God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

1. The apostle having given us a class of many eminent believers, whose names are mentioned, and the particular trials and actions of their faith recorded; he now concludes his narrative with a more summary account of another set of believers, where the particular acts are not ascribed to particular persons, but large general truths are well acquainted with the sacred story; and, like a divine orator, he prefaces this part of the narrative with an elegant exposition; What shall I say more? Time would fail me; as if he had said, "It is in vain to attempt to exhaust this subject; should I not restrain my pen, it would soon run beyond the bounds of an epistle; and therefore I shall but just mention a few more, and leave you to enlarge upon them." Observe, 1. After all our researches into the scriptures, there is still more to be learned from them. 2. We must well consider in divine matters what we should say, and suit it as well as we can to the time. 3. We should be pleased to think how great the number of believers was under the Old Testament, and how strong their faith, though the objects thereof were not then so fully revealed. And, 4. We should lament it, that now, in gospel-times, when the rule of faith is more clear and perfect, the number of believers should be so small, and their faith so weak.

In this summary account the apostle, 1. Mentions Gideon, whose story we have in Judges 6. 11, 36. He was an eminent instrument raised up of God to deliver his people from the oppression of the Midianites; he was a person of mean tribe and family, called from a mean employer, a sheepherd, and saluted by an angel of God in this surprising manner, The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of war. Gideon could not at first receive such honours, but humbly expostulates with the angel about their low and distressed state: the angel of the Lord delivered him his commission, and assured him of success, confirming it by fire out of the rock. Gideon is directed to offer sacrifice, and, instructed in his offering. God appeared again to him, and his army was reduced from thirty-two thousand to three hundred; yet by these, with their lamps and pitchers, God put the whole army of the Midianites to confusion and ruin; and the same faith that gave Gideon so much courage and honour, enabled him to act with great meekness and modesty toward his brethren afterward. It is the excellency of the grace of faith, that, while it helps men to do great things, it keeps them from having high and great thoughts of themselves.

2. Barak, another instrument raised up to deliver Israel out of the hand of Jabin, king of Canaan, (Judges 4.) where we read, (1.) Though he was a soldier, yet he received his commission and instructions from Deborah, a prophetess of the Lord; and he insisted upon having this divine oracle with him in his expedition. (2.) He obtained a great victory by his faith over all the host of Sisera. (3.) His faith taught him to return all the praise and glory to God: this is the nature of faith; it has recourse unto God in all dangers and difficulties, and then makes grateful returns to God for all mercies and deliverances.

3. Samson, another instrument that God raised up to deliver Israel from the Philistines: his story we have in Judges, ch. 13., 14., 15., and 16. and from it we learn, that the grace of faith is the strength of the soul for great service. If Samson had not had a strong faith as well as a strong arm, he had never performed such exploits. (1.) By faith the servants of God shall overcome even the roaring lion. (2.) True faith is acknowledged and accepted, even when mingled with many failings. (3.) The believer's faith endures to the end, and, in dying, gives him victory over his enemies. (4.) He is bold and valiantly enemies; his greatest comfort he gains by dying.

4. Jephthah, whose story we have, Judges 11. before Samson; he was raised up to deliver Israel from the Ammonites. As various and new enemies rise up against the people of God, various and new deliverers are raised up for them. In the story of Jephthah, observe, (1.) The grace of God often finds out, and hastens upon, the most undeserving and ill-deserving persons, to do great things for them and by them. Jephthah was the son of a harlot. (2.) The grace of faith, wherever it is, will put men upon acknowledging God in all their ways; (ch. 11. 11.) Jephthah rehearsed all his words before the Lord in Mizpeh. (3.) The grace of faith will make men bold and venturous in a good cause. (4.) Faith will not only put men upon making their vows to God, but paying their vows after the mercy received; yea though they be sworn to their own great grief, hurt, and loss, as in the case of Jephthah and his daughter.

5. David, that great man after God's own heart. Few ever met with greater trials, and few ever discovered a more lively faith; his first appearance on the stage of the world was a great evidence of his faith; having, when young, slain the lion and the bear; his faith in God encouraged him to encounter the Philistines, over all the host of Amalek. The same faith enabled him to bear patiently the ungrateful malice of Saul and his favourites, and to wait till God should put him into possession of the promised power and dignity. The same faith made him a very successful and victorious prince, and, after a long life of virtue and honour, (though not without some foul stains of sin,) he died in faith, relying on God for a crown of glory and honor that men may with him and his, ordered in all things, and sure; and he has left behind him such excellent memoirs of the trials and acts of faith in the book of Psalms, as will ever be of great esteem and use, among the people of God.

6. Samuel, raised up to be an eminent prophet of the Lord to Israel, as well as a ruler over them. God revealed himself to Samuel, when he was but a child, and continued to do so till his death. In his story observe, (1.) Those are likely to grow up to some eminency in faith, who begin betimes in the exercise of it. (2.) They, whose business it is to reveal the mind and will of God to others, had need to be well established in the belief of it themselves. To Samuel he adds, and of the prophets, who were extraordinary ministers of the Old-Testament church, employed of God sometimes to pronounce judgment, sometimes to promise mercy, always to reprove sin; sometimes to foretell remarkable events, known only to God; and chiefly to give notice of the Messiah, his coming, person, and offices; for in him the prophets as well as the law centre. Now a true and strong faith was very requisite for the right discharge of such an office as this.

II. And now, having determined particular persons, he proceeds to tell us, what things were done by their faith; he mentions some things that easily apply themselves to one or other of the persons named; but he mentions other things that are not so easy to be accommodated to any here named, but must be left to general conjecture or accommodation.

1. By faith they subdued kingdoms, v. 33. Thus did David, Joshua, and many of the judges. Learn hence, (1.) The interest and power of faith, and kingdoms are often set up in opposition to God and his people. (2.) God can easily subdue all those kings and kingdoms that set themselves to oppose him. (3.) Faith is a suitable and excellent qualification of those who fight in the wars of the Lord; it makes them just, bold, and wise.

2. They wrought righteousness, both in their public and personal capacities; they turned many from idolatry to the worship of righteousness; they believed God, and it was imputed to them for righteousness; they walked and acted righteously toward God and man. It is a greater honour and happiness to work righteousness than to work miracles; faith is an active principle of universal righteousness.

3. They obtained promises both general and special. It is faith that gives us an interest in the promises; it is by faith that we have the comfort of the promises, and it is by faith that we are prepared to wait for the promises, and in due time to receive them.

4. They stopped the mouths of lions; so did Samuel, Judges 14. 5, 6, and David, 1 Sam. 17. 34, 35, and Daniel 6. 22. Here learn, (1.) The power of God is above the power of the creature. And, (2.) Faith engages the power of God for his people, whenever it shall be for his glory to overcome brute beasts and bruish men.

5. They quenched the violence of the fire, v. 34. So Moses, by the prayer of faith, quenched the fire of God's wrath that was kindled against the people of Israel, Numb. 11. 1. 2. So did the three children, or rather mighty champions, Dan. 3. 17. 27. Their faith in God, refusing to worship the golden image, exposed them to the fiery furnace which Nebuchadnezzar had caused to be built. They were engaged for them that power and presence of God in the furnace, which quenched the violence of the fire, so that not so much as the smell thereof passed on them. Never was the grace of faith more severely tried, never more nobly exerted, nor ever more gloriously rewarded, than their was.

6. They escaped the edge of the sword. Thus David escaped the sword of Goliath and of Saul, and Mordecai escaped the edge of the sword of Haman. The swords of men are held in the hand of God, and he can blunt the edge of the sword, and turn it away from his people against their enemies when he pleases. Faith takes hold of that hand of God, which has hold of the swords of men; and God has often suffered himself to be prevailed upon by the faith of his people.

7. Out of weakness they were made strong; from national weakness, into which the Jews often fell by their unbelief; upon the revival of faith, all their commanded them to take, and he loves to do all things by small and contemptible means, that his own arm may be made bare. 2. The powerful success of the prescribed means; the walls of Jericho fell before them. This was a frontier-town in the land of Canaan, the first that stood out against the Israelites. God was pleased in this extraordinary manner to show them the manner of war in which he would carry out the Canaanites, to strengthen the faith of the Israelites, and to exclude all boasting.

God can, and will, in his own time and way, cause all the powerful opposition that is made to his interest and glory, to fall down, and the grace of faith is mighty through God for the pulling down of strong-holds; he will make Babylon fall before the faith of his people, and when he has some great thing to do for them, he raises up great and strong faith in them.

VIII. The next instance is the faith of Rahab, v. 31. Among the noble army of believing worthies, bravely marshalled by the apostle, Rahab comes in the rear, to shew that God is no respecter of persons. Here consider, 1. Who this Rahab was: (1.) She was a Canaanite, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and had but little help for faith, and yet she was a believer in the power of God. Grace appears, when it works without the usual means of grace. (2.) She was a harlot, and lived in a way of sin; she was not only a keeper of a public house, but a common woman of the town, and yet she believed that the greatness of sin, if truly repented of, shall be no bar to the pardoning mercy of God. Christ has saved the chief of sinners; where sin has abounded, grace has superabounded. 2. What she did by her faith; she received the spies in peace, and sent them off. Joshua had sent to spy out Jericho, Josh. 2. 6. 7. She not only bade them welcome, but she concealed them from their enemies who sought to cut them off, and she made a noble confession of her faith, v. 9—11. She engaged them to covenant with her to shew favour to her and her's, when God should shew kindness to them, and that they would give her a sign, which they did, a line of scarlet, which she was to hang forth out of the window; she sent them away with prudent and friendly advice. Learn here, (1.) True faith will shew itself in good works, especially toward the people of God. (2.) Faith will venture all hazards in the cause of God and his people; a true believer will sooner expose his own person than God's interest and people. (3.) A true believer is desirous, not only to be in covenant with God, but in communion with the people of God, and is willing to cast in his lot with them, and to fare as they fare.

3. Observe what Rahab gained by her faith; she escaped perishing with those that believed not. Observe, (1.) The generality of her neighbours, friends, and fellow-citizens, perished; it was an utter destruction that befell that city; man and beast were cut off. (2.) The cause of the people of Jericho's destruction—unbelief; they believed not that Israel's God was the true God, and that Israel was the peculiar people of God, though they had evidence sufficient of it. (3.) The signal preservation of Rahab. Joshua gave a strict charge that she should be spared, and none but she and her's; and she taking care that the sign, the scarlet thread, should be hung out, her family were marked out for mercy, and perished not. Singular faith, when the generality are not only unbelievers, but against believers, will be rewarded with singular favours in times of common calamity.

32. And what shall I more say? For the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets: 33. Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, 34. Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. 35. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. 36. And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment. 37. They were stone, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented. 38. (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. 39. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: 40. God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

1. The apostle having given us a classic of many eminent believers, whose names are mentioned, and the particular trials and actions of their faith recorded; he now concludes his narrative with a more summary account of another set of believers, where the particular acts are not ascribed to particular persons by name, but left to be applied by those who are well acquainted with the sacred story; and, like a divine orator, he prefaces this part of the narrative with an elegant exposition; What shall I say more? Time would fail me: as if he had said, "It is in vain to attempt to exhaust this subject; should I not restrain my pen, it would soon run beyond the bounds of all an extempore address; but just mention a few more, and leave you to enlarge upon them." Observe, 1. After all our researches into the scriptures, there is still more to be learned from them. 2. We must well consider in divine matters what we should say, and suit it as well as we can to the time. 3. We should be pleased to think how great the number of believers was under the Old Testament, and how strong their faith, though the objects thereof were not then so fully revealed. And, 4. We should lament it, that now, in gospel-times, when the rule of faith is more clear and perfect, the number of believers should be so small, and their faith so weak.

In this summary account the apostle, 1. Mentions Gideon, whose story we have in Judges 6. 11, &c. He was an eminent instrument raised up of God to deliver his people from the oppression of the Midianites, he was a person of mean tribe and family, called from a mean employment, (threshing wheat,) and saluted by an angel of God in this surprising manner, The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of war. Gideon could not at first receive such honours, but humbly expostulates with the angel about their low and distressed state: the angel of the Lord delivered him his commission, and assured him of success, confirming it by fire out of the rock. Gideon is thereupon required to sacrifice, and, instructed in his duty, goes forth against the Midianites, when his army was reduced from thirty-two thousand to three hundred; yet by these, with their lamps and pitchers, God put the whole army of the Midianites to confusion and ruine: and the same faith that gave Gideon...
so much courage and honour, enabled him to act with great meekness and modesty toward his brethren afterward. It is the excellency of the grace of faith, that, while it helps men to do great things, it keeps them from having high and great thoughts of themselves.

2. Barak, another instrument raised up to deliver Israel out of the hand of Jabin, king of Canaan, (Judges 4.) where we read, (1.) Though he was a soldier, yet he received his commission and instructions from Deborah, a prophetess of the Lord; and he insisted upon having this divine oracle with him in his expeditive. (2) He obtained a great victory by his faith over all the host of Sisera. (3.) His faith taught him to return all the praise and glory to God: this is the nature of faith; it has recourse unto God in all dangers and difficulties, and then makes grateful returns to God for all mercies and deliverances.

3. Samson, another instrument that God raised up to deliver Israel from the Philistines: his story we have in Judges, ch. 13, 14, 15, and 16. and from it we learn, that the grace of faith is the strength of the soul for great service. If Samson had not had a strong faith as well as a strong arm, he had never performed such exploits. (1.) By faith the servants of God shall overcome even the roaring lion. (2.) True faith is acknowledged and accepted, even when mingled with many failings. (3.) The believer's faith endures to the end, and, in dying, gives him victory over the most d w3]y enemies; his greatest conquest he gains by dying.

4. Jephthah, whose story we have, Judg. 11. before Samson; he was raised up to deliver Israel from the Ammonites. As various and new enemies rise up against the people of God, various and new deliverers are raised up for them. In the story of Jephthah, observe, (1.) The grace of God often finds out, and fastens upon, the most unworthy and ill-deserving persons, to do great things for them and by them. Jephthah was the son of a harlot. (2.) The grace of faith, wherever it is, will put men upon acknowledging God in all their ways; (ch. 11. 11.) Jephthah rehearsed all his words before the Lord in Mizpeh. (3.) The grace of faith will make men bold and venturous in a good cause. (4.) Faith will not only put men upon making their vows to God, but will forbid them to make vows to idols; yea; though they have vowed to their own great grief, hurt, and loss, as in the case of Jephthah and his daughter.

5. David, that great man after God's own heart. Few ever met with greater trials, and few ever discovered a more lively faith; his first appearance on the stage of the world was a great evidence of his faith; having, when young, slain the lion and the bear, his faith in God encouraged him to encounter the great Goliath, and helped him to triumph over him. The same faith enabled him to bear patiently the ungrateful malice of Saul and his favourites, and to wait till God should put him into possession of the promised power and dignity. The same faith made him a very successful and victorious prince, and, after a long life of virtue and honour, (though not without some faults,) he died in faith, i.e. living upon the everlasting covenant that God had made with him and his, ordered in all things, and sure; and he has left behind him such excellent memoirs of the trials and acts of faith in the book of Psalms, as will ever be of great esteem and use, among the people of God.

6. Samuel, raised up to be a most eminent prophet of the Lord to Israel, as well as a ruler over them. God revealed himself to Samuel, when he was but a child, and continued to do so till his death. In his story observe, (1.) Those are likely to grow up to some eminency in faith, who begin betimes in the exercise of it. (2.) They, whose business it is to reveal the mind and will of God to others, had need to be well established in the belief of it themselves. To Samuel he adds, and of the prophets, who were extraordinary ministers of the Old Testament church, employed of God sometimes to demence judgment, sometimes to promise mercy, always to reprove sin; sometimes to foretell remarkable events, known only to God; and chiefly to give notice of the Messiah, his coming, person, and offices; for in him the prophets as well as the law centre. Now a true and strong faith was very requisite for the right discharge of such an office, as this.

7. And not having the naming particular persons, he proceeds to tell us, what things were done by their faith; he mentions some things that easily apply themselves to one or other of the persons named; but he mentions other things that are not so easy to be accommodated to any here named, but must be left to general conjecture or accommodation.

1. By faith they subdued kingdoms, v. 33. Thus did David, Joshua, and many of the judges. Learn hence, (1.) The interests and powers of kings and kingdoms are often set up in opposition to God and his people. (2.) God can easily subdue all those kings and kingdoms that set themselves to oppose him. (3.) Faith is a suitable and excellent qualification of those who fight in the wars of the Lord; it makes them just, bold, and wise.

2. They wrought righteousness, both in their public and private lives; they turned many from idolatry to the ways of righteousness; they believed God, and it was imputed to them for righteousness; they walked and acted righteously toward God and man. It is a greater honour and happiness to work righteousness than to work miracles; faith is an active principle of universal righteousness.

3. They obtained promises both general and special. It is faith that gives us an interest in the promises; it is by faith that we have the comfort of the promises; and it is by faith that we are prepared to wait for the promises, and in due time to receive them.

4. They stopped the mouths of lions; so did Samson, Judg. 14. 5. 6. and David, 1 Sam. 17. 34. 35. and Daniel 6. 22. Here learn, (1.) The power of God is above the power of the creature. And, (2.) Faith engages the power of God for his people, whenever it shall be for his glory to overcome brute beasts and brutish men.

5. They quenched the violence of the fire, v. 34. So Moses, by the prayer of faith, quenched the fire of God's wrath that was kindled against the people of Israel, Numb. 11. 1. 2. So did the three children, or rather mighty champions, Dan. 3. 17. 27. Their faith in God, refusing to worship the golden image, exposed them to the fiery furnace which Nebuchadnezzar had prepared for them, and their faith engaged them for that power and presence of God in the furnace, which quenched the violence of the fire, so that not so much as the smell thereof passed on them. Never was the grace of faith more severely tried, never more nobly exerted, nor ever more gloriously rewarded, than their's was.

6. They escaped the edge of the sword. Thus David escaped the sword of Goliath and of Saul, and Mordecai and the Jews escaped the sword of Haman. The swords of men are held in the hand of God, and he can blunt the edge of the sword, and turn it away from his people against their enemies when he pleases. Faith takes hold of that hand of God, which has hold of the swords of men; and God has often suffered himself to be prevailed upon by the faith of his people.

7. Out of weakness they were made strong; from national weakness, into which the Jews often fell by their unbelief; upon the reviv'g of faith, all their interest and affairs revived and flourished: from bodily weakness; thus Hezekiah, believing the word of God, recovered out of a mortal distemper; and he ascribed his recovery to the promise and power of God; (Isa. 38. 15.) What shall I say? He hath spoken it, and he hath also done it.—Lord, by these things men live, and in these is the life of my spirit. And it is the same grace of faith that from spiritual weakness helps men to recover and renew their strength.

They grew valiant in fight; so did Joshua, the judges, and David. True faith gives trust, courage and patience, as it discerns the strength of God, and thereby the weakness of all his enemies; and they were not only valiant, but successful, God, as a reward and encouragement of their faith, put to flight the armies of the aliens, of those who were aliens to their commonwealth, and enemies to their religion; God made them flee and fall before his faithful servants. Believing and praying commanders, at the head of believing and praying armies, have been so owned and honoured of God, that nothing could stand before them.

9. Women received their dead raised to life again, v. 35. So did the widow of Zarephath, (1 Kings 17. 22.) and the Shunammite, 2 Kings 4. 36. (1.) In Christ there is neither male nor female; many of the weaker sex have been strong in faith. (2.) They were not only grace, but a great care of all the children of believers, yet it leaves them subject to natural death. (3.) Poor mothers are loath to resign up their interest in their children; though death has taken them away from them. (4.) God has sometimes yielded so far to the tender affections of sorrowful women, as to restore their dead children to life again. Thus Christ had compassion on the widow of Nain, Luke 7. 12, &c. (5.) This should confirm our faith in the general resurrection.

III. The apostle tells us what these believers endured by faith:

1. They were tortured, not accepting deliverance, v. 35. They were put upon the rack, to make them renounce their God, their Saviour, and their religion; they bore the torture, and would not accept of deliverance upon such vile terms; that which animated them thus to suffer, was, the hope they had of obtaining a better resurrection, and deliverance out of all the miseries of this world. (1.) Note, it is not the custom of God to refer to that memorable story, 2 Macc. ch. 7, &c. (2.) They endured trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, and bonds and imprisonment, v. 36. They were persecuted in their reputation by mockings, which are cruel to an ingenuous mind; in their persons by scourging, the punishment of slaves; in their liberty by bonds and imprisonment. Observe how inveterate is the malice that wicked men have toward the righteous: with the sword, All sorts of death were prepared for them; their enemies clothed death in all the array of cruelty and terror, and yet they boldly met it, and endured it.

2. Those who escaped death, were used so ill, that death might seem more eligible than such a life. Their enemies spared them, only to prolong their misery; and wear out all their patience; for they were forced to wander about like sheep and goats, to be destitute, afflicted, and tormented; they wondered about in deserts, and on mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth, v. 37, 38. They were stripped of the conveniences of life, turned out of house and harbour; they had not respite to put on, but were forced to cover themselves with the skins of slain beasts; they were driven out of all human society, and forced to converse with the beasts of the field, to hide themselves in dens and caves, and make their complaint to rocks and rivers, not more obdurate than their enemies. Such sufferings as these they endured then for their faith; and such they endured through the power of the grace of faith: and which shall we most admire, the wickedness of human nature, that is so able to invent such cruelties from folly or the excellency of divine grace, that is able to bear up the faithful under such cruelties, and to carry them safely through all!

IV. What they obtained by their faith.

1. A most honourable character and commendation from God, the true Judge and Fountain of honour—that the world was not worthy of such men; the world did not deserve such blessings; they did not know how to value them, nor how to use them. Wicked men! The righteous are not worthy to live in the world, and God declares, the world is not worthy of them; and though they widely differ in their judgment, they agree in this, that it is not fit good men should have their rest in this world; and therefore God receives them out of it, to that world that is suitable to them, and yet far beyond the merit of all their services and sufferings.

2. They obtained a good report, (v. 39.) of all good men, and of the truth itself, and have the honour to be enrolled in this sacred calendar of the Old Testament worthies, God's witnesses; yea, they had a witness for them in the consciences of their enemies, who, while they thus abused them, were condemned by their own consciences, as persecuting those who were more righteous than themselves.

3. They obtained an interest in the promises, though not the full possession of them. They had a title to the promises, though they received not the great things promised. This is not meant of the felicity of the heavenly state, for that they did receive, when they died, in the measure of a part, in one constituent part of their persons, and the much better part; but it is meant of the felicity of the gospel state; they that believe shall have a more ample and ample title to this, than mere name was, but had not seen the substance; and yet, under this imperfect dispensation, they discovered this precious faith: this the apostle insists upon, to render their faith more illustrious, and to provoke Christians to a holy jealousy and emulation; that they should not suffer themselves to be outdone in the exercise of faith by those who came so short of them in all the helps and advantages for believing. He tells the Hebrews, God had provided some better things for them, (v. 40.) and therefore they might be assured that he expected at least as good things from them; and that, since the gospel is the end and perfection of the Old Testament, which had no excellency but in its reference to Christ and the gospel, it was expected that their faith should be as much more perfect than the faith of the Old Testament saints; for their faith and deportment was a more complete course, and were indeed the perfection and completion of the former; for without the gospel-church the Jewish church must have remained in an incomplete and imperfect state. This reasoning is strong, and should be effectually prevalent with us all.

CHAP. XII.

The apostle, in this chapter, applies what he has collected in the chapter foregoing, and makes use of it as a great motive to patience and perseverance in the Christian faith and state, pressing home the argument. I. From a greater example than he had yet mentioned, and that is Christ himself, v. 1. 3. II. From the gentle and gracious nature of the afflictions they endured in their Christian course, v. 4. 17. III. From the communion and conformity between the state of the gospel church on earth, and the triumphant church in heaven, from v. 18, to the end of the chapter.

WHEREFORE, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. 2. Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. 3. For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds.

Here observe what is the great duty which the apostle urges upon the Hebrews, and which he so much desires they would comply with, and that is, to lay aside every weight and sin which doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race set before us. The duty consists of two parts, the one preparatory, the other perfective.

I. Preparatory; Lay aside every weight, and the sin, &c. 1. Every weight, that is, all inordinate affection and concern for the body, and the present life and world; inordinate care for the present life, and fondness for it, is a dead weight upon the soul, that hinders it from ascending upward, and prevents it back when it should press upward. It makes duty and difficulties harder and heavier than they would be. 2. The sin that doth so easily beset us; the sin that has the greatest advantage against us, by the circumstances we are in, our constitution, our company. This may mean either the damning sin of unbelief, or rather the darling sin of the Jews, an over-fondness for their own dispensation. Let us lay aside all external and internal hindrances.

II. Perfective; Run with patience the race that was set before them. The apostle speaks in the gymnastic style, taken from the Olympic and other exercises. 1. Christians have a race to run; a race of service and a race of sufferings; a course of active and passive obedience. 2. This race is set before them; it is marked out unto them, both by the word of God and the examples of the faithful servants of God, that cloud of witnesses with which they are compassed about. It is set out by proper limits and direction; the mark they run to, and the prize they run for, are set before them. 3. This race must be run with patience and perseverance. There will be need of patience to encounter the difficulties that lie in our way, of perseverance to resist all temptations to desist, or turn aside. Faith and patience are the conquering graces; and therefore must be always cultivated, and kept in lively exercise. 4. Christians have a greater Example to animate and encourage them in their Christian course than any or all who have been mentioned before, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ; (v. 2.) Looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of our faith, here observe,

(1.) What our Lord Jesus is to his people; he is the Author and Finisher of their faith; the Beginning, Perfecter, and Rewarder of it. [1.] He is the Author of their faith; not only the Object, but the Author. He is the great Leader and Precedent of our faith, he trusted in God; he is the Purchaser of the Spirit of faith; the Publisher of the rule of faith; the efficient cause of the grace of faith; and, in all respects, the Author of our faith. [2.] He is the Finisher of our faith; he is the Fulfiller, and the Filling of all scripture promises and prophecies; he is the Perfecter of the canon of scripture; he is the Finisher of grace, and of the work of faith with power in the souls of his people; and he is the Judge and the Rewarder of their faith; he determines who they are, that reach the mark, and from his hand they have the prize.

(2.) What trials Christ met with in his race and course; [1.] He endured the contradiction of sinners against himself; (v. 3.) he bore the opposition that they made to him, both in their words and behaviour; they were continually contradicting him, and crossing in upon his great designs; and though he could easily have both confuted and confounded them, and sometimes gave them a specimen of his power, yet he endured their evil manners with great patience; their contradictions were levelled against Christ himself, against his person as God-man; against his authority, against his preaching; and yet he endured all. [2.] He endured the cross—all those sufferings that he met with in the world; for he took up his cross betimes, and was at length nailed to it, and endured a painful, ignominious, and accursed death; in which he was numbered with the transgressors, the vilest malefactors; yet all this he endured with inexcusable patience and resolution. [3.] He despised the shame, all the reproaches that were cast upon him, both in his life, and at his death, he despised them all, was infinitely above them; he knew his innocence, and his own excellency, and despised the ignorance and malice of his despiers.

(3.) What it was that supported the human soul of Christ under the unparalleled sufferings; and that was the joy that was set before him. He had something in view under all his sufferings, which was pleasant to him; he rejoiced to see, that by his sufferings he should make satisfaction to the injured justice of God, and give security to his honour and government; that he should make peace between God and man; that he should seal the covenant of grace, and be the Mediator of it; that he should open a way of salvation to the chief of sinners, and that the Father had given him, and himself the First-born among many brethren. This was the joy that was set before him.

(4.) The reward of his suffering; he is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. Christ, as Mediator, is exalted to a station of the highest honour, of the greatest power and influence; he is at the right hand of the Father; nothing passes between heaven and earth but by him; he does all that is done; he ever lives to make intercession for his people.

(5.) What is our duty with respect to this Jesus; we must, [1.] Look unto him; that is, we must set him continually before us as our Example, and our great Encouragement; we must look to him for direction, for assistance, and for acceptance, in all our sufferings. [2.] We must consider him, meditate on him, and be like him; it is our business to live in his steps, and set ourselves to be like him, in the state of his sufferings, and to appropriate them to our own case. We must analogize, as the word is; compare Christ's sufferings and ours; and we shall find, that as his sufferings far exceeded our's, in the nature and measure of them, so his patience far excels our's, and is a perfect pattern for us to imitate.

(6.) The advantage we shall reap by thus doing; it will be a means to spare our weakness and failing, v. 5. Let ye be weary and faint in your minds. Observe, [1.] There is a proneness in the best to grow weary, and to faint under their trials.
and afflictions, especially when they prove heavy and of long continuance; this proceeds from the imperfection of grace and the remains of corruption. [2.] The best way to prevent this, is, to look unto Jesus, and to consider him. Faith and meditation will fetch in fresh supplies of strength, comfort, and courage; for he has assured them, if they suffer with him, they shall also reign with him; and this hope will be their helmet.

4. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin. 5. And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: 6. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. 7. If ye endure chastening, God dealth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? 8. But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. 9. Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? 10. For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. 11. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. 12. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; 13. And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed. 14. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord: 15. Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled; 16. Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birth-right. 17. For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

Here the apostle presses the exhortation to patience and perseverance by an argument taken from the gentle measure and gracious nature of those sufferings which the believing Hebrews endured in their Christian estate, which are only the mild stripes and gentle, and moderate degree and measure of their sufferings; Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin, v. 4. Observe, 1. He owns that they had suffered much, they had been striving to an agony against sin. Here, (1.) The cause of the conflict was sin, and to be engaged against sin is to fight in a good cause; for sin is the worst enemy both to God and man. Our spiritual warfare is both honourable and necessary; for we are only defending ourselves against that which would destroy us, if it should get the victory over us; we fight for ourselves, for our lives, and therefore ought to be patient and resolute. (2.) Every Christian is enlisted under Christ's banner, to strive against sin, against sinful doctrines, sinful practices, and sinful habits, and customs, both in himself and in others. Observe, 2. He puts them in mind, that they might have suffered more; others have suffered more; for they had not yet resisted unto blood; they had not been called to martyrdom as yet, though they knew not how soon they might be. Learn here, (1.) Our Lord Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, does not call his people out to the hardest trials at first, but wisely trains them up lesser sufferings to be prepared for greater. He will not put new wine into weak vessels; he that is the Shepherd, who will not over-drive the young or of the flock. (2.) It becomes Christians to take notice of the gentleness of Christ in accommodating their trial to their strength; they should not magnify their afflictions, but should take notice of the mercy that is mixed with them, and should pity those who are called to the fiercest trial to resist to blood; not to shed the blood of their enemies, but to seal their testimony with their own blood, to make them ashamed to faint under lesser trials, when they see others bear up under greater, and do not know how soon they may meet with greater themselves. If we run with the footmen, and they have wearied us, how shall we contend with horses? If we be wearied in a land of peace, what shall we do in the swellings of Jordan? Jer. 12. 5. 11. He argues from the peculiar and gracious nature of those sufferings which befal the people of God; though their enemies and persecutors may be the instruments of inflicting such sufferings on them, yet they are divine chastisements; their heavenly Father has his hand in all, and his wise end to serve by all; of this he has given them due notice, and they should not forget it, v. 5. Observe, 1. Those afflictions which may be truly persecution as far as men are concerned in them, are fatherly rebukes, our afflictions as far as God is concerned in them. Persecution for religion, is sometimes a correction and rebuke for the sins of professors of religion. Men persecute them because they are religious; God chastises them because they are not more so: men persecute them because they will not give up their profession; God chastises them because they have not lived up to their profession.

2. God has directed his people how they ought to behave themselves under all their afflictions; they must avoid the extremes that many run into. (1.) They must not despise the chastening of the Lord; they must not make light of afflictions, and be stiff and insensible under them; for they are the hand and rod of God, and his rebukes for sin. They who make light of affliction, make light of God, and make light of sin. (2.) They must not faint when they are rebuked; their spirits must not ebb, and sink souls should not be ashamed to faint under lesser trials, when they see others bear up under greater, and do not know how soon they may meet with greater themselves. If we run with the footmen, and they have wearied us, how shall we contend with horses? If we are wearied in a land of peace, what shall we do in the swellings of Jordan? Jer. 12. 5. (3.) If they run into either of these extremes, it is a sign they have forgotten their heavenly Father's advice and exhortation, which he has given them in true and tender affection. 3. Afflictions, rightly endured, though they may be the fruits of God's displeasure, are yet proofs of his paternal love to his people, and care for them. (v. 6, 7.) Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. Observe, (1.) The best of God's children need chastisement; they have their faults and follies, which need to be corrected. (2.) Though God may let others alone in their sins, he will correct sin in his own children; they are of his family, and shall not escape his re bukes when they want them. (3.) In this he acts as to become a father, and treats them like children; no wise and good father will wink at faults in his own children, as he would in others; his relation and his affections oblige him to take more notice of the faults of his own children, than of others. (4.) To be suffered to go on in sin without a rebuke, is a sad sign of alienation from God; such are bastards, not sons. They may call him Father, because born in the pale of the church; but they are the spurious offspring of another father, not God, v. 8. 8. 8.

4. Those that are impatient under the discipline of their heavenly Father, behave worse toward him, than they would do toward earthly parents, v. 9, 10. Here, (1.) The apostle commends a dutiful and submissive behaviour in children toward their earthly parents; we gave them reverence even when they corrected us. It is the duty of children to give the reverence of obedience to the just commands of their parents, and the whole force of their correction when they have been disobedient. Parents have not only authority, but a charge, from God, to give their children correction when it is due, and he has commanded children to take such correction well: to be stubborn and discontent under due correction is a double fault; for the correction supposes there has been a fault already committed against the parent's command, and is for a better, and not as a new fault against his chastising power. (2.) From hence he recommends a humble and submissive behaviour towards our heavenly Father, when under his correction; and this he does by an argument from the less to the greater. [1.] Our earthly fathers are but the fathers of our flesh, but God is the Father of our spirits. Our fathers on earth were instrumental in the production of our bodies, and the instigation of the weak and tender kind of spirit, that formed us out of the dust of the earth. And the bodies of the beasts are; and yet as they are curiously wrought, and made parts of our persons, a proper tabernacle for the soul to dwell in, and an organ for it to act by, we owe reverence and affection to those who were instrumental in their production; but then we must owe much more to him who is the Father of our spirits. Our souls are not but the offspring of the eternal God, his direct act, his own work; so other, they are not ex traduce—by traduction—affirm it is bad philosophy, and worse divinity; they are the immediate offspring of God, who, after he had formed the body of man out of the earth, breathed into him a vital spirit, and so he became a living soul. [2.] Our earthly parents chastened us for their own pleasure. Sometimes they did it to gratify their passion rather than to reform our manner, and it was rather a hurtful, than useful, subject to, and this they should carefully watch against: for hereby they dishonour that parental authority which God has put upon them, and very much hinder the efficacy of their chastisements. But the Father of our spirits never grieves willingly, nor afflicts the children of men, much less his own children. It is always for our profit; and the advantage he obtains thereby, is no less than our being partakers of his holiness; it is to correct and cure those sinful disorders which make us unlike to God, and to improve and increase those graces which are the image of God in us, that we may be and act more like our heavenly Father. God loves his children so, that he would have them to be as like himself as can be, and for this end he chastises them when they need it. [5.] The fathers of this flesh are but flesh, a ministry, in a state of childhood, when minors; and though we were in that weak and peevish state, we owed them reverence; and when we came to maturity, we loved and honoured them the more for it. Our whole life here is a state of childhood, minority, and imperfection, and therefore we must submit to the discipline of such a state; when we come to a state of perfection, we shall be fully reconciled to all the measures of God's discipline over us now. (4.) God's correction is no condemnation; his children may at first fear lest affliction should come upon that dreadful errand, and we cry, Do not condemn me, but show me wherefore thou contendest with me, Job 10. 2. But that is so far from being the design of God to his own people, that he therefore chastens them now, that they may not be condemned in the world, 1 Cor. 11. 32. He does it to prevent the death and destruction of their souls, that they may live to God, and be like God, and for ever with him.

5. The children of God, under their afflictions, ought not to judge of their dealings with them by present sense, but by reason, and faith, and experience; (v. 11.) No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyful, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the fruitful fruits of righteousness. Where observe, (1.) The judgment of sense in this case—Afflictions are not grateful to the sense, but grievous; the flesh will feel them, and be grieved by them, and grow under them. (2.) The judgment of faith, which corrects that of sense, and declares that a sanctified affliction, produces the fruits of righteousness; these fruits are peaceable, and tend to the quietness and security of the soul; and the affection produces peace, by producing more righteousness; for the fruit of righteousness is peace. And if the pain of the body contribute thus to the peace of the mind, and short present affliction produces blessed fruits of a long continuance, they have no reason to fret or faint under it; but their great concern is, that the chastening they are under may be endured by them with patience, and improved to a greater degree of holiness.

[1.] That their affliction may be endured with patience, which is the main drift of the apostle's discourse on this subject; and he again returns to exhort them, that for the reason before mentioned, they should lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees, v. 12. A burden of affliction is apt to make the Christian's hands hang down, and his knees grow feeble, to dispirit him and discourage his faith; but the Christian must have two reasons. First, That he may the better run his spiritual race and course. Faith, and patience, and holy courage and resolution, will make him walk more steadily, keep a straiter path, prevent wavering and wandering. Secondly, That he may encourage and not dispirit others that are in the same way with him. There are many that are in the way to heaven, who yet walk but weakly and uncertainly in it. Such are apt to discourage one another, and hinder one another; but it is their duty to take courage, and act by faith, and so help one another forward in the way to heaven.

[2.] That their affliction may be improved to a greater degree of holiness. Since this is God's design, it ought to be the design and concern of his children, that with renewed strength and patience they may follow peace with all men, and holiness, v. 14. If the children of God grow impatient under affliction, they will neither walk so quietly and peaceably toward men, nor so piously toward God, as they should do; but faith and patience will enable them to follow peace and holiness too, as a man follows his calling, constantly, diligently, and with pleasure. Observe, First, It is the duty of Christians, even when in a suffering state, to follow peace with all men; so even with those who may be instrumental in their sufferings. That is a hard lesson, and a high attainment, but it is what Christ has called his people to. Sufferings are apt to sour the spirit, and sharpen the passions; but the children of God must follow peace with all men. Secondly,
Peace and holiness are connected together; there can be no right peace without holiness. There may be prudence and discreet forbearance, and a shew of friendship and good-will to all; but this true Christian peaceableness is never found separate from holiness. We must not, under pretence of living peaceably with all men, leave the ways of holiness, nor suffer one principle of holiness to perish. Thirdly, Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. The vision of God our Saviour in heaven is reserved as the reward of holiness, and the stress of our salvation is laid upon our holiness; though a placid peaceable disposition contributes much to our meetness for heaven.

6. Where afflictions and sufferings for the sake of Christ are not consoled by men as the chastisement of their wayward Father, and improved as such, they will be a dangerous snare and temptation to apostasy, which every Christian should most carefully watch against; (v. 15, 16.) Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God. Here the apostle enters a serious caveat against apostasy, and backs it with an awful example.

(1.) He enters a serious caveat against apostasy, very reasonably and very solemnly. [1.] The nature of apostasy; it is failing of the grace of God; it is to become bankrupts in religion, for want of a good foundation, and suitable care and diligence; it is failing of the grace of God; coming short of a principle of true grace in the soul, notwithstanding the means of grace and a profession of religion; and so coming short of the love and favour of God here and hereafter. [2.] The consequences of apostasy, where persons fail of having the true grace of God, and of bitterness will spring up; corruption will prevail and break forth; a root of bitterness, a bitter root producing bitter fruits to themselves and others; to themselves corrupt principles, which lead to apostasy; and are greatly strengthened and radicated by apostasy; damnable errors, (to the corrupting of the doctrine and worship of the Christian church,) and corrupt practices. Apostates generally grow worse and worse, and fall into the grossest wickedness, which usually ends either in downright atheism or in despair. This produces bitter fruits to others, to the churches to which these men belonged; by their corrupt principles and practices many are troubled, the peace of the churches broken, the peace of men's minds disturbed, and many defiled, tainted with those bad principles, and drawn into defiling practices; so that the churches both be dishonoured and disquieted. But the apostates themselves will be the greatest sufferers at last.

(2.) The apostle backs the caution with an awful example, and that is, that of Esau; who, though born within the pale of the church, and having the birthright as the eldest son, and so entitled to the privilege of being prophet, priest, and king, in his family; was so profane as to despise these sacred privileges, and cast them off as a matter of contempt. When observe, [1.] Esau's sin; he profanely despised and sold the birthright, and all the advantages attending it; so do apostates, who, to avoid persecution, and enjoy sensual ease and pleasure, though they bore the character of the children of God, and had a visible right to the blessing and inheritance, give up all the pretensions thereto. [2.] Esau's punishment; his sin was confessed. One was convinced of his sin and folly, when it was too late; he would afterwards have inherited the blessing, but he was rejected. &c. His punishment lay in two things. First, He was condemned by his own conscience; he now saw that the blessing he had made so light of, was worth the having, worth the seeking, though with much carelessness and many tears. Secondly, He was rejected of God; he found no place of repentance in God, in his father, or of true repentance in his own soul; the blessing was given to another, even to him to whom he sold it for a mess of pottage. Esau, in his great wickedness, had made the bargain, and God, in his righteous judgment, ratifies and confirms it, and would not suffer Isaac to reverse it. Learn, 1. Apostasy from Christ is the fruit of preferring the gratification of the flesh to the blessing of God and the heavenly inheritance. 2. Sinners will not always have such mean thoughts of the divine blessing and inheritance as now they have. The time is coming when they will think no pains too great, no cares, no tears too much to obtain the lost blessing. 3. When the day of grace is over, (as Sometimes it may be in this life,) they will find no place for repentance; they cannot repent of the sins of which they are now so proud, and God will not repent of the sentence he has passed upon them for their sin. And therefore, as the design of all, Christians should never give up their title, and hope of their Father's blessing and inheritance, and expose themselves to his irreconcilable wrath and curse, by deserting their holy religion, to avoid suffering; which, though this may be persecution as far as wicked men are concerned in it, is only a rod of correction and a token in the hand of the heavenly Father, to bring them near to himself in conformity and communion. This is the force of the apostle's arguing from the nature of the sufferings of the people of God, even when they suffer for righteousness' sake; and the reasoning is very strong.

18. For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness and tempest, 19. And the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard, cut treated that the word should not be spoken to them any more: 20. (For they could not endure that which was commanded,) And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart: 21. And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake:) 22. But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an immovable company of angels. 23. To the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, 24. And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. 25. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven: 26. Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. 27. And this word, Yet once more, signifies the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.
we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear. 29. For our God is a consuming fire.

Here the apostle goes on to engage the professing Hebrews to perseverance in their Christian course and conflict, and not to relapse again into Judaism. This he does by shewing them how much the state of the gospel-church differed from that of the Jewish church, and how much it resembles the state of the church in the Dispensation of the New Testament. It demands and deserves our diligence, patience, and perseverance in Christianity.

I. How much the gospel-church differs from the Jewish church, and how much it excels. And here we have a very particular description of the state of the church under the Mosaic dispensation, v. 18-21. 1. It was a gross sensual state. Mount Sinai, on which that church state was constituted, was a mount that might be touched, (v. 18.) 2. It was a gross palpable place; so was the dispensation. It was very much external and earthly, and more heavy. The state of the gospel-church on mount Zion is more spiritual, rational, and easy. 2. It was a dark dispensation. Upon that mount there were blackness and darkness, and that church state was covered with dark shadows and types: the gospel-state is much more open and clear. 3. It was a black and terrible dispensation; the Jews could not bear the terror of it. The thunder and the lightning, the trumpet sounding, the voice of God himself speaking to them, struck them with such dread, that they entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more; v. 19. Yea, Moses himself said, I exceedingly fear and quake. The best of men on earth are not able to converse immediately with God and his holy angels. The gospel-state is mild and kind, and condescending, suited to our weak frame. 4. It was a limited dispensation; all might not approach to that mount, but only Moses and Aaron. Under the gospel we have all access with boldness to God. 5. It was a very dangerous dispensation. The mount burned with fire, and whatever man or beast touched the mount, they must be stoned, or thrust through with a dart, v. 20. It was always dangerous for presumptuous and brutish sinners to draw nigh to God; but it is not immediate and certain death, as here it was. This was the state of the Jewish church, fitted to awe a stubborn and hard-hearted people, to set forth the strict and tremendous justice of God, to awe the people of God from that dispensation, and to make them more readily to embrace the sweet and gentle economy of the gospel-church, and adhere to it.

II. He shows that the dispensation of the blood of Christ presents the church triumphant in heaven; what communication there is between the one and the other. The gospel-church is called mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, which is free; in opposition to mount Sinai, which tendeth to bondage, Gal. 4. 24. This was the hill on which God set his King the Messiah. Now in coming to mount Zion, believers come into heavenly places, and into a heavenly society.

1. Into heavenly places: the city of the living God. God has taken up his gracious residence in the gospel-church, which on that account is an emblem of heaven. There his people may find him ruling, guiding, sanctifying; and comforting them; there he speaks to them by his gospel-ministry; there they speak to him by prayer, and he hears them; there he trains them up for heaven, and gives them the earnest of their inheritance. To the heavenly Jerusalem as born and bred there; as free denizens there. Here believers have clearer views of heaven, plainer evidences for heaven, and a greater meekness and more heavenly temper of soul.

2. To a heavenly society. (1.) To an immeasurable company of angels, who are of the same family with the saints under the Mosaic economy and in a great measure employed in the same work, ministering believers for their good, keeping them all in their ways, and pitchings their tents about them. These for number are innumerable, and for order and union are a company, and a glorious one. And those who by faith are joined to the gospel-church, are joined to the angels, and shall at length be like them, and equal with them. (2.) To the general assembly and church of the first-born that are written in heaven, that is, to the universal church, however dispersed. By faith we come to them; have communion with them in the same Head, by the same Spirit, and in the same blessed hope; and walk in the same way of holiness; grappling with the same spiritual enemies, and hasting to the same rest, victory, and glorious triumph; where will be the general assembly of the first-born, the members of form and substance, who saw the promises of the gospel-state, but were not them not, as well as those who first received them under the gospel, and were regenerated thereby, and so were the first-born, and the first-fruits of the gospel-church; and thereby, as the first-born, advanced to greater honours and privileges than the rest of the world. Indeed all the children of God are heirs, that are in Christ Jesus, that is, in every one of the privileges of the first-born. The names of the are written in heaven, in the records of the church there, written among the living in Jerusalem; they have a good repute for their faith and fidelity, and are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, as citizens are enrolled in the livy-books. (3.) To God the Judge of all; that great God who will judge both Jew and Gentile according to the law how they are under: believers come to him now by faith, take supplication to their Judge, and receive a sentence of absolution in the gospel, and in the court of their consciences now, by which they know they shall be justified hereafter. (4.) To the spirits of just men made perfect; to the best sort of men, the righteous, who are more excellent than their neighbours; to the best part of just men, their spirits, and to these in their best state made perfect. Believers have union with departed saints in one spiritual body, and a title to the same inheritance, of which they themselves are members, and partakers with those in heaven possessors. (5.) To Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel.

This is none of the least of the many encouragements there are to perseverance in the gospel-state, since it is a state of communion with Christ the Mediator of the new covenant, and of communication of his blood by the sprinkling, much better than the blood of Abel. [1.] The gospel-covenant is a new covenant distinct from the covenant of works, and it is now under a new dispensation distinct from that of the old testament. [2.] Christ is the Mediator of this new covenant; he is the middle Person that goes between both parties, God and man; to bring them together in this covenant; to keep them together, to set the seal with his Spirit, to the people, and God's displeasure against them for ever, and to have the use of our prayers to God, and to bring down the favours of God to us; to plead with God for us, and to plead with us for God; and at length to bring God and his people together in heaven, and to be a Mediator of fruition between them for ever; they beholding and enjoying God in Christ, and God beholding and blessing them in Christ. [3.] This covenant is ratified by the blood of Christ sprinkled upon our consciences, as the blood of the sacrifice was sprinkled upon the altar and the sacrifice. This blood of Christ pacifies God, and purifies the consciences of men. [4.] This is speaking blood, and it speaks better things than that of Abel. First, It speaks to God in behalf of sinners; it pleads not for vengeance, as the blood of Abel did on him who shed it, but for mercy. Second, It speaks to sinners, in the name of God, it speaks pardon to their sins, peace to their souls; and bespeaks their strictest obedience, and highest love and thankfulness.

Now the apostle having thus enlarged upon the argument to perseverance taken from the heavenly nature of the gospel-church state, he closes the chapter by improving the argument in a manner suitable to the weight of it; (v. 25. &c.) See then that ye refuse not him that speaketh; that speaketh by his blood; and not only speaketh after another manner than the blood of Abel spake from the ground, but than God spake by the angels, and than Moses spake on Mount Sinai; then he spake on earth, now he speaks from heaven. Here observe,

1. When God speaks to men in the most excellent manner, he justly expects from them the most strict attention and regard. Now it is in the gospel that God speaks to men in the most excellent manner. For, (1.) He now speaks from a higher and more glorious seat and throne, not from mount Sinai, which was on the earth, but from heaven. (2.) He now speaks more immediately by his inspired word, and by his Spirit, which are his witnesses. He speaks not now any new thing to men, but by his Spirit speaks the same word home to the conscience. (3.) He speaks now more powerfully and effectually. Then indeed his voice shook the earth, but now, by introducing the gospel-state, he hath shaken not only the earth, but the heavens; not only shaken the hills and mountains, the very spiritual mountains of Mount Sinai, but the civil state of the land of Canaan, to make room for his people: he hath not only shaken the world, as he then did, but he hath shaken the church, that is, the Jewish nation, and shaken them in their church-state, which was in Old-Testament times a heaven upon earth; this their heavenly spiritual state he hath now shaken. It is by the gospel from heaven that God shook to pieces the civil and ecclesiastical state of the Jewish nation, and introduced a new state of the church, that cannot be removed, shall never be changed for any other on earth, but shall remain till it be made perfect in heaven.

2. When God speaks to men in the most excellent manner, the guilt of those who refuse him is the greater, and their punishment will be more unavoidable and intolerable; there is no escaping, no bearing it, v. 25. The different manner of God's dealing with men under the gospel, in a way of grace, assures us, that he will deal with the despisers of the gospel, after a different manner than he does with other men, in a way of judgment. The glory of the gospel, which should greatly recommend it to our regard, appears in these three things: (1.) It was by sound of the gospel-trumpet, that the former dispensation and state of the church of God were shaken and removed; and shall we despise that voice of God, that pulled down a church and an altar of such long standing, and of God's own building? (2.) It was by the sound of the gospel-trumpet that a new kingdom is erected for God in the world, which can never be so shaken as to be removed. This was a change made once for all; no other change shall take place, till time shall be no more. We have now received a kingdom that cannot be moved, shall never be removed; never give way, nor an ignominious removal. The canon of scripture is now perfected, the Spirit of prophecy is ceased, the mystery of God finished, he has put his last hand to it. The gospel-church may be made more large, more prosperous, more purified from contracted pollution, but it shall never be altered for another dispensation; they who perish under the gospel, perish without remedy. And from hence the apostle justly concludes, [1.] How necessary it is for us to obtain grace from God, to serve him acceptably: if we be not accepted of God under this dispensation, we shall never be accepted at all; and we lose all our labour in religion, if we be not accepted of God. [2.] We cannot worship God acceptably, unless we worship him with godly reverence and fear. As faith, so holy fear, is necessary to acceptable worship. [3.] It is only the grace of God that enables us to worship God in a right manner; nature cannot come up to it; it can produce neither that precious faith nor that holy fear, that are necessary to acceptable worship. (3.) God is the same just and righteous God under the gospel, that he appeared to be under the law; though he be our God in Christ, and now deals with us in a more kind and gracious way, yet he is in himself a consuming Fire; that is, a God of strict justice, who will avenge himself on all the despisers of his grace, and upon all apostates; and, under the gospel, the justice of God is displayed in a more awful manner, though not in so sensible a manner as under the law; for here we behold divine justice seizing upon the Lord Jesus Christ, and making him a propitiatory Sacrifice, his soul and body an offering for sin, which is a display of justice far beyond what was seen and heard on mount Sinai when the law was given.

CHAP. XIII.

The apostle, having treated largely of Christ, and faith, and free grace, and gospel-privileges, and warned the Hebrews against apostasy, now, in the close of all, recommends several excellent duties to them, as the proper fruits of faith; (v. 1. 17.) then bespeaks their prayers for him, and offers up his prayers to God for them, gives them some hope of seeing himself and Timothy, and ends with the general salvation of Israel by Messiah's birth, v. 18. to the end.

1. Let brotherly love continue. 2. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. 3. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body. 4. Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. 5. Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. 6. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me. 7. Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation: 8. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever. 9. Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein. 10. We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle. 11. For the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the high-priest for sin, are burnt without the camp. 12. Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. 13. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. 14. For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come. 15. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name. 16. But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you.

The design of Christ in giving himself for us, is that he may purchase to himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. Now the apostle calls the believing Hebrews to the performance of many excellent duties, in which it becomes Christians to excel.

I. To brotherly love; (v. 1.) by which he does not only mean a general affection to all men, as our brethren by nature, all made of the same blood, nor that more limited affection which is due to those who are of the same immediate parents, but that special and spiritual affection which ought to be among the children of God. 1. It is here supposed that the Hebrews had this love one for another; though, at this time, that nation was miserably divided and distracted among themselves, both about matters of religion and the civil state, yet there was true brotherly love left among those of them who believed on Christ; and this appeared in a very eminent manner, presently after the shedding forth of the Holy Ghost, when they had all things common, and sold their possessions to make a general fund of subsistence to their brethren. The spirit of Christianity is a spirit of love; faith works by love; the true religion is the strongest bond of friendship; if it be not so, it has its name for nothing. 2. This brotherly love was in danger of being lost, and that in a time of persecution, when it would be most necessary; it was in danger of being lost by those disputes that were among them concerning the respect they ought still to have to the ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Disputes about religion too often produce a decay of Christian affection; but this must be guarded against, and all proper means used to preserve brotherly love: Christians should always love and live as brethren, and the more they grow in devout affection to God their heavenly Father, the more they will grow in love to one another for his sake.

II. To hospitality; (v. 2.) Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. We must add to brotherly kindness, charity. Where observe, 1. The duty required—to entertain strangers, both those that are strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to our persons; especially those who know themselves to be strangers here, and are seeking another country; which is the case of the people of God, and of the believing Jews when they were in a desperate and distressed condition; but he seems to speak of strangers as such, though we know not who they are, nor whence they come; yet, seeing they are without any certain dwelling place, we should allow them room in our hearts and in our houses, as we have opportunity and ability. 2. The motive—thereby some have entertained angels unawares; so Abraham did, (Gen. 18.) and Lot; (Gen. 19.) and one of those that Abraham entertained, was, the Son of God; and though we cannot suppose this will ever be our case, yet what we do to strangers, in obedience to him, he will reckon and reward as done to himself; (Matt. 25. 35.) I was a stranger, and ye took me in. God has often bestowed honours and favours upon his hospitable servants, beyond all their thoughts, unawares.

III. To Christian charity; (v. 3.) Remember those that are in bonds. Where observe, 1. The duty—to remember those that are in bonds and in adversity. (1.) God often orders it so, that while some Christians and churches are in adversity, others enjoy peace and liberty. All are not called at the same time to resist unto blood. (2.) Those that are themselves at liberty, must sympathize with those that are in bonds and adversity, as if they were bound with them in the same chain: they must feel the sufferings of their brethren. 2. The reason of the duty—as being yourselves in the body; not only in the body natural, and so liable to the like sufferings; and you should sympathize with them now, that others may sympathize with you when your turn shall come; but in the same mystical sense, under the same Head; and if one member suffer, all the rest suffer with it, 1 Cor. 12. 26. It would be unnatural in Christians not to bear each other's burdens.

IV. To purity and chastity; v. 4. Here you have, 1. A recommendation of God's ordinance of marriage, that it is honourable in all, and ought to be so esteemed by all, and not denied to those to whom God has not denied it; it is honourable, for God instituted it for man in paradise, knowing it was not good for him to be alone; he married and blessed the first couple, the first parents of mankind, to direct all to look unto God in that great concern, and to marry in the Lord. Christ honoured marriage with his presence and first miracle; it is honourable, as a means to prevent impurity and a defiled bed; it is honourable and happy, when persons come together under proper purposing; but a bed undefiled, not only from unlawful, but inordinate affections. 2. A dreadful, but just censure of impurity and lewdness; whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. (1.) God knows who are guilty of such sins, no darkness can hide them from him. (2.) He will call such sins by their proper names, not by the names of love and gallantry, but of whoredom and adultery; whoredom in the single state, and adultery in the married state. (3.) He will bring them to judgment, he will judge them, either by their own consciences here, and set their sins in order before them for their deep humiliation; and conscience, when awakened, will be very severe upon such sinners; or he will set them at his tribunal at death, and in the last day; he will convict them, condemn them, and cast them out for ever, if they die under the guilt of this sin.

To Christian contentment; v. 5, 6. Here observe, 1. The sin that is contrary to this grace and duty—covetousness, an over eager desire of the wealth of this world, envying those who have more than we; this sin we must allow no place in our conversation; for though it be a secret lust lurking in the heart, if it be not subdued, it will enter into our conversation, and discover itself in our manner of speaking and acting; we must take care not only to be free from it, but to hate it. 2. The duty and grace is contrary to covetousness—being satisfied and pleased with such things as we have; present things, for past things cannot be recalled, and future things are only in the hand of God; what God gives us from day to day, we must be content with it, though it fall short of what we
hours, support them under all their bourns, and strengthen them under all their temptations. 2. There are good reasons why people should pray for their ministers; he mentions two: (1.) Therefore we have a good conscience, &c. v. 18. Many of the Jews had an ill opinion of Paul, because he being a Hebrew of the Hebrews, had cast off ti Levitical law, and preached up Christ: now he shows how he modestly asserts his own integrity: We trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. We trust, he might have said, We know; b he chose to speak in a humble style, to teach us not to be too confident of ourselves, but to maintain a godly jealousy over our own hearts. We truse that our conscience, an enlightened and well-informed conscience, a clean and pure conscience, a tender and fruitful conscience, a conscience testing for us, not against us: a good conscience in all things, in the duties both of the first and second test, toward God, and toward men; and especially all things pertaining to our ministry, we would have a honestly and sincerely in all things. Observe, (1.) A good conscience has a respect to all God's commands, and all our duty. (2.) That those who have such good conscience, yet need the prayers of others. (3.) Conscientious ministers are public blessings, and deserve the prayers of the people. (2.) Another reason why he desires their prayers, that he hoped thereby to be the sooner restored to them, (v. 19.) intimating that he had bee formerly among them; and that, now he was absent from them, he had a great desire and real intention to come again to them; and that the best way to facilitate his return to them, and to make a mercy to him and them, was, to make it a matter of their prayer. When ministers come to a peace as a return of prayer, they come with greater visitation to that place, and success to the people. We should fetch in all our mercies by prayer.

II. He offers up his prayers to God for them, being willing to do for them as he desired they should do for him; (v. 20.) Now the God of peace, &c. In this excellent prayer, observe, 1. That given to God—The God of peace, who has founout a way for peace and reconciliation between himself and sinners, and who loves peace on earth, and specially in his churches. 2. The great works ascribed to him: he hath brought again from death our Lord Jesus, &c. Jesus raised himself from his own power; and yet the Father was concerned in it, attesting thereby that justice was satisfie and the law fulfilled. He rose again for our justification; and that divine power by which he was raised, is able to do everything for us, that we stand in need of. 3. The titles given to Christ—Our Lord Jesus, our Sovereign, our Saviour, and the great shepherd of the sheep, promised in Isa. 40. 11. Clarified by himself to be so, John 10. 14. 15. Misters are under-shepherds, Christ is the great shepherd. This denotes his interest in his people; they are the flock of his pasture, and his care and concern are for them; he feeds them, and leads them, and watches over them. 4. The way and method in which God is reconciled, and Christ raised from the dead—through the blood of the everlasting covenant. The blood of Christ satisfied divine justice, and so procured Christ's release from the pri, and the discharge of the debts, according to an eternal covenant or agreement between the Father and the Son; and this blood is the sanction and seal of an everlasting covenant between God and his people. 5. The mercy prayed for; (v. 21.) Make you perfect in every good work, &c. Observe, (1.) The perfection of the saints in every good work, is the great thing desired by them and for them, that they may have a perfection of integrity, a clear mind, a clean heart, lively affections, regular and resolved wills, and suitable strength for every good work to which they are called now; and at length a perfection of degrees to fit them for the employment and felicity of heaven. (2.) The way in which God makes his people perfect; it is by working in them always what is pleasing in his sight, and that through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever. Observe, (1.) There is no good thing wrought in us, but it is the work of God; he works in us, before we are fit for any good work. (2.) No good thing is wrought in us by God, but through Jesus Christ, for his sake and by his Spirit. And therefore, (3.) Eternal glory is due to him, who is the Cause of all the good principles wrought in us, and all the good works done by us. To this every one should say, Amen.

III. He gives the Hebrews an account of Timothy's liberty, and his hopes of seeing them with him in a little time, v. 23. It seems, Timothy had been a prisoner, doubtless for the gospel, but now he was set at liberty. The imprisonment of faithful ministers is an honour to them, and their enlargement matter of joy to the people; he was pleased with the hopes of not only seeing Timothy, but seeing the Hebrews with him. Opportunities of writing to the churches of Christ, are desired by the faithful ministers of Christ, and pleasant to them.

IV. Having given a brief account of this his letter, and begged their attention to it, (v. 22.) he closes with salutations, and a solemn, though short benediction.

1. The salutation. (1.) From himself to them, directed to all their ministers who had rule over them, and to all the saints; to them all, ministers and people. (2.) From the Christians in Italy to them. It is a good thing to have the law of holy love and kindness written in the hearts of Christians one towards another. Religion teaches men the truest civility and good-breeding. It is not a sour or morose thing.

2. The solemn, though short benediction; (v. 23.) Grace be with you all. Amen. Let the favour of God be toward you, and his grace continually working in you, and with you, bringing forth the fruits of holiness, as the first-fruits of glory. When the people of God have been conversing together by word or writing, it is good to part with prayer, desiring for each other the continuance of the gracious presence of God, that they may meet together again in the world of praise.
AN

WITH

OF THE

GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES.

Completed by Dr. S. Wright.

THE writer of this epistle was not James the son of Zedee: for he was put to death by Herod, (Act. 12.) before Christianity had gained so much ground among the Jews of the dispersion, as is here implied. But it was the other James, the son of Alpheus; who was cousin-german to Christ, and one of the twelve apostles, Matt. 10. 3. He is called a pillar; (1 Cor. 2. 9.) and this epistle of his cannot be disputed, without loosening a foundation-stone. It is called a general epistle, because (as some think) it is directed to any particular person or church, but such a one as we call a circular letter. Others think it is called general or catholic, to distinguish it from the epistles of Ignatius, Barnabas, Polycarp, and others who were noted in the primitive times, but not generally received in the church, and on that account not canonical, as this is. Eusebius tells us, that this epistle was generally read in the church with the other catholic epistles. Hist. Ecclesiast. page 53. Ed. Val. Anno 1678. St. James, our author, was called the just, for his great piety. He was an eminent example of those graces which he presseth on others. He was so exceedingly revered for his justice, temperance, and devotion, that Josephus & Jewish historian records it as one of the causes of the destruction of Jerusalem, "That St. James was martyred in it." This is mentioned in hopes of procuring the greater regard to what is penned by so holy and excellent a man.

The time when this epistle was written is uncertain. To design it is, to reprove Christians for the great degeneracy both in faith and manners; and to prevent the spreading of those libertine doctrines which threatened the destruction of all practical godliness. (Particulars shall be laid down in the contents at the beginning of each chapter.) It was also special intention of the author of this epistle, to awaken the Jewish nation to a sense of the greatness and nearness of those judgments which were coming upon them; and to support all true Christians in the day of their duty, under the calamities and persecutions they might meet with. The truths laid down are very momentous, and necessary to be maintained; and the rules for practice, as here stated, are such as ought to be observed in our times well as in preceding ages.

CHAP. I.

After the inscription and salutation, (v. 1.) Christians are taught how to conduct themselves when under the cross. Several graces and duties are recommended; and those who endure their trials and afflictions as the apostle here directs, are pronounced blessed, and are assured of a glorious reward, v. 2...12. But those sins which bring sufferings, or the weaknesses and faults men are chargeable with under them, are by no means to be imputed to God; who cannot be the author of sin, but is the Author of all good, v. 13..18. All passion and rash anger, and vile affections, ought to be suppressed. The word of God should be made our chief study: and what we hear and know of it, we must take care to practice; otherwise our religion will prove but a vain thing. To this is added an account wherein pure religion consists, v. 19..27.

1. JAMES, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting. 2. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; 3. Knowing that the trying of your faith worketh patience. 4. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. 5. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. 6. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. 7. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord. 8. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. 9. Let not that brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted: 10. But the rich, in that he is exalted; 11. But the rich shall pass away. 12. For the sun...

have enjoyed heretofore, and though it do not come up to our expectations for the future; we must be content with our present lot, we must bring our minds to our present condition, and this is the sure way to contentment; and they who cannot do it, be not contented though God should raise their condition to their minds, for the mind would rise with the condition. Haman was the great court-favourite, and yet not contented; Ahab, on the throne, and yet not contented; Adam, in paradise, and yet not contented; yea, the angels, in heaven, and yet not contented; but Paul, though absed and empty, had learned in every state, in any state, therewith to be contented. But at reason Christians have to be contented with their present lot: (1.) God hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee; v. 5. 6. This was said to Joshua, (ch. 1. 5.) but belongs to all the faithful servants of God. Old-Testament promises may be applied to New-Testament saints; this promise contains the sum and substance of all the promises; I will never, no, never leave thee, nor ever forsake thee. Here are no less than five negatives brought together, to confirm the promise; the true believer shall have the gracious presence of God with him in life, at death, and for ever. (2.) From this comprehensive promise they may assure themselves of help from God; (v. 6.) So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my Helper; I will not fear what man shall do unto me. Men can do nothing against God, and God can make all that men do agree, and turn to the good.

1. To the duty Christians owe to their ministers, and that both to those that are dead, and to those that are yet alive.

1. To those that are dead; (v. 7.) Remember them that have had the rule over you. Here observe, (1.) The description given of them; they were such as had the rule over them, and had spoken to them the word of God; their guides and governors, who had spoken to them the word of God.

Here is the dignity to which they were advanced—be rulers and leaders of the people, not according to their own will, but the will and word of God; and this character they filled up with suitable duty: they did not rule at a distance, and rule by others, but they ruled by personal presence and instruction, according to the word of God. (2.) The duty owing to them, even when they were dead; [1.] Remember them, [2.] Follow their faith; be steadfast in the profession of the faith they preached to you, and labour after the grace of faith by which they lived and died so well. Consider the end of their conversation, how quickly, how comfortably, how joyfully, they finished their course!

Now this duty of following the same true faith in which they had been instructed, the apostle enlarges upon, and prescribes for all. Here is, not only from the remembrance of their faithful deceased guides, but from several other motives:

First, From the immutability and eternity of the Lord Jesus Christ. Though their ministers were some dead, others dying, yet the great Head and High Priest of the church, the Bishop of their souls, ever lives, and is ever the same; and they should be steadfast in the profession of the faith by which they lived and died so well. Thus he argues thus under the Jewish law: As part of the sin-offering was to be eaten, but all must be burnt without the camp while they dwell in tabernacles, and without the gates when they dwell in cities: now if they will be subject to that law, they cannot eat at the gospel-altar: for that which is eaten there, is furnished from Christ, who is the great Sin-offering. Not that it is the very sin-offering itself, as the papists affirm; for then it was not to be eaten, but burnt; but the gospel-feast is the fruit and procurement of the sacrifice, which they have no right to, who do not acknowledge the sacrifice itself. And that it might appear that Christ was really the Antitype of the sin-offering, and, as such, might sanctify or cleanse his people with his own blood, he confirmed himself to his people in suffering for their sins, and in the garb of the gospel, as a striking exhibition of his humiliation, as if he had not been fit either for sacred or civil society! And this shews, how sin, which was the meritorious cause of the sufferings of Christ, is a forfeiture of all sacred and civil rights, and the sincerer a common plague and nuisance to all society, if God should be strict to mark iniquity. Having thus shewed that adherence to the Levitical law would, even according to its own rules, debar men from the Christian altar; he proceeds, [2.] To improve this argument, (v.

Secondly, From the nature and tendency of those erroneous doctrines that they were in danger of falling in with. 1. They were divers and various, (v. 9.) different from what they had received from their former faithful teachers, and inconsistent with them.

1. They were strange doctrines, such as the gospel-church was unacquainted with, foreign to the gospel. 2. They were of an unsettling, distracting nature, like the wind by which the ship is tossed, in danger of being driven from its anchor, carried away, and split upon the rocks. They were quite contrary to that grace of God, that fixes and establishes the heart, which is an excellent thing. These strange doctrines keep the heart always fluctuating and unsettled. 4. They are mean and low as to their subject; they are about external, little, perishing things, such as meats and drinks, &c. 5. They were unprofitable; those who were most taken with them, and employed about them, got no real good by them to their own souls; the more they meditated, the more holy, nor more humble, nor more thankful, nor more heavenly. 6. They would exclude those who embraced them, from the privileges of the Christian altar; (v. 10.) We have an altar. This is an argument of great weight, and therefore the apostle insists the longer upon it. Observe, (1.) The Christian church has its altar. It was objected against the primitive Christians, that their assemblies were destitute of an altar; but that was not true. We have an altar, not a material altar, but a personal one, and that is Christ; he is both our Altar, and our Sacrifice; he sanctifies the gift. The altars under the law were types of Christ; the brazen altar of the sacrifice, the golden altar of his immolation.

2. (This altar furnishes a feast for true believers, a feast upon the sacrifice, a feast of fat things: spiritual strength, and growth, and holy delight, and pleasure. The Lord's table is not our altar, but it is furnished with provision from the altar. Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us, (1. Cor. 5.) and it follows, therefore let us keep the feast. The Lord's supper is the feast of the gospel-promise, the full and final accomplishment of the promises of the Old Testament.

3. Those who adhere to the tabernacle, or the Levitical dispensation, or return to it again, exclude themselves from the privileges of this altar, from the benefits purchased by Christ. If they serve the tabernacle, they are resolved to subject themselves to antiquated rites and ceremonies, to renounce their right to the Christian altar; and this part of the argument is first proved, and then improves. [1.] They profess, that it is the service due to the Jewish state is a bar to the privileges of the Gospel; and he argues thus under the Jewish law: As part of the sin-offering was to be eaten, but all must be burnt without the camp while they dwell in tabernacles, and without the gates when they dwell in cities: now if they will be subject to that law, they cannot eat at the gospel-altar: for that which is eaten there, is furnished from Christ, who is the great Sin-offering. Not that it is the very sin-offering itself, as the papists affirm; for then it was not to be eaten, but burnt; but the gospel-feast is the fruit and procurement of the sacrifice, which they have no right to, who do not acknowledge the sacrifice itself. And that it might appear that Christ was really the Antitype of the sin-offering, and, as such, might sanctify or cleanse his people with his own blood, he confirmed himself to his people in suffering for their sins, and in the garb of the gospel, as a striking exhibition of his humiliation, as if he had not been fit either for sacred or civil society! And this shews, how sin, which was the meritorious cause of the sufferings of Christ, is a forfeiture of all sacred and civil rights, and the sincerer a common plague and nuisance to all society, if God should be strict to mark iniquity. Having thus shewed that adherence to the Levitical law would, even according to its own rules, debar men from the Christian altar; he proceeds, [2.] To improve this argument, (v. }
13—15.] in suitable advices. First, let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp; go forth from the ceremonial law, from sin, from the world, from every bond. When he calls us. Secondly, let us be willing to bear his reproach, be willing to be accounted the suffering of all things, not worthy to live, not worthy to die a common death.

This was his reproach, and we must submit to it; and we have the more reason, because, whether we go forth from this world to Christ or no, we must necessarily go forth in a little time by death; for here we have no continuing city; sin, sinners, death, will not suffer us to continue long here; and therefore we should go forth now by faith, and seek in Christ the rest and settlement which this world cannot afford us, v. 14. Thirdly, Let us make a right use of this altar; not only partake of the privileges of it, but discharge the duties of the altar, as those whom Christ has made priests to attend on this altar. Let us bring our sacrifices to this altar, and to this our High Priest, and offer them up by him, v. 15, 16.

Now what are the sacrifices which we must bring and offer on this altar, even Christ? Not any expiatory sacrifices, there is no need of them, Christ has offered the great Sacrifice of atonement, our's are only the sacrifices of acknowledgment; and they are, 1. The sacrifice of praise to God, which we should offer up to God continually. In this are included all adoration and prayer, as well as thanksgiving; and we must offer up the praises of God from unsignified lips; and this must be only offered to God, not to angels, or saints, or any creature, but to the name of God alone; and it must be by Christ, in a dependence upon his meritorious satisfaction and intercession. 2. The sacrifice of alms-deeds, and Christian charity; (v. 16.) To do good, and to communicate, forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. We must, according to our power, communicate to the need, and to the good of others. And these we must lay down upon this altar, not depending upon the merit of our own deeds, but of our great High Priest; and with such sacrifices as these, adoration and alms thus offered up, God is well pleased; he will accept the offering with pleasure, and will accept and bless the offerings through Christ also.

Thus has he told us the duty Christians owe to their deceased ministers, which principally consists in following their faith, and not departing from it; the apostle tells us what is the duty that people owe to their living ministers, (v. 17.) and the reasons of that duty: (1.) The duty—to obey them, and submit themselves to them. It is not an implicit obedience, or absolute submission, that is here required, his is agreed to the good will of God revealed in his word; and yet it is truly obedience and submission, and that not only to God, but to the authority of the ministerial office, which is of God; as certainly in all things belonging to that office, as the authority of parents or the civil magistrates in the things within their sphere. Christians must submit to be instructed by their ministers, and not think themselves too good to learn from them; and when they find that ministerial instructions are agreeable to the written word, they must obey them. (2.) The motives to this duty: (1.) They have the rule over the people; their office, though not magistrate, yet is truly authoritative; they have no authority to lord it over the people, but to lead them in the ways of God, by inferring and instructing, by explaining the word of God to them, and applying it to their several cases; they are not to make laws of their own, but to interpret the laws of God; nor is their interpretation to be immediately received without examination, but the people must search the scriptures, and so far as the instructions of their ministers are according to that rule, they ought to receive them, not as the word of men, but, as they are indeed, the word of God, that works effectually in those that believe. (2.) They watch for the souls of the people, not to insnare them, but to save them; to gain them, not to themselves, but to Christ; to build them up in knowledge, faith, and holiness; they are to watch against every thing that may be hurtful to the souls of men, and to give them warning of dangerous errors, of the devil's false safes of approaching judgments; they are to watch for all opportunities of helping the souls of men forward in the way to heaven. (3.) They must give an account how they have discharged their duty, and what is become of the souls committed to their trust, whether any have been lost through their neglect, and whether any of them have been brought in and built up under their ministry. (4.) They would be glad to give an account of themselves and their hearers. If they can then give in an account of their own fidelity and success, it will be a joyful day to them; those souls that have been converted and confirmed under their ministry, will be their joy, and their crown, in the day of the Lord Jesus.

18. Pray for us; for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. 19. But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner. 20. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, 21. Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. 22. And I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation; for I have written a letter unto you in few words. 23. Know ye, that our brother Timothy is set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you. 24. Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you. 25. Grace be with you all. Amen.

Here
1. The apostle recommends himself, and his fellow-sufferers, to the prayers of the Hebrew believers; (v. 18.) "Pray for us; for me, and Timothy," (mentioned v. 23.) "and for all of those us who labour in the ministry of the gospel." 1. This is one part of the duty which people owe to their ministers; they need the prayers of the people; and the more especially the people pray for their ministers, the more benefit they may expect to reap from their ministry; they should pray that God would teach those who are to teach them, that he would make them vigilant, and wise, and zealous, and successful; that he would assist them in all their bours, support them under all their burthens, and strengthen them under all their temptations. 2. There are good reasons why people should pray for their ministers; he mentions two: (1.) We trust we have a good conscience, &c. v. 18. Many of the Jews had an ill opinion of Paul, because he, being a Hebrew of the Hebrews, had cast off the Levitical law, and preached up Christ: now he here modestly asserts his own integrity; We trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. We trust, he might have said, We know; but he chose to speak in a humble style, to teach us all not to be too confident of ourselves, but to maintain a godly jealousy over our own hearts. We trust we have a good conscience, an enlightened and well-informed conscience, a clean and pure conscience, a tender and faithful conscience, a conscience testifying for us, not against us: a good conscience in all things, in the duties both of the first and second table, toward God, and toward men; and especially in all things pertaining to our ministry, we would act honestly and sincerely in all things." Observe, [1.] A good conscience has a respect to all God's commands, and all our duty. [2.] That those who have this good conscience, yet need the prayers of others. [3.] Conscientious ministers are public benefactors, and deserve the prayers of the people. (2.) Another reason why he desires their prayers, is, that he hoped thereby to be the sooner restored to them, (v. 19.) intimating that he had been formerly among them; and that, now he was absent from them, he had a great desire and real intention to come again to them; and that the best way to facilitate his return to them, and to make it a mercy to him and them, was, to make it a matter of their prayer. When ministers come to a people as a return of prayer, they come with greater satisfaction to themselves, and success to the people. We should fetch in all our mercies by prayer. II. He offers up his prayers to God for them, being willing to do for them as he desired they should do for him; (v. 20.) Now the God of peace, &c. In this excellent prayer, observe, 1. The title given to God—the God of peace, who has found out a way for peace and reconciliation between himself and sinners, and who loves peace on earth, and especially in his churches. 2. The great work ascribed to him; he hath brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, &c. Jesus raised himself by his own power; and yet the Father was concerned in it, attesting thereby that justice was satisfied, and the law fulfilled. He rose again for our justification, and that divine power by which he was raised, is able to do every thing for us, that we stand in need of. 3. The titles given to Christ—our Lord Jesus, our Sovereign, our Saviour, and the great Shepherd of the sheep, promised in Isa. 40. 11. declared by himself to be so, John 10. 14, 15. Ministers are under-shepherds, Christ is the great Shepherd. This denotes his interest in his people; they are the flock of his pasture, and his care and concern are for them; he feeds them, and leads them, and watches over them. 4. The way and method in which God is reconciled, and Christ raised from the dead—through the blood of the everlasting covenant. The blood of Christ satisfied divine justice, and procured Christ's release from the prison of the grave, as having paid our debt, according to an eternal covenant or agreement between the Father and the Son; and this blood is the sanction and seal of an everlasting covenant between God and his people. 5. The mercy prayed for; (v. 21.) Make you perfect in every good work, &c. Observe, (1.) The perfection of the saints in every good work, is the great thing desired by them and for them, that they may here have a perfection of integrity, a clear mind, a clean heart, lively affections, regular and resolved wills, and suitable strength for every good work to which they are called now; and at length a perfection of degrees to fit them for the employment and felicity of heaven. (2.) The way in which God makes his people perfect; it is by working in them always what is pleasing in his sight, and that through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever. Observe, [1.] There is no good thing wrought in us, but it is the work of God; he works in us, before we are fit for any good work. [2.] No good thing is wrought in us by God, but through Jesus Christ, for his sake and by his Spirit. And therefore, [3.] Eternal glory is due to him, who is the Cause of all the good principles wrought in us, and all the good works done by us. To this every one should say, Amen. III. He gives the Hebrews an account of Timothy's liberty, and his hopes of seeing them with him in a little time, v. 23. It seems, Timothy had been a prisoner, doubtless for the gospel, but now he was set at liberty. The imprisonment of faithful ministers is an honour to them, and their enlargement matter of joy to the people; he was pleased with the hopes of not only seeing Timothy, but seeing the Hebrews with him. Opportunities of writing to the churches of Christ, are desired by the faithful ministers of Christ, and pleasant to them. IV. Having given a brief account of this his letter, and begged their attention to it, (v. 22.) he closes with salutations, and a solemn, though short benediction. 1. The salutation. (1.) From himself to them, directed to all their ministers who had rule over them, and to all the saints; to them all, ministers and people. (2.) From the Christians in Italy to them. It is a good thing to have the law of holy love and kindness written in the hearts of Christians one towards another. Religion teaches men the truest civility and good-breeding. It is not a scar or morose thing. 2. The solemn, though short benediction; (v. 25.) Grace be with you all. Amen. Let the favour of God be toward you, and his grace continually working in you, and with you, bringing forth the fruits of holiness, as the first-fruits of glory. When the people of God have been conversing together by word or writing, it is good to part with prayer, desiring for each other the continuance of the gracious presence of God, that they may meet together again in the world of praise.
EXPOSITION,
WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,
OF THE
GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES.

Completed by Dr. S. Wright.

THE writer of this epistle was not James the son of Zebedee: for he was put to death by Herod, (Acts 12.) before Christianity had gained so much ground among the Jews of the dispersion, as is here implied. But it was the other James, the son of Alpheus; who was cousin-german to Christ, and one of the twelve apostles, Matt. 10. 3. He is called a pillar; (Gal. 2. 9.) and this epistle of his cannot be disputed, without loosening a foundation-stone.

It is called a general epistle, because (as some think) not directed to any particular person or church; but such a one as we call a circular letter. Others think it is called general or catholic, to distinguish it from the epistles of Ignatius, Barnabas, Polycarp, and others who were noted in the primitive times, but not generally received in the church, and on that account not canonical, as this is. Eusebius tells us, that this epistle was generally read in the churches with the other catholic epistles. Hist. Eccles. page 55. Ed. Val. Anno 1678. St. James, our author, was called the just, for his great piety. He was an eminent example of those graces which he presses upon others. He was so exceedingly revered for his justice, temperance, and devotion, that Josephus the Jewish historian records it as one of the causes of the destruction of Jerusalem, “That St. James was martyred in it.” This is mentioned in hopes of procuring the greater regard to what is penned by so holy and excellent a man.

The time when this epistle was written is uncertain. The design of it is, to reprove Christians for their great degeneracy both in faith and manners; and to prevent the spreading of those libertine doctrines which threatened the destruction of all practical godliness. (Particulars shall be laid down in the contents at the beginning of each chapter.) It was also a special intention of the author of this epistle, to awaken the Jewish nation to a sense of the greatness and nearness of those judgments which were coming upon them; and to support all true Christians in the way of their duty, under the calamities and persecutions they might meet with. The truths laid down are very momentous, and necessary to be maintained; and the rules for practice, as here stated, are such as ought to be observed in our times as well as in preceding ages.

JAMES, I.

CHAP. I.

After the inscription and salutation, (v. 1.) Christians are taught how to conduct themselves when under the cross. Several graces and duties are recommended; and those who endure their trials and afflictions as the apostle here directs, are pronounced blessed, and are assured of a glorious reward, v. 2. . 12. But those sins which bring sufferings, or the weaknesses and faults men are chargeable with under them, are by no means to be imputed to God: who cannot be the author of sin, but is the Author of all good, v. 13. . 18. All passion and rush anger, and vile affections, ought to be suppressed. The word of God should be made our chief study: and what we hear and know of it, we must take care to practise; otherwise our religion will prove but a vain thing. To this is added an account wherein pure religion consists, v. 19. . 27.

1. JAMES, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting. 2. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; 3. Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. 4. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. 5. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. 6. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed. 7. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. 8. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. 9. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted: 10. But the rich, in that he is made low: because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away. 11. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the fashion of it perisheth; so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. 12. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

We are here to consider, first, the inscription of this epistle, and then the matter of it. The inscription has three principal parts.

1. The character by which our Author desires to be known—James, a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ. Though he was a prime minister in Christ's kingdom, yet he styles himself only a servant. Note hence, Those who are higher in office or attainments in the church of Christ, are but servants. They should not therefore act as masters, but as ministers. Further, though St. James is called by the evangelist the brother of our Lord, yet it was his glory to serve Christ in the spirit, rather than to boast of his being akin according to the flesh. From hence let us learn to prize this title above all others in the world—the servants of God and of Christ. Again, it is to be observed, that St. James professes himself a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to teach us that in all services we should have an eye to the Son as well as to the Father. We cannot acceptably serve the Father, unless we are also servants of the Son. God will have all men to honour the Son as they honour the Father, (John 5. 23.) looking for acceptance in Christ, and assistance from him, and yielding all obedience to him; they cannot serve God, as Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

2. The apostle here mentions the conditions of those to whom he writes—the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad. Some understand this of the dispersion upon the persecution of Stephen, Acts 8. But that only reached to Judea and Samaria. Others by the Jews of the dispersion understand those who were in Assyria, Babylon, Egypt, and other kingdoms into which their wars had driven them. The great part indeed of ten of the twelve tribes were lost in captivity; but yet some of every tribe were preserved, and are still honoured with the ancient style of twelve tribes. These however were scattered and dispersed. (1.) They were dispersed in mercy. Having the scriptures of the Old Testament, the providence of God so ordered it, that they were scattered in several countries for the diffusing of the light of divine revelation. (2.) They began now to be scattered in wrath. The Jewish nation was crumbling into parties and factions, and many were forced to leave their own country. Even good people among them shared in the common calamity. (3.) These Jews of the dispersion were those who had embraced the Christian faith. They were persecuted, and forced to seek for shelter in other countries; the Gentiles being kinder to Christians than the Jews were. Note here, It is clear the lot even of God's own tribes to be scattered abroad. The gathering day is reserved for the end of time; when all the dispersed children of God shall be gathered together to Christ their Head. In the mean time, while God's tribes are scattered abroad, he will send to look after them. Here is an apostle writing to the scattered; an epistle from God to the Gentiles. But may we not with reason expect neglect from his people? Apply here that of the prophet Ezekiel, (ch. 11. 16.) Thus saith the Lord God, Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come. God has a particular care of his outcasts. Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Hosea. 16. 3, 4.

God's tribes may be scattered; therefore we should not value ourselves too much on outward privileges. And, on the other hand, we should not despise, and think ourselves rejected, under outward calamities; because God remembers, and sends comfort to, his scattered people.

3. St. James here shows the respect he had even for the dispersed; greetings, saluting them, wishing peace and salvation to them. True Christians should not be the less valued for their hardships. It was the desire of this apostle's heart, that those who were scattered, might be comforted—that they might do well and fare well, and be enabled to rejoice in their distresses. God's people have reason to rejoice in all places, and at all times; as will abundantly appear from what follows.

We next come to consider the matter of this epistle. In the verses now before us we have these following things to be observed.

1. The suffering state of Christians in this world is represented, and that in a very instructive manner; if we attend to what is plainly and necessarily implied, together with what is fully expressed.

2. It is implied, that troubles and afflictions may be of two sorts; the one, natural, which are common to all the tribes of mankind; the other, religious, which are the lot of those who have the most reason to think and hope well of themselves. Such as have a title to the greatest joy, may yet endure very grievous afflictions. As good people are liable to be scattered, they must not think it strange if they meet with troubles.

3. These outward afflictions and troubles are temptations to them. The Devil endeavours by sufferings and crosses to drive men to sin, and to separate them from the exercise of their duty; but even this carnal state is employed by the Father that our afflictions are in God's hand, they are intended for the trial and improvement of our graces. The gold is put into the furnace, that it may be purified.

4. These temptations may be numerous and various; divers temptations, as the apostle speaks. Our trials may be of many and different kinds, and therefore we have need to put on the whole armour of God. We must be armed on every side, because temptation is on every side.

11. The graces and duties of a state of trial and affliction are here pointed out to us. Could we attend to these things, and grow in them as we should, does good would it be for us to be afflicted?

1. One Christian grace to be exercised, is joy; Count it all joy, v. 2. We must not sink into a sad and disconsolate frame of mind, that would make us faint under our trials; but must endeavour to keep our spirits dilated and enlarged, the better to take in a true sense of our case, and with greater advantage to set ourselves to make the best of it. Philosophy may instruct men to be calm under their troubles; but Christianity teaches us to be joyful; because such exercises proceed from love, and not fury in God. In them we are conformable to Christ our Head, and they become marks of our adoption; by suffering in the ways of righteousness, we are serving the interests of our Lord's kingdom among men, and edifying the body of Christ; and our trials will brighten our graces now, and our crown at last. Therefore the reason to rejoice in tribulation and suffering is this, that good shall come of it in the lot in the way of our duty. And this is not purely a New Testament paradox, but even in Job's time it was said, Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth. There is the more reason for joy in fictions, if we consider the other graces that are promoted by them.

2. Faith is a grace that one expression supposes, and another expressly requires; Knowing this, that the trial of your faith, v. 3. And then in v. 6, let him ask in faith. There must be a sound believing of the great truths of Christianity, and a resolute clinging to them, in times of trouble. It is spoken of here as tried by afflictions, consists in a belief of the power and promise of God, and in fidelity and constancy to the Lord Jesus.

3. There must be patience; The trial of faith worketh patience. Trying of one grace produces another; and the more the suffering graces of a Christian are exercised, the stronger they grow. Tribulation worketh patience, Rom. 5. 3. Such exercise Christian patience aught, we must, (1.) Let it work. It is not a stupid, but an active thing. A stoical apathy and a Christian patience are very different: by the one men become, in some measure, insensible of their afflictions: but by the other they become triumphant in and over them. Let us take care, in times of trial, that patience, and not passion, be set at work in us: whatever is said or done, let us be not so much saving and doing of it: let us not allow the indulging of our passions to hinder the operation and noble effects of patience; let us give it leave to work, and it will work wonders, in a time of trouble. (2.) We must let it have its perfect work. Do nothing to limit it, or to weaken it; but let it have its full scope: if one affliction come upon the heels of another, and a train of them are drawn upon us, let let patience go on till its work is perfect. We are to be patient in general that God appoints, and as long as he appoints, and with a humble obedient eye to him, and when we not only bear troubles, but rejoice in them, then patience hath its perfect work. (3.) When the work of patience is complete, then the Christian is entire, and nothing will be wanting: it will furnish us with all that is necessary for our Christian race and warfare, and will enable us to persevere to the end, and then its work will be ended, and crowned with glory. After we have abounded in other graces, we have need of patience, Heb. 10. 36. But let patience have its perfect work, and we shall be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

4. Prayer is a duty recommended also to suffering Christians; and here the apostle shews,

(1.) What we ought more especially to pray for —鲉EBUS, and effectual prayer of God. We should not pray so much for the removal of an affliction as for wisdom to make a right use of it. And who is there that does not want wisdom under any great trials or exercises, to guide him, both in his judging of things, in the conduct of his own spirit and temper, and in the management of his affairs? To be wise in trying times is a special gift of God, and a grace we must seek for it.

(2.) In what way this is to be obtained — upon our petitioning or asking for it. Let the foolish be become beggars at the throne of grace, and they are in a fair way to be wise. It is not said "Let such ask of man," no not of any man, but, "Let him ask of God," who made him, and gave him his understanding and reasonable powers at first; of him, in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Let us cherish our want of wisdom to God, and daily ask it of him.

(3.) We have the greatest encouragement to do this, he giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. Yea, it is expressly promised that it shall be given, v. 5. Here is something in answer to every discouraging turn of the mind, when we go to God, under a sense of our own weakness and folly, to ask for wisdom. He to whom we are sent, we are sure, has it to give; and he is of a giving disposition, inclined to bestow this upon those who ask. Nor is there any fear of his favours being limited to some in this case, so as to exclude others, or any humble petitioning soul; for he giveth to all men. And if you should say you want a great deal of wisdom, a small portion will not serve your turn; recollect, he giveth liberally.

5. And lest you should be afraid of being reproved for asking too much for your folly: it is added, he upbraideth not. Ask when you will, and as often as you will, you will meet with no upraisings. And if, after all, any should say, "This may be the case with some, but I fear I shall not succeed so well in my seeking for wisdom as some others may:" let such consider how particular and express the promise is, it shall be given him. Justly then must fools perish for their foolishness, if wisdom may be had for asking, and they will not pray to God for it. But,

(4.) There is one thing necessary to be observed in our asking, namely, that we do it with a believing, steady mind; v. 6. Let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. The promise above is very sure, taking this proviso along with us; wisdom shall be given to those who ask it of God, provided they believe it. If God is able to make the simple wise, and is faithful to the promise of his word, he will supply to him. This was the condition Christ insisted on, in treating with those who came to him for healing; Believeth thou that I am able to do this? There must be no wavering, no staggering at the promise of God through unbelief, or through a sense of any disadvantages that lie on our own part.

Here therefore we see,

5. That the single, and sincerity of intention, and a seriousness of mind, constitute another duty required under affliction; He that wavereth, is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed. To be sometimes lifted up by faith, and then thrown down again by distrust; to mount sometimes toward the heavens, with an intention to secure glory, and honour, and immortality; and then to sink again in seeking the ease of the body, or the enjoyments of this world; this is very silly and elegantly compared to a wave driven by the winds, that first rises, and then falls, swells and sinks, just as the wind tosseth it higher or lower, in this way or that. A mind that has but one single and prevailing regard to its spiritual and eternal interest, and that keeps steady in its purposes for God, will grow wise by afflictions, will continue fervent in its devotions, and will be superior to all trials and oppositions. Now for the cure of a wavering spirit and a weak faith, the apostle shews the ill effects of these; (1.) In that the success of prayer is spoiled hereby; v. 7. Let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. Such a distrustful, shifting, unsettled person is not likely to value a favour from God as he should do, and therefore cannot expect to receive it. In asking for divine and heavenly wisdom, we are never like to prevail, if we have not a heart to prize it above all things, and to do all things to gain it. (2.) A wavering faith and spirit has a pernicious influence upon our conversation; v. 8. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. When our faith and spirit rise and fall with second causes, there will be great unstableness in all our conversation and actions. This may sometimes expose men to contempt in the world; but it is certain that such ways cannot please God, nor procure any good for us in the end. We should not confide solely to God to trust to, we have but one God to be governed by, and this should keep us even and steady. He that is unstable as water, shall not excel. Hereupon,

III. The holy, humble temperament of a Christian, both in advancement and debasement, is described: and both poor and rich are directed on what grounds to build their joy and comfort, v. 9—11.
Here we may observe, 1. Those of low degree are to be looked upon as brethren; Let the brother of low degree, &c. Poverty does not destroy the relation among Christians.

2. Observe also, Good Christians may be rich in the world, v. 10. Grace and wealth are not wholly inconsistent. Abraham, the father of the faithful, was rich in silver and gold.

3. Observe, Both these are allowed to rejoice. No condition of life puts us out of a capacity of rejoicing in God. If we do not rejoice in him always, it is our own fault. Those of low degree may rejoice, if they are exalted to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom of God; (as Dr. Whity explains this place;) and the rich may rejoice in humbling providences, as they produce a lovely and humble disposition of mind, which is highly valuable in the sight of God. Where any are made poor for righteousness' sake, their very poverty is their exaltation.

It is an honour to be dishonoured for the sake of Christ. To you it is given to suffer. Phil. 1. 29. All who are brought low, and made lowly by grace, may rejoice in the prospect of their exaltation at last in heaven.

4. Observe what reason rich people have, notwithstanding their riches, to be humble and low in their own eyes; because both they and their riches are passing away; As the flower of the grass he shall fade away, and his wealth with him, v. 11. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, than it withereth the grass. Note hence, Worldly wealth is a withering thing. Riches are too uncertain (says Mr. Baxter on this place,) too inconsiderable things to make any great or just alteration in our minds. As a flower fades before the heat of the scorching sun, shall the rich man fade away in his ways. His projects, counsels, and management in his world, are called his ways; in these he shall fade away. For this reason let him that is rich, rejoice, not so much in the providence of God, that makes him rich, as in the grace of God, that makes and keeps him humble; and in those trials and exercises that teach him to seek his felicity in and from God, and not from these perishable enjoyments.

IV. A blessing is pronounced on those who endure these trials, as here directed; (v. 12.)

Blessed is the man that endureth temptation.

Observe, 1. It is not the man who suffers only, who is blessed, but he who endures; who with patience and constancy goes through all difficulties in the way of his duty.

Observe, 2. Afflictions cannot make us miserable, if it be not our own fault. A blessing may arise from them, and we may be blessed in them. They are far from taking away a good man's felicity, that they really increase it. Observe, 3. Sufferings and temptations are the way to eternal blessedness; When he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, εἰμίκερος γῆσα—when he is approved; when his graces are found to be true, and of the highest worth; (so metals are tried as to their excellency by the fire;) and when his integrity is manifest, he is all is approved by the great Judge. Note hence, To be approved of God is the great aim of a Christian in all his trials; and it will be his blessedness at last, when he shall receive the crown of life. The tried Christian shall be a crowned one: and the crown he shall wear, will be a crown of life. It will be life and bliss to him, and will last for ever. We only bear the cross for a while, but we shall wear the crown hereafter.

Observe, 4. This blessedness, involved in a crown of life, is a promised thing to the righteous sufferer. It is therefore what we may most surely depend upon: for when heaven and earth shall pass away, this word of God shall not fail of being fulfilled.

But withal let us take notice that our future reward cannot be as a debt, but by a gracious promise.

5. Observe, Our enduring tempers must be from a principle of love to God and to our Lord Jesus Christ, otherwise we are not interested in this promise; The Lord hath promised to them that love him. St. Paul supposes that a man may for some point of religion even give his body to be burnt, and yet not be pleasing to God, nor regarded by him, because of his want of charity, or a prevailing sincere love to God and man, 1 Cor. 15. 35.

Observe, The right of the life is promised not only to great and eminent saints, but to all those who have the love of God reigning in their hearts. Every soul that truly loves God, shall have its trials in this world fully recompensed in that world above, where love is made perfect.

13. Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: 14. But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. 15. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. 16. Do not err, my beloved brethren. 17. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

18. Of his own will he begat us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures. We are here taught several things.

I. We are taught that God is not the author of any man's sin. Whoever they are, who raise persecutions against men, and whatever injustice and sin they may be guilty of in proceeding against them, God is not to be charged with it! And whatever sins good men may themselves be provoked to by their exercises and afflictions, God is not the cause of them. It seems to be here supposed that some people might think that God was really the author of all that the red resting upon them, might carry some into ill courses, and make them put forth their hands unto iniquity. But though this should be the case, and though such delinquents should attempt to lay their fault on God; yet the blame of their misconduct must lie entirely upon themselves. For, 1. There is nothing in the nature of God, that these can lay the blame upon; Let no man say, when he is tempted to take any evil course, or do any evil thing, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil. All moral evil is owing to some disorder in the being that is chargeable with it; to a want either of wisdom, or of power, or of decorum and purity in the will. But who can impeach the holy God with the want of these, which are his very essence? No exigence of affairs can ever tempt him to dishonour or dishonour himself, and therefore he cannot be tempted with evil.

2. There is nothing in the providential dispensations of God, that the blame of any man's sin can be laid upon; (v. 13.) Neither tempteth he any man. As God cannot be tempted with evil himself, so neither can he be a tempter of others. He cannot be a promoter of what is repugnant to his nature. The carnal mind is willing to charge its own sins to God: there is something necessary in this; our first father Adam tells God, The woman thou gavest me tempted me; thereby, in effect, throwing the blame upon God, for giving him the tempter. Let no man speak thus. It is very bad to sin; but it is much worse, when we have done amiss, to charge it upon God, and say it was owing to him. They who lay the blame of their sins either upon their constitution, or upon their condition in the world, or pretend they are under a fatal necessity of sinning, or else they are for the author of sin. Afflictions, as sent by God, are designed to draw out our graces, but not our corruptions.

11. We are taught where the true cause of evil lies, and where the blame ought to be laid; (v. 14.) Every man is tempted, (in an ill sense,) when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. In other scriptures the Devil is called the tempter; and other things may sometimes concur to tempt us; but none other than the Devil ought to be blamed so as to excuse ourselves; for the true original of evil and temptation is in our own hearts. The combustible matter is in us, though the flame may be blown up by some outward causes. And therefore, if thou scorner, thou alone shalt hear it, Prov. 9. 12.

Observe here, 1. The method of sin in its proceeding. First it draws away, then entices. As holiness consists of two parts—sanctifying that which is evil, and cleaving to that which is good; so these two things, reversed, are the two parts of sin. The heart is carried from that which is good, and enticed to cleave to that which is evil. It is first by corrupt inclinations, or by lusting after, and coveting some sensual or worldly thing, estranged from the life of God, and then by degrees fixed in a course of sin.

2. We may observe from hence the power and policy of sin. The word here rendered drawn away, signifies a being forcibly haleled or compelled. The word translated enticed, signifies being wheeled and beguiled by allurements and deceitful representations of things, ἵππωμα καί διαπλάγμα. There is a great deal of force done to conscience and to the mind by the power of corruption: and there is a great deal of cunning and deceit and flattery in sin to gain us to its interests. The force and power of sin could never prevail, were it not for its cunning and guile. Sinners who perish, are wheeled and flattered to their own destruction. And this will justify God for ever in their damnation, that they destroyed themselves. Their sin lies at their own door, and therefore their blood will lie upon their own heads.

3. Observe the success of corruption in their hearts: (v. 15.) Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; that is, Sin being allowed to excite desires in us, it will soon ripen those desires into consent; and then it is said to have conceived. The sin truly exists, though it be but in embryo. And when it is grown to its full size in the mind, it is then brought forth in actual execution. Stop the beginnings of sin therefore, or else all the evils it produces must be wholly charged upon us.

4. Observe the final issue of being allowed to excite desires in us, it will soon ripen those desires into consent; and then it is said to have conceived. The sin truly exists, though it be but in embryo. And when it is grown to its full size in the mind, it is then brought forth in actual execution. Stop the beginnings of sin therefore, or else all the evils it produces must be wholly charged upon us.

5. Observe the issue of sin, how it ends; Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. After sin is brought forth in actual commissions, the finishing of it (as Dr. Manton observes) is its being strengthened by frequent acts, and settled into a habit. And when the iniquities of men are thus filled up, death is brought forth. There is a death upon the soul, and death comes upon the body. And beside death spiritual and temporal, the wages of sin are death, Rom. 6. 23. Sinners being by Gentiles are pyri xed, and forsaken, before it is finished. Whom will ye die, O house of Israel? Ezek. 33. 11. God has no pleasure in your death, as he has no hand in your sin; but both sin and misery are owing to yourselves. Your own hearts’ lusts and corruptions are your tempters; and when by degrees they have carried you off from God, and finished the power and dominion of sin in you, then they will prove your destroyers.

11. We are taught yet further, that while we are the authors and procurers of all sin and misery to ourselves, God is the Father and Fountain of all good, (v. 16, 17.) We should take particular care no erring conceptions of God: "Do not err, my beloved brethren, µπαραμενας, do not wander, that is, from the word of God, and the accounts of him you have there. Do not stray into erroneous opinions, and go off from the standard of truth; the things which you have received from the Lord Jesus, and by the direction of his Spirit." The loose opinions of Simon, and the Nicolaitans, (from whom the Gnostics, a most sensual corrupt set of people, arose afterward,) may, perhaps, by the apostle here, be more especially cautioned against. Those who are disposed to look into these, may consult the first book of Irenæus against heresies. Let corrupt men run into what notions they will, the truth, as it is in Jesus, stands thus; that God is not, cannot be, the author and patronizer of any thing that is evil; but must be acknowledged as the Cause and Spring of every thing that is good; (v. 17.) Every good and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights.

Here observe, 1. God is the Father of lights. The visible light of the sun and the heavenly bodies is from him. He said, Let there be light, and there was light. Thus God is at once represented as the Creator of the sun, and in some respects compared to it. "As the sun is the same in its nature and influences, though the earth and clouds, oft hinder and obscure its shining and setting, and by its different appearances, or entire withdrawal, when the change is not in it: so God is unchangeable, and our changes and shadows are not from any mutability, or shadowy alterations in him, but from ourselves." Mr. Baxter. The Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. What the sun is in nature, God is in grace, providence, and glory; ay, and infinitely more. For, *As every good gift is from him. As the Father of lights, he gives the light of reason. The inspiration of the Almighty giveth understanding, Job 32. 8. He gives also the light of learning: Solomon’s wisdom in the knowledge of nature, in the arts of government, and in all his improvements, is ascribed to God. The light of divine revelation is more immediately from above. The light of faith, purity, and all the other blessings of the soul, is from the same God. So that we have nothing good but what we receive from God; as there is no evil or sin in us, or done by us, but what is owing to ourselves. We must own God as the Author of all the powers and perfections that are in the creature, and the Giver of all the benefits which we have in and by those powers and perfections: but none of their darkesses, their imperfections, or their ill actions are to be charged on the Father of lights; (v. 17.) Every good and perfect gift, both pertaining to this life and that which is to come.

3. Observe, As every good gift is from God, so particularly the renovation of our natures, our regeneration, and all the holy, happy consequences of it, must be ascribed to him; (v. 18.) Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth. Here let us take notice, (1.) A true Christian is a creature begotten anew, or another creation of a new spiritual nature; (for every good and perfect gift, both pertaining to this life and that which is to come.

(2.) The original of this good work is here declared: it is of God’s own will; not by our skill or power; not from any good foreseen in us, or done by us, but purely from the good-will and grace of God.

(3.) The means whereby this is effected, are pointed out; the word of truth, that is, the gospel; as St. Paul expresses it more plainly, 1 Cor. 4. 15. *I have begotten you in Jesus Christ through the gospel. This gospel is indeed a word of truth; or else it could never produce such real, such lasting, such great and noble effects. We may rely upon it, and venture our immortal souls upon it. And we shall find it a means of our sanctification, as it is a word of truth, John 17. 17. (4.) The end and design of God's giving renewing grace is here laid down; that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures; that we should be God's portion and treasure, and a more peculiar property to him, as the first-fruits were consecrated to God, as the first-fruits were consecrated to him. Christ is the First-fruits of Christians, are the first-fruits of creatures.

19. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath: 20. For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. 21. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. 22. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. 23. For if any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: 24. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. 25. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. 26. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. 27. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

In this part of the chapter we are required,

1. To restrain the workings of passion. This lesson we should learn under affections; and this we shall learn, if we are indeed begotten again by the word of truth. For thus the connexion stands:—An angry and hasty spirit is soon provoked to ill things by affections; and errors and ill opinions become prevalent through the workings of our own vile and vain affections; but the renewing grace of God and the word of the gospel teach us to subdue these; Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath. This may refer,

1. To the word of truth spoken of in the verse foregoing. And so we may observe, It is our duty rather to hear God's word, and apply our minds to understand it, than to speak according to our own fancies or the opinions of men, and to run into heat and passion thereupon. Let not such errors as that of God's being the occasion of men's sin, ever be hastily, much less angrily, mentioned by you; (and so as to other errors;) but be ready to hear and consider what God's word teaches in all such cases. 2. This may be applied to the afflictions and temptations spoken of in the beginning of the chapter. And then we may observe, It is our duty rather to hear how God explains his providences, and what he designs by them; than to say as David did in his haste, I am cut off; or as Jonah did in his passion, I do well to be angry. Instead of censoring God under our trials, let us open our ears and hearts to hear what he will say to his purposes; this may be understood as referring to the disputes and differences that Christians, in those times of trial, were running into among themselves; and so this part of the chapter may be considered without any connexion with what goes before. Here we may observe that, whenever matters of difference arise among Christians, each side should be willing to hear the other. People are often stiff in their own opinions, because they are not willing to hear what others have to offer against them; whereas we should be swift to hear reason and truth on all sides, and be slow to speak any thing that should prevent this: and when we do speak, there should be nothing of wrath; for a soft answer turneth away wrath. As this epistle is designed to correct a variety of disorders that were among Christians, these words, swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath, may be very well interpreted according to this last explication. And we may further observe from them, that, if men would govern their tongues, they must govern their passions. When Moses's spirit was provoked, he spake unadvisedly with his lips. If we would be slow to speak, we must be slow to wrath.

II. A very good reason is given for suppressing anger; (v. 20.) For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. 27. Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. Wherefore men often pretend zeal for God and his glory, in their heat and passion, let them know that God needs not the passions of any man; his cause is better served by mildness and meekness than by wrath and fury. Solomon says, The words of the wise are heard in quiet, more than the cry of him that striketh among fools, Exod. 9. 17. Dr. Manton here says of some assemblies, That if we were as swift to speak as we are ready to speak; there would be less of wrath, and more of profit, in our meetings. I remember when a Manichee contested with Augustine, and with importunate clamour cried, Hear me! hear me! the father modestly replied, Ac ego te, nec tu me, sed ambo audiamus apostolum.—Neither let me hear thee, nor do thou hear me, but let us both hear the apostle. The worst thing we can bring to a religious controversy, is, anger. This, however it pretends to be raised by a concern for what is just and right, is not to be trusted. Wrath is a human thing, and the wrath of man stands opposed to the righteousness of God. Those who pretend to serve the cause of God hereby, shew that they are acquainted neither with God nor his cause. This passion must especially be watched against, when we are hearing the word of God. See 1 Pet. 2. 1, 2.

III. We are called upon to suppress other corrupt affections, as well as rash anger; (v. 21.) Lay aside all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness. The word here translated filthiness, signifies those lusts which have the greatest turpitude and sensuality in them; and the words rendered superfluity of naughtiness may be understood of the overflows of malice, or any other spiritual wickedness. Hereby we are taught, as Christians, to watch against, and lay aside, not only those more gross and foolish dispositions and affections which denominates a person filthy, but all the disorders of a corrupt heart, which would prejudice it against the word and ways of God.

Observe, 1. Sin is a defiling thing; it is called filthiness itself. The abatement of that sin is the thing to be watched against; there is superfluity of naughtiness. 3. It is not enough to restrain evil affections, but they must be cast from us, or laid apart, Isa. 50. 22. Thou shalt cast them away as a menstruous cloth; thou shalt say, Get ye brace. 4. This must extend not only to outward sins, and greater abominations, but to all sin of thought and affection as well as speech and practice; *all finthness—is, with James, every thing that is corrupt and sinful. 3. Observe, From the foregoing parts of this chapter, the laying aside of *all finthness, is what a time of temptation and trial know for, and is necessary to the avoiding of error, and the right receiving and improving of the word of truth: for,

IV. We are here fully, though briefly, instructed concerning hearing the word of God.

1. We are required to prepare ourselves for it; (v. 21.) to get rid of every corrupt affection, and of every encumbrance that obstructs the hearing of the word to the laws of it; receive it as the stock does the graft; so that the fruit which is produced, may be, not according to the nature of the sour stock, but according to the nature of that word of the gospel, which is engraven into our souls. (2.) We must therefore yield ourselves to the word of God, with most submissive, humble, and tractable tempers: this is to receive it with meekness. Being willing to hear of our souls, shall taking it not only patiently, but thankfully; desiring also to be moulded and formed by the doctrines and precepts of the gospel. (3.) In all our hearing we should aim at the salvation of our souls. It is the design of the word of God to make us wise to salvation; and they who propose any meaner or lower ends to themselves in attending upon it, dishonour the gospel, and disappoint its design. We should come to the word of God, (both to read it and hear it,) as those who know it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, Rom. 1. 16.

2. We are taught what is to be done after hearing; (v. 22.) But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. Observe here, (1.) Hearing is in order to doing; the most attentive and the most frequent hearing of the word of God, does not make us wise, if we lay aside its use. If we were to hear a sermon every day of the week, and an angel from heaven were the preacher, yet, if we rested in bare hearing, it would never bring us to heaven. Therefore the apostle insists much upon it, (and, without doubt, it is indispensably necessary,) that we practise what we hear. "There must be inward practice by meditation, and outward practice in true obedience."—Mr. Baxter. It is the true description of the hearing which will enable us to repeat it, and to give testimony to it, and commend it, and write it, and preserve what we have written: that which all this is in order to, and which crowns the rest, is, that we be doers of the word. Observe, (2.) Bare hearers are self-deceivers; the original word ἀκοῦσανς signifies men's arguing sophistically to themselves; their reasoning is manifestly deceitful and false, when they are content to make one part of their work disbelief, and the other from the obligation they lie under to another; oosophistical to themselves, that filling their heads with notions is sufficient, though their hearts be empty of good affections and resolutions, and their lives fruitless of good works. Self-deceit will be found the worst deceit at last.

3. The apostle shows what is the proper use of the word of God, who they are, that do not use it as they ought, and who they are, that do make a right use of it, v. 23—25. Let us consider each of these distinctly. (1.) The use we are to make of God's word may be learnt from its being compared to a glass, in which a man may behold his natural face. As a looking-glass shews us the spots and deformities upon our faces, that they may be remedied and washed away, so the word shews us the spots and sins, that we may repent of them and get them pardoned; it shews us what is amiss, that it may be amended. There are glasses that will flatter people; but that which is truly the word of God, is no flattering glass. If you flatter yourselves, it is your own fault; the truth, as it is in Jesus, flatters no man. Let the word of truth be carefully attended to, and it will shew every spot of corruption of your nature, the disorders of your hearts and minds, and will tell you plainly what you are. St. Paul describes himself as insensible of the corruption of his nature till he saw himself in the glass of the law; (Rom. 7. 9.) "I was alive without the law; I took all to be right with me, and thought myself not only clean, but, compared with the generality of the world, beautiful too; but when the commandment came, I was dead; and now I am alive in the word of truth, and am not a doer of the word, but a hearer only, and 'the spots which the law discovers; Christ's blood is in the sufferer who the gospel shews." But in vain do we hear God's word, and look into the glass, if we go away, and forget our spots, instead of washing them off, and forget our remedy, instead of applying to it. This is the case of those who do not hear the word as they ought. (3.) Those also who receive the glass, and look into it, and see their spots, and mend them, and mend them, and are not thereby wholly bright, and who use the glass of God's word as they should do; (v. 25.) Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, &c. Observe here, The gospel is a law of liberty, or, as Mr. Baxter expresses it, of liberation, giving us deliverance from the Jewish law, and from sin and guilt, and wrath and death. The ceremonial law was a yoke of bondage; the gospel of Christ is a law of liberty. But what is the meaning of the word of God is a perfect law ? And what is a perfect law? It is a perfect law; and we must add to it. Observe further, In hearing the word, we look into this perfect law; we consult it for counsel and direction; we look into it, that from thence we may take our measures: but observe withal, then only do we look into the law of liberty as we should, when we continue therein; "when we dwell in the study of it, till it turn to a spiritual life, engraved and digested in us." (Mr. Baxter) when we are not forgetful of it, but practise it as our work and business; set it always before our eyes, and make it the constant rule of our conversation and behaviour. It must also dominate our minds by it. Observe once more from this place, They who thus do, and continue in the law and word of God, are, and shall be, blessed in their deed; blessed in all their ways, according to the first psalm, which, some think, St. James here alludes to. He that meditates in the law of God, and walks according to it, the psalmist says, shall prosper in whatsoever he does. And he that is not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work which God's word sets him about, St. James says, shall be blessed. The papists pretend, that here we have a clear text to prove we are blessed for our good deeds; but Dr. Manton, in answer to that pretence, puts the reader upon marking the distinctness of scripture-phrase. The apostle does not say, for his deeds, that any man is blessed, but in his deed. This is a way in which we shall certainly find blessedness, but not the cause of it. This blessedness does not lie in knowing, but in doing the will of God; (John 13. 17.) If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. It is not talking, but walking, that will bring us to heaven.

V. The apostle next informs us how we may distinguish between a vain religion, and that which is pure and approved of God. Great and hot disputes there are in the world about this matter: what religion is false and vain, and what is true and flourishing. The whole of the holy scripture in this place determine the question: and here it is plainly and peremptorily declared.

1. What is a vain religion? (v. 26.) If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridle not his tongue, but deceive his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Here are three things to be observed; (1.) In a vain religion there is much of shew, and affecting to seem religious in the eyes of others. The apostle is speaking of you, and these things are such as men are apt to do in a manner that should fix our thoughts on the word seemeth. When men are more concerned to seem religious than really to be so, it is a sign that their religion is but vain. Not that religion itself is a vain thing; (they do it a great deal of wrong, to say, It is in vain to serve the Lord;) but it is possible for people to make it a vain thing, if they have only a form of godliness, and not the power. (2.) In a vain religion there is much of spirit, but less of substance. The not bridling the tongue here, is chiefly meant of not abstaining from these evil of tongues. When we hear people ready to speak of the faults of others, or to censure them as holding scandalous errors, or to lessen the wisdom and piety of those about them, that themselves may seem the wiser and better, this is a sign that they have but a vain religion. The man who has a detracting tongue, cannot have a truly humble gracious heart. He who delights to injure his neighbour, in vain pretends to love God; therefore a reviling tongue will prove a man a hypocrite. Censuring is a pleasing sin, extremely compliant with nature; and therefore evidences a man's being in a natural state. These sins of the tongue were the great sins of that age in which St. James wrote; (as other parts of this epistle fully shew;) and it was the chief sin of a vain religion, (says Dr. Manton,) to be carried away with the evil of the times. This has ever been a leading sin with hypocrites, that the more ambitious they have been to seem well themselves, the more freely they are in censuring and running down others; and there is such quick intercours betwixt the tongue and the heart, that the one may be known by the other. On these accounts it is that the apostle here speaks of an unbridled tongue an undoubted certain proof of a vain religion. There is no strength nor power in that religion which will not enable a man to bridle his tongue. (3.) In a vain religion a man deceives his own heart; he goes on in such a course of detracting from others, and making himself seem somebody, that last the vanity of his religion is consummated by the deceiving of his own soul. When once religion comes to be a vain thing, how great is the vanity!

2. It is here plainly and peremptorily declared wherein true religion consists; (v. 27.) Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this. Observe, (1.) It is the glory of religion to be free and undefiled; not mixed with the inventions of men, nor the corruption of the world. False religions may be known by their impurity and uncharitableness; according to that of St. John, He that doeth not righteousness, is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother, 1 John 3. 10. But on the other hand, a holy life and a charitable heart shew a true religion. Our religion is not (says Dr. Manton) adorned with ceremonies, but purity and charity. It is very remarkable, that in the first chapter of St. James, does not speak of the religion of the world, but the religion of the poor. The poor have in their religion nothing but the scripture. Thus visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction. Visiting is here put for all manner of relief which we are capable of giving to others: and fatherless and widows are here particularly mentioned, because they are generally most apt to be neglected or oppressed: but by them we are to understand all others who are objects of charity; all who are in affliction. It is very remarkable, that in these two articles, one of these articles, this is one—to be charitable, and relieve the afflicted. Observe, (4.) An unspotted life must accompany an unfeigned love and charity; to keep himself unspotted from the world. The word is apt to spot and blemish the soul, and it is hard to live in it, and have to do with it, and not be defiled; but this must be our constant endeavour. Herein consists pure and undefiled religion. The very word of God speaks of the spottless garments in which the angels are much conversant with them; but the sins and lusts of the world deface and defile them very usefully indeed. St. John comprises all that is in the world, which we are not to love, under three heads; the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life; and to keep one's self unspotted from all these, is to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. And God by his grace keeps both our hearts and lives clean from the love of the world, and from the temptations of wicked worldly men.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, the apostle condemns a sinful regarding the rich, and despising the poor; which he imputes to partiality and injustice, and shews it to be an acting contrary to God, who has chosen the poor, and whose interest it is often persecuted, and his name blasphemed, by the rich, v. 1. 7. He shews that the whole law is to be fulfilled, and that mercy should be followed, as well as justice, v. 8. 13. He exposes the error and folly of those who boast of faith without works, telling us that this is but a dead faith, and such a faith as devils have, not the faith of Abraham, or of Rahab, v. 14, to the end.

1. My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. 2. For if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment,
3. And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place: and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool: 4. Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? 5. Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? 6. But ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seats! 7. Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called?

The apostle is here reproving a very corrupt practice; he shews how much mischief there is in the sin of παρακολούθησις—respect of persons, which seemed to be a very growing evil in the churches of Christ, even in those early ages, and which, in these after-times, has sadly corrupted and divided Christian nations and societies. Here we have,

1. A caution against this sin laid down in general; (v. 1.) My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ with the respect of persons. Observe here, 1. The character of Christians fully implied; they are such as have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; they embrace it, they receive it, they govern themselves by it; they entertain the doctrine, and submit to the law and government, of Christ; they have it as a trust, they have it as a treasure. Observe, 2. How honourably St. James speaks of Jesus Christ; he calls him the Lord of glory, for he is the Brightness of his Father’s glory, and the express Image of his person. Observe, 3. Christ’s being the Lord of glory should teach us not to respect Christians for any thing so much as their relation and conformity to Christ. You who profess to believe the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, which the poorest Christian shall partake of equally with the rich, and to which all worldly glory is but vanity, you should not make men’s outward and worldly glory the measure of your respect. In professing the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, we should not shew respect to men, so as to cloud or lessen the glory of our glorious Lord: however any may think of it, this is certainly a very heinous sin.

II. We have this sin described and cautioned against, by an instance or example of it; (v. 2, 3.) For if there come into your assembly a man with a gold ring, &c. Assembly here is meant of those meetings which were appointed for deciding matters of difference among the members of the church; or, for determining when censures should be passed upon any, and what those censures should be; therefore the Greek word here used, ἀρνησθήσασθαι, signifies such an assembly as that in the Jewish synagogues, when they met to do justice. Maimonides says, (as I find the passage quoted by Dr. Manton,) “That it was expressly provided by the Jews’ constitutions, that when a poor man and a rich pleader together, the rich shall not be bidden to sit down, and the poor stand, or sit in a worse place, but both sit, or both stand alike.” To this the phrases used by the apostle have a most plain reference, and therefore the assembly here spoken of, must be some such as the apostle’s own or of the church of Corinth, where, they met to bear causes, and to execute justice: to these the arbitrations and censures of their Christian assemblies are compared. But we must be careful not to apply what is here said to the common assemblies for worship; for in these certainly there may be appointed different places for persons, according to their rank and circumstances, without sin. They are not, which the apostle here observes, judged by his severity here upon this practice; they do not consider the word judges (used in v. 4.) nor what is said of their being convicted as transgressors of the law, if they had such a respect of persons as is here spoken of, according to v. 9. Thus, now put the case; “There comes into your assembly (when of the same nature with some of those at the synagogue) a man that is distinguished by his dress, and makes no much noise, and is one of a poor man in vile raiment, and ye act partially, and determine wrong, merely because the one makes a better appearance, or is in better circumstances, than the other.” Observe from hence, 1. God has his remnant among all sorts of people; among those that wear soft and gay clothing, and among those that wear poor and vile raiment. But observe, 2. In matters of religion, rich and poor stand upon a level; no man’s riches set him in the least nearer to God, nor does any man’s poverty set him at a distance from God. With the Most High there is no respect of persons, and therefore in matters of conscience there should be none with us. Observe, 3. All undue honouring of worldly greatness and riches should especially be watched against in Christian societies. St. James does not here encourage rude censures or disrespect; but respect must be paid, and some difference may be allowed in outward regard to persons of different ranks; but this respect must never be such as to influence the proceedings of Christian societies in disposing of the censures of the church, or in passing the censures of the church, or in any thing that is purely a matter of religion; here we are to know no man after the flesh. It is the character of a citizen of Zion, that in his eyes a vile person is contemned; he doth not understand that fear the Lord. If a poor man be a good man, we must not value him a whit the less for his poverty: and if a rich man be a bad man, (though he may have both gay clothing and a gay profession,) we must not value him any whit the more for his riches. Observe, 4. Of what importance it is to take care what rule we go by in judging of men; if we allow ourselves commonly to judge by outward appearance, glory is but vanity, and will too much be the guide of our conduct in religious assemblies; there is many a man, whose wickedness renders him vile and despisiable, who yet makes a figure in the world; and on the other hand there is many a humble, heavenly, good Christian, who is clothed meanly: but neither should he nor his Christianity be thought the worse of on this account.

III. We have the greatness of this sin set forth, v. 5. 6. It is great partiality, it is injustice, and it is to set ourselves against God, who has chosen the poor, and will honour and advance them, (if good) let who will despise them.

1. In this sin there is shameful partiality; Are we not then partial in yourselves? The question is here put, as what could not fail of being answered by every man’s conscience, that would put it seriously to him. Acting on the reasoning of the original, the question is, “Have we not made a difference? And, in that difference, do you not judge by a false rule, and go upon false measures? And does not the charge of a partiality, condemned by the law, lie fully against you? Does not your own conscience tell you that you are guilty?” Appeals to conscience are of great advantage, when we have to do with such as make a profession, even though they may be fallen into a very corrupt state.

2. This respect of persons is owing to the evil and injustice of the thoughts. As the temper, conduct, and proceedings, are partial, so the heart and thoughts, from whence all flows, are evil; "Ye are become judges of evil thoughts; ye are judges according to those unjust estimations and corrupt opinions which you have formed to yourselves. Trace your partiality, till you come to those hidden thoughts which the suggestions of Satan work in you, and thence those to be exceeding evil. You secretly prefer outward pomp before inward grace, and the things that are seen before which are not seen. The deformity of sin is never truly and fully discerned, till the evil of our thoughts be disclosed; and it is this which highly aggravates the faults of our tempers and lives—that the imagination of the thoughts of the heart are evil, Gen. 6. 5.

2. The sin of poor persons is a heinous sin, because it is to shew ourselves most directly contrary to God; (v. 5.) "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith? &c. But ye have despised them, v. 6. God has made those heirs of a kingdom, whom you make of no reputation; and has given very great and glorious promises to those to whom you can hardly give a good word or a respectful look. And is not this a monstrous iniquity in you who pretend to be the children of God, and conform to him? Hearken, my beloved brethren, by all the love I have for you, and all the regards you have to me, I beg you would consider these things: take notice of it, that many of the poor of this world are the chosen of God. Their being God's chosen does not prevent their being poor; their being poor does not at all prejudice the evidences of their being chosen, Matt. 11. 5. The poor are evangelized. God designed to recommend his holy religion to men's esteem and affection, not by the external advantages of gaiety and pomp, but by its intrinsic worth and excellency; and therefore chose the poor of this world. Again take notice, That many poor in the world, are rich in faith; thus the poorest may become rich; and this is what they ought to be especially ambitious of: it is expected from those who have wealth and estates, that they be rich in good works; because the more they have, the more they have to do good with: but it is expected from the poor in the world, that they be rich in faith; for the less they have here, the more they may, and should, live in the believing expectation of better things in a better world. Take notice further, Believing Christians are rich in title, and in being heirs of a kingdom, though they may be very poor as to present possessions: what is laid out upon the things of the kingdom, is laid up for them in an unsparkingly rich and great store. Note again, Where any are rich in faith, there will be also divine love; faith working by love, will be in all the heirs of glory. Note once more, under this head, Heaven is a kingdom, and a kingdom promised to them that love God. We read of the crown promised to them that love God, in the former chapter; (v. 12.) we here find there is a kingdom too. And as the crown is a crown of life, so the kingdom will be an everlasting kingdom.

All these things hid together, shew how greatly the poor in this world, if rich in faith, are now honoured, and shall hereafter be advanced by God; and consequently how very sinful a thing it was for them to despise the poor. After such considerations as these, the charge is cutting indeed; But ye have despised the poor, the needy. v. 7. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seat? Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called? v. 7. Consider how commonly riches are the incentives of vice and mischief, of blasphemy and persecution: consider how many calamities you yourselves sustain, and how great reproaches are thrown upon your religion and your God by men of wealth, and power, and worldly greatness; and this will make your sin appear exceeding sinful and foolish, in setting up that which tends to pull you down, and to destroy all that you are building up, and to dis honour that worthy name by which you are called." The name of Christ is a worthy name; it reflects honour, and gives worth to them who wear it.

3. If ye fulfil the royal law according to the scripture, thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well. 9. But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors, 10. For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. 11. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. 12. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. 13. For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment.

The apostle, having condemned the sin of those who had an undue respect of persons, and having urged what was sufficient to convict them of the greatness of this evil, now proceeds to shew how the matter may be mended; it is the work of a gospel-ministry, not only to reprove and warn, but to teach and direct; (Col. 1. 28.) "Harming every man, and teaching every man. And here,

1. We have the law that is to guide us in all our regards to men set down in general; (v. 8.) If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well. Lest any should think St. James had been pleading for the poor so as to throw contempt on the rich, he now lets them know, that he did not design to encourage improper conduct towards any; they must not hate, or be rule to, the rich, any more than deep in the poor; but, as the scripture teaches us to love all our neighbours, be they rich or poor, as ourselves, so, in our having a steady regard to this rule, we shall do well. Observe from hence, (1.) The rule for Christians to walk by, is settled in the scriptures; if, according to the scriptures, &c. It is not great men, nor worldly wealth, nor corrupt practices among professors themselves, that must guide us, but the scriptures of truth. Observe, (2.) The scriptures teaches us, as a law, to love our neighbour as ourselves; it is what still remains in full force, and is rather carried higher and further by Christ, than made less important to us. Observe, (3.) This law is a royal law, it comes from the King of kings; its own worth and dignity deserve it should be thus honoured; and the state in which all Christians now are, as it is a state of liberty, and not of servitude or oppression, makes this law, by which they are to regulate all their actions to one another, a royal law. Observe, (4.) A pretence of observing this royal law, when it is interpreted with partiality, will not excuse men in any unjust proceedings. It is implied here, that some were ready to flatter rich men, and be partial to them, because, if they were in the like circumstances, they should expect such regards to themselves; or, they might plead, that, to shew a distinguished respect to those whom God in his providence had distinguished by their rank and degree in the world, this was but doing right; therefore the apostle allows, that, so far as they were concerned to observe the duties of the second table, they did well in giving honour to whom honour was due; but this fair pretence would not cover their sin, in that unble respect for persons which they stood chargeable with; for,

2. This general law is to be considered together with a particular law; (v. 9,) "If ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors." Notwithstanding the law of laws, To love your neighbour as yourselves, and to shew that respect to them which you would be apt to shew to yourselves in their circumstances, this will not excuse your distributing either the favours or the censures of the church according to men's outward condition; but here you must look to a particular law, which God, who gave the other, has given you together with it, and by this you will stand fully convicted of the sin I have charged you with; this law is in Levit. 19. 15. Thou shalt do no unrighteousness in judgment; thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor despise the person of the rich; but thou shalt judge his neighbour. Yea, the very royal law itself, rightly explained, would serve to convict them, because it teaches them to put themselves as much in the places of the poor as in those of the rich, and so to act equitably towards one as well as the other. Hence he proceeds,

3. To shew the extent of the law, and how far obedience must be paid to it; they must fulfil the royal law, have a regard to one part as well as another, otherwise it would not stand them in stead, when they pretended to urge it as a reason for any particular actions; (v. 10.) For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all. This may be considered, (1.) With reference to the case St. James has been upon; Do you plead for your respect to the rich, because you are to love your neighbour as yourselves? Why then shew also an equitable and due regard to the poor, because you are to love your neighbour as yourself; or else your offending in one point, will spoil your pretence of observing that law at all. Whosoever shall keep the whole law, if he offend in one point, wilfully, allowedly, and with continuance, and so as to think he shall be excused in some matters, because he is particular as to others, yet guilty of all; he incurs the same penalty, and is liable to the same punishment, by the sentence of the law, as if he had broken it in other points, as well as that he stands chargeable with; not that all sins are equal, but that all carry the same contempt of the authority of the Lawgiver, and so bind over to such punishment as is threatened on the breach of that law. This shews us what a vanity it is to talk of exceptions and deccls will all be made to suit those that please; but it is not so; and plainly puts us upon looking for some other atone-ment. (2.) This is further illustrated by putting a case different from that before mentioned; (v. 11.) For he said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now, if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. One, perhaps, is very severe in the case of adultery, for what follows is so tender to flesh; but less ready to condemn murder, or what tends to ruin the health, break the hearts, and destroy the lives, of others: another has a prodigious dread of murder, but has more easy thoughts of adultery; whereas one who looks at the authority of the Lawgiver, more than the matter of the command, will see the same reason for condemning the one as the other. Obedience is then acceptable, when all is done with an eye to the will of God; and disobedience is to be condemned, in whatever instance it be, as it is a contempt of the authority of God; and, for that reason, if we offend in one point, we condemn the authority of him who gave the whole law, and so far are guilty of all. Thus, if you look to the law of old, you stand condemned; for cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of law to do them; Gal. 3. 10.

4. St. James directs Christians to govern and conduct themselves more especially by the law of Christ; (v. 12.) So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. This will teach us, not only to be just and impartial, but very compassionate and merciful to the poor; and it will set us perfectly free from all sordid and undue regards to the law. Yet though the law, (1.) The gospel is called a law; it has all the requisites of a law; precepts, with rewards and punishments annexed; it prescribes duty, as well as administers comfort; and Christ is a King to rule us, as well as a Prophet to teach us, and a Priest to sacrifice and intercede for us. We are under the law to Christ. (2.) It is a law of liberty; a law that we have no reason to complain of, as a yoke or burden; for the service of God, according to the gospel, is perfect freedom; it sets us at liberty from all slavery and regards, either to the persons or the things of this world. (3.) We must all be judged by this law of liberty; men's eternal condition will be determined according to the gospel; this is the book that will be opened, when we shall stand before the judgment-seat; there will be no relief to those whom the gospel condemns, nor will any accusation lie against those whom the gospel justifies. (4.) It concerns us therefore so to speak and act now, as becomes those who must shortly be judged by this law of liberty; that is, that we come up to gospel-terms, that we make conscience of gospel-duties, that we be a gospel-temper, and that our conversation be a gospel-conversation, because by this rule we must be judged. (5.) The consideration of our being judged by the gospel, should engage us more especially to be merciful in our regards to the poor; (v. 13.) For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment. Take notice here, The doom which will be passed upon impenitent sinners at last, will be judgment without mercy; there will be no mixtures or alloys in the cup of wrath, and of trembling, the shape of which they must drink. Take notice again, Such as do notMercy, shall find no mercy in the great day. But we must also take note of the other hand, that there will be such as shall become instances of the triumph of mercy, in whom mercy rejoices against judgment; all the children of men, in the last day, will be either vessels of wrath, or vessels of mercy. It concerns all to consider among which they shall be found; and let us remember, that blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.

14. What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? 15. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, 16. And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? 17. Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. 18. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. 19. Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe, and tremble. 20. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? 21. Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? 22. Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? 23. And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the friend of God. 24. Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. 25. Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? 26. For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

In this latter part of the chapter, the apostle shews the error of those who rested in a bare profession of the Christian faith, as if that would save them, while the temper of their minds and the tenor of their lives were another disagreeable to that holy religion which they professed. To let them see, therefore, what a wretched foundation they built their hopes upon, it is here proved at large, that a man is justified, not by faith only, but by works. Now upon this arises a very great question, namely, how to reconcile St. Paul and St. James? St. Paul, in his epistles to the Romans and Galatians, seems to assert the directly contrary thing to what St. James here lays down, saving it often, and with a great deal of emphasis, that we are justified by faith only, and not by the works of the law. Amicis scripturarum lites, utnam et nostre—There is a very hateful agreement between one part of scripture and another, notwithstanding seeming differences: it were well if the differences among Christians were as easily reconciled. Nothing (says Mr. Baxter) but men’s misunderstanding the plain drift and sense of Paul’s epistles, could make so many take it for a matter of great difficulty to reconcile Paul and James. A general view of those things which are insisted on by the Antinomians, may be seen in Mr. Baxter’s paraphrase: and many ways might be mentioned, which have been invented among learned men, to make the two apostles agree; but it may be sufficient only to observe two things following; and it is my purpose, in some cases, worldly good things; but what profit will this be, for any to gain the world, and to lose their souls? What doth it profit? Can faith save him? All things should be accounted profitable or unprofitable to us, as they tend to forward or hinder the salvation of our souls. And above all other things, we should take care thus to make this use of faith, that in the end, if it does not save, but will aggravate our condemnation and destruction at last. Observe, 2. For a man to have faith, and to say he has faith, are two different things; the apostle does not say, If a man have faith without works, for that is not a supposable case: the drift of this place of scripture is plainly to shew, that an opinion, or speculation, or assent, without works, is not faith; but the case is put thus, If a man say he hath faith, &c.
Men may boast of that to others, and be conceited of that in themselves, which they are really destiminate of.

II. We are taught, that, as love or charity is an operative principle, so is faith; or that neither of them is good for any thing; and, by trying how it looks for a person to pretend he is very charitable, why, for a person to pretend he is very religious, we may judge what sense there is in pretending to have faith, without the proper and necessary fruits of it; (v. 15—17.) "If a brother or sister be naked, and desitute of daily food; and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warned, and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? What will such a charity as this, that consists on bare words, avail either more the poor? Will you come before God with such empty shews of charity as these? You might as well pretend that your love and charity will stand the test, without acts of mercy, as think that a profession of faith will bear you out before God, without works of piety and obedience; (v. 17.) Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." We are too apt to rest in a bare profession of faith. And to think that this will save us; it is a cheap and easy religion to say, "We believe the articles of the Christian faith;" but it is a great delusion to imagine that this is enough to bring us to heaven; those who argue thus, wrong God, and put a cheat upon their own souls; a mock-faith is as hateful as mock-charity, and both shew a heart dead to all real goodness; you may as soon take pleasure in a dead body, void of soul, or sense, or action, as in a dead faith, where there are no works.

III. We are taught to compare a faith boasting of itself without works and a faith evidenced by works, by looking on both together, to try how that will work upon our minds; (v. 18.) Yea, a man may say, thou hast faith, and I have works. Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. Suppose a true believer thus pleading with a boasting hypocrite, "Thou makest a profession, and sayest thou hast faith; I make no such boasts, but leave my works to speak for me. Now give any evidence of having the faith thou professest without works if thou canst, and I will soon let thee see how my works flow from "faith, and are the undoubted evidences of its existence. This is the evidence by which the scriptures prove all things are wrought by God, for himself and others. And this is the evidence according to which Christ will proceed at the day of judgment; (Rev. 29. 12.) The dead were judged according to their works. How will they be exposed then, who boast of that which they cannot evidence, or who go to evidence their faith by any thing but works of piety and covenant. We are taught to look upon a faith of bare speculation and knowledge as the faith of devils; (v. 19.) Thou believest that there is one God; thou dost well: the devils also believe, and tremble. That instance of faith which the apostle here chooses to mention, is the first principle of all religion. "Thou believest that there is a God, against whom thou hast grieved; and that there is but one God, against the idolaters; that is well; but not yet. But when thou, and take up a good opinion of thyself, or of thy state toward God, merely on account of thy believing in him, this will render thee misrable; the devils also believe, and tremble. If thou contentest thyself with a bare assent to articles of faith, and some speculations upon them, thus far the devils go. And as their faith and knowledge only serve to excite horror, so in a little time will thine. The word tremble is commonly looked upon as denoting a good effect of faith; but here it may rather be taken as a bad effect, when applied to the faith of devils. They tremble, not out of reverence, but hatred and opposition to that one God on whom they believe. To rehearse that article of our creed, therefore, I believe on God the Father Almighty, will not distinguish us from devils at last, unless we not give up ourselves to God as the gospel directs; and love him, and delight ourselves in him, and serve him, which the devils do not, cannot do.

V. We are taught that he who boasts of faith without works, is to be looked upon at present as a foolish condemned person; (v. 20.) But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? The words translated vain man,—αἰγγαμέρων, are observed to have the same signification with the word vain, which must never be used to private persons, or as an effect of anger, (Matt. 5. 22.) but may be used as here, to denote a just detestation of such a sort of men as are empty of good works, and yet boasters of their faith. And it plainly declares them fools and abjects in the sight of God. Faith without works is said to be dead, not only as void of all those operations which are the proofs of spiritual life; but as unavailable to eternal life; such believ- ers as rest in a bare profession of faith, are dead while they live.

VI. We are taught that a justifying faith cannot be without works, from two examples, Abraham and Rahab.

The first instance is that of Abraham, the father of the faithful, and the prime example of justification; to whom the Jews had a special regard; (v. 22.) Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? St. Paul, on the other hand, says, (in ch. 4. of the epistle to the Romans,) that Abraham believed, and it was counted to him for righteousness. But these are well reconciled, by observing what is said in Hcb. 11. which shews that the faith both of Abraham and Rahab was such as to produce those good works of which St. James speaks; and which are not to be separated from faith as justifying and saving. By what Abraham did, it appeared that he truly believed. Upon this foot the words of God himself plainly put this matter; (Gen. 22. 16.) Because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; therefore in blessing I will bless thee. Thus the faith of Abraham was a working faith; (v. 22.) it wrought with his works, and by works was made perfect. And by this means you come to the true sense of that scripture which saith, (v. 23.) Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness. And thus he became the friend of God. Faith, producing such works, endeared him to the Divine Being, and advanced him to very peculiar favours and intimacies with God. It is a great honour done to Abraham, that he is called and counted the friend of God. We see then how this thing is justified, (comes into such a state of favour and friendship, with God,) and not by faith only; nor by a bare opinion or profession, or believing without obeying, but by having such a faith as is productive of good works.

Now beside the explication of this passage and example, as thus illustrating and supporting the argument, (as Matt. 23. 25, and St. James 2. 26. may be learned by us from what is here said concerning Abraham. 1. Those who would have Abraham's blessings, must be careful to copy after his faith: to boast of being Abraham's seed will not avail any, if they do not believe as he did. 2. Those works which evidence true faith, must be works of self-denial, and such as God himself commands, (as Abraham's offering up his son, his only son, was,) and not such works as are pleasing to flesh and blood, and may serve our interest, or are the mere fruits of our own imagination and devising. 3. What we piously purpose and sincerely resolve to do for God, is accepted as if actually performed. Thus Abraham is regarded as offering up his son, though he did not actually proceed to make a sacrifice of him. It was a thing done in the mind, and spirit, and resolution of Abraham, and God accepts it as if fully performed and accomplished. 4. The acts of faith make it grow perfect, as the truth of faith makes it act. 5. Such an acting faith will make others, as well as Abraham, friends of God. Thus Christ says to his disciples, (John 15. 15.) I have called you friends. All transactions betwixt God and the truly believing soul are easy, pleasant, and delightful. There is one will and one heart, and there is a mutual complacency. God rejoiceth over them who truly believe, to do them good; and they delight themselves in him. The so-called life of faith's justifying itself and us, with and by works, is Rahab; (v. 25.) Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? The former instance was of none renowned for his faith all his life long. This is of one noted for sin, whose faith was meancer and of a much lower degree; so that the strongest faith will not do, nor the merest grace will then go beyond, works. Some say, that the word here rendered harlot, was the proper name of Rahab. Others tell us, that it signifies no more than a hostess, or one who keeps a public-house, with whom therefore the spies lodged. But it is very probable that her character was infamous; and such an instance is mentioned, to shew that faith will save the worst, when evidenced by proper works; and it will not save the best, if no works are added. Rahab believed the report she had heard of God's powerful presence with Israel; but that which proved her faith sincere, was, that, to the hazard of her life, she received the messengers, and sent them out another way. Observe here, (1.) The wonderful power of faith in transforming and changing sinners. (2.) The regard which an operative faith meets with from God, to obtain his mercy and favour. (3.) Observe, when great sins are put away, there must be great acts of self-denial. Rahab must prefer the honour of God and the good of her people before the preservation of her own country. Her former acquaintance must be discarded, her former course of life entirely abandoned, and she must give signal proof and evidence of this, before she can be in a justified state. (4.) After she is justified, yet her former character must be remembered, and her outward character, as well as her profession, must be distinguished as to glorify the rich grace and mercy of God. Though justified, she is called Rahab the harlot. And now upon the whole matter, the apostle draws this conclusion, (v. 26.) As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also. These words are read differently; some reading them, As the body without the breath is dead, so is faith without works; and they shew that works are the companions of faith, as breathing is of life. Others read them, As the body without the soul is dead, so faith without works is dead also; and they shew that works are the companions of faith, as breathing is of life. Others read them, As the body without the soul is dead, so faith without works is dead also: and then they shew that as the body has no action, nor beauty, but becomes a loathsome carcasse, when the soul is gone; so a bare profession without works is useless, yea, loathsome and offensive. Let us then take heed of running into extremes in this case. For, [1.] The best works, without faith, are dead; they want their root and principle. It is by faith that any thing we do is really good, as done with an eye to God, in obedience to him, and so as to aim principally at his acceptance. [2.] The most plausible profession of faith, without works, is dead: as the root is dead when it produces nothing green, nothing of fruit. Faith is the root, good works are the fruits, and we must see to it that we have both. We must not think that either, without the other, will justify and save us. This is the grace of God wherein we stand, and we should stand to it.

CHAP. III.

The apostle here reproves ambition, and an arrogant magisterial tongue; and shews the duty and advantage of bridling it, because of its power to do mischief. Those who profess religion, ought especially to govern their tongues, v. 12. True wisdom makes men meek, and avoids of strife and envy: and hereby it may easily be distinguished from a wisdom that is earthly and hypocritical, v. 13, to the end.

1. My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation. 2. For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. 3. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body. 4. Behold also the ships, which though they are so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. 5. Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! 6. And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell. 7. For every kind of beast, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind: 8. But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. 9. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made after the similitude of God. 10. Out of the same mouth proceed blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. 11. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? 12. Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries, or a vine, figs? So can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

The foregoing chapter shews how unprofitable and dead faith is without works; it is plainly intimated by what this chapter first goes upon, that such a faith is, however, apt to make men conceited and magistrate in their tempers and their talk. Those who set up faith in the manner the former chapter condemns, are most apt to run into these uses of the tongue, which this chapter condemns. And indeed the best need be cautioned against a dictating, censorious, mischievous use of their tongues. We are therefore taught, 1. Not to use our tongues so as to lend it over others; (v. 1.) My brethren, be not many masters, &c. These words do not forbid doing what we can to direct and instruct others in the way of their ance, or to reprove them in a Christian way for what is amiss; but we must not affect to speak and act as those who are continually assuming the chair; we must not prescribe to one another, so as to make our own sentiments a standard, by which to judge others; because: God gives various gifts to men, and expects from each according to that measure of light which he gives. "Therefore be not many masters; (or teachers, as some read it;) "do not give yourselves the airs of teachers, imposters, and judges, but rather speak with the humility and spirit of learners; do not censure one another, as if all must be brought to your standard. This is en- forced against the Pharisees, because they set up for judges and censurers, shall receive the greater condemnation. Our judging others will but make our own judgment the more strict and severe, Matt. 7. 1. Whose are curious to spy out the faults of others, and arrogant in passing censures upon them, may expect that God will be as extre- me in marking what they say and do amiss. 2. Another reason given against such judging the mas- ters, is, that, "in many things we offend all. Were we to think more of our own mistakes and offences, we should be less apt to judge other people. While we are severe against what we count offensive in others, we do not consider how much there is in us, which is justly offensive to them. Self-judges are commonly self- deceivers. We are all guilty before God; and they who vaunt it over others frailties and infirmities of others, little think how many things they offend in themselves. Nay, perhaps their magisterial man-agements, and censorious tongues, may prove worse than any faults they condemn in others. Let us learn to be severe in judging ourselves, but char- itable in our judgments of other people. II. We are taught to govern our tongue so as to prove ourselves perfect and upright men, and such as have an entire government over ourselves: If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man; and able also to bridle the whole body. It is here implied, that he whose conscience is affected by tongue-sins, and who takes care to avoid them, is an upright man, and has an undoubted sign of true grace. But on the other hand, a man seem to be religious, (as was declared in the first chapter,) and yet not able to bridle his tongue; whatever profession he make, and what he imagines, he's a man's religion; for "he that offendeth in word, will not only prove himself a sincere Christian, but a very much advanced and improved Christian. For the wisdom and grace which enable him to rule his tongue, will enable him also to rule all his actions. This we have il- lustrated by two comparisons. 1. The governing and guiding all the motions of a horse, by the bit which is put into his mouth; (v. 5.) Behold, we put bits in the horses mouths, that they may obey us, and we turn about their whole body. There is a great deal of bruitish fierce- ness and wantonness in us. This shews itself very much by the tongue: so that this must be bridled; according to Ps. 39. 1. I will keep my mouth with a bridle, [or, I will bridle my mouth,] while the wicked is before me. The phrase which and even the tongue, is, the more should we thus take care to govern it. Otherwise, as an unruly and ungovernable horse runs away with his rider, or throws him, so an unruly tongue will serve those in like manner, who have no command over it. Whereas, let rectio- n and watchfulness, under the influence of the grace of God, bridle the tongue, and then all the more will the wise man rule his tongue. The whole body will be easily guided and over-ruled. 2. The governing of a ship by the right manage- ment of the helm; (v. 4. 5.) Behold also the ships, which though they are so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. Even so, the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. As the helm is a very small part of the ship, but the tongue a very small part of the body: but the right governing of the helm or bur- der will steer and turn the ship as the governor pleases; and a right management of the tongue is, in a great measure, the government of the whole man. There is a wonderful beauty in these compa- risons, to shew how things of small bulk, yet may be of vast use. And from hence we should learn to make the due management of our tongues more our duty; because they are little members, they are capable of doing a great deal of good, or a great deal of hurt. Therefore, III. We are taught to dread an unruly tongue, as one of the greatest and most pernicious evils. It is compared to a little fire placed among a great deal of combustible matter which soon raises a flame and consumes all before it; (v. 5. 6.) Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a little fire, a very great plenty of sin in the tongue, that it may be called a world of iniquity. How many defilements does it occasion! How many and dreadful flames does it kindle! So is the tongue among the members, that it defleth the whole body. Observe from hence, there is a great pollution and defilement in sins of the tongue. Deifying passions are kindled, vented, and cherished by this unruly member. And the whole body is often drawn into the fire of the tongue. Therefore Solomon says, Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin, Eccles. 5. 6. The snares into which men are sometimes led by the tongue, are insufferable to themselves, and destruc- tive of others. It setteth on fire the course of na- ture. The affairs of mankind and of societies are often thrown into confusion, and all is on a flame, by the tongues of men. Some read it, all our genera- tions are set on fire by the tongue. There is no age of the world, nor any condition of life, private or public, but will afford examples of this. And it is set on fire of hell. Observe from hence, Hell has more to do in promoting the fire of the tongue than men are generally aware of. It is from some dia- bolical temptations, and to serve some diabolical designs, that men's tongues are inflamed. The Devil is exercised in this, and the censor of the brethren; and whenever men's tongues are employed any of these ways, they are set on fire of hell. The Holy Ghost indeed once descend- ed in eleven tongues as of fire, Acts 2. And where the tongue is thus guided and wrought upon by a fire from heaven, here it kindleth good thoughts, holy affections, and ardent devotions. But when it is set on fire of hell, in all undue heats it is, there it is mischievous; producing rage and hatred, and those things which serve the purpose and designs of the Devil. As therefore you would dread fires and flames, you should dread contensions, revilings, slanders, lies, and every thing that would kindle the fire of wrath in your own spirit, or in the spirits of others. But, IV. We are next taught how very hard a thing it is to govern the tongue; (v. 7. 8.) For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed, of mankind. But the tongue can no man tame. As if the apostle had said, "Lions, and the most sa- vage beasts, as well as horses and camels, and crea- tures of the greatest strength, have been tamed and made submissive by the power of God, in order to show their wildness and timorousness, and their wings to bear them up continually out of our reach: even serpents, notwithstanding all their venom, and all their cunning, have been made familiar and harm less: and things in the sea have been taken by men, and made serviceable to them. And these creatures have not been subdued or tamed only by miracle; (as the lions crouched to Daniel, instead of devouring him; and ravens fed Elijah;) and a whale carried Jonah through the depths of the sea to dwell, and yet what we are told of is something commonly done; not only hath been tamed, but is tamed of mankind. Yet the tongue is worse than these, and cannot be tamed by the power and art which serves to tame these things. No man can tame the tongue without supernatural grace and assistance." The apostle does not intend to represent it as a thing impossible, but as a thing extremely difficult. Those who are conscious of the necessity of watchfulness, and pains, and prayer, to keep it in due order. And sometimes all is too little, for it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Brute creatures may be kept within certain bounds, they may be managed by certain rules, and even serpents may be so used as to do no hurt with all their poison: but the tongue is apt to break through all bounds and rules, and to spit out its poison on one occasion, and to do mischief on another, in the utmost secrecy. So that it does not need only to be watched, and guarded, and governed, as much as an unruly beast, or a hurtful and poisonous creature; but much more care and pains will be needful to prevent the mischievous outbursts and effects of the tongue. However,

V. We are taught to think of the use we make of our tongues in religion and in the service of God, and by what means we may meet with it from cursing, censuring, and every thing that is evil on other occasions; (v. 9, 10.) Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made after the similitude of God. Out of the same mouth proceed blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. How absurd is it that they who use their tongues in prayer and praise, should cover them with cursing, slander, and the like! If we bless God as our Father, it should teach us to speak well of, and kindly to, all who bear his image. That tongue which addresses with reverence the Divine Being, cannot, without the greatest inconsistency, turn upon fellow-creatures with reviling, bawling language. It is said of the Seraphim that praise God, they dare not bring a railing accusation. And for men to recourse but to the image of God in their natural faculties, but are renewed after the image of God by the grace of the gospel, this is a most shameful contradiction to all their pretensions of honouring the great Original. These things ought not so to be; and, if such considerations were always at hand, surely they would not be. Piety is disgraced in all the shews of it, if there be not charity. That tongue which blesses itself, which one while pretends to adore the perfections of God, and to refer all things to him, and another while will condemn even good men, if they do not just come up to the same words or expressions used by it.

Further, to fix this thought, the apostle shews that contrary effects from the same causes are monstrous, and not to be found in nature; and therefore they must be of the tongue. (v. 11, 12.) Dost a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig-tree bear olive berries, or a vey, figs? Or doth the same spring yield both salt water and fresh? True religion will not admit of contradictions; and a truly religious man can never allow of them either in his words or his actions. How many sins would this prevent, and recover men from, to put them upon being always consistent with themselves!

13. Who is a wise man and ended with knowledge among you? Let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. 14. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. 15. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. 16. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. 17. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, with out partiality, and without hypocrisy. 18. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

As the sins before condemned arise from an affectation of being thought more wise than others, and being ended with more knowledge than they; so the apostle in these verses shews the difference between men's pretending to be wise, and their being really so; and between the wisdom which is from beneath, (from earth or hell,) and that which is from above.

1. A good conversation. If we are wiser than others, this should be evidenced by the goodness of our conversation; not by the roughness or vanity of it. Words that inform, and heal, and do good, are the marks of wisdom; not those that look great, and are mischief, and are the occasions of evil, citr in ourselves or others.

2. True wisdom may be known by its works. The conversation here does not refer only to words, but to the whole of men's practice; therefore it is said, Let him shew out of a good conversation his works. True wisdom does not lie in good notions or specifications so much as in good and useful actions. Not he who thinks well, or he who talks well, is the cause of all the scriptures, allowed to be wise, if he do not live and act well.

3. True wisdom may be known by the meekness of the spirit and temper; Let him shew with meekness, &c. It is a great instance of wisdom, prudently to bridle our own anger, and patiently to bear the anger, of others. And as wisdom will evidence itself in meekness, so meekness will be a great friend to wisdom. It hides the regular apprehension, the solid judgment, and impartiality of thought, necessary to our acting wisely, so much as passion. When we are mild and calm, we are best able to hear reason, and best able to speak it. Wisdom produces meekness, and meekness increases wisdom.

11. We have the glorying of those taken away, who were a contrary character to that now mentioned; and their wisdom exposed in all its boasts and productions; (v. 14—16.) "If we have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, &c.
JAMES, IV.

Fret not what you will, and think yourselves ever so wise, yet you have abundance of reason to cease your glorying, if you run down love and peace, and give way to bitter envying and strife. Your zeal for truth or orthodoxy, and your boasts of knowing more than others, if you employ these only to make others hateful, and to shew your own spite and heart-burnings against them, are a shame to your profession of Christianity, and a just cause of condemnation against the truth.

Observe. 1. Envy and strife are opposed to the meekness of wisdom. The heart is the seat of both; but envy and wisdom cannot dwell together in the same heart. Holy zeal and bitter envious are as different as the flames of seraphim and the fire of hell.

Observe. 2. The order of things here laid down. Envy is first, and excites strife; strife endeavoureth, &c. of itself by vain-glorying and lying; and then, (v. 16,) hereupon ensue confusion and every evil work.

Those who live in malice, envy, and contention, live in confusion; and are liable to be provoked and hurried to any evil work. Such disorders raise many tumults, strengthen temptations, and involve men in a great deal of guilt. One sin beget another; and it cannot be imagined how much mischief is produced; there is vanity upon vanity. But the main design of these effects, to be gloried in? This cannot be without giving the lie to Christianity; and pretending that this wisdom is what it is not. For observe, 3. From whence such wisdom cometh; it descendeth not from above, but ariseth from beneath; and, to speak plainly, it is earthly, sensual, devilish, v. 15. It springs from earthly principles, acts upon earthly motives, and is intent upon serving earthly purposes. It is sensual, indulging the flesh, and making provision to fulfill the lusts and desires of it. Of, according to the original word, ψεύδος, it is animal or human; the mere working of natural reason, without any supernatural light. And it is devilish; such wisdom being the wisdom of devils, to create unceasing, and to do hurt; and being inspired by devils, whose condemnation is pride, (1 Tim. 3. 6.) and who are noted in other places of scripture for the misuse of their cunning of Satan. And therefore those, who are lifted up with such wisdom as this, must fall into the condemnation of the Devil.

III. We have the lovely picture of that wisdom which is from above more fully drawn, and set in opposition to this which is from beneath; (v. 17, 18,) But the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, welcoming, obedient, holy, humble, and temperate; and the world is astonished at the wisdom of God.

Observe here, True wisdom is God's gift. It is not gained by conversing with men, or by the knowledge of the world, (as some think and speak,) but it comes from above. It consists of these several things: 1. It is pure, without mixture of maxims or aims that would deba'e it: and it is free from iniquity and defilements, not allowing of any known sin, but struggling against both in heart and life. 2. The wisdom that is from above, and that cometh from heaven, is such wisdom as produces Peace follows purity, and depends upon it. Those who are truly wise, do what they can to preserve peace, that it may not be broken; and to make peace, that where it is lost, it may be restored. In kingdoms, in families, in churches, in all societies, and in all interviews and transactions, heavenly wisdom makes men peaceable. 3. It is gentle, not straining upon extreme, and is such wisdom as produceth not saying or doing any thing rigorous in points of censure; not being furious about opinions; urging our own beyond their weight, or their's who oppose us, beyond their intention; not being rude and overbearing in conversation, nor harsh and cruel in temper. Gentleness may thus be opposed to all these.

4. Heavenly wisdom is easy to be entreated, without it is very perverse, either to what is good, or from what is evil. There is an easiness that is weak and faulty; but it is not a blamable easiness, to yield ourselves to the persuasions of God's word, and to all just and reasonable counsels or requests of our fellow-creatures; no, nor to give up a dispute, where there appears a good reason for it, and a good end may be answered by it. 5. Heavenly wisdom is full of mercy and good fruits; inwardly disposed to every thing that is kind and good, both to relieve those who want, and to forgive those who offend, and actually to do this whenever proper occasions offer. 6. Heavenly wisdom is without partiality. The original word, αδικία, signifies to be without suspicion, or free from judging; making no undue surmises, or differences in our conduct towards one person more than another. The margin reads it, without favor: It is a distinguishing the sectaries, and disputing merely for the sake of a party; or censuring others purely on account of their differing from us. The wisest men are least apt to be censurers.

7. That wisdom which is from above, is without hypocrisy. It has no disguises or deceits. It cannot fall in with those managements which the world counts wise, which are crafty and guileful; but it is sincere, and open, and steady, and true; like the sun, rising and shining in the same light. But I might always be guided by such wisdom as this: That with St. Paul we might be able to say, Not with fleshly wisdom, but in simplicity and godly sincerity, by the grace of God, we have our conversation. And then, lastly, true wisdom will go on to sow the fruits of righteousness in peace, and thus, if it may be, to make peace in the world, v. 18. And that which is sown in peace, will produce a harvest of joys. Let others reap the fruits of contentions, and all the advantages they can propose to themselves by them; but let us go on peacefully to sow the seeds of righteousness, and we may depend upon it, our labour shall not be lost. For light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart; and the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, we are directed to consider, 1. Some causes of contentions, besides those mentioned in the foregoing chapter, and to watch against them, v. 1. 5. II. We are taught to abandon the friendship of this world, so as to submit and subject ourselves entirely to God, v. 4. 10. III. As brethren we are not to give way to rash judgment of others, but to be carefully avoided, like the thorn in the flesh, v. 12. IV. We must preserve a constant regard, and pay the utmost deference, to the disposals of Divine Providence, v. 13, to the end.

1. FROM whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? 2. Ye lust, and have not; ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. 3. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. 4. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. 5. Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy? 6. But he giveth more grace. Wherefore he saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. 7. Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you: 8. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. 9. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness. 10. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

The former chapter speaks of envying one another, as the great spring of strifes and contentions; this chapter speaks of a lust after other things, as a setting too great a value upon things, as worldly pleasures, and friendly refreshment, as that which carried their divisions to a shameful height.

1. The apostle here reproves the Jewish Christians for their wars, and for their lusts, as the cause of them; (v. 1.) From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? The Jews were a very seditious people, and by their frequent wars with the Gentiles, and they were a very quarrelsome divided people, often fighting among themselves; and many of those corrupt Christians, against whose errors and vices this epistle was written, seem to have fallen in with the common quarrels; hereupon, our apostle informs them, that the original of wars and fightings, was not (as they pretended) a true zeal for their country, and for the honour of God, but that their prevailing lusts were the cause of all. Observe from hence, What is sheltered and shrouded under a specious pretence of zeal for God and religion, often comes from men's pride, malice, covetousness, ambition, and revenge. The Jews had many struggles with the Roman power, before they were entirely destroyed; they often unnecessarily embroiled themselves, and then fell into parties and factions about the different methods of managing their wars with their common enemies; and hence it came to pass, that when their cause might be supposed good, yet their engaging in it, and their management of it, came from a bad principle; their worldly and fleshly lusts raised and managed their wars and fightings; but one would think here is enough said to subdue those lusts; for,

1. They make a war within, as well as fightings without: impetuous passions and desires first war in their members, and then raise wars in their nation; there is war within conscience and corruption, and there is war also between one corruption and another; and from these contentions in themselves arise their quarrels with each other. Apply this to private cases, and may we not then say of fightings and strifes among relations and neighbours, that they come from those lusts which war in the members? From lust of power and dominion, lust of ambition, or lust of riches, from some one or more of these lusts, arise all the broils and contentions that are in the world; and since all wars and fightings come from the corruptions of our own hearts, it is therefore the right method, for the cure of contention, to lay the war to the root, and mortify those lusts that war in the members.

2. It should kill these lusts to think of their dis-appointment; (v. 2.) Ye lust, and have not; ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain; ye covet great things for yourselves, and you think to obtain them by your victories over the Romans, or by suppressing this and the other party among yourselves; you think you shall secure great pleasures and happiness to yourselves, by overthrowing every thing which thwart your eager wishes; but alas, you are losing your labour and your blood, while you kill one another with such views as these. Inordinate desires are either totally disappointed, or, however, not to be appeased and satisfied by obtaining the things desired. The words here rendered, cannot obtain, signify, cannot gain the happiness sought after. Note hence, Worldly and fleshly lusts are such, as will not, or cannot, allow of contentment or satisfaction in the mind.

3. Sinful desires and affections generally exclude prayer, and the working of our desires toward God. Ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. You fight, and do not succeed, because you do not pray: you do not consult God in your undertakings, whether he allow of them or not; and you do not commit your way to him, and make known, your request to him, and pass it by your own corrupt views and inclinations, therefore you meet with continual disappointments; or else.

4. You lusts spoil your prayers, and make them an abomination to God, whenever you put them up to him. (v. 3.) Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. As if it had been said, Though perhaps you may sometimes pray for success against your enemies, yet it is very possible you will not at all gain, so as to promote true piety and religion, either in yourselves or others; but pride, vanity, luxury, and sensuality, are what you would serve by your successes, and by your very prayers; you want to live in great power and plenty, in voluptuousness and a sensual prosperity; and thus you disgrace devotion, and dishonour God, by such gross and base ends; and therefore your prayers are rejected. Let us learn from hence, in the management of all our worldly affairs, and in our prayers to God for success in them, to see that our ends be right. When men follow their worldly business, (suppose them tradesmen or husbandmen,) and ask of God prosperity, but do not receive what they ask for, it is because they ask with wrong aims and intentions; they ask God to give them success in their callings or undertakings, not that they may glorify their heavenly Father, and do good with what they have, but that they may consume it upon their lusts; that they may be enabled to eat better meat, and drink better drink, and wear better clothes, and so gratify their pride, vanity, and voluptuousness. But if we thus seek the things of this world, it is just in God to deny them; whereas, if we seek any thing, that we may serve God with it, we may expect he will either give what we seek for, or give us hearts to be content without it, and give opportunities of serving and glorifying him some other way. Let us remember this, that when we speed not in our prayers, it is because we ask amiss; either we do not ask for right ends, or not in a right manner; not with faith, or not with fervency: unbelieving and cold desires beg denials; and this we may be sure of, that when our prayers are rather the language of our lusts than of our services, they will return empty.

II. We have fair warning to avoid all criminal friendships with this world; (v. 4.) Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Worldly people are here called adulterers and adulteresses, because of their perfidiousness to God, while they give their best affections to the world. Covetousness is elsewhere called idolatry, and it is here called adultery; it is a depiction of the heart to worship and espouse, to cleave to other things; there is this brand put upon worldly-mindedness—that it is enmity to God. A man may have a competent portion of the good things of this life, and yet may keep himself in the love of God; but he who sets his heart upon the world, who places his happiness in it, and will conform himself to it, and do any thing rather than lose its friendship, is an enemy to God; it is constructive treason and rebellion against God, to set the world upon his throne in our hearts. Whosoever therefore would be a friend of the world, let him be the enemy of God: he who will act upon this principle, to keep the smiles of the world, and to have its continual friendship, cannot but shew himself, in spirit, and in his actions too, an enemy to God. Ye cannot serve God and mammon, Matt. 6. 24.

From hence arise wars and fightings, even from this adulterous, idolatrous love of the world, and of these things there be no poor men, so long as there is enmity toward God? Or, who can fight against God, and prosper? Think seriously with yourselves what the spirit of the world is, and you will find that you cannot suit yourselves to it as friends, but it must occasion your being envious, and full of evil inclinations, as the generality of the world are. Do you think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us, lusteth envy. v. 3. The account given in the holy scriptures of the hearts of men by nature, is, that their imagination is evil, only evil, and that continually, Gen. 6. 5. Natural corruption principally shews itself by envying, and there is a continual propensity to this; the spirit which naturally dwells in man, is always producing one evil imagination or another, always emulating such as we see and converse with, and seeking those things which are possessed and enjoyed by them: now this was a world, affecting pomp and pleasure, and falling into strifes and quarrels for the sake of these things, is the certain consequence of being friends to the world; for there is no friendship without a oneness of spirit; and therefore Christians, to avoid contentions, must avoid the friendship of the world, and must shew that they are actuated by nobler principles, and that a noble spirit dwells in them: for if we belong to God, he gives more grace than to live and act as the generality of the world do. The spirit of the world teaches men to be churls, God teaches them to be bountiful; the spirit of the world teaches us to lay up, or lay out, for ourselves, and according to our own fancies; God teaches us to be willing to communicate to the necessities, and to the comfort of others, and so to do good to all about us, accordingly, and to us. To be contrary to the spirit of the world, and therefore the friendship of the world is to be avoided, if we pretend to be friends of God: yea, the grace of God will correct and cure the spirit that naturally dwells in us; where he giveth grace, he giveth another spirit than that of the world.

III. We are taught to observe the difference God makes between pride and humility; (v. 6.) God resists the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. This is represented as the language of scripture in the Old Testament; for so it is declared in the book of Psalms, that God will save the afflicted people, (if their spirits be suited to their condition,) but will bring down high looks; (Ps. 18. 27.) and in the book of Proverbs it is said, He scorneth the scorner, and giveth grace unto the lowly, Prov. 3. 34. Two things are here, 1. The spirit of the proud upon the proud; God resists them; the original word, akarize, signifies, God's setting himself as in battle array against them; and can there be a greater disgrace than for God to proclaim a man a rebel, an enemy, a traitor to his crown and dignity, and to proceed against him as such? The proud resisteth God; in his understanding he resisteth the truth of God; in his passions he resisteth the providence of God; and therefore no wonder that God sets himself against the proud. Let proud spirits hear this and tremble, God resists them. Who can describe the wretched state of those who make God their Enemy? He will certainly fill the faces of such with shame (sooner or later) as have filled their hearts with pride. We should therefore resist pride in our hearts, if we would not have God to resist us. Oh, observe, 2. The honour and help God gives to the humble; grace, as opposed to disgrace, is honour; this God gives to the humble; and where God gives grace to the humble, there he will give all other graces; and, as in the beginning of this sixth verse, he will give more grace. Wherever God gives true grace, he will give more; for to him that hath, more shall be given. He will especially give more grace to the humble, because they see their need of it, will pray for it, and be thankful for it; and such shall have it. For this reason,

IV. We are taught to submit ourselves entirely to God; (v. 7.) Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the Devil, and he will flee from you. Christians should forsake the friendship of the world, and watch against that envy and pride which they see prevailing in natural men, and should by grace learn to glory in their submissions to God. "Submit yourselves to him, as subjects to their prince, in duty, and, as one friend to another, in love and interest. Submit your understandings to the truths of God; submit your wills to the will of God, the will of his precept, the will of his providence. We are subjects, and must be subject; not only through fear, but through love: not only for the sake of the God, but also for conscience sake. "Submit yourselves to God, as considering how many ways you are bound to this, and as considering what advantage you will gain by it; for God will not hurt you by his dominion over you, but will do you good.

Now as this subject and submission to God are what the Devil most industriously strives to hinder, so we ought with great care and steadiness to repel his suggestions. If he would represent a tame yielding to the will and providence of God as what will bring calamities, and expose to contempt and misery, we must resist these suggestions of fear. If he would represent submissions to God as a hindrance to our outward case, or worldly preferments, we must resist these suggestions of pride and sloth. If he would tempt us to lay any of our miseries, and depend on the Salamanders, and those things contrary to the spirit of the world, so that we might avoid them by following his directions instead of God's, we must resist these provocations to anger, not fretting ourselves in any wise to do evil. "Let not the Devil, in these or the like attempts, prevail upon you; but resist him, and he will flee from you." If we basely yield to temptations, the Devil will continually follow us; but if we put on the whole armour of God, and stand it out against him, he will be gone from us. Resolution shuts and bolts the door against temptation.

V. We are directed how to act toward God, in our becoming submissive to him, v. 8—10. 1. Draw nigh to God: the heart, that has rebelled, must be brought to the foot of God; the spirit, that was distant and estranged from a life of communion and converse with God, must become acquainted with him; "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw near to you; and in every duty he requires of you." 2. Cleanse your hands: he who comes unto God, must have clean hands. St. Paul therefore directs to lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting, (1 Tim. 2. 8.) hands free from blood and bribes, and every thing that is unjust or cruel; and free from every defilement of sin; he is not subject to God who is a sinner; the hands must be cleansed by faith, repentance, and reformation, or it will be in vain for us to draw nigh to God in prayer, or in any of the exercises of devotion. 3. The hearts of the double-minded must be purified; those who halt between God and the world, are here meant by the double-minded; to purify the heart, is to be sincere, and to act upon this single aim and principle, rather to please God than to seek after any thing in this world: hypocrisy is heart-inpurity; but they who submit themselves to God aright, will purify their hearts as well as cleanse their hands. 4.

4. "Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep; what affections God sends take them as he would have you, and be duly sensible of them; be afflicted when affections are upon you, and none of these despised; or be afflicted in your sympathies with those who are, and in laying to heart the calamities of the church of God; mourn and weep for your own sins and the sins of others; times of contention and division are times to mourn in; and the sins that occasion wars and fightings, should be mourned for; let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness."

II. But let not your joy be turned to mourning, and your grief to mirth, as those who are worldly, ungodly, and sensual. 3.

3. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord; let the inward acts of the soul be suitable to all those outward expressions of grief, affliction, and sorrow, before mentioned." Humility of spirit is here required, as in the sight of him who looks principally at the spirits of men; let there be a thorough humiliation in bewailing every thing that is evil; let there be great humility in doing that which is good; Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord.

VI. We have great encouragement to act thus toward God; he will draw nigh to them that draw nigh to him, (v. 8.) and he will lift up those who humble themselves in his sight, v. 16. Those that draw nigh to God in a way of duty, shall find God drawing nigh to them in a way of mercy. Draw nigh to him in faith, and trust, and obedience, and he will draw nigh to you for your deliverance. If there be not a close communion between God and us, it is our fault, and not his. He shall lift up the humble. Thus much our Lord himself declared, He that shall humble himself, shall be exalted, Matt. 23. 12. If we are truly penitent and humble under the marks of God's displeasure, we shall in a little time know the advantages of his favour; he will lift us up out of trouble, or he will lift us up, in our spirits and condition, out of earthly trouble; he will lift us up to honour and safety in the world, or he will lift us up in our way to heaven, so as to raise our hearts and affections above the world; God will renew the spirit of the humble; (Isa. 57. 15.) he will hear the desire of the humble, (Ps. 10. 17.) and he will at last lift them up to glory. Before honour is humility. The highest honour in heaven will be the reward of the greatest humility on earth.

11. Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judgest the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. 12. There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy: who art thou that judgest another? 13. Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell and get gain: 14. Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. 15. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. 16. But now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil. 17. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doth it not, to him it is sin.

1. We are cautioned against the sins of evil-speaking; (v. 12.) Speak not evil one of another, brethren. The Greek word, κακονόμοις, signifies speaking any thing that may hurt or injure another; we must not speak evil things of others, though they are true, unless we be called to it, and there be some necessary occasion for it; much less must we report evil things, when they are false, or, for aught we know, may be so; our lips must be guided by the law of kindness, as well as truth and justice; this, which Solomon makes a necessary part of the character of his virtuous woman, that she openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness, (Prov. 31. 26.) must needs be a part of the character of every true Christian. Speak not evil one of another.

1. Because ye are brethren. The compellation, as used by the apostle here, carries an argument along with it. Since Christians are brethren, they should not revile or defame one another; it is required of us, that we be tender of the good name of our brethren, where we cannot speak well, we had better not speak at all than speak evil; —than speak evil of one another. It is a pleasure in making known the faults of others, divulging things that are secret, merely to expose them, nor in making more of their known faults than really they deserve, and, least of all, in making false stories, and spreading things concerning them, of which they are altogether innocent. What is this but to raise the hatred and encourage the persecutions of the world, against those who are engaged in the same interests with ourselves, and therefore with whom we ourselves must stand and fall? Consider, ye are brethren.

2. Speak not evil one of another, because this is to judge the law. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law. The law of Moses says, Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people, Levit. 19. 16. The law of Christ is, Judge not, that ye be not judged, Matt. 7. 1. The sum and substance of both is, that men should love one another. A detracting tongue therefore condemns the law of God, and the commandment of Christ, when it is defaming its neighbour. To break God's commandments is, in effect, to speak evil of them, and to judge them, as if they were too soft, whereas they are too great a restraint upon us. The Christians to whom St. James wrote, were apt to speak very hard things of one another, because of their differences about indifferent things; (such as the observance of meats and days, as appears from Rom. 14.) "Now," says the apostle, "he who censures and condemneth his brother for not agreeing with him in those things which the law of God has left indifferent, thereby censures and condemneth the law, as if it had done ill in leaving them indifferent; he who quarrels with his brother, and condemns him for the sake of any thing not determined in the word of God, does thereby reflect on that word of God, as if it were not a perfect rule; let us take heed of judging the law, for the law of the Lord is perfect; if men break the law, leave that to judge them; if they do not break it, let not us judge them." This is a heinous evil, because it is to forget our place, that we ought to be doers of the law, and it is to set up law, as if we were to be judges of it; he who is guilty of the sin here cautioned against, is not a doer of the law, but a judge; he assumes an office and a place that do not belong to him, and he will be sure to suffer for it in the end. Those who are most ready to set up for judges of the law, generally fail most in their obedience to it.

3. Speak not evil one of another, because God, the Lawgiver, has reserved the power of passing the final sentence on men wholly to himself; (v. 12.) There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save, and to destroy; who art thou that judgest another?

Princes and states are not excluded, by what is here said, from making laws; nor are subjects at all encouraged to disobey human laws: but God is still to be acknowledged as the supreme Lawgiver, who can give, and they can make no account for it. His right to enact laws is incontestable, because he has such a power to enforce them; he is able to save, and to destroy, as no other can; he has power fully to reward the observance of his laws, and to punish all disobedience; he can save the soul, and make it happy for ever; or he can, after he has killed, cast into hell; and therefore should be feared and obeyed as the great Judge, who will at last come to account for them. Since there is one Lawgiver, we may infer, that it is not for any man or company of men in the world, to pretend to give laws immediately to bind conscience; for that is God's prerogative, which must not be invaded. As the apostle had before warned against being many masters, so here he cautions against being many judges; let us not prescribe to our brethren, let us not censure and condemn the acts of the saints, which is a rule to us all; and therefore we should not set up other rules; let us not presume to set up our own particular notions and opinions as a rule to all about us; there is one Lawgiver.

II. We are cautioned against a presumptuous confidence of the continuance of our lives, and against forming projects therupon, with assurance of success, v. 13. Let no man say, I know we shall not perish by fire. We may, and ought, to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. The apostle, having reproved them for what was amiss, now directs them how to be and do better; Ye ought to say it in your hearts at all times, and with your tongues upon proper occasions, especially in your constant prayers and devotions, that if the Lord will give life, and if he will own and bless you, you have such and such designs to accomplish. See how our shallow and immoderate schemes often come to nothing; and then some will say, If the Lord will, we shall remove from the place where we are, and pass to some other, of which yet we know not, whether it be good or bad. Prayers and promises are often in vain, when the Lord does not will it. See how often the designs of proud and presumptuous men, are frustrated, when the Lord will not have it. We must be content, if we are permitted to live as we please, and to take the advantage of all our splendid designs, without any great change or alteration of our circumstances; and then we must pray to be made happy in whatever way, and according to our will or pleasure, and not to be hindered in our designs, if it is not for our advantage.

We will go to such a city; (say they,) perhaps to Antioch, or Damascus, or Alexandria, which were the great places for traffic; but how can we be sure, when they set out, that they should reach any of these cities? Something might possibly stop their way, or call them elsewhere, or cut the thread of life. Many who have set out on a journey, have gone to their long home, and never reached their journey's end. But suppose they should reach the city they designed for, how did they know they should continue there; something might happen to send them back, or to call them home, to their work, and to shorten their stay. Or suppose they should stay the full time they proposed, yet they could not be certain that they should buy and sell there; perhaps they might lie sick there, or they might not meet with those to trade with them, that they expected. Yes, suppose they should go to that city, and continue there a year, and should buy and sell, yet they might not get gold, and we are to suppose that they have the best at hand for nothing but an uncertain thing, and they might probably make more losing bargains than gainful ones; and then, as to all these particulars, the frailty, shortness, and uncertainty of life, ought to check the vanity and presumptuous confidence of such projectors for futurity; (v. 14.) What is your life? It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. God hath wisely left us to the full dark confusion of the world, and of the affairs concerning the duration of life itself; we know not what shall be on the morrow; we may know what we intend to do, and to be, but a thousand things may happen to prevent us; we are not sure of life itself, since it is but as a vapour; something in appearance, but nothing solid or certain; easily scattered and gone. We can fix the hour and minute of the sun's rising and setting to-morrow, we cannot fix the certain duration of life, or the manner of our death; such is our life; it appears but for a little time, and then vanisheth away; it vanisheth as to this world, but there is a life that will continue in the other world; and since this life is so uncertain, it concerns us all to prepare and lay up in store for that to come.

III. We are taught to keep up a constant sense of our dependence on the will of God, for life, and all the actions of life, and to be watchful and vigilant on every occasion. The apostle, in addition to his former exhortations, urges, I say again, let not evil be done to your brethren. If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. The apostle, having reproved them for what was amiss, now directs them how to be and do better; Ye ought to say it in your hearts at all times, and with your tongues upon proper occasions, especially in your constant prayers and devotions, that if the Lord will give life, and if he will own and bless you, you have such and such designs to accomplish. See how our shallow and immoderate schemes often come to nothing; and then some will say, If the Lord will, we shall remove from the place where we are, and pass to some other, of which yet we know not, whether it be good or bad. Prayers and promises are often in vain, when the Lord does not will it. We must be content, if we are permitted to live as we please, and to take the advantage of all our splendid designs, without any great change or alteration of our circumstances; and then we must pray to be made happy in whatever way, and according to our will or pleasure, and not to be hindered in our designs, if it is not for our advantage.
and all we do, should be with a submissive dependence on God.
V. We are directed to avoid vain boasting, and to look upon it not only as a weak, but a very evil thing; (v. 16.) Ye rejoice in your boastings; all such rejoicing is evil. They promised themselves life and prosperity, and great things, in the world, without any just regard to God; and then they boasted of these things. Such is the joy of worldly people, to boast of all their successes, yet often to beast of their very projects before they know what success they shall have. How common is it for men to boast of things which they have no other title to, than what arises from their own vanity and presumption! Such rejoicing (says the apostle) is evil; it is foolish and it is hurtful for men to boast of worldly things, and of their aspiring projects, when they should be attending to the humbling duties before laid down in v. 8–10. It is a great sin in God's account, it will bring great disappointments upon themselves, and will prove their destruction in the end. If we rejoice in God, that our times are in his hand, that all events are at his disposal, and that he is our God in covenant, this rejoicing is good; the wisdom, power, and providence of God, are then concerned to make all things work together for our good; but if we rejoice in our own vain confidences and presumptuous boasts, this is evil; it is an evil carefully to be avoided by all wise and good men.
V. We are taught, in the whole of our conduct, to act up to our own convictions, and, whether we have to do with God or men, to see that we never go contrary to our own knowledge; (v. 17.) To him that knoweth to do good, and doth it not, to him it is sin; it is aggravated sin, it is sinning with a witness; and it is to have the worst witness against a man that can be, when he sins against his own conscience. Observe, This stands immediately con-ected with the plain lesson of saying, If the Lord evile, we shall do this or that; they might be ready to say, "This is a very obvious thing; who knows not that we all depend upon almighty God for life, and breath, and all things?" Remember then, if you do know this, that whenever you act unsuitably to such a dependence, to him that knows to do good, and does it not, to him it is sin, the greater sin. Observe again, Omissions are sins which will come into judgment, as well as commissions; he that does not the good he should do, shall as he who does the evil he knows should not be done, will be condemned. Let us therefore take care that conscience be rightly informed, and then that it be faithfully and constantly obeyed; for if our own hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God; but if we say, We see, and do not act suitably to our sight, then our sin remaineth, John 9. 41.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, the apostle denounces the judgments of God on those rich men who oppress the poor, shewing them how great their sin and folly are, in the sight of God, and how grievous the punishments would be, which should fall upon themselves. He, v. 6. Hereafter, the faithful exhorted to patience under their trials and sufferings, v.
7. 11. The sin of swearing is cautioned against, v. 12.
We are directed how to act, both under affliction, and in presence for the sins of others. We are exhorted to keep the peace, and to avoid conciliating or exciting people, are prescribed, v. 11, 15. Christians are directed to acknowledge their faults one to another, and to pray one for another, and the efficacy of prayer is proved, v. 16, 18.
And hereby it is recommended to us, that we can for the reducing of them that stray from the ways of truth.

1. Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. 2. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

3. Your gold and silver are cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire.
Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. 4. Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth;
and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. 5. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter.
6. Ye have condemned and killed the just;
and he doth not resist you. 7. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. 8. Be ye also patient; establish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. 9. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold the judge standeth before the door. 10. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. 11. Behold, we count them happy who endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

The apostle is here addressing first sinners, and then saints.

1. Let us consider the address to sinners; and here we find St. James seconding what his great Master had said; Woe unto you that are rich; for ye have received your consolation, Luke 6. 24.
The rich people, to whom this word of warning is sent,
were not such as professed the Christian religion, but the worldly and unbelieving Jews, such as are said to have condemned and kill the just, which the Christians had not; no mention is made of the epistle was written for the sake of the faithful, and was sent principally to them, yet, by an apostrophe, the infidel Jews may be well supposed here spoken to; they would not hear the word, and therefore it is written, that they might read it; and it is observable in the inscription of this epistle, that it is not directed, as Paul's epistles were, to the brethren in Christ, but, in general, to the twelve tribes; and the whole of it, as the grace given us from Christ, but, in general, greeting; ch. 1. 1. The poor among the Jews received the gospel, and many of them believed; but the generality of the rich rejected Christianity, and were hardened in their unbelief, and hated and persecuted those who believed on Christ; to these oppressing, unbelieving, persecuting, rich people, the apostle directs himself in the first six verses.

1. He foretells the judgments of God, that should come upon them; (v. 1, 2) they should have miseries come upon them, and such dreadful miseries, that the very apprehension of them was enough to make them weep and howl; misery that should arise from the very things in which they placed their Happiness, and misery that should be completed by these things witnessing against them at the last, to their utter destruction; and they are now called to
God gives us our worldly possessions, that we may honour him, and do good with them; but if, instead of that, we sinfully hoard them up, through an undue affection toward them, or a distrust of the providence of God for the future, this is a very heinous crime, and will be witnessed against by the very rust and corruption of the treasure thus heaped together.

(2.) Another sin charged upon those against whom St. James writes, is, oppression; (v. 4.) behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped the field, which is of you kept back by fraud, covet, &c. Those who have wealth in their hands, get power into their hands, and then they are tempted to abuse that power to oppress such as are under them. The rich we here find employing the poor in their labours, and the rich have a much need of the labours of the poor, as the poor have of wages from the rich, and could as ill be without them; but yet, not considering this, they kept back the hire of the labourers; having power in their hands, it is probable that they made as hard bargains with the poor as they could; and, even after that, would not make good their bargain as they should have done. This is a crying sin, an iniquity that cries so as to reach the ears of God; and, in this case, God is to be considered as the Lord of sabaoth, or the Lord of hosts, kisayase'ad, as in the Hebrew, or, in the Old Testament, where the people of God were defenceless, and wanted protection; and when their enemies were numerous and powerful. The Lord of hosts, who has all ranks of beings and creatures at his disposal, and who sets all in their several places, he hears the oppressed when they cry by reason of the cruelty or injustice of the oppressor, and he will give orders to some of those hosts that are under him, (angels, devils, storms, distempers, etc., like), to do a work of violence on their enemies; or they are dealt with unrighteously and unmercifully. Take heed of this sin of defrauding and oppressing, and avoid the very appearances of it.

(3.) Another sin here mentioned, is, sensuality and voluptuousness; (v. 5.) Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton, &c. God does not forbid us to use pleasure; but to live in them as if we had nothing else, is a very provoking sin; and we see that the prophecies, how, in the New Testament, how, in the Old Testament, where the people of God were defenceless, and wanted protection; and when their enemies were numerous and powerful. The Lord of hosts, who has all ranks of beings and creatures at his disposal, and who sets all in their several places, he hears the oppressed when they cry by reason of the cruelty or injustice of the oppressor, and he will give orders to some of those hosts that are under him, (angels, devils, storms, distempers, etc., like), to do a work of violence on their enemies; or they are dealt with unrighteously and unmercifully. Take heed of this sin of defrauding and oppressing, and avoid the very appearances of it.

God does not forbid us to use pleasure; but to live in them as if we had nothing else, is a very provoking sin; and we see that the prophecies, how, in the New Testament, how, in the Old Testament, where the people of God were defenceless, and wanted protection; and when their enemies were numerous and powerful. vanced it into the place of God; while on the other hand, they who swear commonly and profanely by the name of God, do hereby put him upon the level with every common thing.

But let your yea be yea, and your nay nay; lest ye fall into condemnation; that is, "Let it suffice you to affirm or deny a thing as there is occasion; and be sure to stand to your word, and be true to it, so as to give no occasion for your being suspected of falsehood; and then you will be kept from the condemnation of backing what you say or promise by rash oaths, and from profaning the name of God to justify yourselves. It is being suspected of falsehood that leads men to swearing: Let it be known that your words are firm and true words; and this means you will find there is no need to swear to what you say. Thus shall you escape the condemnation which is expressly annexed to the third commandment; The Lord will not hold him guiltless, that taketh his name in vain."

II. As Christians, we are taught to suit ourselves to the dispensations of Providence; (v. 13.) Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray. Is any merry? Let him sing psalms. Our condition in this world is various; and our wisdom is to submit to its being so, and to have as becomes us, both in prosperity and under affliction. Sometimes we are in sadness, sometimes in mirth; God has set these one over against the other, that we may the better observe the several duties he enjoins; and that the impressions made on our passions and affections may be rendered ser- vices to our souls. Afflictions should put us upon prayer; and prosperity should make us abound in praise. Not that prayer is to be confined to a time of trouble, or singing to a time of mirth; but these several duties may be performed with special advantage, and to the happiest purposes, at such seasons.

1. In a day of affliction nothing is more seasonable than prayer. The person afflicted must pray himself, as well as engage the prayers of others for him. Times of affliction should be praying times. To this end God sends afflictions, that we may be engaged to seek him early; and that those who at other times have neglected him, may be brought to inquire after him. The spirit is then most humble, the heart is broken and tender; and prayer is most acceptable to God when it comes from a contrite, humble spirit. Afflictions naturally draw out complaints; and to whom should we complain but to God in prayer? It is necessary for persons to be engaged in devotions, and prayer is the appointed means both for obtaining and increasing these graces in us.

Is any afflicted? Let him pray.

2. In a day of mirth and prosperity singing psalms is very proper and seasonable. In the original it is only said, sing, θαυμάσσεται, without the addition of psalms, or any other word; and we learn from the writings of several in the first ages of Christianity, (passages in Justin Martyr, and Tertullian, and the writings of St. Peter, and of the epistles of St. John,) that the Christians were used to sing hymns, either taken out of scripture, or of more private composition, in their worship of God. Though some have thought, that St. Paul’s advising both the Colossians and Ephesians to speak to one another, οὐ τὸν τουτούς ἔνωσεν τῶν ἁγίων, in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, (Eph. 5:19.) was accompanied by the singing of the psalms of David being distinguished in Hebrew, by (Shirim, Tehillim, and Mizmorim,) words that exactly answer these of the apostle. Let that be as it will, this however we are sure of, that singing psalms is a gospel-ordnance, and that our joy should be holy joy, consecrated to God. Singing is so directed to here, as to shew that if any be in circumstances of mirth and prosperity, he should turn his heart, though alone, and by himself, into this channel. Holy mirth becomes families and retirings, as well as public assemblies. Let our singing be such as to make melody with our hearts unto the Lord, and God will assuredly be well pleased with this kind of devotion.

III. We have particular directions given as to six persons, and "healing, pardoning mercy promised, upon the observance of those directions; (v. 14, 15.) If any be sick, they are required, 1. To send for the elders, πρεσβύτεροι τις ἁγιοίς—take them to the presbyters, pastors or ministers of the church. It lies upon sick people as a duty, to send for ministers and to desire their assistance and their prayers. 2. It is the duty of ministers to pray over the sick, when thus desired and called for. Let them pray upon them, and heave them, (as they are hallowed and holy words,) and with this they and their intercessions be as becomes those who are afflicted with his calamities. 3. In the times of miraculous healing, the sick was to be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. Expositors generally confine this anointing with oil to such as had the power of working miracles; and when miracles ceased, this institution ceased also. In St. Mark’s gospel we read of the apostles anointing with oil that were sick, and healing them, Mark 6:13. And we have accounts of this being practised in the church two hundred years after Christ; but then the gift of healing also accompanied it; when that miraculous gift ceased, this rite was lapsed aside. The papists indeed have made a sacrament of this, which they call the extreme unction. They use it, not to heal the sick, as it was used by the apostles; but, as a kind of ceremonial grace to their appointments of their church, so here they ordain, that this should be administered only to such as are at the very point of death. The apostle’s anointing was in order to heal the disease; the popish anointing is for the expulsion of the relics of sin, and to enable the soul (as they pretend) the better to combat with the powers of the air. When they cannot prove, by any visible effects, that Christ owns them in the presence of this rite, they would however have people to believe that the invisible effects are very wonderful. But it is surely much better to omit this anointing with oil, than to turn it quite contrary to the purposes spoken of in scripture. Some protestants have thought that this anointing was only permitted or approved by Christ, not instituted. But it should seem by the words of St. James here, that it was a thing enjoined in cases where there was faith; let their prayers be accompanied with laying on of hands, and argued for it with this view. It was not to be commonly used, not even in the apostolical age; and some have thought that it should not be wholly laid aside in any age; but that where there are extraordinary measures of faith in the person anointing, and in those who are anointed, an extraordinary blessing may attend the observance of this direction for the sick. However that be, the power of healing (as it is used here) being the saving of the sick is not ascribed to the anointing with oil, but to prayer; (v. 15.) The prayer of faith shall save the sick, &c. So that, A. Prayer over the sick must proceed from, and be accompanied with, a lively faith. There must be faith both in the person praying, and in the person prayed for. In a time of sickness, it is not the cold and formal prayer that is effectual, but the prayer of faith. For the power of laying on hands is the success of prayer. The Lord shall raise up; that is, if he be a person capable and fit for deliverance, and if God has any thing further for such a person to do in the world. And if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him; that is, where sickness is sent as a punishment for some particular sin, that sin shall be pardoned; and in token thereof the sickness shall be removed. When Christ said, Go in and sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee, it is intimated that some parcular sin was the cause of his sickness. The great thing therefore we should beg of God for ourselves and others in the time of sickness, is, the pardon of sin. Sin is both the root of sickness and the sting of it. If sin be pardoned, either affliction shall be removed in mercy, or we shall see there is mercy in the continuance of it. When healing is founded upon pardon, we may say as Hezekiah did; Thou hast, in love to my soul, delivered it from the pit of corruption, Isa. 38. 17. When you are sick and in pain, it is most commend to pray and try, O God, to restore me to health! But your prayer should rather and chiefly be, O that God would pardon my sins!

IV. Christians are directed to confess their faults one to another, and so to join in their prayers with and for one another, v. 16. Some expositors connect this v. 16. with v. 14. As if when sick people send for ministers to pray over them, they should then confess their faults to them. Indeed they are conscious that their sickness is a vindictive punishment of some particular sin, and they cannot look for the removal of their sickness without particular applications to God for the pardon of such a sin, there it may be proper to acknowledge and tell his case, that those who pray over him may know how to plead rightly for him. But the confession here required, is, that of Christians one to another, in which they are to make confession of their own sins, for the purpose of obtaining God's mercy in pardoning them. Where persons have injured one another, acts of injustice must be confessed to those against whom they have been committed. Where persons have tempted one another to sin, or have consented in the same evil actions, there they ought mutually to blame themselves, and excite each other to repentance. Where crimes are of a public nature, and have done any public mischief, there they ought to feel the same sense of guilt, and labour to do all in their power for the recovery of society from the disorder and weakness that is produced. Where persons have injured one another, acts of injustice must be confessed to those against whom they have been committed. Where persons have tempted one another to sin, or have consented in the same evil actions, there they ought mutually to blame themselves, and excite each other to repentance. Where crimes are of a public nature, and have done any public mischief, there they ought to feel the same sense of guilt, and labour to do all in their power for the recovery of society from the disorder and weakness that is produced.

V. The great advantage and efficacy of prayer is declared and proved: The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, whether he pray for himself or for others: witness the example of Elias, v. 17, 18. He who prays, must be a righteous man; not righteous in an absolute sense, (for this Elias was not, who is here made a pattern to us,) but righteous in a gospel-sense, not loving or approving sin, but not as the apostles say, “If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear my prayer,” Ps. 66. 18. Further, the prayer itself must be a fervent, in-wrought, well-wrought prayer. It must be a pouring out the heart to God; and it must proceed from a faith unfeigned. Such prayer avails much. It is of great advantage to ourselves, it may be very beneficial to our friends, and we are assured of its being acceptable to God. It is good having those for friends, whose prayers are available in the sight of God.

The power of prayer is here proved from the success of Elijah. This may be encouraging to us even in common cases, if we consider that Elijah was a man of like passions with us. He was a zealous and good man, and a very great man, but he had his infirmities, and was subject to disorder in his passions, as well as others. In prayer we must not look to the merit of man, but to the grace of God. Only in this we should copy after Elijah, that he prayed earnestly, or as it is in the original, in prayer he prayed. It is not enough to say a prayer, but we must pray in prayer. Our thoughts must be fixed, our desires firm and ardent, and our graces in exercise, and when we do pray in prayer we shall speed in prayer. Elijah prayed that it might not rain; and God heard him in his pleading against an idolatrous persecuting country, so that it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. Again he prayed, and the heaven gave rain, &c. Thus you see prayer is the key which opens and shuts heaven. To this there is an allusion Rev. 11. 6. where the two witnesses are said to have power to make heaven and earth to rain. When the extraordinary efficacy of prayer is recorded for encouragement even to ordinary Christians to be instant and earnest in prayer. God never says to any of the seed of Jacob, seek my face in vain. If Elijah by prayer could do such great and wonderful things, surely the prayers of no righteous man shall return void. Where there may not be so much of miracle in God’s answering our prayers, yet there may be very great advantage, and advantage of grace to ourselves.

VI. This epistle concludes with an exhortation to do all we can in our places to further and promote the conversion and salvation of others, v. 19, 20. Some interpret these verses as an apology which the apostle is making for himself, that he should so plainly and sharply reprove the Jewish Christians for their many faults and errors. And certainly St. James gives a very good reason why he was so much concerned to reclaim them from their errors; because in thus doing he should save souls, and hide a multitude of sins. But we are not to restrain this place to the apostle’s converting such as erred in the truth; no, nor to other ministerial endeavours of the like nature; since it is said, “If any err, and one convert him, let him be he who will that does so good an office for another, he is therein an instrument of saving the sinner, whom he calls brethren, he yet supposes liable to err. It is no mark of a wise or holy man, to boast of his being free from error, or to refuse to acknowledge when he is in an error. But if any do err, be they ever so great, you must not be afraid to shew them their error; and be they ever so weak and little, you must not disdain to make them wiser and better. If they err from the truth, that is, from the gospel, (the great rule and standard of truth,) whether it be in opinion or practice, you must endeavour to bring them again to the rule. Errors in judgment and in life generally go together. There is some doctrinal mistake at the bottom of every practical mistake. There is no one habitually bad, but upon some bad principle. Now to convert such, is to reduce them from their error, and to reclaim them from the evils they have been led into. We are not presently to accuse and exclaim against an erring brother, and seek to bring reproaches and calamities upon him, but to convert him: and if by all our endeavours we cannot do this, yet we are no where impoverished to persecute and destroy him.
we are instrumental in the conversion of any, we are said to convert them, though this be principally and efficiently the work of God. And if we can do no more toward the conversion of sinners, yet we may do this—pray for the grace and Spirit of God to convert and change them. And let those that are any way serviceable to convert others, know what will be the happy consequences of their doing this; they may take great comfort in it at present, and they will meet with a crown at last.

He that is said to err from the truth, (in v. 19,) is described as erring in his way; (in v. 20,) and we cannot be said to convert any, merely by altering their opinions, unless we can bring them to correct and amend their ways. This is conversion—to turn a sinner from the error of his ways, and not to turn him from one party to another, or merely from one notion and way of thinking to another. He who thus converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death. There is a soul in the case; and what is done toward the salvation of that, shall certainly turn to good account. The soul being the principal part of the man, the saving of that only is mentioned, but it includes the salvation of the whole man: the spirit shall be saved from hell, the body raised from the grave, and both saved from eternal death. And then, by such conversion of heart and life, a multitude of sins shall be hid. A most comfortable passage of scripture this is. We learn from hence, that though our sins are many, even a multitude, yet they may be hid or pardoned; and that when sin is turned from or forsaken, it shall be hid never to appear in judgment against us. Let peo dcative to cover or excuse their sin as they will, there is no way effectually and finally to hide it, but forsaking it. Some make the sense of this text to be, that conversion shall prevent a multitude of sins; and it is a truth beyond dispute, that many sins are prevented in the party converted; many also may be prevented in others that he may have an influence upon, or may converse with. Upon the whole, how should we lay out ourselves with all possible concern for the conversion of sinners! It will be for the happiness and salvation of the converted; it will prevent much mischief, and the spreading and multiplying of sin in the world; it will be for the glory and honour of God; and it will mightily redound to our comfort and renown in the great day. They that turn many to righteousness, and they who help to do so, shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

WITH

OF THE

FIRST EPISODE GENERAL OF PETER.

Completed by Mr. Z. Marriot.

TWO epistles we have enrolled in the sacred canon of the scripture, written by Peter, who was a most eminent apostle of Jesus Christ, and whose character shines bright, as it is described in the Four Gos pels, and in the Acts of the Apostles, but as it is painted by the papists and legendary writers, it represents a person of extravagant pride and ambition.

It is certain from scripture, that Simon Peter was one of the first of those whom our Lord called to be his disciples and followers; that he was a person of excellent endowments, both natural and gracious, of great parts, and ready elocution, quick to apprehend, and bold to execute, whatever he knew to be his duty. When our Saviour called his apostles, and gave them their commission, he nominated him first in the list; and by his behaviour toward him he seems to have distinguished him as a special favourite among the twelve. Many instances of our Lord's affection to him, both during his life, and after his resurrection, are recorded.

But there are many things confidently affirmed of this holy man, that are directly false: as, That he had a primacy and superior power over the rest of the apostles; that he was more than their equal; that he was their prince, monarch, and sovereign; and that he exercised a jurisdiction over the whole college of the apostles: moreover, That he was the sole universal pastor over all the Christian world, the only vicar of Christ upon earth; that he was for above twenty years bishop of Rome, that the Popes of Rome succeed to St. Peter, and derive from him a universal supremacy and jurisdiction over all churches and Christians upon earth; and that all this was by our Lord's ordering and appointment. Whereas Christ never gave him any pre-eminence of this kind, but positively forbade it, and gave precepts to the contrary. The other apostles never consented to any such claim. Paul declares himself not a whit behind the very chiefest of the apostles, 2 Cor. 11. 5. and ch. 12. 11. In nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles. Here is no exception of St. Peter's superior dignity, whom St. Paul took the freedom to blame, and withstood him to the face, Gal. 2. 11. And Peter himself never assumed any thin; like it, but modestly himself an apostle of Jesus Christ; and when he writes to the presbyters of the church, he humbly places himself in the same rank with them; The elders which are among you Exhort, who am also an elder, ch. 5. 1. See Dr. Barrow on the Pope's supremacy.

The design of this first epistle is,

I. To explain more fully the doctrines of Christianity to these newly-converted Jews.

II. To direct and persuade him to a holy conversation, in the faithful discharge of all personal and relative duties, whereby they would secure their own peace, and effectually confute the slanders and reproaches of their enemies.

III. To prepare them for sufferings. This seems to be his principal intention; for he has something to this purport in every chapter, and does, by a great variety of arguments, encourage them to patience and perseverance in the faith, lest the persecutions and sad calamities that were coming upon them, should prevail with them to apostatize from Christ and the gospel.

I is remarkable that you find not so much as one word savouring of the spirit and pride of a pope in either of these epistles.

I. PETER, I.

CHAP. I.
The apostle describes the persons to whom he writes, and salutes them; (v. 1. 2.) blesses God for their regeneration to life eternal, salvation, &c. (v. 3. 5.) He describes the value of this salvation, how shews they had great cause of rejoicing, though for a little while they were in heaviness and affliction, for the trial of their faith, which would produce joy unspeakable and full of glory, v. 6. 9. This is that salvation which the ancient prophets foretold, and the angels desired to know into, v. 10. 12. He exhorts them to sobriety and holiness, which he presses from the consideration of the blood of Jesus, the invaluable pledge of man's redemption; (v. 13. 21.) and to brotherly love, from the consideration of their regeneration, and the excellency of their spiritual state, v. 22. 25.

1. PETER, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, 2. Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.

In this inscription we have three parts.

1. The author of it described. 1. By his name—Peter. His first name was Simon, and Jesus Christ gave him the surname of Peter, which signifies a rock, as a commendation of his faith, and to denote that he should be an eminent pillar in the church of God, Gal. 2. 9. 2. By his office—an apostle of Jesus Christ. The word signifies one sent, a legate, a messenger, any one sent in Christ's name, and about his work; but more strictly it signifies the highest office in the Christian church; (1 Cor. 12. 28.) God hath set some in the church, first apostles. Their dignity and pre-eminence lay in these things—They were immediately chosen by Christ himself; they were first witnesses, then preachers of the resurrection of Christ, and so of the entire gospel-dispensation; their gifts were excellent and extraordinary; they had a power of working miracles, not at all times, but when Christ pleased; they were led into all truth, were endowed with the spirit of prophecy, and they had an extent of power and jurisdiction beyond all others; every apostle was a universal bishop in all churches, and over all ministers. In this humble manner Peter, (1.) Asserts his own character as an apostle. Hence learn, A man may lawfully acknowledge, and sometimes is bound to assert, the gifts and graces of God to him. To pretend to what we have not, is hypocrisy; and to deny what we have, is ingratitude. (2.) He mentions his apostolic function as his warrant and call to write this epistle to these people. Learn, It concerns all, but especially ministers, to consider well their warrant and call from God to their work. This will justify them to others, and give them inward support and comfort under all dangers and discouragements.

2. They are described by their spiritual condition; Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. Election is either to an office; (So Saul was the man whom the Lord chose to be king; 1 Sam. 10. 24.) and our Lord tells his apostles, have not I chosen you twelve? John 6. 70.) or to a church-state, for the enjoyment of special privileges; (thus Israel was God's elect, Deut. 7. 6.) For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself above all people that are upon the face of the earth;) or to eternal salvation; God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation,
They were elected also to the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus. They are designed by God's decree to be sanctified by the Spirit, and to be purified by the merit and blood of Christ. Here is a manifest allusion to the typical sprinklings of blood under the law, which language these Jewish converts understood very well. The blood of the sacrifices must not only be shed, but sprinkled; to denote that the benefits designed thereby, are applied and impert to the offerers. Thus the blood of Christ, the grand and all-sufficient Sacrifice, typified by the legal sacrifices, was not only shed, but must be sprinkled and communicated to every one of these elect Christians, that through faith in his blood they may obtain remission of sins, Rom. 3. 25. This blood of sprinkling justifies before God, (Rom. 5. 9.) seals the covenant between God and us, of which the Lord's supper is a sign, (Luke 22. 20.) cleanses from all sin, (1 John 1. 7.) and admits us into heaven, Heb. 10. 19.

Note, [1.] God hath elected some to eternal life, some, not all; persons, not qualifications. [2.] All that are chosen to eternal life as the end, are chosen to obedience as the way. [3.] Unless a person be sanctified by the Spirit, and sprinkled with the blood of Jesus, there will be no true obedience in the life. [4.] There is a consent and co-operation of all the persons of the Trinity in the affair of man's salvation, and their acts are commensurate one to another; whoever the Father elects, the Spirit sanctifies unto obedience, and the son renews and sprinkles with his blood. [5.] The doctrine of the Trinity lies at the foundation of all revealed religion. If you deny the proper deity of the Son and Holy Spirit, you invalidate the redemption of the one, and the gracious operations of the other, and by that means destroy the foundation of your own safety and religion.

III. The salutation follows; Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied. The blessings desired for them, are, grace and peace.

1. Grace; the free favour of God, with all its proper effects, pardoning, healing, assisting, and saving.

2. Peace; all sorts of peace may be here intended, domestic, civil, ecclesiastical peace in the church, and spiritual peace with God, with the feeling of it in our own consciences.

Here is an earnest request of prayer, in relation to these blessings—that they may be multiplied; which implies, that they were already possessed in some degree of these blessings, and he wishes them the continuation, the increase, and the perfection of them. Learn,

(1.) They who possess spiritual blessings in their own souls, earnestly desire the communication of the same to others; the grace of God is a generous, not a selfish grace.

(2.) The best blessings we can desire for ourselves, or one for another, are grace and peace, with the multiplication of them; therefore the apostles so often make this their prayer in the beginning and end of their epistles.

(3.) Solid peace cannot be enjoyed where there is no true grace; first grace, then peace. Peace with one another, is mere stupidity; but grace may be true, where there is for a time no actual peace; as Haman was distracted with terror, and Christ was once in an agony.

(4.) The increase of grace and peace, as well as the first gift of them, is from God; where he gives true grace, he will give more grace; and every good man earnestly desires the improvement and multiplication of these blessings in himself and others.

3. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

We come now to the body of the epistle, which begins with a congratulation of the dignity and happiness of the state of these believers, brought in under the form of a thanksgiving to God. Other epistles begin in like manner, 2 Cor. 1. 3. Eph. 1. 3.

1. Here we have the duty performed, which is blessing God. A man blesses God by a just acknowledgment of his excellency and blessedness.

2. Here is the object of this blessing described by his relation to Jesus Christ; the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Here are three names of one Person, denoting his threefold office. (1.) He is Lord, a universal King or Sovereign. (2.) Jesus, a Priest or Saviour. (3.) Christ, a Prophet, anointed with the Spirit, and furnished with all gifts necessary for the instruction, conduct, and salvation of his church. This God, so blessed, is the God of Christ, according to his human nature, and his Father, according to his divine nature.

You may have the reasons that oblige us to this duty of blessing God, which are, in general, his abundant mercy; all our blessings are owing to God's mercy, not to man's merit, particularly regeneration; he hath begotten us again, and this deserves our thanksgiving to God, especially if we consider the fruit it produces in us, which is that excellent grace of hope, and that not such a vain, dead, perishing hope as that of worldlings and hypocrites, but a lively hope, a living, strong, quickening, and durable hope, that hope not but needs be, that has such a solid foundation as the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Learn,

(1.) A good Christian's condition is never so bad but he has great reason still to bless God. As a sinner has always reason to mourn, notwithstanding his present prosperity; so good people, in the midst of their manifold difficulties, have reason still to rejoice and bless God.

(2.) In our prayers and praises we should address God as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; it is only through him that we and our services are accepted.

(3.) The best of men owe their best blessings to the abundant mercy of God; all the evil in the world is from man's sin, but all the good in it is from God's mercy; regeneration is expressly ascribed to the abundant mercy of God, and so are all the rest; we subsist entirely upon divine mercy. Of the nature of regeneration, see John 3. 3.

(4.) regeneration produces a lively hope of eternal life; every unconverted person is a hopeless creature; whatever he pretends to of that kind, is all confidence and presumption; the right Christian hope is what a man is begotten again unto by the Spirit of God; it is not from nature, but from grace; the who are regenerate have a new and spiritual life, are begotten to a new and spiritual hope.

(5.) The hope of a Christian has this excellency, it is a living hope; the hope of eternal life in a true Christian, is a hope that keeps him alive, quickens him, supports him, and conducts him to heaven. Hope invigorates and spirits up the soul to action, to patience, to fortitude, and perseverance to the end. The delusive hopes of the unregenerate are vain and perishing; the hope of God's children, and his hope expire and die both together, Job 27. 8.

(6.) The resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, is the ground or foundation of a Christian's hope; the resurrection of Christ is the act of the Father as a Judge, of the son as a Conqueror; his resurrection demonstrates that the Father accepts his death in full discharge for our ransom, that he is victorious over death, the grave, and all our spiritual enemies; and it is also an assurance of our own resurrection, there being an inseparable union between Christ, and his neck; they rise by virtue of the resurrection of a Head, rather than by virtue of his power as a Judge. We are risen with Christ, Col. 3. 1. From all this taken together, Christians have two fast solid foundations whereon to build their hope of eternal life.

4. To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you.

The apostle continues his thanksgiving to God, and having congratulated these people on their new birth, and their hope of everlasting life, he goes on to describe that life under the notion of an inheritance; a most proper way of speaking to these people; for:

1. They were poor and persecuted, perhaps turned out of this inheritance to which they were born; to allay this grievance, he tells them they were new-born to a new inheritance, infinitely better than what they had lost.

2. They were Jews, most of them, and so had a great affection to the land of Canaan, as the land of their inheritance, settled upon them by God himself; and to be driven out from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, was looked upon as a sore judgment, 1 Sam. 26. 13. To comfort them under this, they are put in mind of a noble inheritance reserved in heaven for them, such a one, that the land of Canaan was but a mere shadow in comparison of it.

Note, (1.) Heaven is the unlooked inheritance of all the children of God; all that are born again, are born to an inheritance, as a man makes his child his heir; the apostle argues, If children, their heirs, Rom. 8. 17. God giveth his gifts unto all, but the inheritance to none but his children; those that are his sons and daughters by regeneration and adoption, receive the promise of eternal inheritance, Heb. 9. 15. This inheritance is not our purchase, but our Father's gift; not wages that we merit, but the effect of grace, which first makes us children, and then settles this inheritance upon us by a firm unalterable covenant.

Note, (2.) The incomparable excellencies of this inheritance, which are four:

[3.] It is an incorruptible inheritance, in which respect it is like its Maker, who is called the incorruptible God, Rom. 1. 23. All corruption is a change from better to worse, but heaven is without change, and without end; the house is eternal in the heavens, and the possessors must subsist for ever; for their corruptible must put on incorruption, 1 Cor. 15. 53.

[4.] This inheritance is undefiled, like the great High Priest that is now in possession of it, who is holy, harmless, and undefiled, Heb. 7. 26. Sin and mortality, the two grand defilements that spoil this world, and mar its beauty, have no place there.

[5.] It fadeth not away, but always retains its vigour and beauty, and remains immovable, ever entertaining and pleasing the saints who possess it, without the least weariness or distaste.

[4.] Reserved in heaven for you; which expression teaches us, First, That it is a glorious inheritance, for it is reserved, and all that is there is glorious, 1. 18. Secondly, It is certain, a reversion in another world safely kept and preserved till we come to the possession of it. Thirdly, The persons for whom it is reserved, are described, not by their names, but by their character; for you, or us, or every one that is begotten again to a lively hope, this inheritance is reserved for them, and none but them; all the rest will be shut out for ever.

5. Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.

This inheritance being described as future, and distant both in time and place, the apostle supposes some doubt or uneasiness yet to remain upon the minds of these people, whether they might not possibly fall short by the way; though the happiness be safe in heaven, yet we are still upon earth, liable to abundance of temptations, miseries, and infirmities; Are we in such a safe state that we shall certainly come thither? To this he answers, that they should be safely guarded and conducted thither; they should be kept and preserved from all sort of temptations and injuries as would prevent their safe arrival at eternal life; the heir to an earthly estate has no assurance that he shall live to enjoy it, but the heirs of heaven shall certainly be conducted safe to the possession of it; the blessing here promised, is, preservation; Ye are kept; the Author of it, God; the means in us made use of for that end, are, our own faith and care; the end to which we are preserved, is, salvation; and this the time when we shall see the safe end and issue of all, is, the last time.

Note. 1. Such is the tender care of God over his people, that he not only gives them grace, but preserves them unto glory; their being kept, implies both danger and deliverance; they may be attacked, but shall not be overcome.

The preservation of God’s power does not supersede man’s good behaviour and care for his own salvation; here is God’s power, and man’s faith, which implies an earnest desire of salvation, a reliance upon Christ, according to his invitations and promises, a vigilant care to do every thing pleasing to God, and avoid whatever is offensive, an abhorrence of temptations, a respect to the recompense of reward, and persevering diligence in prayer; by such a patient, operating, conquering faith, we are kept, under the assistance of God’s power, from misery and destruction.

This preservation of the soul through a state of grace unto a state of glory.

4. This salvation is ready to be revealed, in the last time. Here are three things asserted about the salvation of the saints. (1.) That it is now prepared, and made ready, and reserved in heaven for them. (2.) Though it be made ready now, yet it is in a great measure hidden and unrevealed at present, not only to the ignorant and worldly, but even to the heirs of salvation themselves. It does not yet appear what we shall be, 1 John 3. 2. (3.) That it shall be fully and completely revealed in the last time, or at the last day of judgment.

6. Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:

The first word, wherein, refers to the apostle’s foregoing discourse about the excellency of their present state, and their grand expectations for the future; in this condition you greatly rejoice, though now for a season, or a little while, if need be, ye are made sorrowful through manifold temptations.

The apostle grants they were in great affliction, and propounds several things in mitigation of their sorrows.

Note. 1. Every sound Christian has always something wherein he may greatly rejoice; great rejoicing contains more than an inward placid serenity of mind or sensation of comfort; it will shew itself in the countenance and conduct, but especially in praise and great praise.
I. Peter, I.

791 that is good in us; our Christianity depends upon our faith; if that be wanting, there is nothing else that is spiritually good in us; Christ prays for this apostle, that his faith might not fail; if that be supported, all the rest will stand firm; the faith of good people is tried, that they themselves may have the comfort of it, God the glory of it, and others the benefit of it.

2. A tried faith is much more precious than tried gold; here is a double comparison of faith and gold, and the trial of the one with the trial of the other: gold is the most valuable, pure, useful, and durable, of all the metals; so is faith among the Christian virtues, it lasts till it brings the soul to heaven, and then it issues in the glorious fruition of God for ever; the trial of faith is much more precious than the trial of gold; in both there is a purification, a separation of the dross, and a discovery of the soundness and goodness of the things; gold does not increase and multiply by trial in the fire, it rather grows less; but faith is established, improved, and multiplied, by the oppositions and afflictions that it meets with; gold must perish at last; gold perisheth; but faith never will; I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not, Luke 22. 32.

3. The trial of faith will be found to praise, and honour, and glory. Honour is properly that esteem and value which one has with another, and so God and man will honour the saints. Praise is the expression or declaration of that esteem; so Christ will commend his people in the great day, Come, ye blessed of my Father, &c. Glory is that lustre wherewith a person, so honoured and praised, shines in heaven; glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, Rom. 2. 10. If a tried faith be found to praise, honour, and glory, let this recommend faith to you, as much more precious than gold, though it be assumed and tried by afflictions; if you made your estimate either from present use, or the final event of both, it will be found true; however the world takes it for an incredible paradox.

4. Jesus Christ will appear again in glory, and, when he does so, the saints will appear with him, and their graces will appear illustrious; and the more illustrious the grace the tried, the more bright will they then appear; the trial will serve for ever, but the glory, honour and praise will last to eternity. This should reconcile you to your present afflictions: they work for you a far more exceeding and an eternal weight of glory.

8. Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now you see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory:

The faith of these primitive Christians is further commended upon two accounts: 1. The excellency of its Object, the unseen Jesus; the apostle had said, that he was in fact the Son of God, as Jesus never did, and yet they believed in him. It is one thing to believe God, or Christ, (so the devils believe,) another thing to believe in him; which denotes subjection, reliance, and expectation of all promised good from him. 2. On account of two notable productions or effects of their faith, love and joy; and this joy so great, as to be above description; ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory.

Learn, (1.) The faith of a Christian is properly conversant about things revealed, but not seen; sense converses with things sensible and present; reason is a higher guide, which by sure deductions can infer the operation of causes, and the certainty of events; but faith ascends further still, and assures us of abundance of particulars that sense and reason could never have found out, upon the credit of revelation; it is the evidence of things not seen.

(2.) True love is never alone, but produces a strong love to Jesus Christ; true Christians love Jesus, because they believe in him; this love discovers itself in the highest esteem for him, affectionate desires after him, willingness to be dissolved, and to be with him, delightful thoughts, cheerful services and sufferings, &c.

(3.) Where there are true faith and love to Christ, there is, or may be, joy unspeakable and full of glory; this joy is inexpressible, it cannot be described by words; the believer is, by an experimental taste of it; it is full of glory, full of heaven; there is much of heaven and the future glory in the present joys of improved Christians; their faith removes the causes of sorrow, and affords the best reasons for joy: though good people sometimes walk in darkness, it is often owing to their own mistakes and ignorance, or to a fearful, melancholy disposition, or to some late sinful conduct, or perhaps to some sad recurrence of old sins. This sinks their comfort for the present, yet they have reason to rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of their salvation, Hab. 3. 18.

9. Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls.

Well might these Christians rejoice with joy unspeakable, since they were everyday receiving the end of their faith, the salvation of their souls.

Note, 1. The blessing they were receiving, was the salvation of souls; the more noble part being put in the head of the whole man, which salvation is hereby called the end of their faith; the end wherein faith terminates; it helps to save the soul, then it has done its work, and ceases for ever.

Note, 2. He speaks of the present time; you are now actually receiving the end of your faith, &c.

Note, 3. The word used alludes to the games at which the conquerors received or bore away from the judge of the contest, a crown or reward, which he carried about in triumph; so the salvation of the soul was the prize these Christians sought for, the crown they laboured for, the end they aimed at, which came nearer and more within their reach every day.

Learn, (1.) Every faithful Christian is daily receiving the salvation of his soul; salvation is one permanent thing, begun in this life, not interrupted by death, and continued to all eternity. These believers had the beginnings of heaven in the possession of holiness, and a heavenly mind, in their duties and communion with God, in the earnest of the inheritance, and the witness of the divine Spirit. This was properly urged to these distressed people; they were on the losing side in the world, but the apostle puts them in mind of what they were receiving; if they lost an inferior good, they were all the more sure of a superior good. This is the way of the Lord, and wisdom can find no fault in it.

(2.) It is lawful for a Christian to make the salvation of his soul his end; the glory of God and our own felicity are so connected, that if we regularly seek the one we must attain the other.

10. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you:

The apostle having described the persons to whom he wrote, and declared to them the excellent advantages they were under, he goes on to shew them what warrant he had for what he had delivered; and, because they were Jews, and had a profound veneration for the Old Testament, he produces the authority of the prophets to convince them the doctrine of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ was no new doctrine, but the same which the old prophets did inquire and search diligently into.

Note. 1. Who made this diligent search; the prophets, who were persons inspired by God to the doing or saying of things extraordinary, above the reach of their own studies and abilities, foretelling things to come, and revealing the will of God, by the direction of the Holy Spirit.

2. The object of their search; which was, salvation, and the grace of God which should come unto you; the general salvation of men of all nations by Jesus Christ, and more especially the salvation afforded to the Jews; the grace that should come to them from him who was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. They foresaw glorious times of light, grace and comfort, coming upon the church, which made the prophets and righteous desire to see and hear the things which came to pass in the days of the gospel.

3. The manner of their inquiry; they inquired and searched diligently; the words are strong and emphatical, alluding to miners, who dig to the bottom, and break through not only the earth, but the rock, to come to the ore; so these holy prophets had an earnest desire to know, and were proportionably diligent in their inquiries after the grace of God, which was to be revealed in the days of the Messiah: their being inspired did not make their industrious search needless; for, notwithstanding their extraordinary assistance from God, they were obliged to make use of all the ordinary methods of improvement in wisdom and knowledge. Daniel was a man greatly beloved and inspired, yet he understood by books and study the computations of time. ch. 9. 2. Even their own revelation required their study, meditation, and prayer; for many prophecies had a double meaning; in their first intention they aimed at some person or event near at hand, but their ultimate design was to describe the Person, sufferings, or kingdom of Christ.

Observe, (1.) The doctrine of man's salvation by Jesus Christ, has been the study and admiration of the greatest and wisest of men; the nobleness of the subject was the great motive to their industry, and they engaged themselves with utmost accuracy, attention, and seriousness, to search into it.

(2.) A good man is greatly affected and pleased with the grace and mercy of God to others, as well as to himself; the prophets were highly delighted with the prospects of mercy to be shewn both to Jews and Gentiles at the coming of Christ.

(3.) They who were acquainted with this great salvation, and the grace that shines therein, must inquire and search diligently into it; if it were necessary for an inspired prophet to do so, much more for persons so weak and injudicious as we are.

(4.) The grace that came by the gospel, excels all that was before it; the gospel-dispensation is more glorious, evident, intelligible, extensive, and effectual, than any dispensation that ever did precede it.

11. Searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.

The particular matters which the ancient prophets chiefly searched into are here expressed; Jesus Christ was the main Subject of their studies; and in relation to him, they were most inquisitive into, 1. His humiliation and death, and the glorious consequences of it; the sufferings of Christ, and the glories that should follow; this inquiry would lead them into a view of the whole gospel, the sum whereof is this, that Christ Jesus was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification.

2. The time, and the manner of the times, wherein the Messiah was to appear; undoubtedly these holy prophets earnestly desired to see the days of the Son of man; and therefore, next to the thing itself, their minds were set upon the time of its accomplishment, so far as the Spirit of Christ, which was in them, had signified any thing toward that purpose. The nature of the times was also under their strict consideration, whether they would be quiet or troublesome times; times of peace, or times of war.

Learn. (1.) Jesus Christ had a being before his incarnation; for his Spirit did then exist in the prophets, and therefore he whose that Spirit then was, must be in being also.

(2.) The doctrine of the Trinity was not wholly unknown to the faithful in the Old Testament; the prophets knew that they were inspired by a Spirit that was in them, this Spirit they knew to be the Spirit of Christ, and consequently distinct from Christ himself; here is a plurality of persons, and from other parts of the Old Testament a Trinity may be collected.

(3.) The works here ascribed to the Holy Ghost prove him to be God; he did signify, discover, and manifest to the prophets, many hundred years beforehand, the sufferings of Christ, with a multitude of particular circumstances attending them; and he did also testify, or give proof and evidence beforehand, of the certainty of that event, by inspiring the prophets to reveal it, to work miracles in confirmation of it, and by enabling the faithful to believe it, these works prove the Spirit of Christ to be God, since he is possessed of almighty power and infinite knowledge.

(4.) From the example of Christ Jesus, learn to expect a time of services and sufferings before you are received to glory; it was so with him, and the disciple is not above his Lord; the suffering time is but short, but the glory is everlasting; let the suffering season be ever so sharp and severe, it shall not hinder, but work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

12. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.

These words contain an answer to the prophets, inquiry; their holy endeavours to inform themselves were not slighted, for God gives them a satisfactory revelation to quiet and comfort their minds; they were informed that these things should not come to pass in their time, but yet all was firm and secure, and should come to pass in the times of the apostles; not unto themselves, but to us; and we must report them, under the intollible direction of the Holy Ghost, to all the world; which things the angels, &c.

You have here three sorts of students, or inquirers into the great affair of man's salvation by Jesus Christ: 1. The prophets search diligently into it. The apostles afterwards continued it, to the prophecies, and were witnesses of the accomplishment of them, and so reported what they knew to others in the preaching of the gospel. 3. The angels, who most attentively pry into these matters.

Learn. (1.) A diligent endeavour after the knowledge of Christ and our duty, will certainly be answered with good success. The prophets wer-answered with a revelation; Daniel studies, and receives information; the Bereans search the scriptures, and were confirmed.

(2.) The holiest and best of men sometimes have their lawful and pious requests denied. It was both lawful and pious for the prophets to desire to know more than they were permitted to know about the time of the appearance of Christ in the world, but they were denied. It is lawful and pious for good parents to pray for their wicked children, for the poor to pray against poverty, for a good man to pray against death; yet, in these honest requests, they often are denied. God is pleased to answer our necessities rather than our requests.

(3.) It is the honour and practice of a Christian to be useful to others in many cases, rather than to himself; the prophets ministered to others, not unto themselves; none of us liveth to himself, Rom. 14. 7. Nothing is more contrary to man's nature and Christian principles, than for a man to make himself his own end, and live to himself.

(4.) The revelations of God to his church, though gradual, and given by parables, are all perfectly consistent; the doctrine of the prophets and of the apostles exactly agree, as coming from the same Spirit of God.

(5.) The efficacy of the evangelical ministry depends upon the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; the gospel is the ministration of the Spirit; the success of it depends upon his operation and blessing.

(6.) The mysteries of the gospel, and the methods of man's salvation, are so glorious, that the angelic angels earnestly desire to look into them; they are curious, accurate, and industrious in pry- ing into them; they consider the whole scheme of man's redemption with deep attention and admiration, particularly the points the apostle had been discoursing of; which things the angels desire to stoop down and look into, as the cherubim did continually toward the mercy-seat.

13. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ:

Here the apostle begins his exhortation to them, whose glorious state he had before described, whereby instructing us, that Christianity is a doctrine and religion, qualified not only to make us wiser, but better; "Wherefore, since you are so honoured and distinguished, as above,"

"Gird up the loins of your mind; you have a journey to go, a race to run, a warfare to accomplish, and a great work to do; as the traveller, the racer, the warrior, and the labourer, gather in, and gird up, their long and loose garments, that they may be more ready, prompt, and expeditious in the business; so you, by your minds, your sober man, and affections seated there; gird them, gather them in, let them not hang loose and neglected about you; restrain their extravagances, and let the loins, or strength and vigour of your minds, be exerted in your duty; disengage yourselves from all who would hinder you, and go on resolutely in your obedience." Be sober, be vigilant against all your spiritual dangers and enemies, and be temperate and modest in eating, drinking, apparel, recreation, business, and in the whole of your behaviour; be sober-minded also in opinion, as well as in practice, and humble in your judgment of yourselves.

And hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Some refer this to the last judgment, as if the apostle directed their hope to the final revelation of Jesus Christ; but it seems more natural to take it, as it might be rendered, "Hope perfectly, or thoroughly, for the grace that is brought to you in, or by the revelation of Jesus Christ; by the gospel which brings life and immortality to light; hope perfectly, trust without doubting to that grace which is more offered to you in the gospel."

Learn, 1. The main work of a Christian lies in the right management of his heart and mind; the apostle's first direction is to gird up the loins of the mind.

2. The best Christians have need to be exhorted to sobriety; these excellent Christians are put in mind of it; it is required of a bishop, (1 Tim. 3. 2.) and of aged persons, (Tit. 2. 2.) and of the young women art to be taught it, and the young men are directed to be sober-minded, Tit. 2. 4. 6.

3. A Christian's work is not over as soon as he is got into a state of grace; he must still hope and strive for more grace; when he has entered the strait gate, he must still walk in the narrow way, and gird up the loins of his mind for that purpose.

4. A strong and perfect trust in God's grace is very consistent with our best endeavours in our duty; we must hope perfectly, and yet gird up our loins, and address ourselves vigorously to the work we have to do, encouraging ourselves from the grace of Jesus Christ.

14. As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance:

The exhortation is continued, and the words may be taken either as a rule of holy living, which is both positive, (you ought to live as obedient children, as those whom God hath adopted into his family, and regenerated by his grace,) and negative; (you must not fashion yourselves according to the former lusts, in your ignorance;) or the words may be taken as an argument to press them to holiness from the consideration of what they now are, children of obedient, and what they were when they lived in lust and ignorance.

Learn, 1. The children of God ought to prove themselves to be such by their obedience to God, by their present, constant, universal obedience.

2. The best of God's children have had their times of lust and ignorance; the time has been when the whole scheme of their lives, their way and fashion, was, to accommodate and gratify their unlawful desires and vicious appetites, being grossly ignorant of God and themselves, of Christ and the gospel.

3. Persons, when converted, differ exceedingly from what they were formerly; they are people of another fashion and manner from what they were before; their inward frame, behaviour, speech and conversation, are much altered from what they were in times past.

The lusts and extravagances of sinners are both the fruits and the signs of their ignorance.

15. But as he who hath called you, is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation: 16. Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy.

Here is a noble rule enforced by strong arguments; Be ye holy in all manner of conversation. Who is sufficient for this? And yet it is required in strong terms, and enforced by three reasons, taken from the grace of God, in calling us; from his command, it is written; and from his example, Be ye holy, for I am holy.

Learn, 1. The grace of God in calling a sinner, is a powerful engagement to holiness; it is a great favour to be called effectually by divine grace; out of a state of sin and misery into the possession of all the blessings of the new covenant; and great favours are strong obligations; they enable as well as oblig to be holy.

2. Complete holiness is the desire and duty of every Christian: here is a twofold rule of holiness; (1.) It must, for the extent of it, be universal; we must be holy, and in all manner of conversation; in all civil and religious affairs, in every condition, prosperous or adverse; towards all people, friends or enemies; in all our intercourse and business still we must be holy. (2.) For the pattern of it, we must be holy as God is holy; we must imitate him, though we can never equal him; he is perfectly, unchangeably, and eternally holy; and we should aspire after such a state. The consideration of the holiness of God should oblige us to the highest degrees of holiness we can attain unto.

3. The written word of God is the surest rule of a Christian's life; and by this rule we are commanded to be holy every way.

4. The Old-Testament commands are to be studied and obeyed in the times of the New Testament; the apostle, by virtue of a command delivered several times by Moses, requires holiness in all Christians.

17. And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear:

The apostle does not here express any doubt at all whether these Christians would call upon their heavenly Father, but suppose they would certainly do it, and from that argues with them to pass the time of their sojourning here in fear; “If you own the great God as a Father and a Judge, you ought to live the time of your sojourning here in his fear.”

1. Learn. 1. All good Christians look upon themselves in this world as pilgrims and sojourners, as strangers in a distant country, passing to another, to which they properly belong, Ps. 39. 12. Heb. 11. 13.

2. The whole time of your sojourning here is to be passed in the fear of God.

3. The consideration of God as a Judge, is not improper for those who can truly call him Father. Holy confidence in God as a Father, and an awful fear of him as a Judge, are very consistent; to regard God as a Judge, is a singular means to endeavor him to us as a Father.

4. The judgment of God will be without respect of persons, according to every man's work. No external relation to him will protect any; the Jew may call God Father, and Abraham father, but God will not respect persons, nor favour their cause, from personal considerations, but judge them according to their works; the works of men will in the great day discover their persons; God will make all the world to know who are his by their works; we are obliged to faith, holiness, and obedience, and our works will be an evidence whether we have complied with our obligations or not.

18. Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; 19. But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.

The apostle having exhorted to pass the time of our life in the fear of God, from this consideration, that we call on the Father, he adds, in these words, a second argument, because, or forasmuch as we are redeemed by the Son, &c. Herein he puts them in mind, 1. That they were redeemed, or brought back again, by a ransom paid to the Father. 2. With the precious blood of Christ, for their redemption; not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ. 3. They knew this; Forasmuch as ye know, and cannot pretend ignorance of this great affair. 4. From what they were redeemed; from a vain conversation received by tradition.

Learn. 1. The consideration of our redemption ought to be a constant and powerful inducement to holiness, and the fear of God.

2. God expects that a Christian should live answerably to what he knows, and therefore we have great need to be put in mind of what we already know, Ps. 39. 4.

3. Neither silver nor gold, nor any of the corruptible things of this world, can redeem so much as one soul; they are often snare, temptations, and hindrances to man's salvation, but they can by no means purchase or procure it; they are corruptible, and therefore cannot redeem an incorruptible and immortal soul.

4. The blood of Jesus Christ is the only price of man's redemption; the redemption of man is real, not metaphorical; we are bought with a price, and the price is equal to the purchase, for it is the precious blood of Christ, it is the blood of an innocent Person, the Lamb without blemish and without spot, whom the paschal Lamb represented, and of an infinite Person, being the Son of God, and therefore is called the blood of God, Acts 20. 28.

5. The design of Christ in shedding his most precious blood, was, to redeem us, not only from eternal misery hereafter, but from a vain conversation in this world. That conversation is vain, which is empty, frivolous, trifling, and unserviceable to the glory of God, to the truth of religion, the conviction of unbelievers, and the comfort and satisfaction of a man's own conscience. Not only the open wickedness, but the vanity and unprofitableness of our conversation is highly dangerous.

6. A man's conversation may carry an appearance of devotion, and may plead antiquity, custom, and tradition, in its defence, and yet after all be a most vain conversation. The Jews had a deal to scorn in the Jews, and yet their conversation was so vain, that only the blood of Christ could redeem them from it. Antiquity is no certain rule of verity, nor is it a wise resolution, “I will live and die in such a way, because my forefathers did so.”

20. Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you. He was manifested or demonstrated to be that Redeemer whom God had fore-ordained. He was manifested by his birth, by his Father's testimony, and by his own works, especially by his resurrection.
tion from the dead, Rom. 1. 4. "This was done in these last times of the New Testament and of the gospel, for you, you Jews, you sinners, you afflicted ones; you have the comfort of the manifestation and appearance of Christ, if you believe on him," 3. That God raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory. The resurrection of Christ, considered as an act of power, is common to all the three Persons, but as an act of judgment it is peculiar to the Father, who as a Judge released Christ, raised him from the grave, and gave him glory, proclaimed him to all the world to be his Son by his resurrection from the dead, advanced him to heaven, crowned him with glory and honour, invested him with all power in heaven and earth, and glorified him with that glory which he had with God, before the world was. The redeemed are also described here by their faith and hope. The cause of this is Jesus Christ; "You do by him believe in God; by him as the Author, Encourager, Support, and Finisher of your faith; your faith and hope now may be in God, as regardeth to the Mediator." Learn, (1.) The decree of God to send Christ to be a Mediator, was from everlasting, and was a just and merciful decree, which yet does not at all excuse man's sin in crucifying him, Acts 2. 23. God had purposes of special favour towards his people long before he made any manifestations of such grace unto them. (2.) Grace is the happiness of the last times in comparison with what the former ages of the world enjoyed. The clearness of light, the supports of faith, the efficacy of ordinances, and the proportion of comforts; these are all much larger since the manifestation of Christ than they were before. Our gratitude and services should be suitable to such favours. (3.) The redemption of Christ belongs to none but believing believers. A general impetration is asserted by some, and denied by others; but none pretend to a general application of Christ's death for the salvation of all. Hypocrites and unbelievers will be ruined for ever, notwithstanding the death of Christ. (4.) God in Christ is the ultimate Object of a Christian's faith, which is strongly supported by the resurrection of Christ, and the glory that did follow.

22. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: Here the apostle begins another exhortation, to brotherly love, wherein he supposes that the gospel had already such an effect upon them, as to purify their souls, while they obeyed it through the Spirit, and that they, at least as believers, were members of the bridegroom; and from thence he argues with them to proceed to a higher degree of affection, to love one another with a pure heart fervently. Learn, 1. It is not to be doubted but that every sincere Christian purifies his soul. The apostle takes that for granted; seeing ye have, &c. To purify the soul supposes some great uncleanness and defilement, that by the grace of Christ, the Menu impuritament of the outward man, can effect this. 2. The word of God is the great instrument of a sinner's purification; Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth. The gospel is called truth, in opposition to types and shadows, and to error and falsehood. This truth is effectual to purify the soul, if it be obeyed, John 17. 17. Many hear the truth, but are never purified by it, because they will not submit to it, nor obey it.

3. The spirit of God is the great Agent in the purification of man's soul. The Spirit convinces the soul of its impurities, furnishes these virtues and graces that both adorn and purify, such as faith, (Acts 13. 9.) hope, (1 John 3. 3.) love, (1 John 4. 8.) and the love of Jesus Christ. The Spirit excites our endeavours, and makes them successful. The aid of the Spirit does not supersede our own industry; these people purified their own souls, but it was through the Spirit.

4. The souls of Christians must be purified before they can so much as love one another unfeignedly. There are those lusts and partialities in man's nature, that without divine grace we can neither love God nor one another as we ought to do; there is no charity but out of a pure heart. 5. It is the duty of all Christians sincerely and fervently to love one another. Our affection to one another must be sincere and real, and it must be fervent, constant, and extensive.

23. Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

This duty of loving one another with a pure heart fervently, the apostle further presses upon Christians from the consideration of their spiritual relation; they are all born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, &c. Hence we may learn, 1. That all Christians are born again. The apostle speaks of it as what is common to all serious Christians, and by this they are brought into a new and a near relation to one another, they become brethren by their new birth. The word of God is the great means of regeneration, Jam. 1. 18. The grace of regeneration is conveyed by the gospel.

3. This new and second birth is much more desirable and excellent than the first. This the apostle teaches by preferring the incorruptible to the corruptible seed. By the one we become the children of men, by the other the sons and daughters of the Most High. The word of God, being compared to seed, teaches us that though it be little in appearance, yet it is wonderful in operation; though it lies hid a while, yet it grows up and produces excellent fruit at last.

4. Those that are regenerate should love one another with a pure heart fervently. Brethren by nature are bound to love one another; but the obligation is double where there is a spiritual relation, they are under the same government, partake of the same privileges, and are embarked in the same interest.

5. The word of God liveth and abideth for ever. This word is a living word, or a lively word, Heb. 4. 12. It is a means of spiritual life, to begin it and persevere in it, animating and exciting us in our duty, till it brings us to eternal life; and it is abiding; it remains eternally true, and abides in the hearts of the regenerate for ever.

24. For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: 25. But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you. The apostle having given an account of the excellency of the renewed spiritual man as born again, not of corruptible but incorruptible seed, he now sets before us the vanity of the natural man, taking him with all his ornaments and advantages about him; For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; and nothing can make him a solid substantial being, but the being born again of the incorruptible seed, the word of God, which will transform him into a most excellent creature, whose glory will not fade like a flower, but shine like an angel; and this word is daily set before you in the preaching of the gospel.

Learn, 1. Man, in his utmost flourish and glory, is still a withering, fading, dying creature. Take him singly, all flesh is grass. In his entrance into the world, in his life and in his fall, he is like to grass, Job 4. 2. Isa. 40. 6. 7. Take him in all his glory, even that is as the flower of grass; his wit, beauty, strength, vigour, wealth, honour; these are but as the flower of grass, which soon withers and dies away.

2. The only way to render this perishing creature solid and incorruptible, is, to entertain and receive the word of God, for that remains everlasting truth, and, if received, will preserve him to everlasting life, and abide with him for ever.

The apostles who preached the same doctrine. This word which Isaiah and others delivered in the Old Testament, is the same which the apostles preached in the New.

CHAP. II.

The general exhortation to holiness is continued and enforced by several reasons taken from the foundation on which Christians are built, Jesus Christ, and from their spiritual blessings and privileges in him. The means of obtaining it, the word of God, is recommended, and all contrary qualities are condemned, v. 1. 12. Particular directions are given how subjects ought to obey the magistrates, and serve their masters, patiently suffering in well doing, in imitation of Christ, v. 13, to the end.

1. WHEREFORE laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisy, and envies, and all evil-speaking,

The holy apostle has been recommending mutual charity, and setting forth the excellencies of the word of God, calling it an incorruptible seed, and saying that it liveth and abideth for ever. He pursues his discourse, and very properly comes in with this necessary advice, Wherefore laying aside all malice, &c. These are such sort of sins as both destroy charity, and hinder the efficacy of the word, and consequently prevent our regeneration. His advice is, to lay aside or put off what is evil, as one would do an old rotten garment; "Cast it away with indignation, never put it on more." The sins to be put off, or thrown aside, are,

1. Malice, which may be taken more generally for all sorts of wickedness, as Jam. 1. 21. 1 Cor. 5. 8. But in a more confined sense, malice is anger resting in the breast masters, patiently suffering in well doing, in imitation of Christ, v. 13, to the end.

2. Guile, or deceit in words. So it comprehends flattery, falsehood, and delusion, which is a crafty imposing upon another's ignorance or weakness, to his damage.

3. Hypocrisies. The word being plural, comprehends all sorts of hypocrisies. In matters of religious hypocrisy is counterfeit piety. In civil conversation hypocrisy is counterfeit friendship, which is much practised by those who give high compliments, which they do not believe, or make promises which they never intend to perform, or pretend friendship when mischief lies in their hearts.

4. All envies; every thing that may be called envy, which is a grieving at the good and welfare of another; at their abilities, prosperity, fame, or successful labours.

5. Evil speaking, which is detraction, speaking against another, or detaining him; it is rendered backbiting, 2 Cor. 12. 20. Rom. 1. 30.

Learn, (1.) The best Christians have need to be cautioned and warned again, the worst sins, such as malice, hypocrisy, envy. They are not sanctified in part, and are still liable to temptations.

(2.) Our best services toward God will neither please him, nor profit us, if we are not conscientious in our duties to men. The sins here mentioned are offences against the second table. These must be laid aside, or else we cannot receive the word of God as we ought to do.

(3.) Whereas it is said, all malice, all guile, learn, That one sin, not laid aside, will hinder our spiritual profit and everlasting welfare.

(4.) Malice, envy, hatred, hypocrisy and evil-speaking, generally go together. Evil-speaking is a sign that malice and guile lie in the heart; and all of them combine to hinder our profiting by the word of God.

2. As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby:

The apostle, like a wise physician, having prescribed the purging out vicious lumours, goes on to direct the wholesomeness and regular food, that they may be strong thereby. The duty exhorted to, is, a strong and constant desire of the word of God, which word is here called reasonable milk. Only that phrase not being proper English, our translators rendered it the milk of the word, by which we are to understand food proper for the soul, or a reasonable creature, whereby the mind, not the body, is nourished and strengthened. This milk of the word must be sincere, not adulterated by the mixtures of men, who often corrupt the word of God, 2 Cor. 2. 17. The manner how they are to desire this sincere milk of the word, is stated thus; As new-born babes. He puts them in mind of their regeneration. A new life requires suitable food. They being newly born, must desire the milk of the word. Infants desire common milk, and their desires towards it are fervent and frequent, arising from an impatient sense of hunger, and accompanied with the best endeavours the infant is capable of; such must Christians' desires be after the word of God: and that for this end, that they may grow thereby, that we may improve in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, 2 Pet. 3. 18.

Learn, 1. Strong desires and affections to the word of God, are a sure evidence of a person's being born again. If they be such desires as the babe has for the milk, they prove that the person is new-born. They are the lowest evidence, but yet they are certain.

2. Growth and improvement in wisdom and grace are the design and desire of every Christian; all spiritual means are for edification and improvement. The word of God, rightly used, does not leave a man as it finds him, but improves and makes him better.

3. If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious.

If so be, or since that, or forasmuch as, ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. The apostle does not express a doubt, but affirms that these good Christians had tasted the goodness of God, and from hence argues with them, "You ought to lay aside these vile sins; (v. 1.) you ought to desire the word of God, you ought to grow thereby, since you cannot deny but that you have tasted that the Lord is gracious." The next verse assures us, that the Lord is prepared to make them so to be, to the end that they may grow thereby.
2. The graciousness of our Redeemer is best discovered by an experimental taste of it. There must be an immediate application of the object to the origin of taste; we cannot taste at a distance, as we may see, and hear, and smell. To taste the graciousness of Christ experimentally, supposes our being united to him by faith, and then we may taste his goodness in all his providences, in all our spiritual concerns, in all our fears and temptations, in his word and worship every day.

3. The best of God's servants have in this life but a taste of the grace of Christ. A taste is but a little; it is not a draught, nor does it satisfy. It is so with the consolations of God in this life.

4. The word of God is the great instrument whereby he discovers and communicates his grace to men. They who feed upon the sincere milk of the word, taste and experience most of his grace. In our conversations with his word we should endeavour always to understand and experience more and more of his grace.

4. To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious.

The apostle here enters upon a description of Jesus Christ, which he continues to v. 9. Though to a captious wit, or an infidel, the description of Christ by a stone may seem rough and harsh; yet to the Jews, who placed much of their religion in their magnificent temple, and who understood the prophetic style, which calls the Messiah a Stone, (Isa. 8. 14. 28-29.) this manner of speaking was very elegant and proper. In this metaphorical description of Jesus Christ, he is called a Stone, to denote his invincible strength and everlasting duration, and to teach his servants that he is their Protection and Security, the Foundation on which they are built, and a Rock of offence to all their enemies. He is the living Stone; having eternal life in himself, and being the Prince of life to all his people.

The reputation and respect he has with God and man are very different. He is disallowed of men, reprobated or rejected by his own countrymen the Jews, and by the generality of mankind; but chosen of God, separated and fore-ordained to be the foundation of the church, (as ch. 1. 20.) and precious, a most honourable, choice, worthy Person, in himself, in the esteem of God, and in the judgment of all who believe on him.

To this Person so described we are obliged to come; to whom coming, not by a local motion, for that is impossible since his exaltation, but by faith, whereby we are united to him at first, and draw nigh to him ever after.

Learn, 1. Jesus Christ is the very foundation-stone of all our hopes and happiness. He communicates the true knowledge of God, (Matt. 11. 27.) by him is every treasure of the Father, (John 14. 6.) and through him are made partakers of all spiritual blessings, Eph. 1. 3.

2. Men in general disallow and reject Jesus Christ; they slight him, dislike him, oppose and refuse him, as scripture and experience declare, Isa. 53. 3.

3. However Christ be disallowed by an ungrateful world, yet he is chosen of God, and precious in his account. He is chosen and fixed upon to be the Lord of the universe, the comfort and the brightness of his people, and the Judge of the world. He is precious in the excellency of his nature, the dignity of his office, and the gloriousness of his services.

4. Those who expect mercy from this gracious Redeemer, must come to him, which is our act, though done by God's grace; an act of the soul, not of the body; a real endeavour, not a fruitless wish.

5. Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

The foundation was laid, v. 4. Here is the superstructure, the materials built upon it; Ye also, as lively stones, are built up. The apostle recommending the Christian church and constitution to these dispersed Jews. It was natural for them to object, that the Christian church had no such glorious temple, nor such a numerous priesthood; but its dispensation was mean, the services and sacrifices of it having nothing of the pomp and grandeur which the Jewish dispensation had. To which the apostle answers, that the Jewish dispensation was a much nobler fabric than the Jewish temple, it is a living temple, consisting not of dead materials, but of living parts. Christ, the Foundation, is a living Stone, Christians are lively stones, and these make a spiritual house, and they are a holy priesthood; and though they have no bloody sacrifices of beasts to offer, yet they have much better and more acceptable, and they have an Altar too on which to present their offerings; for they offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

Learn, 1. All sincere Christians have in them a principle of spiritual life, derived to them from Christ their Head: therefore as he is called a living Stone, so they are called lively, or living stones; not dead in trespasses and sins, but alive to God by regeneration and the working of the divine Spirit.

2. The Christian church is a spiritual house. The Foundation is Christ, Eph. 2. 20. The builders, ministers, 1 Cor. 3. 10. The Inhabitant is God, Eph. 2. 22. It is a house for its strength, beauty, variety of parts, and usefulness of the whole; it is spiritual in its Foundation—Christ Jesus; in the materials of it—spiritual persons; in its furniture—the graces of the Spirit; in its connexion—being held together by the Spirit of God, and by one common faith; and in its use—which is spiritual work, to offer up spiritual sacrifices. This house is daily built up, every part of it improving, and the whole supplied in every age by the addition of new particular members.

3. All good Christians are a holy priesthood. The apostle speaks here of the generality of Christians, and tells them they are a holy priesthood; they are all select persons, sacred to God, serviceable to others, well endowed with heavenly gifts and graces, and well employed.

4. This holy priesthood must and will offer up spiritual sacrifices to God. The spiritual sacrifices which Christians are to offer, are, their bodies, souls, affections, prayers, praises, alms, and other duties.

5. The most spiritual sacrifices of the best men are not acceptable to God, but through Jesus Christ; he is the only High Priest, through whom we and our services can be accepted; therefore bring all your oblations to him, and by him present them to God.

6. Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.

What was asserted before of Christ, his being a living Stone, &c. is here proved from Isa. 28. 16. Observe the manner of the apostle's quoting scripture; not by book, chapter and verse; for those distinctions were not then made, so no more was said than a reference to Moses, David, or the prophets, except once a particular psalm was named, Acts 13. 33. In their quotations they kept rather to the sense than the words of scripture, as appears from what is recited from the prophet in this place. He does not quote the scripture, either the Hebrew or LXX, word for word, yet makes a just and true quotation. The true sense of scripture, may be justly and fully expressed in other than in scripture-words. It is contained. The verb is active, but our translators render it passively, to avoid the difficulty of finding a nominative case for it, which had puzzled so many interpreters before them.

The matter of the quotation is this, Behold, I lay in Zion. Learn. 1. In the weighty matters of religion we must depend entirely upon scripture-proof; Christ and his apostles appealed to Moses, David, and the ancient prophets. The word of God is the only rule God hath given us; it is a perfect and sufficient rule; and it is an intelligible and a certain rule.

2. The accounts that God hath given us in scripture concerning his Son Jesus Christ, are what require our strictest attention; Behold, I lay—. John calls for the like attention, John 1. 29. These demands of attention to Christ show us the excellency of the matter, the importance of it, and our stupidity and dulness.

3. The constituting of Christ Jesus Head of the church, is an eminent work of God; I lay in Zion. The laying of the corner of the temple for the head of the church, is a human contrivance, and an arrogant presumption; Christ only is the Foundation and Head of the church of God.

4. Jesus Christ is the chief Corner-stone that God hath laid in his spiritual building. The corner-stone stays inseparably with the building, supports it, unites it, and adorns it. So does Christ by his holy church, his spiritual house.

5. Jesus Christ is the Corner-stone for the support and salvation of none but such as are his sincere people: none but Zion, and such as are of Zion; not for Babylon, not for his enemies.

6. True faith in Jesus Christ is the only way to prevent a man's utter confusion. Three things put a man into great confusion, and faith prevents them all—disappointment, sin, and judgment. Faith has a remedy for each.

7. Unto you therefore who believe, he is precious; but unto them who are disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner.

These words are an inference from what went before. Jesus Christ is said to be the chief Corner-stone. Hence, the apostle infers, we are to respect to good men; "To you therefore who believe he is precious, or he is an Honour. Christ is the Crown and Honour of a Christian; you who believe will be so far from being ashamed of him, that you will boast of him, and glory in him for ever."

As to wicked men, the disobedient will go on to disallow and reject Jesus Christ; but God is resolved that he shall be, in despite of all opposition, the Head of the corner.

Learn. 1. Whatever is by just and necessary consequence deduced from scripture, may be depended upon with as much certainty as if it were contained in express words of scripture. The apostle draws an inference from the prophet's testimony. The prophet did not expressly say so, but yet he said that from which the consequence was unavoidable. Our Saviour hides them search the scriptures, because they had identified him; and yet no place in those scriptures to which he there refers them, said, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah. Yet these scriptures do say, that he who should be born of a virgin, before the sceptre departed from Judah, during the second temple, and after Daniel's seventy weeks, was the Messiah; but such was Jesus Christ. To collect which conclusion, one must make use of reason, history, eye-sight, experience; and yet it is an infallible scripture-conclusion for all that.

2. The business of a faithful minister is, to apply general truths to the particular condition and state of their hearers. The apostle quotes a passage ( 5. 5) out of the prophet, then he applies it severally to good and bad. This requires wisdom, courage, and dexterity. But it is very profitable to the hearers.

3. Jesus Christ is exceeding precious to all the faithful. The majesty and grandeur of his person, the dignity of his office, his near relation, his won derful works, his immense love; every thing engages the faithful to the highest esteem and respect for Jesus Christ.

4. Disobedient people have no true faith. By disobedient people, understand those that are unpersuadable, incredulous, and impatient. These may have some right notions, but no solid faith.

5. They that ought to be builders of the church of Christ, are often the worst enemies that Christ has in the world. In the Old Testament the false prophets did the most mischief; and in the New Testament the greatest opposition and cruelty that Christ met with, were from the scribes, Pharisees, chief-priests, and the pretended to build and take care of the church: still the hierarchy of Rome is the worst enemy in the world to Jesus Christ and his interest.

6. God will carry on his own work, and support the interest of Jesus Christ in the world, notwithstanding the falseness of pretended friends, and the opposition of his worst enemies.

3. And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them who stumble at the word, being disobedient; whenceunto also they were appointed.

The words are taken from Isa. 8. 13. 14. Sanctify the Lord of hosts— and he shall be for a Stone of stumbling, and for a Rock of offence. From whence it is plain, that Jesus Christ is the Lord of hosts, and consequently the most high God.

The building of the church is Christ himself, and the people followed their leaders; and so Christ became to them a Stone of stumbling, and a Rock of offence, at which they stumbled, and hurt themselves; and in return he fell upon them as a mighty stone or rock, and punished them with destruction (Matt. 21. 44.) Whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but whosoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Learning. 1. All those that are disobedient, take offence at the word of God; They stumble at the word, being disobedient. They are offended with Christ himself, with his doctrine and the purity of his precepts; but the Jewish doctors more especially stumbled at the meanness of his appearance, and the proposal of trusting only to him for their justification before God. They could not but be brought to seek justification by faith, but as it were by the works of the law; for they stumbled at that stumbling-stone, Rom. 9. 32.

2. The same blessed Jesus, who is the Author of salvation to some, is to others the occasion of their sin and destruction. He is set for the rising and fall of many in Israel. He is not the author of their sin, but only the Occasion of it; their own disobedience makes them stumble at him, and reject him; which he punishes, as a judge, with destruction. Those who rejected him as a Saviour, will split upon him as a Rock.

3. God himself hath appointed everlasting destruction to all those who stumble at the word, being disobedient. All those who go on resolutely in their mortality and contempt of the gospel, are appointed to eternal destruction; and God from eternity knows who they are. 4. To see the Jews generally rejecting Christ, and multitudes in all ages slighting him, ought not to discourage us in our love and duty to him; for this had been foretold by the prophets long ago, and is a confirmation of our faith both in the scriptures and in the Messiah.

9. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people: that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.

The Jews were excelling tender of their ancient privileges, of being the only people of God, taken into a special covenant with him, and separated from all other nations; the apostle therefore says, "if we submit to the gospel-constitution, we shall lose all this, and stand upon the same level with the Gentiles." To this objection the apostle answers, 1. That if they did not submit, they were ruined, v. 7, 8. 2. That if they did submit, they should lose no real advantage, but continue still what they desired to be, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, &c.

Learn, (1.) All true Christians are a chosen generation; they all make one family, a sort and species of people distinct from the common world; of another spirit, principle, and practice; which they could never be, if they were not chosen in Christ to be such, and sanctified by his Spirit.

(2.) All the true servants of Christ are a royal priesthood; they are royal in their relation to God and Christ; in their power with God, and over themselves, and over their spiritual enemies; they are princes of the improvements and the excellency of their own spirits, and in their hopes and expectations; they are a royal priesthood, separated from sin and sinners, consecrated to God, and offering to God spiritual services and obligations acceptable to God through Jesus Christ.

(3.) All Christians, whereever they be, compose one holy nation; they are one nation, collected under one head together in the same manner and customs, and governed by the same laws. And they are a holy nation, because consecrated and devoted to God, renewed and sanctified by his Holy Spirit.

(4.) It is the honour of the servants of Christ, that they are God's peculiar people. They are the people of his acquisition, choice, care, and delight. These four dignities of all genuine Christians are not natural to them; for their first state is a state of horrid darkness, but they are effectually called out of darkness into a state of marvellous light, joy, pleasure, and prosperity; with this intent and view, that they should shew forth, by words and actions, the virtues and praises of him who hath called them.

10. Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

To make this people content, and thankful for the great mercies and dignities brought unto them by the gospel, the apostle advises them to compare their former and their present state. Time was, when they were not a people, nor had they obtained mercy, but were solemnly disclaimed and divorced; (Jer. 3. 8. Hos. 1. 6, 9.) but now they are taken in again to be the people of God, and have obtained mercy.

Learn, 1. The best people ought frequently to look back upon what they were in time past.

2. The people of God are the most valuable people in the world; all the rest are not a people; good for little.

3. To be brought into the number of the people of God is a very great mercy, and it may be obtained.

11. Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul;

Even the best of men, the chosen generation, the people of God, need an exhortation to abstain from the worst sins, which the apostle here proceeds most earnestly and affectionately to warn them against. Knowing the difficulty, and yet the importance of the duty, he uses his utmost interest in them; Dearly beloved, I beseech you. The duty is to abstain from, and to suppress, the first inclination or rise of fleshly lusts. Many of them proceed from the corruption of nature, which in their exercise depend upon the body, gratifying some sensual appetite, or inordinate inclination of the flesh. These Christians ought to avoid, considering:

1. The respect they have with God and good men; they are dearly beloved.

2. Their condition in the world: they are strangers and pilgrims, and should not impede their passage by giving into the wickedness and lusts of the country through which they pass.

3. The mischief and danger these sins do: "They war against the soul; and therefore your souls ought to war against them."

Learn, (1.) The grand mischief this sin does to man is: this sin "war against the soul;" it destroys the moral liberty of the soul; it degrades the soul; it weakens the soul by impairing its faculties; it robs the soul of its comfort and peace; it debases and destroys the dignity of the soul; hinders its present prosperity, and plunges it into everlasting misery.

(2.) Of all sorts of sin, none are more sinful to the soul than fleshly lusts. Carnal appetites, lewdness, and sensuality, are most odious to God, and destructive to man's soul. It is a sore judgment to be given up to them.

12. Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that, whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.

These Christian people are here exhorted to adorn their profession by an honest conversation. Their conversation in every turn, every instance and every action of their lives, ought to be honest; that is, good, lovely, decent, amiable, and without blame and that because they lived among the Gentiles, people of another religion, and who were invertebrate enemies to them, who did already slander them, and constantly spake evil of them as of evil-doers. "A clean, just, good conversation may not only stop their mouths, but may possibly be a means to bring them to glorify God, and turn to you, which they shall see you excel all others in good works. They now call you evil-doers; vindicate yourselves by good works, this is the way to convince them. There is a day of visitation coming, wherein God may call them by his word and his grace to repentance; and then they will glorify God, and applaud you, for your excellent conversation, Luke 1. 68. When the gospel shall come among them, and take effect, a good conversation will encourage them in their conversion, but an evil one will obstruct it."

Note, 1. A Christian profession should be attended with an honest conversation, Phil. 4. 8.
2. It is the common lot of the best Christians to be evil spoken of by wicked men.

3. Those that are under God's gracious visitation, immediately change their opinion of good people, glorifying God, and commending them, whom before they railed at as evil-doers.

13. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; 14. Or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well.

The general rule of a Christian conversation, is this, it must be honest; which it cannot be, if there be not a conscientious discharge of all relative duties: the apostle here begins to treat of those distinctly. Christians were not only reputed innovators in religion, but disturbers of the state; it was highly necessary therefore, that the apostle should settle the rules and measures of obedience to the civil magistrate, which he does here; where,

1. The duty required is submission, which contains loyalty and reverence to their persons, obedience to their just laws and commands, and subjection to legal penalties.

2. The persons or objects to whom this submission is due, are described.

1. More generally; every ordinance of man. Magistracy is certainly of divine right; but the particular form of government, the power of the magistrate, and the persons who are to execute this power, are of human institution, and are governed by the laws and constitutions of each particular country; and this is a general rule, binding in all nations, let the established form of government be what it will.

2. Particularly; to the king, as supreme; first in dignity and most eminent in degree; the king is a legal person, not a tyrant; or unto governors, deputies, proconsuls, rulers of provinces, who are sent by him, that is, commissioned by him to govern.

3. The reasons to enforce this duty, are,

1. For the Lord's sake, who has ordained magistracy for the good of mankind, who has required obedience and submission, (Rom. 13.) and whose honour is concerned in the dutiful behaviour of subjects to their sovereigns.

2. From the end and use of the magistrate's office, which is, to punish evil-doers, and to praise and encourage all them that do well. They were appointed for the good of societies; and where this end is not pursued, the fault is not in their institution, but their practice.

3. True religion is the best support of civil government; it requires submission for the Lord's sake, and for conscience sake.

2. All the punishments, and all the magistrates in the world, cannot hinder, but there will be evil-doers in it.

3. The best way the magistrate can take to discharge his own office, and to amend the world, is, to punish well and reward well.

15. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

Here is another reason why Christians should submit to the civil magistrate, because it is the will of God, and, consequently, their duty; and because it is the way to put to silence the malicious slanders of ignorant and foolish men.

Learn, 1. The will of God is, to a good man, the strongest reason for any duty.

2. Obedience to magistrates is a considerable branch of a Christian's duty; so is the will of God.

3. A Christian who is at all relations, to behave himself so as to put to silence the unreasonable reproaches of the most ignorant and foolish men.

4. Those who speak against religion and religious people, are ignorant and foolish.

16. As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God.

The Jews, from Deut. 17. 15. concluded, that they were bound to obey no sovereign, but one taken from among their own brethren; and the converted Jews thought, they were free from submission by their relation to Christ. To prevent these mistakes, the apostle tells the Christians that they were free; but from what? Not from duty and obedience to God's law, which requires subjection to the civil magistrate; they were free spiritually from the bondage of sin and Satan, and the ceremonial law; but they must not make their Christian liberty a cloak or covering for any wickedness, or the neglect of any duty toward God, or toward their superiors, but must still remember they were the servants of God.

Learn, 1. All the servants of Christ are free men; (John 8. 36.) they are free from Satan's dominion, the law's condemnation, the wrath of God, the unevenness of duty, and the terrors of death.

2. The servants of Jesus Christ ought to be very careful not to abuse their Christian liberty; they must not make it a cover or cloak for any wickedness against God, or disobedience to superiors.

The apostle concludes his discourse concerning the duty of subjects with four admirable precepts;

1. Honour all men. A due respect is to be given to all men; the poor are not to be despised; (Prov. 17. 5.) the wicked must be honoured, not for their wickedness, but for any other qualities, such as wit, prudence, courage, eminency of employment, or the heavy head; Abraham, Jacob, Samuel, the prophets, and the apostles, never scrupled to give due honour to bad men.

2. Love the brotherhood. All Christians are a fraternity, united to Christ the Head, alike disposed and qualified, nearly related in the same interest, having communion one with another, and going to the same home, they should therefore love one another with a spiritual affection.

3. Fear God with the highest reverence, duty, and submission; if this be wanting, none of the other three duties can be performed as they ought.

4. Honour the king, with that highest honour that is peculiarly due to him above other men.

18. Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

The case of servants wanted an apostolical determination as well as that of subjects, for they imagined that their Christian liberty set them free from their masters' authority, and to this the apostle answers, Servants, be subject. By servants, he means those who were strictly such, whether hired, or bought with money, or taken in the wars, or born in the house, or those who served by contract for a limited time, as apprentices; these he orders to be subject, to do their business faithfully and honestly, to conduct themselves, as inferiors ought, with reverence and affection, and to submit patiently to hardships and inconveniences; this subjection they owe to their masters, who have a right to their service; and that not only to the good and gentle, such as use them well, and abate somewhat of their right, but even to the crooked and perverse, who are scarcely to be pleased at all.

Learn, 1. A servant ought to conduct himself to their masters with submission, and fear of displeasing them.

2. The sinful misconduct of one relation does not justify the sinful behaviour of the other; the servant is bound to do his duty, though the master be sinful by his own misconduct.

3. Good people are to be meek and gentle to their servants, and inferiors.

19. For this is thank-worthy, if a man for conscience towards God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. 20. For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.

Our holy apostle shews his love and concern for the souls of poor servants, as well as for higher people; herein he ought to be imitated by all inferior ministers, who should distinctly apply their counsels to the lower, the meaner, the younger, and the poorer sort of their hearers, as well as others. Having charged them to be subject, he condescends to reason with them about it: if they were patient under their hardships, while they suffered unjustly, and continued doing their duty to their unbelieving and untoward masters, this would be acceptable to God, and he would reward all that they suffered for conscience towards him; but to be patient when they were justly chastised, this deserves no commendation at all; it is only doing well and suffering patiently for that, which is acceptable with God.

Learn, 1. There is no condition so mean, but a man may live conscientiously in it, and glorify God in it; the meanest servant may do so.

2. The most conscientious persons are very often the greatest sufferers: for conscience towards God they suffer wrongfully; they do well, and suffer for it; but these sorts of sufferers are praiseworthy; they do honour to God and to religion, and are accepted of him; and this is their highest support and satisfaction.

3. Deserved sufferings must be endured with patience: If ye are buffeted for your faults, ye must take it patiently. Sufferings in this world are not always pledges of our future happiness; if children, or servants are rude and unthankful, and suffer for it, this will neither be acceptable with God, nor procure the praise of men.

21. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps:

More reasons are given to encourage Christian servants to patience under unjust sufferings: 1. From their Christian calling and profession; henceunto were ye called. 2. From the example of Christ, who suffered for us, and so became our Example, that we should follow his steps. From whence learn,

(1.) Good Christians are a sort of people called to be sufferers, and therefore they must expect it; by the terms of Christianity they are bound to deny themselves, and take up the cross; they are called by the command of Christ, by the dispensations of Providence, by the preparations of divine grace, and, by the practice of Jesus Christ, they are bound to suffer, when thus called to it.

(2.) Jesus Christ suffered for you, or for us; it was not the Father that suffered, but he whom the Father sanctified, and sent into the world, for that end; it was both the body and soul of Christ that suffered, and he suffered for us, in our stead, and for our good, v. 24.

(3.) The sufferings of Christ should quiet us under the most unjust and cruel sufferings we meet with in the world; he suffered voluntarily, not for himself, but for us, with the utmost readiness, with perfect patience, from all quarters, and all this, though he was God-man; shall not we sinners, who deserve the worst, submit to the light afflictions of this life, which work for us unspeakable advantages afterward?

22. Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: 23. Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously:

The example of Christ's submission and patience is here explained and amplified; Christ suffered, 1. Wrongfully, and without cause; for he did no sin, he had no iniquity, no injustice or wrong to any one; he wrought no iniquity of any sort whatever; neither was guile found in his mouth; (Isa. 53. 9.) his words, as well as actions, were all sincere, just and right.

2. Patiently; when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when they blasphemed him, mocked him, called him foul names, he was dumb, and opened not his mouth; when they went further, to real injuries, beating, buffeting, and crowning him with thorns, he threatened not; but committed both himself and his cause to God that judgeth righteously, who would in time clear his innocence, and avenge him on his enemies.

Learn, (1.) Our blessed Redeemer was perfectly holy, and so free from sin, that no temptation, no provocation whatsoever, could extort from him so much as the least sinful or indecent word.

(2.) Provocations to sin can never justify the commission of it; the rudeness, cruelty, and injustice of enemies, will not justify Christians in reviling and revenge; the reasons for sin can never be so great, but we have always stronger reasons to avoid it.

(3.) The judgment of God will determine justly upon every man, and every cause; and thither we ought, with patience and resignation, to refer ourselves.

24. Who in his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes we were healed.

Lest any should think, from what is said, v. 21, 23, that Christ's death was designed only for an example of patience under sufferings, the apostle here adds a more glorious design and effect of it; Who his own self, &c. &c. Here, Note, 1. The person suffering, Jesus Christ, his own self, in his own body; the expression, his own self, is emphatical, and necessary to shew that he verified all the ancient prophecies, to distinguish him from the Levitical priests, (who offered the blood of others, but he by himself purged our sins, Heb. 1. 3.) and to exclude all others from participation with him in the work of man's redemption: it is added, in his own body, not that he suffered in his soul, (Matt. 26. 38.) but the sufferings of the soul were inward and concealed, when those of the body were visible, and more obvious to the consideration of these suffering servants, for whose sake this example is produced.
1. Peter.

The sufferings he underwent, were, stripes, wounds, and death, the death of the cross; servile and ignominious punishments!

3. The reason of his sufferings; he bare our sins; which teaches,

(1.) That Christ, in his suffering, stood charged with our sins, as one who had undertaken to put the way by the sacrifice of himself, Isa. 53. 6.

(2.) That he bare the punishment of them, and thereby satisfied divine justice.

(3.) That hereby he takes away our sins, and removes them away from us; as the scape-goat did typically bear the sins of the people on his head, and then carried them quite away, (Lev. 16. 21.) so the Lamb of God doth first bear our sins in his own body, and thereby take away the sin of the world, John 1. 29.

4. The fruits of Christ’s sufferings are, (1.) Our sanctification, consisting of the death, the mortification of sin, and a new holy life of righteousness; for both which we have an example, and powerful motives and abilities also, from the death and resurrection of Christ. (2.) Our justification; Christ was bruised and crucified as an expiatory Sacrifice, and by his stripes we are healed.

Learn, (1.) Jesus Christ bore the sins of all his people, and expiated them by his death upon the cross.

(2.) No man can depend safely upon Christ, as having borne his sin, and expiated his guilt, till he dies unto sin, and lives unto righteousness.

25. For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

The apostle concludes his advice to Christian servants, putting them in mind of the difference between their former and present condition. They were as sheep, going astray; which represents, 1. Man’s sin; he goes astray; it is his own act, he is not driven, but does voluntarily go astray. 2. His misery, he goes astray from the pasture, from the shepherd, and from the flock, and so exposes himself to innumerable dangers. 3. Here is the recovery of these by conversion; but are now returned. The word is passive, and shews at the return of the sinner is the effect of divine grace. This return is, from all their errors and wanderings, to Christ, who is the true careful Shepherd, that loves his sheep, and laid down his life for them; who is the most vigilant Pastor, and Bishop, or Overseer of souls.

(2.) Jesus Christ is the supreme Shepherd and Bishop of souls, who is always resident with his flock, and watchful over them.

(3.) Those that expect the love and care of this universal Pastor, must return to him; must die unto sin, and live unto righteousness.

CHAP. III.

Wherein the apostle describes the duties of husbands and wives one to another, beginning with the duty of the wife, v. 1. 7. He exhorts Christians to unity, love, compassion, peace, and patience under sufferings; to oppose the slanders of their enemies, not by returning evil for evil, or railing for railing, but by blessing; by a ready account of their faith and hope, and by keeping a good conscience, v. 8. 17. To encourage them to this, he proposes the example of Christ, who suffered, the just for the unjust, but yet punished the old world for their disobedience, and saved the few who were faithful in the days of Noah.

1. Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives; 2. While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear.

The apostle having treated of the duties of subjects to their sovereigns, and of servants to their masters, he comes now to explain the duties of wives to their husbands, lest the Christian matrons should imagine that the interest in all Christian privileges, excepted them from subjection to their Pagan or Jewish husbands; the apostle here tells them, that the duty of wives consists,

1. In subjection, or an affectionate submission to the will, and obedience to the just authority, of their own husbands; which obliging conduct would be the most likely way to win those disobedient and unbelieving husbands, who had rejected the word, or who attended to no other evidence of the truth of it, than what they saw in the prudent, peaceable, and exemplary conversation of their wives.

2. In a chaste conversation, which their unbelieving husbands would usually observe and attend to.

3. In fear, or reverence to their husbands, Eph. 5. 33.

Learn, (1.) Every distinct relation has its particular duties, which ministers ought to preach, and the people ought to understand.

(2.) A cheerful subjection, and a loving, reverential respect, are duties which Christian women owe their husbands, whether they be good or bad; these were due from Eve to Adam before the Fall, and are still required, though much more difficult now than when they were before, Gen. 3. 16. 1 Tim. 2. 11.

(3.) Though the design of the gospel is to win and gain souls to Christ Jesus, yet there are many so obstinate, that they will not be won by the word.

(4.) There is nothing more powerful, next to the word of God, to win people, than a good conversation, and the careful discharge of relative duties.

(5.) Irrreligion and infidelity do not dissolve the bonds, nor dispense with the duties, of civil relations; the wife must discharge her duty to her own husband, though be obey not the word.

(6.) Evil men are strict observers of the conversation of the professors of religion; their curiosity, envy, and jealousy, make them watch narrowly the ways and lives of good people.

(7.) A chaste conversation, attended with due and proper respect to every one, is an excellent means to win them to the faith of the gospel and obedience to the word.

3. Whose adornning let it not be that outward adorning of platting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel:

This rule relates to the dress of religious women; here are three sorts of ornaments forbidden; platting of hair, which was commonly used in those times by lusted women; wearing of gold, or ornaments made of gold, was practised by Rebecca, and Esther, and other religious women, but afterwards became the attire chiefly of harlots and wicked people; putting on of apparel is not absolutely forbidden, but only too much curiosity and costliness in apparel.

Learn, 1. Religious people should take care that all their external behaviour be answerable to their profession of Christianity; they must be holy in all manner of conversation.

2. The outward adorning of the body is very often sensual and excessive; for instance, when it is immoderate, and above your degree and style in a way; when you are proud of it, and puff yourself up with it; when you dress, designing to allure and tempt others; when your apparel is too rich, curious, or superfluous; when your fashions are fantastic, imitating the vanity and vanities of the worst people; and when they are immodest and wanton. The attire of a harlot never become a chaste Christian matron.

4. But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

Instead of the outward adorning of the body, the apostle directs Christian wives to put on such internal endowments as:

Note. 1. The part to be adorned; the hidden man of the heart; that is, the soul; the hidden, the inner man. Take care to adorn and beautify your souls rather than your bodies.

2. The ornament prescribed; it must, in general, be something not corruptible, that beautifies the soul, that is, the graces and virtues of God's Holy Spirit: the ornaments of the body are destroyed by the moth, and perish in the using; but the grace of God, the longer we wear it, the brighter and better it is: more especially, the finest ornament of Christian women, is, a meek and quiet spirit; a tractable easy temper of mind, void of passion, pride, and immoderate anger; discovering itself in a quiet, obliging behaviour towards their husband and families. "If the husband be harsh, and averse to religion, (which was the case of these good wives to whom the apostle gives this direction,) there is no way so likely to win him, as a prudent meek behaviour. However, a quiet spirit will make a good woman easy to herself, which, being visible to others, becomes an amiable ornament to a person in the eyes of the world.

3. The excellency of it; meekness and calmness of spirit are, in the sight of God, of great price; amiable in the sight of men, and precious in the sight of God.

Learn, (1.) A true Christian's chief care lies in the right ordering and commanding of his own spirit; where the hypocrite's work ends, there the true Christian's work begins.

(2.) The endowments of the inner man are the chief ornaments of a Christian; but especially a composed, calm, and quiet spirit, renders either man or woman beautiful and lovely.

5. For after this manner, in the old time, the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands; 6. Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.

The duties of Christian wives being in their nature difficult, the apostle enforces them by the example,

1. Of the holy women of old, who trusted in God; "Ye cannot pretend nothing of excuse from the weakness of your sex, but what they might; they lived in old time, and had less knowledge to inform them, and fewer examples to encourage them; yet in all their families they practised this duty; they were holy women, and therefore their example is obligatory; they trusted in God, and yet did not neglect their duty to man: the duties imposed upon you, of a quiet spirit, and of subjection to your own husbands, are not new, but what have ever been practised by the greatest and best women in the world."

2. Of Sara, who obeyed her husband, and follow-another, that they may not by their broils hinder the success of their prayers.

3. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous:

The apostle here passes from special to more general exhortations; he advises Christians to be all of one mind, to be unanimous in the belief of the same faith, and practice of the same duties of religion; and whereas the Christians at that time were many of them in a suffering condition, therefore he charges them to have compassion one of another, to love as brethren, to pity those who were in distress, and to be courteous to all. Hence, Christians should endeavour to be all of one mind in the great points of faith, in real affection, and in Christian practice; they should be like-minded one to another, according to Christ Jesus, (Rom. 15. 5.) not according to man's pleasure, but God's word.

2. Though Christians cannot be exactly of the same mind, yet they should have compassion one of another. Brethren is not to persecute or hate one another, but love one another with more than common affection; they should love as brethren.

3. Christianity requires pity to the distressed, and civility to all. He must be a flagrant sinner, or a vile apostate, who is not a proper object of civil courtesy, 1 Cor. 5. 11. 2 John 10. 11.

9. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing, knowing that we are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing.

The former direction teaches us how Christians and friends should treat one another; this verse instructs us how to behave towards enemies. The apostle knew that Christians would be hated and evil-entreated of all men for Christ's sake; therefore he warns them not to return evil for evil, or railing for railing; "But, on the contrary, when they rail at you, do you bless them; when they give you evil words, do you give them good ones; for Christ has both by his word and example called you to bless them that curse you, and has settled a blessing on you as your everlasting inheritance, though you were unworthy." To bear evils patiently, and to return good for evil, is the way to obtain this blessing of God.

Learn, 1. To render evil for evil, or railing for railing, is a sinful unchristian practice; the magistrate may punish evil-doers, and private men may seek a legal remedy when they are offended; but private revenge by duelling, scolding, or secret mischief, is forbidden, Prov. 26. 22. Luke 6. 27. Rom. 12. 17. 13. 1 Thess. 5. 15. To rail is to excite another in bitter, fierce, and reproachful terms; but for ministers to rebuke sharply, and to preach earnestly against the sins of the times, is not railing; all the prophets and apostles practised it, Isa. 56. 10. Zeph. 3. 3. Acts 20. 29.

2. The laws of Christ oblige us to return blessing for railing, (Matt. 5. 44.) "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that persecute you. You must not justify them in their sin, but you must do for your enemies all that justice requires or charity commands." We must feel, fear for, and love them who rail at us.

3. A Christian's railing, as it invests him with glorious privileges, so it obliges him to difficult duties.

4. All the true servants of God shall infallibly inherit a blessing; they have it already in a great degree, but the full possession of it is reserved to another state and world.

10. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: 11. Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it.

We have here an excellent prescription for a comfortable happy life in this quarrelsome ill-natured world, taken from Ps. 34. 12—14. "If you earnestly desire that your life should be long, and your days peaceable and prosperous, keep your tongue from reviling, evil-speaking and slandering; and your lips from lying, deceit and dissimulation; avoid doing any real damage or hurt to your neighbour, but be ever ready to do good, and to overcome evil with good; though it retire from you; this will be the best way to dispose people to speak well of you, and live peaceably with you."

Learn, 1. Good people under the Old and New Testament were obliged to the same moral duties; to refrain the tongue from evil, and the lips from guile, was a duty in David's time as well as now.

2. It is lawful to consider temporal advantages as motives and encouragements to religious practice.

3. The practice of religion, particularly the right government of the tongue, is the best way to make this life comfortable and prosperous; a sincere, inoffensive, discreet tongue, is a singular means to pass us peaceably and comfortably through the world.

4. The avoiding of evil, and doing of good, is the way to contentment and happiness both here and hereafter.

5. It is the duty of Christians not only to embrace peace when it is offered, but to seek and pursue it when it is denied: peace with societies, and peace with particular persons, in opposition to division and contention, is what is here intended.

12. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.

The allegation is continued from Ps. 34. Christians need not fear that such patient inoffensive behaviour as is prescribed, 10, 11, will invite and encourage the cruelty of their enemies, for God will thereby be engaged on their side: For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous; he takes special notice of them, exercises a providential constant government over them, and bears a special respect and affection to them; his ears are open to their prayers; so that if any injuries be offered to them, they have this remedy, they may complain of it to their heavenly Father, whose ears are always attentive to the prayers of his servants in their distresses, and who is certain to aid them against their enemies; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil; his anger and displeasure and revenge will pursue them; for he is more an enemy to wicked persecutors than men are.

Learn, 1. We must not in all cases adhere to the express words of scripture, but study the sense and meaning of them, otherwise we shall be led into errors and absurdities; we must not imagine that God hath eyes, and ears and face, though these are the express words of the scripture.

2. God hath a special care and paternal affection towards all his righteous people.

4. Though God is infinitely good, yet he abhors impatient sinners, and will pour out his wrath upon them that do evil; he will do himself right, and do all the world justice; and his goodness is no obstruction to his doing so.

13. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? 14. But and ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled;

The patient humble behaviour of Christians, recommended above, is here urged again from two considerations: 1. This will be the best and surest way to prevent suffering; for who is he that will harm you? This, I suppose, is spoken of Christians in an extraordinary case, not in the heat of persecution; ordinarily, there will be but few so disabolical and impious as to harm them, who live so innocently and usefully as you do. 2. This is the way to impaire sufferings; "If you be followers of that which is good, and yet suffer, this is suffering for righteousness sake; and that will be your glory and your happiness, as it entitles you to the blessing promised by Christ; (Matt. 5. 10) therefore you need not be afraid of anything they can do to strike you with terror, neither be much troubled or concerned about the rage or force of your enemies."

Learn, 1. To follow always that which is good, is the best course we can take to keep out of harm's way.

2. To suffer for righteousness sake is the honour and happiness of a Christian; to suffer for the cause of truth, a good conscience, or any part of a Christian's duty, is a great honour; the delight of it is greater than the torment, the honour more than the disgrace, and the gain much greater than the loss.

3. Christians have no reason to be afraid of the threats or rage of any of their enemies; "Your enemies are God's enemies, his face is against them, his power is above them, they are the objects of his curse, and can do nothing to you but by his permission, therefore trouble not yourselves about them."

15. But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear:

Instead of terrifying yourselves with the fear of men, be sure to sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; let him be your Fear, and let him be your Dread, Isa. 8. 12. 13. But fear not the body, but fear him that can destroy body and soul, Luke 12. 4.

We sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, when we with sincerity and fervency adore him; when our thoughts of him are awful and reverend; when we rely upon his power, trust to his faithfulness, submit to his wisdom, imitate his holiness, and give him the glory due to his most illustrious perfections. We sanctify God before others, when our deportment is such as invites and encourages others to glorify and honour him; both are required, Lev. 10. 3. "When this principle is hid deep into your hearts, the next thing, as to men, is, to be always ready, that is, able and willing, to give an answer, or make an apology or defence, of the faith you profess, and that to every man, that asketh a reason of your hope, what sort of hope you have, for which you suffer such hardships in the world."

Learn. 1. An awful sense of the divine perfections is the best antidote against the fear of sufferings; did we fear God more, we should certainly fear men less.

2. The hope and faith of a Christian are defensible against all the world; there may be a good reason given for religion, it is not a fancy, but a rational scheme revealed from heaven, suited to all the necessities of miserable sinners, and centering entirely in the glory of God through Jesus Christ.

3. Every Christian is bound to answer and apologize for the hope that is in him: Christians should have a reason ready for their Christianity, that it may appear they are not actuated either by folly or fancy; this defence may be necessary more than once or twice, so that Christians should be always prepared to make it, either to the magistrate, if he demand it, or to any inquisitive serious man, who desires to know it for his information or improvement.

4. These confessions of our faith ought to be made with meekness and fear; apologies for our religion ought to be made with meekness and fear, in the fear of God, with jealousy over ourselves, and reverence to our superiors.

16. Having a good conscience; that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ.

17. For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.

The confession of a Christian's faith cannot credibly be supported but by the two means here specified—a good conscience, and a good conversation. Conscience is good, when it does its office well, when it is kept pure and uncorrupt, and clear from guilt; then it will justify you, though men accuse you. A good conversation in Christ is a holy life, according to the doctrine and example of Christ; "Look well to your conscience, and to your conversation; and then, though they speak evil of you, and falsely accuse you as evil-doers, you will clear yourselves, and bring them to shame. Perhaps you may think it hard to suffer for well-doing, for keeping a good conscience, and a good conversation; but be not discouraged; for it is better for you, though worse for your enemies, that you suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.

Learn. 1. The most conscientious persons cannot escape the censures and slanders of evil men; they will speak evil of them, as of evil-doers, and charge them with crimes which their very souls abhor; Christ and his apostles were so used.

2. A good conscience and a good conversation are the best means to secure a good name; these give a solid reputation, and a lasting one.

3. False accusation generally turns to the accuser's shame, by discovering at last the accuser's indiscretion, injustice, falsehood, and uncharitableness.

4. It is sometimes the will of God that good people should suffer for well-doing, for their honesty and for their faith.

5. As well-doing sometimes exposes a good man to suffering, so evil-doing will not exempt an evil man from it. The apostle supposes here that a man may suffer for both. If the sufferings of good people for well-doing be so good, and that will the sufferings of wicked people be for evil-doing? It is a sad condition that that person is in, upon whom sin and suffering meet together at the same time; sin makes sufferings to be extreme, unprofitable, comfortless, and destructive.

18. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

The example of Christ is here proposed as an argument for patience under sufferings, the strength of which will be discerned, if we consider the several points contained in the words; observe therefore,

1. Jesus Christ himself was not exempted from sufferings in this life, though he had no guilt of his own, and could have declined all suffering if he had pleased.

2. The reason or meritorious cause of Christ's suffering was the sins of men; Christ suffered for sins. The sufferings of Christ were a true and proper punishment; this punishment was suffered, to expiate and to make an atonement for sin; and it extends to all sins.

3. In the case of our Lord's suffering, it was the just suffering for the unjust; he substituted himself in our room and stead, and bore our iniquities; he that knew no sin, suffered instead of them that knew no righteousness.

4. The merit and perfection of Christ's sacrifice were such, that for him to suffer once was enough; the legal sacrifices were repeated from day to day, and from year to year; but the sacrifice of Christ, once offered, purges away sin, Heb. 7. 27. — 9. 26, 28. 10. 13, 14.

5. The blessed end and design of our Lord's sufferings, were, to bring us to God, to reconcile us to God, to give us access to the Father, to render us and our services acceptable, and to bring us to eternal glory, Eph. 2. 13, 18. — 2. 12. Hebr. 10. 21, 22.

6. The issue and event of Christ's suffering, as to himself, were these, he was put to death in his human nature, but he was quickened and raised again by the Spirit.

Now if Christ was not exempted from sufferings, why should Christians expect it? If he suffered, to expiate sins, why should not we be content when our sufferings are only for trial and correction, but not for expiation? If he, though perfectly just, why should not we, who are all criminals? If he once suffered, and then entered into glory, shall not we be patient under trouble, since it will be a little time and we shall follow him to glory? If he suffered, to bring us to God, shall not we submit to difficulties, since they are of so much use to quicken us in our return to God, and in the performance of our duty to him?

19. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; 20. Which sometime were disobedient, when the once suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water.

Here the apostle passes from the example of Christ to that of the old world, and sets before the Jews, to whom he wrote, the different event of those who believed and obeyed Christ preaching by Noah, from them that continued disobedient and unbelieving; intimating to the Jews, that they were under a like sentence. God would not wait much longer upon them; they had now an offer of mercy, those that accepted of it should be saved, but those who rejected Christ and the gospel should be as certainly destroyed as ever the disobedient in the times of Noah were.

Observe here, 1. The preacher; Christ Jesus, who interested himself in the affairs of the church and of the world, ever since he was first promised to Adam, Gen. 3. 15. He went, not by a local motion, but by special operation, as God is frequently said to move, Gen. 11. 5. Mic. 1. 3. Hos. 3. 15. He went and preached, by his Spirit driving with them, and inspiring and enabling Enoch and Noah to plead with them, and preach righteousness to them, as 2 Pet. 2. 5.

2. The hearers; because they were dead and disinclined when the apostle speaks of them, therefore he properly calls them spirits now in prison; not that they were in prison when Christ preached to them, as the vulgar Latin translation and the popish expositors pretend.

3. The sin of these people; they were disobedient, that is, rebellious, unpersuadable and unbelieving, as the word signifies; this their sin is aggravated from the patience and long-suffering of God, which once waited upon them 120 years together, while Noah was preparing the ark, and by that, as well as by his preaching, giving them fair warning of what was coming upon them.

4. The event of all; their bodies were drowned, and their spirits cast into hell, which is called a prison; Matt. 5. 25. 2 Pet. 2. 4, 5 but Noah and his family, who believed and were obedient, were saved in the ark.

Learn, (1.) God takes exact notice of all the means and advantages that people in all ages have had for the salvation of their souls; it is put to the account of the old world, that Christ offered them his help, sent his Spirit, gave them fair warning by Noah, and waited a long time for their amendment.

(2.) Though the patience of God wait long upon sinners, yet it will expire at last; it is beneath the majesty of the great God always to wait upon man in vain.

(3.) The spirits of disobedient sinners, as soon as they are out of their bodies, are committed to the prison of hell, from whence there is no redemption.

(4.) The way of the most is neither the best, the wisest, nor the safest way to follow: better to follow the eight in the ark than the eight millions drowned by the flood and damned to hell.

21. The like figure whereunto, even baptism, doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ:

Noah's salvation in the ark upon the water, prefigured the salvation of all good Christians in the church by baptism; that temporal salvation by the ark was a type, the antitype whereunto is the eternal salvation of believers by baptism; to prevent mistakes about which, the apostle does, 1. Declare that he means a saving baptism; not the outward ceremony of washing with water, which, in itself, does no more than put away the filth of the flesh, but it is that baptism wherein there is a faithful answer or restitution of a resolved good conscience, engaging to believe in, and be entirely devoted to, God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, renewing at the same time the flesh, the world and the Devil. The baptismal covenant, made and kept, will certainly save us. Washing is the visible sign of this is the thing signified. 2. The apostle shews that the efficacy of baptism to salvation depends not upon the work done, but upon the resurrection of Christ; which supposes his death, and is the foundation of our faith and hope, to which we are rendered conformable by dying to sin, and rising again to holiness and newness of life.

Learn, (1.) The sacrament of baptism, rightly received, is a means and a pledge of salvation. Baptism now saveth us. God is pleased to convey his blessings to us in and by his ordinances, Acts 2. 38 — 33. 22. 16.

(2.) The external participation of baptism will save no man without an answerable good conscience and conversation. There must be the answer of a good conscience toward God. — Obj. Infants cannot make such an answer, and therefore ought not to be baptized. Answer, The true circumcision was that of the heart and of the spirit, (Rom. 2. 29.) which children were no more capable of than, our infants are capable of making this answer now; yet they were allowed circumcision at eight days old. The infants of the Christian church therefore may be admitted to the ordinance with as much reason as the infants of the Jewish, unless they are barred from it by some express prohibition of Christ.

22. Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

The apostle, having mentioned the death of Christ, (v. 18.) and his resurrection, (v. 21.) proceeds to speak of his ascension, and sitting at the right hand of the Father, as a subject fit to be considered by these believers for their comfort in their suffering condition. If the advancement of Christ was so glorious after his deep humiliation, let not his followers despair, but expect that after these short distresses they shall be advanced to transcendent joy and glory.

Learn, 1. Jesus Christ, after he had finished his labours and his sufferings upon earth, ascended triumphant into heaven, of which see Acts 1. 9—11. Mark 16. 19. He went to heaven, to receive his own acquired crown and glory, (John 17. 5.) to finish that part of his mediatorial work which could not be done on earth, and make intercession for his people; to demonstrate the fulness of his satisfaction; to take possession of heaven for his people, to prepare mansions for them, and to send down the Comforter, who was to be the First-fruits of his intercession, John 16. 7.

2. Upon his ascension into heaven, Christ is enthroned at the right hand of the Father. His being said to sit there, imports absolute rest and cessation from all further troubles and sufferings, and an advancement to the highest personal dignity and sovereign power.

3. Angels, authorities, and powers, are all made subject to Christ Jesus; all power in heaven and earth, to command, to give law, issue orders, and pronounce a final sentence, is committed to Jesus, God-man, which his enemies will find to their everlasting sorrow and confusion, but his servants to eternal joy and satisfaction.

CHAP. IV.

The work of a Christian is twofold—doing the will of God, and suffering his pleasure. This chapter directs us in both. The duties we are here instructed to employ ourselves in, are, the mortification of sin, living to God, sobriety, prayer, charity, hospitality, and the best improvement of our talents, which the apostle presses upon Christians from the consideration of the time they have lost in their sins, and the long duration of all things, v. 1. and 2. The directions for sufferings, are, that we should not be surprised at them, but rejoice in them, only take care not to suffer as evil-doers. He intimates, that their trials were near at hand, that their way was not only danger as well as their bodies; and the best way to preserve their souls, is, to commit them to God in well-doing.

1. FORASMUCH then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin.

The apostle here draws a new inference from the consideration of Christ's sufferings. As he had before made use of it to persuade to patience in suffering, so here he considers it as a method of grace. The consequence or inference is, "Arm and fortify yourselves likewise with the same mind, courage, and resolution,"

The word flesh in the former part of the verse signifies Christ's human nature, but in the latter part it signifies man's corrupt nature. So the sense is, "As Christ suffered in his human nature, do you, according to your baptismal vow and profession, make your corrupt nature suffer, by putting to death the body of sin by self-denial and mortification; if you do thus suffer in the flesh, or make the flesh suffer, you will be conformable to Christ in his death and resurrection, and will resemble him."

Learn, 1. Some of the strongest and best arguments against all sorts of sin are taken from the sufferings of Christ. All sympathy and tenderness for Christ as a sufferer are lost if you do not put away sin. He died, to destroy it; and though he could cheerfully submit to the worst sufferings, yet he could never submit to the least sin.

2. The beginning of all true mortification lies in the mind; not in penances and hardships upon the body. The mind of man is carnal, full of cunning; the understanding is darkened, being alienated from the life of God, Eph. 4. 18. Man is not a sincere creature, but partial, blind, and wicked, till he be renewed and sanctified by the regenerating grace of God.

2. That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

Here the apostle explains what he means by being dead to sin, and ceasing from sin. Negatively, a Christian ought no longer to live the rest of his time in the flesh, to the sinful lusts and corrupt desires of carnal wicked men; but positively, he ought to conform himself to the revealed will of the holy God.

Learn, 1. The lusts of men are the springs of all their wickedness, Jam. 1. 15, 14. Let occasional temptations be what they will, they could not prevail, were it not for men's own corruptions.

2. All good Christians make the will of God, not their own lusts or desires, the rule of their lives and actions.

3. True conversion makes a marvellous change in the heart and life of every one who partakes of it. It brings a man off from all his old, fashionable, and delightful lusts, and from the common ways and views of the world, to the will of God. It alters the mind, judgment, affections, way, and conversation of every one who has experienced it.

3. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banqueting, and abominable idolatries:

Here the apostle argues from experience. "It is but just, equal, and reasonable, that as you have hitherto to all the former part of your life served sin and Satan, so you should now serve the living God." Though these were Jews to whom the apostle writes, yet living among the Gentiles, they had learned their way.

Learn, 1. When a man is truly converted, it is very grievous to him to think how the time past of his life has been spent; the hazard he has run so many years; the mischief he has done to others; the dishonesty done to God, and the loss he has sustained, are very afflicting to him.

2. While the will of man is unsanctified and corrupt, he walks continually in wicked ways; he makes them his choice and delight, his work and business, and he makes a bad condition daily worse and worse.

3. One sin, allowed, draws on another. Here are six named, and they have a connexion and dependence one upon another. (1.) Lasciviousness or wantonness, expressed in looks, gesture, or behaviour, Rom. 13. 13. (2.) Lusts, acts of lewdness, such as whoredom and adultery. (3.) Excess of wine, though short of drunkenness, an immediate use of it, to the prejudice of health or business, is here condemned. (4.) Revellings, or luxurious feastings, too frequent, too full, or too expensive. (5.) Banquetings, by which is meant gluttony, or excess in eating. (6.) Abominable idolatry; the idol-worship of the Gentiles was attended with lewdness, drunkenness, gluttony, and all sorts of brutality and cruelty; and these Jews living long among them were, of some at least, debauched and corrupted by such practices.

4. It is a Christian's duty not only to abstain from what is grossly wicked, but also from those things that are generally the occasions of sin, or carry the appearance of evil. Excess of wine and immediate fasting is forbidden as well as lust and idolatry.

4. Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you:

Here you have the visible change wrought in those who in the foregoing verse were represented as having been in the former part of their life very wicked. They no longer run in the same courses, or with the same companions, as they used to do. Hereupon observe the conduct of their wicked acquaintance toward them.

1. They think it strange, they are surprised and wonder at it, is it something new and unusual, that their old friends should be so much altered, and not run with as much violence as they used to do to the same excess of riot, to the same sottish excesses and luxury which before they had greedily and madly followed.

2. They speak evil of them. Their surprise carries them to blasphemy. They speak evil of their persons, of the way, their religion, and their God.

Learn, (1.) That they that are once really converted, will not return to their former course of life, though ever so much tempted by the frowns or flatteries of others to do so. Neither persuasions nor reproaches will prevail with them to be or to do as they were wont to do.

(2.) The temper and behaviour of true Christians seem very strange to ungodly men—that they should despise that which every one else is fond of; that they should believe many things which to others seem incredible; that they should delight in what is irksome and tedious, be zealous where they have no visible interest to serve, and depend so much upon hope.

(3.) The best actions of religious people cannot escape the censures and slanders of those who are irreligious. Those actions which cost a good man the most pains, hazard, and self-denial, shall be most censured by the uncharitable and ill-natured world; they will speak evil of good people, though they themselves reap the fruits of their charity, piety, and goodness.

5. Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

For the comfort of the servants of God, it is here added, that all wicked people, especially those who speak evil of those who are not as good as themselves, shall give an account, and be put to give a reason of their behaviour, to him who is ready to judge, that is both able and duly authorized, and who will ere long judge and pass sentence upon all who shall then be found alive, and all such as being dead shall then be raised again, Jam. 5. 8, 9. 2 Pet. 3. 9.

Learn, The malignant world shall in a little time give an account to the great God of all their evil speeches against his people, Jude 14, 15. They will soon be called to a sad account for all their curses, their foolish jests, their slanders and falselbows, adhering to the faithful people of God.

6. For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit.

Some understand this difficult place thus: For this cause was the gospel preached to all the faithful of old, that are now dead in Christ, that thereby they might be taught and encouraged to bear the unrighteous judgments and persecutions which the rage of men put upon them in the flesh, but might live in the Spirit unto God. Others take the expression, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, in a spiritual sense; thus; The gospel was preached to them, to judge them, commend them, and reprove them, for the corruption of their natures, and the viciousness of their lives; while they lived after the manner of the heathen, or the mere natural man; and that, having thus mortified their sins, they might live according to God, a new and spiritual life. Take it thus; and thence,

Learn, 3. The mortifying of our sins and living to God are the expected effects of the gospel preached unto us.

2. God will certainly reckon with all those who have had the gospel preached unto them, but without these good effects produced by it. God is ready to judge all those who have received his gospel in vain.

It is no matter how we are judged according to men in the flesh, if we do but live according to God in the Spirit.

7. But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

We have here an awful position or doctrine, and an inference drawn from it. The position is, that the end of all things is at hand. "The miserable destruction of the Jewish church and nation foretold by our Saviour, is now very near; consequently, the time of their persecution and your sufferings is but very short. Your own life and that of your enemies will soon come to their utmost period. Nay, the world itself will not continue very long. The confusion will then end to it; and all things must be swallowed up in an endless eternity. The inference is, Ye therefore sober. Let the frame and temper of your minds be grave, stayed, and solid; and observe strict temperance and sobriety in the use of all worldly enjoyments. Do not suffer yourselves to be caught with your former sins and temptations, v. 5. And watch unto prayer. Take care that you be continually in a calm, sober disposition, fit for prayer; and that you be frequent in prayers, lest this end come upon you unawares," Luke 21. 34. Matt. 26. 40, 41.

Learn, 1. The consideration of our approaching end is a powerful argument to make us sober in all worldly matters, and earnest in religious affairs.

2. They who would pray to purpose, must watch unto prayer. They must watch over their own hearts, lives, and unworthy dispositions, and do their duty in the best manner they can.

3. The right ordering of the body is of great use to promote the good of the soul. When the appetites and inclinations of the body are restrained and governed by God's word and true reason, and the interests of the body are submitted to the interests and necessities of the soul; then it is not the soul's enemy, but its friend and helper.
8. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

Here is a noble rule in Christianity. The grace recommended is charity among yourselves. Christians ought to love one another; which implies an affection to their persons, a desire of their welfare, and a hearty endeavour to promote it. This mutual affection must not be cold, but fervent, that is, sincere, strong and lasting. This sort of earnest affection is recommended above all things; which shews the importance of it, Col. 3. 14. It is greater than faith or hope, 1 Cor. 13. 13. One excellent effect of it is, that it will cover a multitude of sins.

Learn, 1. There ought to be in all Christians a more fervent charity towards one another, than towards other men; have charity among yourselves. He does not say, for pagans, for idolaters, or for apostates, but among yourselves. Let brotherly love continue, Heb. 13. 1. There is a special relation between all sincere Christians, and a particular amableness and good in them, which require special affection.

2. It is not enough for Christians not to bear malice, or to have common respect for one another, they must intensively and fervently love each other.

3. It is the property of true charity to cover a multitude of sins. It inclines people to forgive and forget offences against themselves; to cover and conceal the sins of others, rather than aggravate them and spread them abroad. It teaches us to love those who are but weak, and who have been guilty of many things before their conversion; and it prepares for mercy at the hand of God, who hath promised to forgive them that forgive others, Matt. 6. 14.

9. Use hospitality one to another, without grudging.

The hospitality here required is, a free and kind entertainment of strangers and travellers. The proper objects of a Christian's hospitality, are, one another. The nearness of their relation, and the necessity of their condition, in those times of persecution and distress, obliged Christians to be hospitable one to another. Sometimes Christians were spoiled of all they had, and were driven away to distant countries for safety. In this case they must starve, if their fellow-Christians would not receive them. Therefore it was a wise and necessary rule which the apostle here laid down. It is elsewhere commanded, Heb. 13. 1. Rom. 12. 13. The manner of performing this duty, is this; it must be done in an easy, kind, handsomely manner, without grudging or grumbling at the expense or trouble.

Learn, 1. Christians ought not only to be charitable, but hospitable, one to another.

2. Whatever a Christian does by way of charity or of hospitality, he ought to do it cheerfully, and without grudging, freely gave you received, freely give.

10. As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

Here the apostle gives direction about the improvement of talents. The rule is, that whatever gift, ordinary or extraordinary; whatever power, able it be, every Christian doing good is given to us, we should minister, or do service, with the same one another; accounting ourselves not masters, but only stewards of the manifold grace, or the various gifts of God.

Learn, 1. Whatever ability we have of doing good, we must own it to be the gift of God, and ascribe it to his grace.

2. Whatever gifts we have received, we ought to look upon them as received for the use one another. We must not assume them to ourselves, or hide them in a napkin, but do service with them one another in the best manner we are able.

3. In receiving and using the manifold gifts of God, we must look upon ourselves as stewards only, and act accordingly. The talents we are intrusted with, are our Lord's goods, and must be employed as he directs. And it is required in a steward, that he be found faithful.

11. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ; to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

The apostle exemplifies his direction about gifts in two particulars—speaking and ministering; concerning which he gives these rules. 1. If any man, whether a minister in public or a Christian in private conference, speak or teach, he must do it as the oracles of God; which direct us as to the matter of our speech. What Christians in private, or ministers in public, teach and speak, must be the pure doctrine of God; and ordain to be the oracles of God. As to the manner of speaking, it must be with the seriousness, reverence, and solemnity, that become these holy and divine oracles.

2. If any man minister, either as a deacon distributing the alms of the church, and taking care of the poor, or as a private person, by charitable gifts and contributions, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth. He who has received plenty and ability from God, ought to minister plentifully; and according to his ability. These rules ought to be followed, and practised for this end; that God in all things, in all your gifts, ministrations, and services, may be glorified; that others may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven; (Matt. 5. 16.) through Jesus Christ, who has procured and given these gifts to men, (Eph. 4. 8.) and through whom alone we and our services are accepted of God; (Heb. 13. 15.) to whom, Jesus Christ, be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Learn, (1.) It is the duty of Christians in private, as well as ministers in public, to speak to one another of the things of God, Mal. 3. 16. Eph. 4. 29. Ps. 145. 10—12.

(2.) It highly concerns all preachers of the gospel to keep close to the word of God, and to treat that word as becomes the oracles of God.

(3.) Christians must not only do the duties of their place, but they must do it with vigour, and according to the best of their abilities. The nature of a Christian's work, which is high work and hard work, the goodness and kindness of the Master, and the excellency of the reward, all require that our endeavours should be serious and vigorous; and that whatever we are called to do for the honour of God and the good of others, we should do it with all our might.

(4.) In all the duties and services of life, we should aim at the glory of God as our chief end; all other views must be subservient to that, which would sanctify our common actions and affairs, 1 Cor. 10. 31.

(5.) God is not glorified by any thing we do, if we do not offer it to him through the mediation and merits of Jesus Christ. God in all things must be glorified through Jesus Christ, who is the only Way to the Father.

(6.) The apostle's adoration of Jesus Christ, and ascribing unlimited and everlasting praise and dominion to him, prove that Jesus Christ is the most high God over all blessed for evermore. Amen.

12 Beloved, think it not strange cou-erning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: 13. But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

The frequent repetition of counsel and comfort to Christians, considered as sufferers, in every chapter of this epistle, shews, that the greatest danger these new converts were in, arose from the persecutions to which their embracing of Christianity exposed them. The good behaviour of Christians under sufferings, is the most difficult part of their duty, but yet necessary both for the honour of Christ and their own comfort: and therefore the apostle, having exhibited them in the former part of this chapter to the great duty of mortification, comes here to direct them in the necessary duty of patience under suffering. An unfortified spirit is very unfit to bear trials.

Observe, 1. The apostle's kind manner of address to these poor despised Christians; they were his beloved.

2. His advice to them, relating to their sufferings, which is, that they should not think them strange, nor be surprised at them, as if some unexpected event befell them; for though they be sharp and fiery, yet they are designed only to try, not to ruin them; to try their sincerity, strength, patience, and trust in God.

On the contrary, they ought rather to rejoice under their sufferings, because their's may properly be called Christ's sufferings. They are of the same kind, and for the same cause, that Christ suffered; they make us conformable to him; he suffers in them, and feels our infirmities; and if we be partakers of his sufferings, we shall also be made partakers of his glory, and shall meet him with exceeding joy at his great appearing to judge his enemies, and crown his faithful servants, 2 Thess. 1. 7, &c.

Learn, 1. True Christians love and own the children of God in their lowest and most distressing circumstances. The apostle owns these poor afflicted Christians, and calls them his beloved. True Christians never look more amiable one to another than in their adversities.

2. There is no reason for Christians to think strange, or to wonder, at the unkindnesses and persecutions of the world, because they are forewarned of them. Christ himself endured them; and forsaking all, denying ourselves, and bearing the cross, are the terms upon which Christ accepts of us to be his disciples.

3. Christians ought not only to be patient, but to rejoice, in their sharpest and sorest sufferings for Christ; because they are tokens of divine favour; they promote the gospel, and prepare for glory. They who rejoice in their sufferings for Christ, shall eternally triumph and rejoice with him in glory.

14. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

From the fiery trial the apostle descends to a lower degree of persecution—that of the tongue by slander and reproach. He supposes this sort of suffering would fall to their lot: they would be reviled, evil spoken of, and slandered for the name or sake of Christ. To this case he adds, Happy are ye, the reason of which is, "Because ye have the Spirit of God with you, to fortify and comfort you; and the Spirit of God is also the Spirit of glory, that will carry you through all, bring you off gloriously, and prepare and seal you up for eternal glory. This glorious Spirit resteth upon you, resideth with you, dwelleth in you, supporteth you, and is pleased with you; and is not this an unspeakable privilege? By your patience and fortitude in suffering, by your dependence upon the promises of God, and adhering to the word which the Holy Spirit hath revealed, he is on your part glorified; but by the contempt and reproaches cast upon you the Spirit itself is evil spoken of and blasphemed.

Learn, 1. The best men and the best things usually meet with reproaches in the world. Jesus Christ and his followers, the Spirit of God and the gospel, are all evil-spoken of.

2. The happiness of good people not only consists with, but even flows from, their afflictions; Happy are ye; for the Spirit of God, &c.

3. That man who hath the Spirit of God resting upon him, cannot be miserable, let his afflictions be ever so great; Happy are ye; for the Spirit of God, &c.

4. The blasphemies and reproaches which evil men cast upon good people, are taken by the Spirit of God as cast upon himself; On their part he is evil-spoken of.

3. When good people are viliified for the name of Christ, his Holy Spirit is glorified in them.

15. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy body in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf.

One would think such a caution as this needless to such an excellent set of Christians as these were. But their enemies charged them with these and other foul crimes; therefore the apostle, when he was setting the rules of the Christian religion, thought these cautious necessary, forbidding every one of them to hurt the life or the estate and property of any one, or to do any sort of evil, or, without call and necessity, to play the bishop in another man's charge, or busy himself in other men's matters. To this caution he adds a direction, that if any man suffer for the cause of Christianity, and with a patient Christian spirit, he ought not to account it a shame, but an honour to him; and it ought to glorify God who hath thus dignified him.

Learn, 1. The best of men need to be warned against the worst of sins.

2. There is very little comfort in sufferings, when we bring them upon ourselves by our own sin and folly. It is not the suffering, but the cause, that makes the martyr.

3. We have reason to thank God for the honour, if he calls us out to suffer for his truth and gospel, for any of the doctrines or duties of Christianity.

17. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?

The usual method of Providence has been this; When God brings great calamities and sore judgments upon whole nations, he generally begins with his own people, Isa. 10. 12. Jer. 25. 29. Ezek. 9. 6. "Such a time of universal calamity is now at hand, which was foretold by our Saviour, Matt. 24. 9, 10. This rends the heart, and all the foregoing exhortations to patience necessary for you. And you have two considerations to support you." 1. "That these judgments will but begin with you that are God's house and family, and will soon be over; your trials and corrections will not last long." 2. "Your troubles will be but light and short, in comparison of what shall befall the wicked world; your own countrymen the Jews, and the infidels and idolatrous people among whom you live. What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?"

Learn, (1.) The best of God's servants, his own household, have so much anissim in them, as renders it fit and necessary that God should sometimes correct and punish them with his judgments; Judgment begins at the house of God.
(2.) The Lord is one family of God, have their worst things in this life. Their worst condition is tolerable, and will soon be over.
(3.) Such persons or societies of men as disobey the gospel of God, are not of his church and household; though possibly they may make the least pretensions to it. The apostle distinguishes the disobedient from the house of God.
(4.) The sufferings of good people in this life are demonstrations of the unspeakable torments that are coming upon the disobedient and unbelieving; What shall the end be of those that obey not the gospel?
Who can express or say how dreadful their end will be?

3. And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

This whole verse is taken from Prov. 11. 31. Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; how much more the wicked and the sinner! This the LXX translate exactly as the apostle here quotes them: whence we may learn, 1. The griesous sufferings of good people in this world are sad presages of much heavier judgments coming upon impenitent sinners. But if we take the salvation for this life only, as we must, there is as much as the best can do, to secure the salvation of their souls; there are so many sufferings, temthations, and difficulties to be overcome; so many sins to be mortified; the gate is so strait, and the way so narrow, that it is as much as the righteous can do to be saved. Let the absolute necessity of salvation balance the difficulty of it. Consider, Your difficulties are greatest at first; God offers his grace; but the contest will not last long; be not faithful to the death, and God will give you the crown of life, Rev. 2. 10. 3. The ungodly and the sinner are unquestionably in a state of damnation.
Where shall they appear? How will they stand before their Judge? Where can they shew their heads?
If the righteous scarcely be saved, the wicked must certainly perish.

19. Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Here the apostle finishes his discourse concerning sufferings, and gives this general advice: Let them that suffer according to the will of God, look chiefly to the safety of their souls, which are put into hazard by affliction, and cannot be kept secure otherwise than by committing them to God, who will undertake the charge, if we commit them to him in well-doing; for he is their Creator, and has out of mere grace made many kind promises to them of eternal salvation, in which he will shew himself faithful and true.

Learn, 1. All the sufferings that befall good people, come upon them according to the will of God.
2. It is the duty of Christians, in all their distresses, to look more to the keeping of their souls than to the preserving of their bodies. The soul is of greatest value, and yet in most danger. If suffering from without raise uneasiness, vexation, and other sinful and tormenting passions within, the soul is then the greatest sufferer. If the soul be not well kept, persecution will drive people to apostasy, Ps. 125. 3.
3. The only way to keep the soul well, is, to commit it to God, in well-doing. Commit your souls to God by solemn dedication, prayer, and patient perseverance in well-doing, Rom. 2. 7.
4. Good people, when they are in affliction, have great encouragement to commit their souls to God, because he is their Creator, and faithful in all his promises.

CHAP. V.

In which the apostle gives particular directions, first to the elders, how to behave themselves toward their flock, in the first and first verse; then to the younger, to be obedient and humble, and to eat their bread upon the good verses.
From thence to the end he exhorts all to sobriety, watchfulness against temptations, and steadfastness in the faith, praying earnestly for them; and so concludes his epistle with a solemn doxology, mutual salutations, and his apostolical benediction.

1. T

HE elders which are among you 1 exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partner of the glory that shall be revealed.

Here we may observe, 1. The persons to whom this exhortation is given; to the presbyters, pastors, and spiritual guides of the church; elders by office, rather than by age, ministers of those churches to whom he wrote this epistle. 2. The person who gives this exhortation; the apostle Peter. I exhort:
and to give force to this exhortation, he tells them he was their brother-presbyter or fellow elder; and so puts nothing upon them but what he was ready to perform himself. He was also a witness of the sufferings of Christ, being with him in the garden, attending him to the palace of the high-priest, and,
very likely, was a spectator of his suffering upon the cross at a distance among the crowd, Acts 3. 15.
He adds, that he was also a partner of the glory that was in some degree revealed at the transfiguratio, and that he shall be completely enjoyed at the second coming of Jesus Christ.

Learn, (1.) They whose office it is to teach others, ought carefully to study their own duty, as well as teach the people their's.
(2.) How different the spirit and behaviour of Peter were from that of his pretended successors!
He does not command and domineer, but exhort.
He does not claim sovereignty over all pastors and churches, nor style himself prince of the apostles, vicar of Christ, or head of the church, but values himself upon being an elder. All the apostles were elders, though every elder was not an apostle.
(3.) It was the peculiar honour of Peter, and a few more, to be the witnesses of Christ's sufferings;
but it is the privilege of all true Christians to be partakers of the glory that shall be revealed.

2. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; 3. Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.

Here you have the pastor's duty described, and the manner how that duty ought to be performed.
The pastoral duty is threefold. 1. To feed the flock; by preaching to them the sacred word of God, and ruling them according to such directions and discipline as the word of God prescribes: both which are implied in this expression, Feed the flock. 2. The pastors of the church must take the oversight thereof. The elders are exhorted to do the office of bishops, (as the word signifies,) by personal care and vigilance over all the flock committed to their charge. 3. They must be examples to the flock, and practise the holiness, self-denial, mortification, and all other Christian duties, which they preach and recommend to their people. 4. Duties must be performed, not by constraint, not because you must do them, not from compulsion of the civil power, or constraint for fear of shame, but from a willing mind that takes pleasure in the work: not for filthy lucre, or any emoluments and profits attending the place where you reside, or any prequisite belonging to the office, but of a ready mind; regarding the flock more than the flocks, sincerely and cheerfully endeavouring to serve the church of God; neither as being lords over God’s heritage, tyrannizing over them by compulsion and coercive force, or imposing uninscriptural and human inventions upon them instead of necessary duty, Matt. 20. 25. 26. 2 Cor. 1. 24.

Learn, (1.) The eminent dignity of the church of God, and all the true members of it. These poor, dispersed, suffering Christians were the flock of God, and the apostle sets before them the crown of glory designed by the great Shepherd Jesus Christ, for all his faithful ministers.

Learn, 1. Jesus Christ is the chief Shepherd of the whole flock and heritage of God. He bought them, and rules them; he defends and saves them for ever. He is also the chief Shepherd over all inferior shepherds; they derive their authority from him, act in his name, and are accountable to him at last.

2. This chief Shepherd will appear to judge all ministers and under-shepherds, to call them to account, whether they have faithfully discharged their work both publicly and privately, according to the foregoing directions.

3. They that are found to have done their duty, shall have what is infinitely better than temporal gain; they shall receive from the grand Shepherd a high degree of everlasting glory, a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

5. Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

Having set up and explained the duty of the pastors or spiritual guides of the church, he comes now to instruct the flock how to behave themselves to their ministers, and to one another; he calls them the younger, as being generally younger than their grave pastors, and to put them in mind of their inferiority, the term younger being used by our Saviour to signify an inferior: (Luke 22. 26.) he exhorts those that are younger and inferior, to submit themselves to the elder, to give due respect and reverence to their persons, and to yield to their admonitions, reproof, and authority, enjoining and commanding what the word of God requires, Heb. 13. 17. As to one another, the rule is, that they should all be subject one to another, so far as to receive the counsel and advice of the elder, and to shun all that is calculated to bear one another’s burthens, and perform all the offices of friendship and charity one to another; and particular persons should submit to the directions of the whole society, Eph. 5. 21. Jam. 5. 16. These duties of submission to superiors in age or office, and subjection to one another, being contrary to the proud nature and selfish interests of men, he advises them to be clothed with humility; “Let your minds be subject among you, and that in humility; because God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble.”

Learn, 1. Humility is the great preserver of peace and order in all Christian churches and societies; consequently, pride is the great disturber of them, and the cause of most dissensions and breaches in the church.

2. There is a mutual opposition between God and the proud, so the word signifies; they war against him, and he scourns them: he resisteth the proud, because they are like the Devil, enemies to himself and to his kingdom among men, Prov. 3. 34.

3. Where God giveth grace to be humble, he will give more grace, more wisdom, more faith, more holiness, and humility.

6. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

Since God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble, therefore humble yourselves, not only one to another, but to the great God, whose judgments are coming upon the world, and must begin at the house of God: (ch. 4. 17.) his hand is almighty, and can easily pull you down if you be proud, or exalt you if you be humble; and it will certainly do it, either in this life, if he see it best for you, or at the day of general retribution.

Learn, 1. The consideration of the omnipotent hand of God should make us humble, and submissive to him in all things, and upon us.
7. Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you.

The apostle, knowing that these Christians were already under very hard circumstances, rightly supposes that what he had foretold of greater hardships yet a coming, might excite in them abundance of care and fear about the event of these difficulties, and that some would be driven to themselves, their families, and the church of God; foreseeing this anxious care would be a heavy burden, and a sore temptation, he gives them the best advice, and supports it with a strong argument; his advice is, to cast all their care, or all care of themselves, upon God; "Throw your cares, which are so cutting and distracting, which wound your souls, and pierce your hearts, upon the wise and gracious providence of God; trust in him with a firm composed mind, for he careth for you; he is willing to release you of your care, and take the care of you upon himself; he will either avert what you fear, or support you under it; he will order all events to you, so as shall convince you of his paternal love and tenderness toward you; and all shall be so ordered, that no hurt, but good, shall come unto you." Matt. 6. 25. Ps. 121. 3. 3.

Learn, 1. The best of Christians are apt to labour under the burthen of anxious and excessive care; the apostle calls it, all your care, intimating, that the cares of Christians are various, and of more sorts than one; personal cares, family cares, cares for the present, and cares for the future; for themselves, for others, for the church.

2. The cares even of good people are very burdensome, and too often very sinful; when they arise from unbelief and diffidence, when they torture and distract the mind, unfit us for the duties of our place, and hinder our delightful service of God, they are very criminal.

3. The best remedy against immoderate care, is, to cast our care upon God, and resign every event to his wise and gracious determination. A firm belief of the rectitude of the divine will and counsels calms the spirit of man. We ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done, Acts 21. 14.

8. Be sober minded, be vigilant; because your adversary the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: 9. Whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

Here the apostle does three things:

1. He shows them their danger from an enemy more cruel and restless than even the worst of men, whom he describes, (1.) By his characters and names; [1.] He is an adversary, that adversary of your's; not a common adversary, but an enemy that implicates you, and litigates against you in your greatest depending cause, and aims at your very souls. [2.] The Devil, the grand accuser of all the brethren; this title is derived from a word which signifies to strike through, or to stab; he would strike malignity into our natures, and poison into our souls; if he could have struck these people with passion and murmuring in their sufferings, perhaps he might have drawn them to apostasy and ruin. [3.] He is a roaring lion, hungry, fierce, strong and cruel; the fierce and greedy pursuer of souls. (2.) By his business; he walks about, seeking whom he may devour; his whole design is to devour and destroy souls; to that end he is unwearied and restless in his malicious endeavours; for he always, night and day, goes about studying and contriving whom he may ensnare to their eternal ruin.

2. Our duty inferred from hence is, (1.) To be sober, and to govern both the outward and the inward man by the rules of temperance, modesty, and mortification. (2.) To be vigilant; not secure or careless, but rather suspicious of constant dangers from this spiritual enemy, and, under that apprehension, to be watchful and diligent to prevent his designs, and save our souls. (3.) To resist him steadfast in the faith; it was the faith of these people that Satan aimed at; if he could overturn their faith, and draw them into apostasy, then he knew he should gain his point, and ruin their souls; there fore, to destroy their faith, he raises bitter persecutions, and sets the grand potencies of the world against them; this strong trial and temptation they must resist, by being well-grounded, resolute, and steadfast in the faith; to encourage them to this,

3. The apostle tells them that their care was not singular, for they knew that the like afflictions befell their brethren in all parts of the world, and that all the people of God were their fellow-soldiers in this warfare.

Learn, (1.) All the great persecutions that ever were in the world, were raised, spirited up, and conducted, by the Devil; he is the grand persecutor, as well as the deceiver and accuser, of the brethren; men are his willing, spiteful instruments, but he is the chief adversary that wars against Christ and his people, Gen. 3. 15. Rev. 12. 12.

(2.) The design of Satan in raising persecutions against the faithful servants of God, is, to bring them to apostacy, by reason of their sufferings, and so to destroy their souls.

(3.) Sobriety and watchfulness are necessary virtues at all times, but especially in times of suffering and persecution; "You must moderate your affection to worldly things, or else Satan will soon overcome you." (4.) "If you would overcome Satan, either as a tempter, accuser, or persecutor, you must resist him steadfast in the faith; if your faith give way, you are gone; therefore, above all, take the shield of faith," Eph. 6. 16.

(5.) The consideration of what others suffer, is proper to encourage us to bear our own share in any affliction; the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren.

10. But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

We come now to the conclusion of this epistle, which the apostle begins with a most weighty prayer, which he addresseth to God of all grace, the Author and Finisher of every heavenly gift and quality, acknowledging, on their behalf, that God had already called them to be partakers of that eternal glory, which, being his own, he had promised and settled upon them, through the merit and intercession of Jesus Christ. You may observe what he prays for on their account; not that they might be excused from sufferings, but that their sufferings might be moderate and short, and, after they had suffered a while, that God would restore them to a settled and peaceable condition, and perfect his work in them; that he would establish them against wrangling, either in faith, or duty; that he would strengthen these who are weak, and settle them upon Christ the foundation, so firmly, that their union with him might be indissoluble and everlasting.

Learn, 1. All grace is from God; it is he who restrains, converts, comforts, and saves men by his grace.

2. All who are called into a state of grace, are called to partake of eternal glory and happiness.

3. Those who are called to be heirs of eternal life through Jesus Christ, must, nevertheless, suffer in this world, but their sufferings will be but for a little while.

4. The perfecting, establishing, strengthening, and settling of good people in grace, and their perseverance therein, is so difficult a work, that only the God of all grace can accomplish it; and therefore he is earnestly to be sought unto by continual prayer, and dependence upon his promises.

11. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

From this doxology we may learn, that they who have obtained grace from the God of all grace, should, and will, ascribe glory, dominion, and power, to him for ever and ever.

12. By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have written briefly, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand.

Here the apostle, 1. Recapitulates the design of his writing this epistle to them, which was, (1.) To testify, and, in the strongest terms to assure them, that the doctrine of salvation, which he had explained, and they had embraced, was the true account of the grace of God, foretold by the prophets, and published by Jesus Christ. (2.) To exhort them earnestly that, as they had embraced the gospel, they would continue steadfast in it, notwithstanding the arts of seducers, or the persecutions of enemies. 2. He recommends Silvanus, the person by whom he sent them this brief epistle, as a brother whom he esteemed faithful and friendly to them, and hoped they would account him so, though he was a minister of the uncircumcision.

Learn, (1.) An honourable esteem of the ministers of religion tends much to the success of their labours; when we are convinced they are faithful, we shall profit more by their ministerial services; the prejudices that some of these Jews might have against Silvanus, as a minister of the Gentiles, would soon wear off, when they were once convinced that he was a faithful brother.

(2.) The main thing that ministers ought to aim at in their labours, is, to convince their people of the certainty and excellency of the Christian religion, this the apostles did exhort and testify with all their might.

(3.) A firm persuasion that we are in the true way to heaven, will be the best motive to stand fast, and persevere therein.

13. The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son.

St. Peter, being at Babylon in Assyria, when he wrote this epistle (whither he travelled, as the apostle of the circumcision, to visit that church, which was the chief of the dispersion,) sends the salutation of that church to the other churches to whom he wrote, telling them, that God had elected or chosen the Christians at Babylon out of the world, to be his church, and to partake of eternal salvation through Christ Jesus, together with them and all other faithful Christians, ch. 1. 2. In this salutation he particularly joins Mark the evangelist, who was then with him, and who was his son in a spiritual sense, being begotten by him to Christianity.

All the churches of Jesus Christ ought to have a most affectionate concern one for another; they should love and pray for one another, and be as helpful one to another as they possibly can.

14. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

He exhorts them to fervent love and charity one towards another, and to express this by giving the kiss of peace, according to the common custom of those times and countries, and so concludes with a benediction, which he confines to those only that are in Christ Jesus, united to him by faith, and sound members of his mystical body. The blessing he pronounces upon these, is, peace, by which he means all necessary good, all manner of prosperity; to this he adds his amen, in token of his earnest desire and undoubted expectation, that the blessing of peace would be the portion of all the faithful.
THE penman of this epistle appears plainly to be the same who wrote the foregoing; and whatever difference some learned men apprehend they discern in the style of this epistle from that of the former, this cannot be a sufficient argument to assert that it was written by Simon who succeeded the apostle James in the church at Jerusalem, inasmuch as he who wrote this epistle, calls himself Simon Peter, and an apostle, (v. 1.) and says, that he was one of the three apostles that were present at Christ's transfiguration, (v. 18.) and says expressly, that he had written a former epistle to them; (ch. 3. 1.) moreover, the design of this second epistle is the same with that of the former, as is evident from the first verse of the third chapter: whence observe, that, in the things of God, we have need of precept upon precept, and line upon line, and all little enough to keep it in remembrance; and yet these are the things which should be most faithfully recorded, and frequently remembered by us.

II. PETER, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter we have, 1. An introduction, or preface, making way for, and leading to, what is principally design- ed by the apostle, v. 1. 4. 2. An exhortation to advance and improve in all Christian graces, v. 5. 7. To enforce this exhortation, and engage them seriously and heartily to comply with it, he adds, 1. A representation of the very great advantage which will thereby accrue to them, v. 8. 11. 2. A promise of the best assistance the apostle was able to give to facilitate and forward this good work, v. 12. 15. 3. A declaration of the certain truth and divine original of the gospel of Christ, in the grace whereof they were exhorted to increase and persevere.

1. Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ: 2. Grace, and peace, be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, 3. According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness; through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: 4. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

The apostle Peter, being moved by the Holy Ghost to write once more to those who from among the Jews were turned to faith in Christ, begins this second epistle with an introduction, wherein the same persons are described, and the same blessings are desired, that are in the preface to his former letter; but there are some additions or alterations, which ought to be taken notice of in all the three parts of the introduction.

I. We have here a description of the person who wrote the epistle, by the name Simon, as well as Peter, and by the title of servant, as well as that of apostle; Peter, being in both epistles, seems to be the name most frequently used, and with which he may be thought to be best pleased, being given him by our Lord, upon his confessing Jesus to be Christ the Son of the living God; and the very name signifying and sealing that truth to be the fundamental article, the rock on which all must build; but the name Simon, though omitted in the former epistle, is mentioned in this, lest the total omission of that name, which was given him when he was circumcised, should make the Jewish believers, who were all zealous of the law, to become jealous of the apostle, as if he had disgraced and despised circumcision; he here styles himself a servant (as well as an apostle) of Jesus Christ; in this he may be allowed to glory, as David does, Ps. 116. 16. The service of Christ is the way to the highest honour, John 12. 26. Christ himself is King of kings, and Lord of lords; and he makes all his servants kings and priests unto God, Rev. 1. 6. How great an honour is it to be the servants of this Master! This is what we cannot, without sin, be ashamed of. To triumph in being Christ's servants, is very proper for those who are engaging others to enter into, or abide in, the service of Christ.

II. We have an account of the people to whom the epistle is written; they have been described in the former epistle, as elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father; and here, as having obtained precious faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; for the faith here mentioned, is very different from the false faith of the heretic, and the feigned faith of the hypocrite, and the fruitless faith of the formal professor, and the faith of the seer, and the faith of the seer; it is the faith of God’s elect, (Tit. 1. 1.) brought forth into the open sight of God in effectual calling. Observe, 1. True saving faith is a precious grace, and that not only as it is very uncommon, very scarce, even in the visible church, a very small number of true believers among a great multitude of visible professors, (Matt. 22. 14.) but true faith is very excellent, and of very great advantage to those who have it; the just lives by faith. True divine, spiritual life; faith procures all the necessary supports and comforts of this excellent life; faith goes to Christ, and buys the wine and milk, (Isa. 55. 1.) that are the proper nourishment of the new creature; faith buys and brings home the tried gold, the heavenly treasure that enriches; faith takes and puts on the white raiment, the royal robes that clothe and adorn, Rev. 3. 18.

Observe, 2. Faith is alike precious in the private Christian and in the apostle; it produces the same precious effects in the one that have been observed in the other. Faith unites the weak believer to Christ, as really as it does the strong one, and purifies the heart of one as truly as of another; and every sincere believer is by his faith justified in the sight of God, and that from all sins, Acts 13. 39. Faith, in whomsoever it is, takes hold of the same precious Saviour, and applies the same precious promises. 3. This precious faith is obtained of God. Faith is the gift of God, wrought by the Spirit, who raised up Jesus Christ from the dead. 4. The preciousness of faith, as well as our obtaining it, is through the righteousness of Christ. The satisfactory, meritorious righteousness and obedience of Christ gives faith all its value and preciousness; and the righteousness of such a Person cannot but be of infinite value to those who by faith receive it. For, (1.) This Jesus Christ is God, yea our God, as it is in the original. He is truly God, an infinite Being, who has wrought out this righteousness, and therefore it must be of infinite value. (2.) He is the Saviour of them that believe, and as such he yielded this meritorious obedience; and therefore it is of such great benefit and advantage to them, because, as Saviour and Saviour, he wrought out this righteousness in their stead.

III. We have the apostolical benediction, wherein more is said for the multiplication and increase of the divine favour in them, and the advancement of the growth of the work of grace in them, and that peace with God and in their own consciences, (which cannot be without grace,) may abound in them; this is the same benediction that is in the former epistle; but here he adds, 1. An account of the way and means whereby grace and peace are multiplied—It is through the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ; through knowledge and believing in the only living and true God, and in Jesus Christ his beloved Son; this is the great improvement of spiritual life, or it could not be the way to life eternal, John 17. 3. We have, 2. The ground of the apostle’s faith in asking, and of the Christian’s hope in expecting, the increase of grace; what we have already received, should encourage us to ask for more; he who has begun the work of grace, will perfect it. Observe, (1.) Our Father’s gifts are spiritual blessings, is, the divine power of Jesus Christ, which he is pleased to bestow; to cleanse all the office of Mediator, unless he was God as well as man. (2.) All things that have any relation to, and influence upon, the true spiritual life, the life and power of godliness, are from Jesus Christ; in him all fulness dwells, and it is from him that we receive, and grace for grace, (John 1. 16.) even all that is necessary for the preserving, improving, and perfecting of grace and peace, which, according to some expositors, are called here in this verse godliness and life. (3.) Knowledge of God, and faith in him, are the channel whereby all spiritual supports and comforts are conveyed to us; but then we must own and acknowledge God as the Author of our effectual calling, for what he is here described; him that called us to glory and virtue. Observe here, the design of God in calling or converting men, is, to bring them to glory and virtue, that is, peace and grace, as some understand it; but many prefer the marginal rendering, by glory and virtue; and so we have effectual calling set forth as the work of the glory and virtue, or the glorious power, of God, which is described Eph. 1. 19. It is the glory of God’s power to convert sinners; this is the power and glory of God which we see and experience in his sanctuary; (Ps. 63. 2.) this power or virtue is to be extolled by all that are called out of darkness into marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 9.

In the fourth verse the apostle goes on to encourage their faith and hope in looking for an increase of grace and peace, because the same glory and virtue are employed and evidenced in giving the promises of the gospel, there can be no room for any but effectual calling. Observe, 1. The great things which the promises make over, are exceeding great; pardon of sin is one of the blessings here intended; how great this is, all who know any thing of the power of God’s anger, will readily confess; and this is one of those promised favours, in bestowing whereof the power of the Lord is great, Num. 14. 17. To pardon sins that are numerous and heinous, (every one of which deserves God’s wrath and curse; and that for ever,) is a wonderful thing, and so called, Ps. 119. 18. 2. The promised blessings of the gospel are very precious; as the great promise of the Old Testament, was, the Seed of the woman, the Messiah, (Heb. 11. 59.) so the great promise of the New Testament, is, the Holy Ghost; (Luke 24. 49.) and how precious must the enlivening, enlightening, sanctifying Spirit be! 3. They who receive the promises of the gospel, partake of the divine nature; these are renewed in the spirit of their mind, after the image of God, in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness; their hearts are set for God and his service; they have a divine temper and disposition of soul; though the law be the ministration of death, and the letter killeth, yet the gospel is the ministration of life, and the Spirit quickeneth those who are naturally dead in trespasses and sins. 4. These in whom the Spirit works the divine image are freed from the bondage of corruption. They who have the Spirit of grace, renewed in the spirit of their mind, are translated into the liberty of the children of God; for it is the world in which corruption reigns; they who are not of the Father, but of the world, are under the power of sin; the world lies in wickedness, 1 John 5. 19. And the dominion that sin has in the men of the world, is through lust; their desires are to it, and therefore it rules over them. The dominion that sin has over us, is according to the delight we have in it.

5. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly-kindness; and to brotherly-kindness charity.

In these words the apostle comes to the chief thing intended in this epistle—to excite and engage them to advance in grace and holiness, they having already obtained precious faith, and been made partakers of the divine nature; this is a very good beginning, but it is not to be rested in, as if we were already perfect; the apostle had prayed that grace and peace might be multiplied to them, and now he ex- horts them to press forward for the obtaining of more grace; so should, as we have opportunity, exhort those we pray for, and excite them to the use of all proper means to obtain what we desire God to bestow upon them; and they who will make any progress in religion, must be very diligent and industrious in their endeavours; without giving all diligence, there is no gaining any ground in the work of holiness; who are slothful in the business of religion, and lie still in the grave of unbelief or unregenerateness, if we will enter in at the strait gate, Luke 13. 24.

Here we cannot but observe how the believer’s way is marked out step by step. 1. He must get virtue, by which some understand justice; and then the knowledge, temperance, and patience that follow, being joined with it, the apostle may be supposed to put them upon pressing after the four cardinal virtues, or the four elements that go to the making up of man’s duty, and which are to be the principles of virtue. But seeing it is a faithful saying, and constantly to be asserted, that they who have faith, be careful to maintain good works, (Tit. 3. 8.) by virtue here we may understand strength and courage, without which the believer cannot stand up for good works, by abounding and excelling in them. The righteous must be bold as a lion; (Prov. 28. 1.) a lion, or strength; when they profess the doctrines or practise the duties of the gospel, must expect that Christ will be ashamed of him another day; “Let not your hearts fail you in the evil day, but shew yourselves valiant in standing against all opposition, and resisting every enemy, world, flesh, Devil, yea and death too.” We have need of virtue while we live, and it will be of excellent use when we come to die. 2. He must add knowledge to his virtue, prudence to his courage; there is a knowledge of God’s name, which must go before our faith, (Ps. 9. 10.) and we cannot approve of the good and acceptable and perfect will of God, till we know it; but there are proper circumstances for duty, which must be known and observed; we must use the appointed means, and observe the accepted time. Christian prudence regards the persons we have to deal with, and the society we are intimate with; every believer must labour after the knowledge and wisdom that are profitable to direct, both as to the proper method and order wherein all Christian duties are to be performed, and as to the way and manner of performing them. 3. We must add temperance to our knowledge; we must be sober and moderate in our love to, and use of, the good things of this life; and if we have a well-considering and knowledge of outward comforts, we shall see their worth and usefulness are vastly inferior to those of spiritual mercies. Bodily exercises and bodily privileges profit but little, and therefore are to be esteemed and used accordingly; the gospel teaches sobriety as well as honesty, (Tit. 2. 12.) we must be moderate in desiring and using the good things of natural life, such as meat, drink, and wear; and credit can be made of the desire after these, is inconsistent with an earnest desire after God and Christ; and they who take more of these than is due, can render to neither God nor man what is due to them.

4. Add to temperance, patience; which must have its perfect work, or we cannot be perfect and entire, wanting nothing, (Jam. 1. 4.) for we are born to trouble, and must through many tribulations enter into the kingdom of heaven; and it is this tribulation, (Rom. 5. 3.) which worketh patience, that is, requires the exercise, and occasions the increase, of this grace; whereby we bear all calamities and crosses with silence and submission, without murmuring against God, or complaining of him; but justifying him who lays all affliction upon us, owning that our sufferings are less than our sins deserve, and believing they are no more than we ourselves need.

5. To patience we must add godliness, and this is the very thing which is produced by patience, for that works experience, Rom. 5. 4. When Christians bear afflictions patiently, they get an experimental knowledge of the loving-kindness of their heavenly Father, which he will not take from his children, even when he visits their iniquity with the rod, and their transgressions with stripes; (Ps. 89. 32, 33.) and hereby they are brought to the childlike fear and reverential love wherein true godliness consists: to which,

6. We must add brotherly-kindness, a tender affection to all our fellow-Christsians, who are children of the same Father, servants of the same Master, members of the same family, travellers to the same country, and heirs of the same inheritance, and therefore are to be loved with a pure heart fervently, with a love of complacency, as those who are peculiarly near and dear to us, in whom we take particular delight, Ps. 16. 3.

7. Charity, or a love of good-will to all mankind, must be added to the love of delight which we have for those who are the children of God. God has made of one blood all nations, and all the children of men are partakers of the same human nature, are all capable of the same mercies, and liable to the same afflictions, and therefore, though upon a spiritual account Christians are distinguished and dignified above those who are without Christ, yet are they to sympathize with others in their calamities, and relieve their necessities, and promote their welfare both in body and soul, as they have opportunity; thus must all believers in Christ evidence that they are the children of God, who is good to all, but is especially good to Israel.

All the forementioned graces must be had, or we shall not be thoroughly furnished for all good works—for the duties of the first and second table, for active and passive obedience, and for those services wherein we are to imitate God, as well as for those wherein we only obey him.

8. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9. But he that lacketh these things, is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. 10. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: 11. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

To engage us to an industrious and unwearyed pursuit of all the forementioned graces, the apostle sets forth the advantages that redound to all who successfully labour so as to get these things to be and abound in them. This is proposed.

More generally 8. The having these things make not barren, (or slothful,) or unfruitful; where, according to the style of the Holy Ghost, we must understand a great deal more than is expressed; for when it is said concerning Alzah, the vilest and most provoking of all the Kings of Judah, that he did not right in the sight of the Lord, (2 Kings 16. 2.) we are to understand as much as if it had been said, He did what was most offensive and abominable, as the following account of his life shews; so when it is here said, that the being and abounding of all Christian graces in us will make us neither inactive nor unfruitful, we are thereby to understand, that it will make us very zealous and lively, vigorous and active, in all practical Christianity, and evidently fruitful in the works of righteousness; that the more much glory to God, by bringing forth much fruit among men, being fruitful in knowledge, or the acknowledging of our Lord Jesus Christ, owning him to be their Lord, and evidencing themselves to be his servants, by their abounding in the work that he has given them to do; this is the necessary consequence of adding one grace to another; for where all Christian graces are in the heart, they improve and strengthen, encourage and cherish, one another; so that all thrive and grow; (as the apostle intimates in the beginning of v. 8.) and wherever grace abounds, there will be an abounding in good works.

How desirable it is to be in such a case, the apostle evidences, v. 9. There he sets forth how miserable it is to be without those quickening, fructifying graces; for he who has not, or though he pretends or seems to have, the forementioned graces, does not exercise and improve them, is blind, that is, dark; and the words explain it; he cannot see far off: this present evil world he can see, and dotes upon, but has no discerning at all of the world to come, so as to be affected with the spiritual privileges and heavenly blessings thereof; he who sees the excellencies of Christianity, must needs be diligent in endeavours after all those graces that are absolutely necessary for obtaining glory, honour, and immortality; but where those graces are not obtained nor endeavoured after, men are not able to look forward to the things that are but a very little way off in reality, though, in appearance or in their apprehension, they are at a great distance, because they put them far away from them; and how wretched is their condition, who are thus blind, as to the awfully great things of the other world; who cannot see any thing of the reality and certainty, the greatness and nearness, of the glorious rewards God will bestow on the righteous, and the dreadful punishment he will inflict on the ungodly!

But this is not all the misery of those who do not add to their faith, virtue, knowledge, &c. They are as unable to look backward as forward, their memories are slippery and unable to retain what is past, as their sight is short and unable to discern what is future; they forget that they have been baptized, and all the graces, and been laid under the obligations to holiness of heart and life. By baptism we are engaged in a holy war against sin, and are solemnly bound to fight against the flesh, the world, and the Devil. Often call to mind, and seriously meditate on, your solemn engagement to be the Lord's, and your peculiar advantages and encouragements to lay aside all filthiness of flesh and spirit. In these two particular advantages that will attend or follow upon diligence in the work of a Christian: 1. Stability in grace. 2. A triumphant entrance into glory. These he brings in by re-assuming his former exhortation, and laying it down in other words; for what, v. 5. is expressed by giving diligence to add to faith, virtue, &c. is here expressed by giving diligence to make our calling and election sure, which we may observe: (1.) It is the duty of believers to make our election sure, to clear it up to themselves, that they are the chosen of God. (2.) The way to make sure their eternal election, is, to make out their effectual calling: none can look into the book of God's eternal counsels and decrees; but as much as whom God did predestination, he also called, if we can find we are effectually called, we may conclude we are chosen to salvation. (3.) It requires a great deal of diligence and labour to make sure our calling and election; there must be a very close examination of ourselves, a very narrow search and strict inquiry, whether we are thoroughly converted, our minds enlightened, our wills renewed, and our whole souls changed as to the bent and inclination thereof; and to arrive to a fixed certainty in this respect, a most diligence, and cannot be attained and kept without divine assistance, as we may learn from Ps. 139. 23. Rom. 8. 16.

"But how great soever the labour is, do not think much of it, for great is the advantage you gain by it; for," [1.] "By this you will be kept from falling, and that at all times and seasons, even in those hours of temptation that shall be on the earth." When persons shall fall into heinous and scandalous sins, these shall be enabled to walk circumspectly, and keep on in the way of their duty; and when many fall into errors, these shall be preserved sound in the faith, and stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. [2.] Those who are diligent in the work of religion, shall have a triumphant entrance into glory; while of those few who get to heaven, some are scarcely saved, (1 Pet. 4. 18.) with a great deal of difficulty and difficulty; (2 Cor. 3. 13.) these, who are growing in grace, and abounding in the work of the Lord, shall have an abundant entrance into the joy of their Lord, even that everlasting kingdom where Christ reigns, and they shall reign with him for ever and ever.

12. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. 13. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; 14. Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. 15. Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance.

The importance and advantage of progress and perseverance in grace and holiness, made the apostle to be very diligent in doing the work of a minister of Christ, that he might thereby excite and assist them to be diligent in the duty of Christians. If ministers be negligent in their work, it can hardly be expected that the people will be diligent in their's; therefore St. Peter will not be negligent, that is, at no time or place, in no part of his work, to no part of his charge, but will be exemplary and universally diligent, and that in the work of a remembrancer: this is the office of the best ministers, even the apostles themselves; they are the Lord's remembrancers; (Isa. 62. 6.) they are expected to make mention of the promises, and put God in mind of his engagements to do good to his people; and they are the people's remembrancers, making mention of God's precepts, and putting them in mind of the doctrines and duties of Christianity, that they may remember God's commandments, to do them.

And this the apostle does, though some persons might think it needless, inasmuch as they already knew these things that he writes about, and were established in the very truth that he insists upon. Observe, 1. We need to be put in mind of what we do already know, to prevent our forgetting it, and to improve our knowledge, and reduce all to practice. 2. We must be established in the belief of the truth, that we may not be shaken by every wind of doctrine, and especially in that which is the present truth, what is the truth more peculiarly necessary for us to know in our day, what belongs to our peace, and what is more especially opposed in our time.

The great doctrines of the gospel, that Jesus is the Christ, to whom Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners; those that believe in the Lord Jesus Christ shall be saved, and all that believe in God must be careful to maintain good works. These are truths the apostles insisted on in their day; these are faithful sayings, and worthy of all acceptation in every age of the Christian church. And as these must be constantly affirmed by ministers, (Tit. 3. 8.) so the people are to be well instructed and established therein to writing. The apostle, after all their attainments in knowledge, be put in mind of such things as cannot be too clearly known, nor too firmly believed. The most advanced Christians cannot, while in this world, be above ordinances, or beyond the need of those means which God has appointed and does afford. And if the people need teaching and exhortation while they are in the body, it is very much more when they are about to depart, as they are in this tabernacle, instruct and exhort them, and bring those truths to their remembrance, that they have formerly heard: this being a proper means to stir them up to be diligent and lively in a course of gospel-obedience.

The apostle, being set upon the work, tells us (v. 14.) what makes him earnest in this matter, even the knowledge he had, not only that he must certainly, but also that he must shortly, put off this tabernacle. Observe, (1.) The body is but the tabernacle of the soul. It is a mean and moveable structure, whose stakes can be easily removed, and its cords presently broken. (2.) This tabernacle must be put off. We are not to continue long in this earthly house. As at night we put off our clothes, and lay them by, so at death we must put off our bodies, and they must be laid up in the grave till the morning of the resurrection. The nearer to death makes the apostle diligent in the business of life. Our Lord Jesus had shewn him, that the time of his departure was at hand, and therefore he bestirs himself with greater zeal and diligence, because the time is short; he must soon be removed from those to whom he wrote; and his ambition being that they should remember the doctrine he had delivered to them, after he himself was taken away from them, he commits it to writing. This is the nearer death makes the apostle busy. And, in the great opinion of oral tradition; that was not so proper a means to reach the end he was in pursuit of. He would have them always to remember these things, and not only to keep them in mind, but also to make mention of them, as the original words import. They who fear the Lord, make mention of his name, and talk of his loving-kindness. This is the way to spread the knowledge of the Lord and this the apostle had at heart; and they who have the written word of God, are thereby put into a capacity to do this.

16. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. 17. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. 18. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

Here we have the reason of the giving of the foregoing exhortation, and that with so much diligence and seriousness. These things are not idle tales, or a vain thing, but of undoubted truth and vast concern. The gospel is not a cunningly devised fable. These are not the words of one who hath a devil, or the contrivance of any number of men who by cunning craftiness endeavour to deceive. The way of salvation by Jesus Christ is eminently the counsel of God, the most excellent contrivance of the infinitely wise Jehovah; it was he that invented this way of saving sinners by Jesus Christ, whose power and coming are set forth in the gospel, and the apostle’s preaching was a making these things known. 1. The preaching of the gospel is a making known the power of Christ, that he is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Jesus Christ; 2. And mighty God, and therefore can save from both the guilt and the filth of sin. 2. The coming of Christ also is made known by the preaching of the gospel. He who was promised immediately after the fall of man, as in the fulness of time to be born of a woman, is now come in the flesh; and whosoever denies this, is an antichrist; (1 John 4. 3.) he is actuated and influenced by the spirit of antichrist; but those who are the truths of God and his Son Jesus Christ, and are directed and guided by the Spirit of Christ, they evidence that Christ is come according to the promise, which all the Old-Testament believers died in the faith of, Heb. 11. 39. Christ is come in the flesh; inasmuch as those whom he undertakes to save, are partakers of flesh and blood, he himself also took part of the same, that he might suffer in their nature and stead, and thereby make an atonement. This coming of Christ the gospel is in a very plain and circumstantial in setting forth; but there is a second coming, which it likewise mentions, which the ministers of the gospel ought also to make known, when he shall come in the glory of his Father with all his holy angels, for he is appointed to be Judge both of quick and dead. He will come to judge the world in righteousness by the everlasting gospel, and call us all to give account of all things done in the body, whether good or evil.

And though this gospel of Christ has been blasphemously called a fable by one of those wretches who call themselves the successors of St. Peter; yet our apostle proves that it is of the greatest certainty and reality, inasmuch as during our blessed Saviour’s abode here on earth, when he took on him the form of a servant, and was found in fashion as a man, he sometimes manifested himself to the God, and particularly to our apostle and the two sons of Zebedee, who were eye-witnesses of his divine majesty, when he was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light, exceeding white, as snow, so as fuller on earth can white them. This Peter, James, and John, were eye-witnesses of, and therefore might and ought to attest it; and surely their testimony is true, when they witness what they have seen with the eyes, even, and heard with their ears: for beside the visible glory that Christ was invested with here on earth, there was an audible voice from heaven. Where observe,

(1.) What a gracious declaration was made; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased—the best voice that ever came from heaven to earth; God is well pleased with the coming of Christ in the flesh. This is the Messiah who was promised, through whom all who believe in him shall be accepted and saved. (2.) This declaration is made by God the Father, who thus publicly owns his Son, even in his state of humiliation, when he was in the form of a servant,) yea, proclaims him to be his beloved Son, when he was in that low condition; yea, so far as he was in it. 17. It is a merciful consideration of the love of the Father to him, that his laying down his life is said to be one special reason of the Father's love, John 10. 17. (3.) The design of this voice was to do our Saviour a singular honour while he was here below; He received honour and glory from God the Father. This is the Person whom God delights to honour. As he requires us to give honour and glory to his Son by confounding him to us, so he gives glory and honour to our Saviour by declaring him to be his Son. (4.) This voice is from heaven, called here the excellent glory, which still reflects a greater glory upon our blessed Saviour. This declaration is from God the Fountain of honour, and from heaven the seat of glory, where God is most gloriously present. (5.) This voice was heard, and that so as to be understood by Peter, James and John. They not only heard a sound, as the people did, (John 12. 28, 29.) but they understood the sense. God opens the ears and understandings of his people to receive what they are concerned to know, when others are like Paul's companions, who only heard a sound of words, (Acts 9. 7.) but understood not the meaning thereof, and therefore are said not to hear the voice of him that spake, Acts 22. 9. Blessed are those who not only hear, but understand; who believe the true, and feel the power of the voice from heaven, as he did, who testifieth these things—and we have all the reason in the world to receive his testimony; for who would refuse to give credit to what is so circumstantially laid down as this account of the voice from heaven, of which the apostle tells us? (6.) It was heard by them in the holy mount, when they were with Jesus. The place wherein God affords any peculiarly gracious manifestation of himself, is the most holy place he has with an inerent holiness, but as the ground was holy, where God appeared to Moses, (Exod. 3. 5.) and the mountain holy, on which the temple was built, Ps. 87. 1. Such places are relatively holy, and to be regarded as such during the time that men in themselves experience, or may, by warrant from the word, believably expect, the special presence and gracious influence of the holy and glorious God.

19. We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts: 20. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. 21. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

In these words the apostle lays down another argument to prove the truth and reality of the gospel, and intimates that this second proof is more strong and convincing than the former, and more unanswerably makes out, that the doctrine of the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ is not a mere fable or cunning contrivance of men, but the wise and wonderful counsel of the holy and gracious God. For this is foretold by the prophets and penmen of the Old Testament, who spake and wrote under the influence, and according to the direction, of the Spirit of God. Here note, 1. The description that is given of the scriptures of the Old Testament; they are called a more sure word of prophecy. 1. It is a prophetic declaration of the power and coming, the Godhead and incarnation of our Saviour, which we have in the Old Testament. 2. That of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. His power to destroy the Devil and his works, and his being made of a woman, are there foretold; and the great and awful Old-Testament name of God, Jehovah, (as read by some,) signifies only He will be; and that name of God, (Exod. 3. 14.) is rendered by many, I will be that I will be; and thus understood, they point at God's being incarnate in order to the punishment and salvation of his people, and what was to come. But the New Testament is a history of that whereof the Old Testament is a prophecy. All the prophets and the law prophesied until John, Matt. 11. 13. And the evangelists and apostles have written the history of what was before delivered as prophecy. Now the accomplishment of the Old Testament by the New, and the agreeableness of the New Testament to the Old, are a full demonstration of the truth of both. Read the Old Testament as a prophecy of Christ, and with diligence and thankfulness use the New as the best exposition of the Old. 2. The Old Testament is a more sure word of prophecy. It is so to the Jews who received it as the oracles of God. Following prophets confirmed what had been delivered to those who went before, and these prophecies had been written by the express command, and preserved them by the wonderful providence, of God, and therefore were more certain to them who had all along received and read the scriptures, than the apostle's account of this voice from heaven. Moses and the prophets more powerfully persuade than even miracles themselves, Luke 16. 31. How firm and sure should our faith be, who have such a firm and sure word to rest upon! All the prophecies of the Old Testament are more sure and certain to us who have the history of the exact and most minute accomplishment of them.

II. The encouragement the apostle gives us to search the scriptures. He tells us, We do well if we take heed to them; that is, apply our minds to understand the sense, and our hearts to believe the truth, of this sure word, yea, to bend ourselves to it, that we may be moulded and fashioned by it. The word is a lamp to the feet of those who use it aright; this discovers the way wherein men ought to walk; this is the light whereby we come to know the way of life. 2. They must acknowledge their own darkness. This world is a place of error and ignorance, and every man in the world is naturally without that knowledge which is necessary in order to attain eternal life. 3. If ever men are made wise to salvation, it is by the shining of the light of God into their hearts. Naturally no man will take the trouble to understand these things; and if the blind be not sensible of the darkness of their case, the case is hopeless. Then what can you do? Then you must ever be ready and anxious to learn about this, and then the Lord, the light of the world, will be pleased to give the light of his countenance upon you.
of the scripture is darted into the blind mind and dark understanding by the holy Spirit of God, then the spiritual day dawns, and the day-star arises in that soul. This enlightening of a dark benighted mind is like the day-break that improves and advances, spreads and diffuses itself through the whole soul, till it make perfect day, Prov. 4. 18. It is a growing knowledge; they who are thus enlightened, never think they know enough, till they come to know as they are known. To give heed to this light must needs be the interest and duty of all. This is to use the word of truth, while evil-doers keep at a distance from it.

III. The apostle lays down one thing as previously necessary in order to our giving heed to, and getting good by, the scriptures, and that is, the knowing that all prophecy is of divine original. Now this important truth he not only asserts, but proves.

1. Observe, No scripture-prophecy is of private interpretation, (or a man's own proper opinion, an explication of his own mind,) but the revelation of the mind of God. This was the difference between the prophets of the Lord and the false prophets who have been in the world. The prophets of the Lord did not speak or do any thing of their own mind, as Moses, the chief of them, says expressly, (Num. 16. 28.) I have not done any of the works, (nor delivered any of the statutes and ordinances,) of mine own invention, but it was a word of God,

2. This important truth of the divine original of the scriptures, (that what is contained in them is the mind of God and not of man,) is to be known and owned by all who will give heed to the sure word of prophecy. That the scriptures are the word of God was on every hand known to the ancient church, but also a matter of science or knowledge. As a man not barely believes, but knows assuredly, that that very person is his particular friend, in whom he sees all the proper peculiar distinguishing marks and characters of his friend: so the Christian knows that book to be the word of God, in and upon which he sees all the proper marks and characters of a divinely inspired book. He tastes a sweetness, and feels a power, and sees a glory, in it truly divine. 3. The divinity of the scriptures must be known and acknowledged in the first place, before men can profitably use them, before they can give good heed to them. To call off our minds from all other writings, and apply them in a peculiar manner to these as the only certain and infallible rule, necessarily requires our being fully persuaded that they are divinely inspired and contain what is truly the mind and will of God.

Now seeing it is so absolutely necessary that persons be fully persuaded of the scripture's divine original, the apostle, (v. 21.) tells us how the Old Testament came to be compiled, and that, (1.) Negatively; It came not by the will of man. Neither the things themselves that are recorded, and make up the several parts of the Old Testament, are the生产经营, nor was the will of any of the prophets or penmen of the scriptures the rule or reason why any of those things were written, which make up the canon of the scripture. (2. Affirmatively; Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Observe, [1.] They were holy men of God who were employed about that book which we receive as the word of God. If Balaam and Balaam and Caleb, and others who were destitute of holiness, had any thing of the spirit of prophecy, upon occasion, yet such sort of persons were not employed to write any part of the scriptures for the use of the church of God. All the penmen of the scriptures were holy men of God. [2.] These holy men were moved by the Holy Ghost, in what they delivered as the mind and will of God. The Holy Ghost inspires and dictates to them what they were to deliver as the mind of God. Secondly, He powerfully excites and effectually engages them to speak (and write) what he had put into their mouths. Thirdly, He so wisely and carefully assists and directs them in the delivery of what they had received from him, that they were effectually secured from any the least mistake in expressing what they revealed. So that the very words of scripture are to be accounted the words of the Holy Ghost, and all the plainness and simplicity, all the power and virtue, and all the elegance and propriety, of the very words and expressions are to be regarded by us as proceeding from God. Mix faith therefore with what you find in the scriptures; esteem and reverence your Bible as a book written by holy men, inspired, influenced and assisted by the Holy Ghost.

CHAP. II.

The apostle having in the foregoing chapter exhorted them to proceed and advance in the Christian race, he now comes to remove, as much as in him lay, what he could not but apprehend would hinder their complying with his exhortation. He therefore gives them fair warning of false teachers, by whom they might be in danger of being seduced. To prevent this, I. He describes these seducers as impostors in themselves, and very pernicious to others, v. 1. 2. [1.] He assures them of the punishment that shall be inflicted on them, v. 3. 4. He tells us how contrary the method is, which God takes with those who fear him, v. 7. 9. 4. He fills up the rest of the chapter with a further description of those seducers of whom he would have them beware.

1. But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privately shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. 2. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil-spoken of. 3. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you:—

In the end of the former chapter, there is mention made of holy men of God, who lived in the times of the Old Testament, and were used as the amanuenses of the Holy Ghost, in writing the sacred oracles; but in the beginning of this, he tells us they had, even in that time, false prophets in the church as well as true. In all ages of the church, and under all dispensations, when God sends true prophets, the Devil sends some to seduce and deceive; false prophets in the Old Testament; and false Christ's false witnesses, as speaking contrary to the New. Concerning these observe, 1. Their business is to bring in destructive errors, even damnable heresies; as the business of teachers sent of God is to shew the way of truth, even the true way to everlasting life. There are damnable heresies as well as damnable practices; and false teachers are industrious to spread pernicious errors. 2. Damnable heresies are commonly brought in privily, under the cloak and colour of truth. 3. They who introduce destructive heresies, deny the Lord that bought them. They reject and refuse to hear and learn of the great Teacher sent from God, though he is ever at hand and has a mind and will to do a price sufficient to redeem as many worlds of sinners as there are sinners in the world. 4. They who bring in errors destructive to others, bring swift and sure destruction upon themselves. Self-destroyers are soon destroyed; and those who are so hardened as to propagate errors destructive to others, shall surely and suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

He proceeds, in the second verse, to tell us the consequence with respect to others; and here we may learn, (1.) Corrupt leaders seldom fail of many to follow them; though the way of error is a pernicious way, yet many are ready to walk therein. Men drink in iniquity like water, and are pleased to live in error. The prophets' prophecies falsely, and the people love to have it so. (2.) The spreading of error will bring up an evil report on the way of truth. The word proceeds, by Jesus Christ, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Christian religion is from the God of truth as the Author, and leads to true happiness in the enjoyment of the true God as the end, and works truth in the inward part as the means of acceptably serving God. And yet this way of truth is traduced and blasphemed by those who embrace and advance destructive errors. This the apostle has foretold, as what should certainly come to pass. Let us not be offended at anything of this in our day, but take care that we give no occasion to the enemy to blaspheme the holy name whereby we are called, or speak evil of this way whereby we hope to be saved.

Observe, in the next place, the method seducers take to draw disciples after them. They use feigned words; they flatter, and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple, inducing them to give in entirely into the opinions which these seducers endeavour to propagate, and sell and deliver themselves over to the instruction and government of these false teachers, who make a gain of them whom they make their prostylites: for all this is through covetousness, with a desire and design to get more wealth, or credit or commendation, by increasing the number of their followers. The faithful ministers of Christ, who shew men the way of truth, desire the profit and advantage of their followers, that they may be saved; but these seducing teachers desire and design only their own temporal advantage and worldly grandeur.

3. Whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not. 4. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; 5. And spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; 6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly.

Men are apt to think that a reprobate is the forerunner of a pardon, and that if judgment be not speedily executed, it is, or will be, certainly reversed. But the apostle tells us, that how successful and prosperous soever false teachers may be, and that for a time, yet their judgment lingereth not. God has determined long ago how he will deal with them. Such unbelievers, who endeavour to turn others from the faith, are condemned already, and are worthy of death. The righteous Judge will speedily take vengeance on them of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste. To prove this assertion, here are several examples of the righteous judgment of God, in taking vengeance on sinners, proposed to our serious consideration.

I. See how God dealt with the angels who sinned. Observe, 1. No excellency will exempt a sinner from punishment. If the angels, who had the advantage of vastiy in strength and knowledge, violate the law of God, the sentence, which that law awards, shall be executed upon them, and that without mercy or mitigation, for God did not spare them. Whence observe, 2. By how much the more excellent the offender, by so much the more severe the punishment. These angels, who had the advantage of men, as to the dignity of their nature, are immediately punished, and had only a few days, no favour at all shown them. 3. Sin debases and degrades the persons who commit it. The angels of heaven are cast down from the height of their excellency, and divested of all their glory and dignity, upon their disobedience. Whoever sins against God, does a manifest hurt to himself. 4. They who rebel against the God of heaven, shall all be sent down to hell. There is no place or state between the height of glory and the depth of misery, in which they shall be allowed to rest. If creatures sin in heaven, they must suffer in hell. 5. Sin is the work of darkness, and darkness is the wages of sin. The darkness of misery and torment follows the darkness of sin. They who will not walk according to the light and direction of God's law, shall be deprived of the light of God's countenance and the comforts of his presence. 6. As sin binds men over to punishment, so misery and torment hold men under punishment.

II. See how God dealt with the old world, even in much the same way that he dealt with the angels. He spared not the old world; which was defiled with inordinate lust; of which see here,

1. The number of offenders signifies no more to procure any favour, than the quality. If the sin be universal, the punishment shall likewise extend to all. But, 2. If there be not a few righteous, they shall be preserved. God does not destroy the good with the bad. In wrath he remembers mercy. 3. They who are preachers of righteousness in an age of universal corruption and degeneracy, holding forth the word of life in an exemplary conversation, shall be preserved in a time of general destruction. 4. God can make use of those creatures as the instruments of his vengeance in punishing sinners, which he at first made and appointed for their service and benefit. He destroys the whole world by water. But observe, 5. What is the procuring cause of this; it was a world of ungodly men, who either by sinning or negligent of those instructions which kept them out of the divine protection, and exposes them to utter destruction.

III. See how God dealt with Sodom and Gomorrah; though they were situated in a country like the Garden of the Lord, yet, if in such a fruitful soil they shall abound in sin, God can soon turn a fruitful land into barrenness, and a well watered country into dust and ashes. Observe, 1. No political union or confederacy can keep off judgments from a sinful people. Sodom and the neighbouring cities were no more scourged by their regular government, than the angels by the dignity of their nature, or the old world by their vast number. 2. God can make use of contrary creatures to punish incorrigible sinners. He destroyed the old world by water, and Sodom by fire. He who keeps fire and water from hurting his people, (Isa. 43. 2.) can make either to destroy his enemies; therefore they are never safe. 3. Most heinous sins bring most grievous judgments. They who are abominable in their vices, are remarkable for their plagues. They who are so exceeding before the Lord, must expect the most dreadful vengeance. 4. The punishment of sinners in former ages, is designed for the example of those who come after; “Follow them, not only in the time of living, but in their course and way of living.” Men who live ungodly, must see what are to expect if they go on still in a course of impiety. Let us take warning by all the instances of God’s taking vengeance, which are recorded for our admonition, and to prevent our promising ourselves impunity, though we go on in a course of sin.

7. And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. 8. (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day, with their unlawful deeds;) 9. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished:

When God sends destruction on the ungodly, he commands deliverance for the righteous; and if he rain fire and brimstone on the wicked, he will cover the heads of the guilty and they shall be hidden in the day of his anger. This we have an instance of in his preserving Lot. Where observe, 1. The character given of Lot; he is called a just man; this he was to the generally prevailing bent of his heart, and through the main of his conversation. God does not account men just or unjust from one single act, but from their general course of life. And here is a just man in the midst of a most corrupt and profligate generation. 2. The judgment shall come from God, and he does not follow the multitude to do evil, but in a city of injustice he walks uprightly. 3. The impression the sins of others have upon this righteous man. Though the sinner takes pleasure in his wickedness, it is a grief and vexation to the soul of the righteous. In bad company we cannot escape either guilt or grief. Let the sins of others be a trouble to us, otherwise it will not be possible for us to keep ourselves from particular arguments for our duration and continuance of this good man’s grief and vexation; it was from day to day. Being accustomed to hear and see their wickedness did not reconcile him to it, nor abate of the horror that was occasioned by it. This is the righteous man whom God preserved from the desolating judgment that destroyed all round about him. From this instance we learn to figure, that God knows how to deliver his people, and punish his enemies. It is here presupposed, that the righteous must have their temptations and trials. The Devil and his instruments will thrust sore at them, that they may fall; and if we will get to heaven, it must be through many tribulations; it is therefore our duty to reckon upon, and prepare for them. Observe here, 1. The Lord knoweth those that are his. But he will not depart him who is godly, for himself; and if there be but one in five cities, he knows him; and where there is a greater number, he cannot be ignorant of or overlook any one of them. 2. The wisdom of God is never at a loss about ways and means to deliver his people. They are often utterly at a loss and can see no way; he can discover a great many.

10. But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government. Presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. 11. Whereas angels, who are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation against them before the Lord. 12. But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption; 13. And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day-time. Spots they are, and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast with you; 14. Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: a heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children: 15. Who have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness; 16. But was rebuked for his iniquity: the dumb ass, speaking with man’s voice, for bade the madness of the prophet. 17. These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. 18. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. 19. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. 20. For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. 21. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered to them. 22. But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire.

The apostle's design being to warn us of, and arm us against, seducers, he now returns to discourse more particularly of them, and give us an account of their character; and that even with those who justifies the righteous judge of the world in reserving them in an especial manner for the most severe and heavy doom; as Cain is taken under special protection, that he might be kept for uncommon vengeance. But why will God thus deal with these false teachers? This he shews in what follows.

I. These walk after the flesh; they follow the devices and desires of their own hearts, they give up themselves to the conduct of their own fleshly soul, refusing to make their reason stoop to divine revelation, and bring every thought to the obedience of Christ; they, in their lives, act directly contrary to God's righteous precepts, and comply with the demands of corrupt nature. Evil opinions are often accompanied with evil practices; and they who are for propagating error, are for improving in wickedness; they will not sit down contented in the mea-cure of sinfulness to which they have attained, nor is it enough for them to stand up, and maintain, and defend, what wickedness they have already committed, but they walk after the flesh, they go on in their sinful course, and increase unto more ungodliness, and greater degrees of impurity and uncleanness too; they also pour contempt on those whom God has set in authority over them, and requires them to honour; these therefore despise the ordinance of God, and we need not wonder at it for they are bold and daring, obstinate and refractory, and will not only cherish contempt in their hearts, but with their tongues will utter slanderous and reprehensile words of those who are set over them.

II. This he aggravates, by setting forth the very different conduct of more excellent creatures, even the angels; of whom observe, 1. They are greater in power and might; and that even with those who are clothed with authority and power among the sons of men, and much more than those false teachers, who are slanderous revilers of magistrates and governors; the good angels vastly exceed us in all natural and moral excellencies, in strength, understanding, and holiness too. 2. Good angels are accusers of sinful creatures, either of their own kind, or of those who have been called to behold the face of God, and stand before his throne; they do but have a zeal for his honour, and accuse and blame those who dishonour him. 3. Angels bring their accusations of sinful creatures before the Lord; they do not publish their faults, and tell their crimes to their fellow-creatures, in a way of calumny and slander; but it is before the Lord, who is the Judge, and who is the Avenger, of all impiety and injustice.
4. Good angels mingle no bitter revilings or base reproaches with any of the accusations or charges they bring against the wickedest and worst of criminals.
Let us, who pray that God's will may be done on earth as it is in heaven, imitate the angels in this particular; if we complain of wicked men, let it be to God, and that not with rage and reviling, but with compassion and composedness of mind, that may evidence that we belong to him who is meek and merciful.

III. The apostle, having shewn (v. 11.) how unlike seducing teachers are to the most excellent creatures, proceeds (v. 12.) to shew how like they are to the most inferior; they are like the horse and mule, which have no understanding; they are as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destruced. Men, under the power of sin, are so far from observing the revelation of God's will, and self-case, or reason, or act according to the direction thereof; they walk by sight, and not by faith, and judge of things according to their senses; as they represent things pleasant and agreeable, so they must be approved and esteemed; brute-creatures follow the instinct of their sensitive appetite, and sinful man follows the inclination of his carnal mind; these re-them, for these are not only wrongs and lascivious acts which he has given them, and so are ignorant of what they might and ought to know; and therefore observe, 1.
Ignorance is the cause of evil-speaking; and, 2. Destruction will be the effect of it; these persons shall be utterly destroyed in their own corruption; their vices not only expose them to the wrath of God in another world, but often bring them to misery and ruin in this life; and surely such sort of impudent contentious persons, and those whose lives are filthy and open, openness in sin is an improvement of the pleasure of sinning, most justly deserve all the plagues of this life and the pains of the next in the greatest extremity. Therefore whatever they meet with, is the just reward of their unrighteousness. Such sinners are short themselves in mischief, deceive themselves, and disgrace all they belong to; for by one sort of sins they prepare themselves for another; and their extravagant lusts, their intemperance in eating and drinking, bring them to commit all manner of lewdness, so that their eyes are full of adultery; their wanton looks shew their own impure lusts, and are designed and directed to kindle the like in others; and this is what they cannot cease from;
the heart is insatiate in lusting, and the eye inconstant in looking after what may gratify their unclear desires; and who they are themselves impudent and imcessant in their own very diligent and often successful in deceiving others, and drawing others into the same excess of riot. But here observe who they are, who are in the greatest danger of being led away into error and impiety, even the unstable; those whose hearts are not established with grace, are easily turned into the way of sin, or else such sort of sensual wretches would not be able to prevail upon them; and what is more, if these are not only wrongs but covetous also; and these kind of practices their hearts are exercised with; they pant after riches, and the desire of their souls is to the wealth of this world; it is a considerable part of their work to contrive to get wealth; in this their hearts are exercised, and then they execute their projects; and if men abandon themselves to all sorts of lusts, we cannot wonder at the apostle's saying to the apostle's children: for they are liable to the curse of God denounced against such ungodly, unrighteous men, and they bring a curse upon all who hearken and adhere to them.

IV. The apostle (v. 15, 16.) proves that they are cursed children, even such covetous persons as the Lord abhors, by shewing, 1. They have forsaken the right way; and it can be no mistake of the right way, which is a self-defining way. 2. They are gone into a wrong way;
thev have erred and strayed from the way of life,
and gone over into the path which leads to death, and takes hold of hell; and this he makes out by shewing it to be the way of Balaam, the son of Bosor. (1.) That is a way of unrighteousness, into which men are led by the wages of unrighteousness.
II. PETER, II.

And it is just with God to deal thus with them, because, (1.) They allure those they deal with, and draw them into a net, or catch them as a fowl, (Luke 12:24.); and, (2.) It is with great seducers words of vanity; love expressions which have a great sound, but little sense. (3.) They work upon the corrupt affections and carnal fleshly lusts of men, proposing what is grateful to them. And, (4.) They seduce persons who in reality avoided and kept at a distance from those who spread and those who embraced hurtful and destructive errors. Observe, (1.) By application and industry men attain a skillfulness and success in promoting error; they are artful and as successful as the fisher, which makes angling his daily employment; the business of these men is to draw disciples after them, and in their methods and management there are some things worth observing, how they suit their bait to those they desire to catch. (2.) Erroneous teachers have a peculiar advantage to win men over to them, because they have sensual pleasures to take with them; whereas the ministers of Christ put men upon self denial, and the mortifying of those lusts that others gratify and please, wonder not therefore that truth prevails no more, or that errors spread so much. (3.) Persons who have for a while adhered to the truth, and kept clear of errors, may by the subtlety and industry of seducers be so far deceived, as to fall into those errors they had for a while clean escaped; “Be therefore always upon your guard, maintain a godly jealousy of yourselves, search the scriptures, pray for the Spirit to instruct and establish you in the truth, walk humbly with God, and watch against every thing that may provoke him to give you up to a reprobate mind, that you may not be taken with the fair and specious pretences of these false teachers who promise liberty to all who will hearken to them, not true Christian liberty for the service of God, but a licentiousness in sin, to follow the devices and desires of their own hearts;” (2 Pet. 2:15.) And the thing is most shameful, as it is monstrous in the midst of all their talk of liberty, they themselves are the vilest slaves, for they are the servants of corruption; their own lusts have gotten a complete victory over them, and they are actually in bondage to them, making provision for the flesh, to satisfy its cravings, comply with its directions, and obey its commands; their minds and hearts are so far corrupted and depraved, that they have neither power nor desire to overcome them, they are conquered and captivated by their spiritual enemies, and yield their members servants of unrighteousness; and what a shame it is to be overcome and commanded by those who are themselves the servants of corruption, and slaves to their own lusts! This consideration should prevent our being led away by these seducers; and to this he adds another; (v. 20.) It is not only a shame to be deceived by those that are themselves the slaves of sin, and led captive by the Devil at his pleasure, but it is a real detriment to those who have clean escaped from them who live in error, for hereby their latter end is made worse than their beginning. Here we see, First, It is an advantage to escape the pollutions of the world, to be kept from gross and scandalous sins, though men are not thoroughly converted and changed; yet we are thoroughly dead and buried by those who are truly serious, and embarking these who are openly profane; whereas, if we run with others to the same excess of riot, and abandon ourselves to the sins of the age, we afflict and dishearten those who endeavour to walk as becomes the gospel, and strengthen the hands of those who are already engaged in open rebellion against the Most High, as well as alienate ourselves more from God, and harden our hearts against him. Secondly, Some men are, for a time, kept from the pollutions of the world, by the knowledge of Christ, who are not savingly renewed in the spirit of their mind. A religious education has restrained many whom the grace of God has not renewed; if we receive the light of the truth, and have a notional knowledge of Christ in our heads, it may be of some present service to us; but we must receive the love of the truth, and hide God's word in our heart, or it will not sanctify and save us. Thirdly, Those who have, for a time, escaped the pollutions of the world, but, through entanglements with false teachers: they first perplex men with some plausible and specious objections against the truths of the gospel; and the more ignorant and unstable are hereby made to stagger, and brought to question the truth of doctrines they have received, because they cannot solve all the difficulties, nor answer all the objections, that are urged by these seducers. For hereby, When men are once entangled, they are easily overcome; therefore should Christians keep close to the word of God, and watch against those who seek to perplex and bewilder them; and that because if men who have once escaped, are again entangled, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

The apostle, in the two last verses of the chapter, seeks himself to prove that a state of apostasy is worse than one of sin, and for this a condemning the way of righteousness, after they have had some knowledge of it, and expressed some liking to it; this carries in it a declaring that they have found some iniquity in the way of righteousness, and some falseness in the word of truth: now to bring up such an evil report upon the good way of God, and such a false charge against the way of truth, must necessarily expose the heaviest condemnation; the misery of such deserters of Christ, and his gospel, is more unavoidable, and more intolerable, than that of other offenders; for, 1. God is more highly provoked by them who by their conduct despise the gospel, as well as disobey the law, and who reproach and pour contempt upon God and his grace. 2. The Devil more narrowly watches and more closely confines those whom he has recovered, after they had once gone off from him, and professed to be the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, (Matt. 12. 45.) they are kept under a stronger guard, and no wonder it should be so, when they have licked up their own vomit again, returning to the same errors and impieties that they had once cast off, and seemed to detest and loathe, and swallow in that filthiness from which they appeared once to be really cleansed. Well, if the scripture gives such an account of Christians that they die the hand, and of sin on the other, as we have here in these two verses, we certainly ought highly to approve of the former, and persevere therein, because it is a way of righteousness, and a holy commandment, and to loathe and keep at the greatest distance from the latter, because it is set forth as most offensive and abominable.

CHAP. III.

The apostle, drawing toward the conclusion of this second epistle, begins this last chapter of it, with repeating the account of his design and scope in writing a second time to them, v. 1, 2. He proceeds to mention one thing that induced him to write this second epistle, namely, the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, v. 3. 5. He instructs and establishes them in the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to judgment, v. 8. 10. He sets forth the use and improvement which Christians ought to make of Christ's second coming, and the惊奇 and renovation of things, which will accompany that solemn coming of our Lord, v. 11. 18.

This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance: 2. That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

That the apostle might the better reach his end in writing this epistle, which is, to make them steady and constant in a fiduciary and practical remembrance of the doctrine of the gospel, he, 1. Expresses his special affection and tenderness of them, by calling them beloved, hereby evidencing that he aided to godliness, brotherly-kindness; as he had (ch. 1. 7.) exhorted them to do. Ministers must be examples of love and affection, as well as life and conversation.

2. He evidences a sincere love to them, and hearty concern for them, by writing the same thing to them, though in other words; it being safe for them, it shall not be grievous to him to write upon the same subject, and pursue the same design, by those methods which are most likely to succeed. The better to recommend the matter, he tells them, that what he would have them to remember, are, (1.) The words spoken by the holy prophets, who were divinely inspired, both enlightened and sanctified by the Holy Ghost; and seeing these persons' minds were purified by the sanctifying operation of the same Spirit, they were the better disposed to receive and retain what came from God by the holy prophets. (2.) The commandments of the apostles of the Lord and Saviour; therefore the disciples and servants of Christ ought to regard what those who are sent by him have declared unto them to be the will of their Lord; what God has spoken by the prophets of the Old Testament, and Christ has commanded by the apostles of the New, cannot but demand and deserve to be frequently remembered; and they who meditate on these things, will feel the quickening virtues thereof; it is by these things the pure minds of Christians are to be stirred up, that they may be active and lively in the work of holiness, and zealous and unwearied in the way to heaven.

3. Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts. 4. And saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. 5. For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: 6. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: 7. But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men.

To quicken and excite us to a serious mind and firm adherence to what God has revealed to us by the prophets and apostles, we are told that there will be scoffers, men who will make a mock of sin, and of salvation from it. God's way of saving sinners by Jesus Christ, is what men will scoff at, and that in the last days, under the gospel. This, indeed, may seem very strange, that the New-Testament dispensation of the covenant of grace, which is spiritual, and therefore more agreeable to the nature of God than the Old, should be ridiculed; but the spirituality and simplicity of New-Testament worship are directly contrary to the carnal mind of man; and this accounts for what the apostle seems here to hint at, namely, that scoffers shall be more

nourous and more bold in the last days than ever before; though in all ages those who were born and walked after the flesh, persecuted, reviled, and reproached them who were born and did walk after the spirit, yet in the last days there will be a great movement of this. Without this, all the other articles of serious godliness, and those who firmly adhere to the circumcission and self-denial which the gospel prescribes; this is what is mentioned as a thing well known to all Christians, and therefore they ought to reckon upon it, that they may not be surprised and shaken, as if some strange thing happened unto them.

Now to prevent the true Christian's being overcome, when attacked by these scoffers, we are told,

I. What sort of persons they are; they walk after their own lusts, they follow the devices and desires of their own hearts, and carnal, corrupt affections, not the dictates and directions of right reason, and an enlightened, well-informed judgment; this they do in the course of their conversation, they live as they list, and they speak as they list; it is not only their mind's own, but they hoard up their time and strength, and make the mind of every uncircumcised sinner, (Rom. 7.) alienated from God, ignorant of him, and averse to him; but they are grown to such a height of wickedness, that they proclaim openly what is in the hearts of others who are yet carnal; they say that their tongues are their own, and their strength, and time, and all; and who is lord over us? Who shall contradict or control us, or ever call us to an account? And they see that they may be confined by any laws of God in their conversation, so neither will they bear that the revelations of God should dictate and prescribe to them what they are to believe; as they will walk in their own way, and talk their own language, so will they also think their own thoughts, and form principles which are altogether their own; here also their own lusts alone shall be ascribed by them to their own, as to the, polished libertines as are here described, can take a seat, at least they cannot sit in the seat of the scornful. "By this ye shall know them, that ye may the better be upon your guard against them."

II. We also are foretold how far they will proceed; they will attempt to shake and unsettle us, even as to our belief of Christ's second coming; they will scoffingly say, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the foundation of the Christian faith will signify very little; this is that which fills up, and gives the finishing stroke to, all the rest; the promised Messiah is come, he was made Flesh, and dwelt among us; he is altogether such a one as is stated before, and has done all that for us which has been before taken notice of; these principles the enemies of Christianity have all along endeavoured to overturn; but, as these all rest upon their inward minds, it is easy to know and expose that they will in the other apostles have given us the most sure and satisfying evidence, it is probable that they will at last grow weary of their opposition to them; and yet, while one very principal article of our faith refers to what is still behind, and only has a promise to rest upon, here they will still attack us, even to the end of time; till our Lord is come, they will not themselves believe that he prevails against us; we therefore are to hold the, laudable motive of his second coming, and do what in them lies, to put all out of countenance who seriously believe and wait for it. Now therefore let us see how this point stands, both on the believer's part, and on the part of these scoffers: the believer not only desires that he may come, but, having a promise that he will come, a promise that he himself has made and often repeated, a promise received and reported by faithful witnesses, and left upon sure record, he is also firmly and fully persuaded that he will come: on the other hand, these seducers, because they wish he never may, therefore do all that in them lies, to cheat themselves and others into a persuasion that he never will come; if they cannot deny that there is a promise, yet they will laugh at that very promise, which argues with higher degrees of infidelity and contempt; Where is the promise, say they, of his coming?

III. We are also forewarned of the method of their reasoning; for while they laugh, they will pretend to argue too; to this purpose they add, that since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. Gen. 4.

This is a subtle, though not a solid way of reasoning; it is applied to the expiration of all things, and especially upon wicked hearts; because sentence against them is not speedily executed, therefore they flatter themselves that it never will, whereupon their hearts are fully set in them to do evil; (Eccs. 8. 11.) thus they act themselves, and thus they would persuade others to act; so here, say they, "The fathers are fallen asleep, they are all dead, to whom the promise was made, and it never was made good in their time; and therefore there is no likelihood that it ever will be in any time; why should we trouble ourselves about it? If there had been any truth or certainty in the promise you speak of, we should surely have seen somewhat of it before this time, some signs of his coming, some preparatory steps in order to it, whereas we find to this very day, all things continue as they were, without any change, even from the beginning of the creation: No man can know, or foretell, when one man or another may have any change in the course of so many thousand years, why should we affright ourselves as if it were to have an end?" Thus do these scoffers argue! Because they see no changes, therefore they fear not God, Ps. 35. 19. They neither fear him nor his judgments; what he never has done, they would conclude he never can do, or never will.

IV. Here is the falsehood of their argument detected; when they rashly supposed, they were not professedly had said, there had not been any change from the beginning of the creation, the apostle puts us in remembrance of a change already past, which, in a manner, equals that which we are called to expect and look for; which was the drowning of the world in the days of Noah: this these scoffers had overlooked, they took no notice of it; though they might have known it, and ought to have known it, yet this they willingly are ignorant of; they make us pass over silence, as if they had never heard or known any thing of it; if they knew it, they did not like to retain it in their knowledge; they did not receive this truth in the love of it, neither did they care to own it. Note, It is hard to persuade men to believe what they are not willing to find true; they are ignorant in many cases, because they are willing to be ignorant; and they do not know because they do not wish to know; and there is no other; the sinners think such a thing as this will be admitted as an excuse for whatever sin it may betray them into; they who crucified Christ, did not know who he was; for had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory; (1 Cor. 2. 8.) but, though ignorant, they were not therefore innocent; their ignorance itself was a sin, willing and wilful ignorance; and one sin cannot be the cause of another, (as some have been of the dreadful vengeance with which God swept away a whole world of ungodly wretches at once, they would not surely have scoffed at his threatenings of any after equally terrible judgment; but here they were willingly ignorant; they did not know what God had done, because they had no mind to know it. Now therefore we shall proceed to consider the representation which the apostle lays down, both of the destruction of the old world by water, and that which awaits this present world at the final conflagration. He mentions the one as what God had done, to convince and persuade us the rather to believe that the other both will and will be. First, we begin with the apostle’s account of the destruction which has once already come upon the world; (v. 5, 6.)

Thus, the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water; whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. Originally, the world was otherwise situated, the waters were most wisely divided at the creation, and most beneficially for us; some of the waters had proper positions assigned them by the firmament, here called the heavens, (as it is also, Gen. 1. 8.) and others under the firmament, gathered together unto one place; there were then both sea and dry land, a commodious habitation for the children of men; but now, at the time of the universal deluge, the case is strangely altered; the waters which God had divided before, and assigned to being a part convenient receptacle, now does he, in anger, throw together again in a heap; he breaks up the fountain of the deeps, and throws open the windows, the clouds of heaven, (Gen. 7. 11.)

Thus he made known at once his terrible power and his fierce anger, and made an end of a whole world, which was a world of sinners, being wholly overflowed with water, and water, perished, v. 5. God has not here a change, and a most awful change: And then it is to be observed, that all this was done by the word of God; it was by his powerful word that the world was made at first, and made in so commodious and beautiful a frame and order, Heb. 11. 3.

He said, Let there be a firmament, &c. Gen. 1. 6, 7. And let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear. Thus he shake, and it was done, Ps. 33. 9. Thus, says our apostle, by the word of the Lord the heavens were, as they were of old, that is, at the first creation, and the earth (as it was at first a terraqueous globe) standing out of the water and in the water. Nor was it only the first frame and order of the world that is here said to be by the word of God, but the after confusion and ruin of the world, as well as its destruction, was likewise rendered by the same word; also by the same word; none but that God who stretched out the heavens and laid the foundation of the earth, could destroy and overthrow such a vast fabric at once. This was done by the word of his power, and it was also done according to the word of his promise; God had said that he would destroy man, even all flesh, and that he would do it by bringing a flood of waters upon the earth, Gen. 6. 7, 13, 17. This was the change which God had before brought upon the world, and which these seers had overlooked; and now we are to consider, in the second place, what the apostle says of the destructive change which is yet to come upon it; The heavens and the earth which now are, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire and the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, v. 7. Here is to be observed the final dissolution of the world, and which we are yet more nearly concerned in; the ruin that came upon the world and its inhabitants by the flood, we read, and hear, and think of, with concern, though those who were swept away by it were such as we never knew; but the judgment here spoken of is yet to come; and will surely come, though we know not when, nor upon what particular age or generation of men; and therefore we are not, we cannot be, sure that it may not happen in our own times: and this makes a very great difference, though it should be admitted that they were equal in every other respect; which yet must not be allowed, for there were some, though very few, who escaped that deluge, but not one can escape in this conflagration; besides, we were not in respect of the one, but are not sure that we shall not be included in the other also.

Now therefore to see the world to which we belong; destroyed at once; not a single person only, not a particular family only, nor yet a nation, (even that which we are most nearly interested in and concerned for,) but the whole world, I say, sinking at once, and no ark provided, no possible way left of escaping for any one from the common ruin; this makes a difference between the two, and what we are to expect, and what we yet are to expect. The one is already past, and never to return upon us any more; (for God has said expressly, that there shall never any more be a flood to destroy the earth, Gen. 9. 11–15.) the other is still behind, and as certain to come as the truth and the power of God can make it: the one came gradually upon the world, and was growing upon its inhabitants forty days, before it made an utter end of them; (Gen. 7. 12, 17.) this other will come upon them swiftly and all at once; (2 Pet. 2. 1.) besides, there were in that overthrow (as we have said) a few who escaped, but the ruin which yet awaits this world, whenever it comes, will be absolutely a universal one; there will not be any part but what the devouring flames will seize upon, not a sanctuary left any where for the inhabitants to flee to, not a single spot in which they may take refuge; and so it is not of the overthrow. Whatever differences may be assigned between that destruction of the world and this here spoken of, do indeed represent the approaching as the most terrible judgment; yet that the world has once been destroyed by a universal deluge, renders it the more credible that it may be ruined by a universal conflagration; let therefore the seers, who laugh at the coming of our Lord to judgment, at least consider, that there is nothing said of it in the word of God, but what is within reach of the power of God; and though they still should laugh, they shall not put us out of countenance; we are well assured that it will be, because he has said it, and we can depend upon his promise; they err, not knowing (at least not believing) the scriptures, nor the power of God; but we know, and we do or ought to depend upon, the power of God. We must believe, of course, that the destruction which will certainly make good, is, that the heavens and the earth which now are, which we are now related to, and which still subsist in all the beauty and order in which we see them, and which are so agreeable and useful to us, as we find they are, they are kept in store, not to be what earthly minds would wish to have them, treasures for us, but to be what God will have them, in his treasury, securely lodged and kept safe for his purposes; it follows, they are reserved unto fire. Observe, God’s following judgments are more terrible than those which went before; the old world was destroyed by water, but this is reserved unto fire, which shall burn up the wicked at the last day; and though this seems to be delayed, yet as this wicked world is upheld by the word of God, so it is only reserved for some time, and God’s judgments are never at an end, who will at the day of judgment deal with an ungodly world according to their deserts, for the day of judgment is the day of the perdition of ungodly men; they who now scoff at a future judgment, shall find it a day of vengeance and utter destruction; “Beware therefore of being among these seers; never question but the day of the Lord will surely come, and God will give that which he has threatened, we shall not have a time of refreshing and day of redemption to you, which will be a day of indignation and wrath to the ungodly world.”

8. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. 9. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. 10. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up.

The apostle comes in these words to instruct and establish Christians in the truth of the coming of the Lord, where we may clearly discern the tenderness and affection wherewith he speaks to them, calling them beloved; he had a compassionate concern and a love of good-will for the ungodly wretches who had been called out of their own and peculiar respect for the true believers, and the remaining ignorance and weakness that he apprehends to be in them make him jealous, and put him on giving them a caution. Here we may observe,

I. The truth which the apostle asserts—that with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. Though, in the account of men, there is a great deal of difference between a day and a year, and a vast deal more between one day and a thousand years, yet, in the account of God, who inhabits eternity, in which there is no succession, there is no difference; for all things past, present, and future, are ever before him; and the delay of a thousand years cannot be so much to him as the deferring of anything for a day or hour is to us.

II. The importance of this truth: this is the one thing the apostle would not have us ignorant of; a holy awe and reverential fear of God are necessary in order to our worshipping and glorifying him; and a belief of the inconceivable distance between him and us is very proper to beget and maintain that religious fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom. This is a truth that belongs to our peace, and therefore he endeavours that it may not be hid from our eyes; it is in the sight of God, let not this one thing be hid from you. If men have knowledge or belief of the eternal God, they will be very apt to think him such a one as themselves. Yet how hard it is to conceive of eternity! It is therefore not very easy to attain such knowledge of God as is absolutely necessary.

In v. 9, we are told, The Lord is not slack; he does with it delay beyond the appointed time; as God kept the time that he had appointed for the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, to a day, (Exod. 12. 41.) so he will keep to the time appointed, in coming to judge the world. What a difference there is between the account which God makes, and that which men make! Good men are apt to think God stays beyond the appointed time, that is, the time which he had set for their own and the church's deliverance; but the Lord's delay is not God sets another, and he will not fail to keep the day which he has appointed. Ungodly men dare charge a culpable slackness upon God, as if he had slept the time, and laid aside the thoughts of coming. But the apostle assures us, that what men count slackness, is truly long-suffering, and that to usward; it is a giving more time to his own people, whom he has chosen before the foundation of the world, many of whom are not as yet converted; and those who are in a state of grace and favour with God, are to advance in knowledge and holiness, and in the exercise of faith and patience, to abound in good works, doing and suffering what they are called to, that they may bring glory to God, and improve in a meetness for heaven; for God is not willing that any of these should perish, but that all of them should come to repentance. 10. Repentance is absolutely necessary in order to salvation. Except ye repent, we shall perish. Luke 13. 3, 5. 2. God has no delight in the death of sinners: as the punishment of sinners is a torment unto his creatures, a merciful God does not take pleasure in it; and though the principal design of God, in his long-suffering, is the blessedness of those whom he has chosen to receive the impression of the Spirit, and belief of the truth, yet his goodness and forbearance do in their own natural invite and call to repentance all those to whom they are exercised; and if men continue impenitent when God gives them space to repent, he will deal more severely with them; though the great reason why he did not hasten his coming, was, because he had not accomplished the number of his elect. "Abuse not therefore the patience and long-suffering of God, abandoning yourselves to a course of ungodliness; presume not to go boldly in the way of sinners, nor to sit down securely in an unconverted impenitent state, as he who said, (Matt. 24. 48.) My Lord delayeth his coming, lest he come and surprise you; for, as we read, (v. 10.) The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." Here we may conclude,

(1.) The certainty of the day of the Lord: though it is now above sixteen hundred years since this epistle was written, and the day is not yet come, it assuredly will come; God has appointed a day wherein he will judge the world in righteousness, and he will keep his appointment. It is appointed to men once to die, and after this the judgment, Heb. 9. 27. Settle it therefore in your hearts that the day of the Lord will certainly come, and you shall certainly be called to give an account of all things done in the body, whether good or evil; and let your exact walking before God, and your frequent judging yourselves, evidence your firm belief of a future judgment, when many live as if they were never to give any account at all. (2.) The suddenness of this day; it will come as a thief in the night, at a time when men are sleeping and secure, as the night before the destruction of Jerusalem. (3.) The expectation of the day of the Lord, any more than men expect the visitation of a thief when they are in a deep sleep, in the dark and silent night. At midnight there was a cry, Behold, the bridegroom comes; (Matt. 25. 6.) and at that time not only the foolish, but also the wise virgins, slumbered and slept. The Lord will come in a day when we look not for him, and an hour none men are aware of. That time which men think to be the most improper and most secure, will be the time of the Lord's coming. Let us then beware how we in our thoughts and imaginations put that day far away from us; but rather suppose it to be so much nearer in reality, by how much further off it is in the opinion of the ungodly world. (4.) The solemnity of this coming: [1.] The heavens shall pass away with a great noise; God is an unable to abide when the Lord shall come in his glory, they shall pass away; they shall undergo a mighty alteration, and this shall be very sudden, and with such a noise as the breaking and tumbling down of so great a fabric must necessarily occasion. [2.] The elements shall melt with fervent heat. At this coming of the Lord it shall not only be very tempestuous round about him, so that the very heavens shall pass away as in a mighty violent storm, but a fire shall go before him, that shall melt the elements.
II. Peter, III.

of which the creatures are composed. [3.] The earth also, and all the works that are therein, whether the heaven, the earth, and all the works, whether of nature or art, shall be destroyed. The stately palaces and gardens, and all the desirable things wherein worldly-minded men seek and place their happiness, all of them shall be burnt up; all sorts of creatures which God has made, and all the works of men, must submit, all must pass through the fire, which shall be a consuming fire to all that sin has brought into the world, though it may be but a refining fire to the works of God's hand, that the glass of the creation being made much brighter, the saints may much better discern the glory of the Lord therein.

And now who can but observe what a difference there will be between the first coming of Christ and the second! Yet that is called the great and dreadful day of the Lord, Mal. 4. 5. How much more dreadful must this coming to judgment be! May we be so wise as to prepare for it, that it may not be a day of vengeance and destruction unto us. O! what will become of us, if we set our affections on this earth, and make it our portion, seeing all these things shall be burnt up? Look out therefore, and make sure of a happiness beyond this visible world, which must all be melted down.

11. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, 12. Looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat! 13. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. 14. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless: 15. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you; 16. As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction. 17. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing you know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. 18. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

The apostle, having instructed them in the doctrine of Christ's second coming, takes occasion thence to exhort them to purity and godliness in their whole conversation: all the truths which are revealed in scripture, should be improved for our advancement in practical godliness: this is the effect that knowledge must produce, or we are never the better for it. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. Seeing all these things must be dissolved, how holy should we be, that are assured of it, departing from and dying to sin, that has so corrupted and defiled all the visible creatures, that there is an absolute need of its dissolution! All that was made for man's use, is subject to vanity by man's sin; and if the sin of man has brought the visible heavens, and the elements and earth, under a curse, from which they cannot be freed without being dissolved, what an abominable evil is sin, and how much to be hated by us! And inasmuch as this judgment, in order to the bringing restored to its primitive beauty and excellency, how pure and holy should we be, in order to our being fit for the new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness! It is a very exact and universal holiness that he exhorts to, not resting in any lower measure or degree, but labouring to be eminent beyond what is commonly attained; holy in God's house and in our own; holy in our worshipping of God, and in our conversing with men; all our conversation, whether with high or low, rich or poor, good or bad, friends or enemies, must be holy; we must keep ourselves unspotted from the world in all our conversations with it; we must be perfecting holiness in the fear of God, and in the love of God too; we must exercise ourselves unto godliness of all sorts, in all its parts, trusting in God and delighting in God only, who continues the same when the whole visible creation shall be dissolved; devoting ourselves to the service of God, and designing the glorifying and enjoyment of God, who endures for ever; whereas what worldly men delight in and follow after, must all be dissolved; these things which we now see, must in a little while pass away, and be no more as they now are: let us look therefore at what shall abide and continue, which, though it be not present, is certain and not far off. "This looking for the day of God, is one of the directions the apostle gives, to our being eminently holy and godly in all manner of conversation; "Look for the day of God as what you firmly believe shall come, and what you earnestly long for." The coming of the day of God is what every Christian must hope for and earnestly expect; for it is a day when Christ shall appear in the glory of the Father, and evidence his Divinity and Godhead even to those who counted him a mere man at his first coming. The day of God is that day when he appeared in the form of a servant, was what the people of God earnestly waited and looked for; that coming was for the consolation of Israel, Luke 2. 25. How much more should they wait with expectation and earnestness for his second coming, which will be the day of their complete redemption, and of his most glorious manifestation! Then he shall come to be admired in his saints, and glorified with all them that believe. For though it cannot but terrify and affright the ungodly, to see the visible heavens all in a flame, and the elements melting, yet the believer, whose faith is the evidence of things not seen, can rejoice in hope of more glorious heavens after these have been melted and refined by that dreadful fire which shall burn up all the dress of this visible creation. Here we must cease our discourse.

I. What true Christians look for—new heavens and a new earth, in which a great deal more of the wisdom, power and goodness of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ will be clearly discerned than we are able to discover in what we now see; for in these new heavens and earth, freed from the vanity the former were subject to, and the sin that polluted them, and also the corruption of all flesh, this is the habitation of such righteous persons as do righteousness, and are free from the power and pollution of sin; all the wicked shall be turned into hell; those only who are clothed with the righteousness—ness of Christ, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost, shall be admitted to dwell in this holy place.

II. What is the ground and foundation of this expectation and hope—the promise of God. To look for anything which God has not promised, is presumption; but if our expectations are according to the promise, both as to the things we look for, and the time and way of their being brought about, we cannot meet with a disappointment; for he is faithful, who has promised. See that therefore you delay his appearing; all the great things that are to come according to the word of God; and as to the new heavens and new earth, look for them as God has allowed and directed by the passages we have in this portion of scripture now before you, and in Isa. 65. 17.—66. 22. to which the apostle may be thought to allude."

As in v. 11, he exhorts to holiness, from the consideration that the heavens and the earth shall be dissolved, so in v. 14, he resumes his exhortation, from the consideration that they shall be again renewed; "Seeing you expect the day of God, when our Lord Jesus Christ will appear in his glorious majesty, and these heavens and earth shall be dissolved, and melted down, and, being purified and refined, shall be erected and rebuilt, prepare to meet him. It nearly concerns you to see in what state you are, and to look to pass sentence upon men, and to determine how it shall be with them to all eternity; this is the court of judicature whence there lies no appeal; whatever sentence is here passed by this great Judge, is irreversible; therefore get ready to appear before the judgment seat of Christ: and see to it," 1. "That you be found of him in peace, in a state of peace and reconciliation with God through Christ, in whom we have redemption, the forgiveness of sins, through his blood, the word of God, which has pre-empted, and set apart from them to pass sentence upon men, and to determine how it shall be with them to all eternity: this is the court of judicature whence there lies no appeal; whatever sentence is here passed by this great Judge, is irreversible; therefore get ready to appear before the judgment seat of Christ: and see to it," 2. That ye be found of Christ without spot, and blameless; follow after holiness as well as peace: and even spotless and perfect; we must not only take heed of all spots which are not the spots of God's children, (this only prevents our being found of men without spot,) but we must be found of Christ without spot, we must be pressing toward spotless purity, absolute perfection. Christians must be perfecting holiness, that they may be not only blameless before men, but also in the sight of God; and all this deserves and needs the greatest encouragement. Why should we neglect so work so negligently, can never do it successfully. "Now he that was found at that day of God in peace, if you are lazy and idle in this your day, in which we must finish the work that is given us to do. It is only the diligent Christian who will be the happy Christian in the day of the Lord. Our Lord will suddenly come to us, or shortly call us to him; and would you have him be well pleased with you? or be in the number of those who are a curse denounced against him who does the will of the Lord negligently, Marg. Jer. 48. 10. Heaven will be a sufficient recompense for all our diligence and industry, therefore let us labour and take pains in the work of the Lord; he will certainly reward us, if we be diligent in the work he has allotted us; now, that you may be diligent, account the long-suffering of our Lord to be salvation. "Does your Lord delay his coming? Do not think this is to give you more time to make provision for your lusts, to gratify them; it is so much space to repent and work out your salvation. It proceeds not from a want of concern or compassion for his suffering servants, nor is it designed to give countenance and encouragement to the world of the ungodly, but that men may have time to prepare for eternity. Learn then to make a right use of the patience of our Lord, who does as yet delay his appearing, that he may judge the world according to righteousness, and that he may shew mercy to them; and inasmuch as it is difficult to prevent men's abuse of God's patience, and engage them in the right improvement thereof, our apostle quotes St. Paul as directing men to make the same good use of the divine forbearance, that in the mouth, or from the pen, of two apostles the truth might be confirmed. And we may here observe with what esteem he alludes to the apostles, for he here most publicly witnesseth and sharply reproves St. Peter. If a righteous man smite one who is truly religious, it shall be received as a kindness; and let him reprove, it shall be as an excellent oil, which shall soften and sweeten the good man that is reproved when he does amiss. What an honourable mention does this apostle of the circumcision make of very many of them, before all, he reproved him, not walking with a reproving spirit to the truth of the gospel! (1.) He calls him brother, whereby he means not only that he is a fellow-Christian, (in which sense the word brethren is used, 1 Thess. 5. 27.) or a fellow-preacher, (in which sense St. Paul calls Timothy the evangelist a brother, Col. 1. 1.) but a fellow apostle, one who had the same extraordinary commission, immediately from Christ himself, to preach the gospel in every place, and to disciple all nations. Though many seducing teachers denied Paul's apostleship, yet St. Peter owns him to be an apostle. (2.) He calls him beloved; and they being both alike commissioned, and both united in the same service of the same Lord, it would have been very unseemly if they had not been united in affection to one another, for the strengthening of one another's hands, mutually lesions of, and supplies in the work of grace. (3.) He mentions St. Paul as one who had an uncommon measure of wisdom given unto him. He was a person of eminent knowledge in the mysteries of the gospel, and did neither in that nor any other qualification come behind any of the other apostles. How desirable is it, that those who preach the same gospel, should treat one another according to the pattern St. Peter here sets them! It is surely their duty to endeavour to remove all prejudices that hinder ministers' usefulness, and to begat and improve the esteem and respect in the minds of people toward their ministers, that may promote the success of their labours. And let us also here observe, [1.] The excellent wisdom that was in St. Paul, is said to be given him. The understanding and knowledge and skill that qualify men to preach the gospel, are the fruits of this grace. They seek for knowledge, and labour to get understanding, in hopes that it shall be given us from above, while we are diligent in using proper means to attain it. [2.] The apostle imparts to men according as he had received from God. He endeavours to lead others as far as he himself was led into the knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel. He is not an intruder into the truths he had not himself been fully assured of, and yet he does not fail to declare the whole counsel of God, Acts 20. 27. [3.] The epistles which were written by the apostle of the Gentiles, and directed to those Gentiles who believed in Christ, are designed for the instruction and edification of those who from among the Jews were brought to believe in Christ; for it is generally thought that what is here alluded to, is contained in the epistle to the Romans; (ch. 2. 4.) though in all his epistles there are some things that refer to one or other of the subjects treated of in this and the foregoing chapter; and it cannot seem strange that those who were pursuing the same general design, should in their epistles insist upon the same things. But the apostle Peter proceeds to tell us, that in those things which are to be met with in St. Paul’s epistles, there are some things hard to be understood. Among the variety of subjects treated of in scripture, some are not easy to be understood, because of their own obscurity, such are prophecies; others cannot be so easily understood because of their excellency and sublimity, as the mysterious doctrines; and others are with difficulty taken in, because of the weakness of men’s minds, such are the things of the Spirit of God, mentioned 1 Cor. 2. 14. And here the unlearned and unstable make wretched work; for they wrest and torture the scriptures, to make them speak what the Holy Ghost did not intend. Those who are not well instructed and well established in the truth, are in great danger of perverting the word of God. Those who have heard and learned of the Father, are best secured from misunderstanding and misapplying any part of the word of God; and where there is a divine power to establish as well as to instruct men in divine truth, persons are effectually secured from falling into errors. How great a blessing this is, we learn by observing what is the pernicious consequence of the errors that ignorant and unstable men fall into—even their own destruction. Errors in particular concerning the holiness and justice of God are the utter ruin of multitudes of men. Let us therefore earnestly pray for the Spirit of God to instruct us in the truth, that we may know it as it is in Jesus, and have our hearts established with grace, that we may stand firm and unshaken, even in the most stormy times, when others are tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

In v. 17. the apostle gives them a word of caution, where he intimates, that the knowledge we have of these things should make us very wary and watchful, inasmuch as there is a twofold danger. First, We are in great danger of being seduced, and turned away from the truth. The unlearned and unstable, and they are very numerous, do generally wrest the scripture. Many who have the scriptures and read them, do not understand what they read; and too many of those who have a right understanding of the sense and meaning of the word, are not established in the belief of the truth, and all these are liable to fall into error. Few attain to the knowledge and acknowledgment of doctrinal Christianity; and fewer find, so as to keep in the way of practical godliness, which is the narrow way, which only leads eth unto life. There must be a great deal of self denial and suspicion of ourselves, and submitting to the authority of Christ Jesus our great Prophet, before we can heartily receive all the truths of the gospel, and therefore we are in great danger of rejecting the truth. Secondly, We are in great danger by being seduced. For, 1. So far as we are turned from the truth, so far are we turned out of the way to true blessedness, into the path which leads to destruction. If men corrupt the word of God, it tends to their own utter ruin. 2. When men wrest the word of God, they fall into the error of the wicked, men without law, who keep to no rules, set no bounds to themselves; a sort of free-thinkers, which the psalmist detests, (Ps. 119. 113.) I hate vain thoughts, but thy law do I love. Whatever opinions and thoughts of men are not conformable to the law of God, and warranted by it, the good man disclaims and abhors; they are the conceits and counsels of the ungodly, who have forsaken God’s law; and if we imbibe their opinions, we shall too soon imitate their practices. 3. They who are led away by error, fall from their own steadfastness. They are wholly unhinged and unsettled, and know not where to rest, but are at the greatest uncertainty, like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. It nearly concerns us therefore to be upon our guard, seeing the danger is so great.

Now that we may the better avoid being led away, the apostle (v. 18.) directs us what to do. And, (1.) We must grow in grace. He had in the beginning of the epistle exhorted us to add one grace to another, and here he advises us to grow in all grace, in faith, and virtue, and knowledge. By how much the stronger grace is in us, by so much the more steadfast shall we be in the truth. (2.) We must grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. “Follow on to know the Lord.Labour to know him more clearly and more fully, to know more of Christ, and to know him to better purpose, so as to be more like him, and to love him better.” This is the knowledge of Christ the apostle Paul reached after, and desired to attain to, Phil. 3. 10. Such a knowledge of Christ as conforms us more to him, and endears him more to us, must needs be of great use to us to preserve us from falling off in times of general apostasy; and they who experience this effect of the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, will, upon receiving such grace from him, give thanks and praise to him, and join with our apostle in saying, To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

WITH

OF THE

FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF JOHN.

Completed by Mr. T. Reynolds

THOUGH the continued tradition of the Church attests that this epistle came from St. John the apostle, yet we may observe some other evidence that will confirm (or with some perhaps even outweigh) the certainty of that tradition. It should seem, that the penman was one of the apostolical college, by the sensible palpable assurance he had of the truth of the Mediator's person in his human nature; That which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life, v. 1. He here takes notice of the evidence the Lord gave to Thomas of his resurrection, by calling him to feel the prints of the nails and of the spear, which is recorded by John. And he must have been one of the disciples present, when the Lord came on the same day in which he arose from the dead, and shewed them his hands and his side, John 20. 20. But, that we may be assured which apostle this was, there is scarcely a critic or competent judge of diction, or style of argument and spirit, but will adjudge this epistle to the writer of that gospel that bears the name of the apostle John. They wonderfully agree in the titles and characters of the Redeemer; the Word, the Life, the Light; his name was the word of God. Compare 1 John 1. 1. and ch. 5. 7. with John 1. 1. and Rev. 19. 13. They agree in the commendation of God's love to us, (1 John 3. 1. and ch. 4. 9. John 3. 16.) and in speaking of our regeneration, or being born of God; 1 Epist. 3. 9. ch. 4. 7. and ch. 5. 1. John 3. 5. 6. Lastly, (to add no more instances, which may be easily seen in comparing this epistle with that gospel) they agree in the allusion to, or application of, that passage in that gospel, which relates (and which alone relates) the issuing of water and blood out of the Redeemer's opened side; This is he that came by water and blood, ch. 5. 6. Thus the epistle plainly appears to flow from the same pen as that gospel did. Now I know not that the text, or the intrinsic history of any of the gospels, gives us such assurance of its writer or penman, as that ascribed to John plainly does. There (viz. ch. 21. 24.) the sacred historian thus notifies himself; This is the disciple that testified of these things, and wrote these things; and we know that his testimony is true. Now who is this disciple, but he concerning whom Peter asked, What shall this man do? And concerning whom the Lord answered, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? v. 22. And who (in v. 20.) is described by these three characters: 1. That he is the disciple whom Jesus loved; the Lord's peculiar friend. 2. That he also leaned on his breast at supper. 3. That he said unto him, Lord, who is he that betrayeth thee? As sure then as it is that that disciple was John, so sure may the church be that that gospel and this epistle came from the beloved John.

The epistle is styled general, as being not inscribed to any particular church; it is, as a circular letter, (or a visitation charge,) sent to divers churches, (some say of Parthia,) in order to confirm them in their steadfast adherence to the Lord Christ, and the sacred doctrine concerning his person and office, against seducers; and to instigate them to adorn that doctrine by love to God and man; and particularly to each other, as being descended from God, united by the same Head, and travelling toward the same eternal life.

I. JOHN, I.

1. THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; 2. (For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shewed unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;) 3. That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his son Jesus Christ. 4. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

The apostle omits his name and character, (as also the author to the Hebrews does,) either out of humility, or as being willing that the Christian reader should be swayed by the light and weight of the subject, more than by the character of the writer. He might recommend them. And so he begins.

I. With an account or character of the Mediator's person. He is the great Subject of the gospel; the Foundation and Object of our faith and hope: the Bond and Cement that unites us unto God. He should be well known; and he is represented here, 1. As the Word of life, v. 1. In the gospel these two are disjoined, and he is called first, The word, v. 4. and afterward Life, intimating withal, that he is intellectual Life. In him was life, and that life was (efficiently and objectively) the light of men, v. 4. Here both are conjoined; the Word of life: the vital Word. In that he is the Word, it is intimated that he is the Word of some person or other; and that is God, even the Father. He is the Word of God, and so he is intimated to issue from the Father, as (though not in the same manner) a word (or speech, which is the same of words) from a speaker: But he is not a mere vocal word, (a bare λόγος ζωοκερικός) but a vital one; the Word of Life; the living word; and thereupon, 2. As eternal Life. His duration shews his excellency. He was from eternity; and so is, in scripture-account, necessary, essential, uncreated life. That the apostle speaks of his eternity, a parte ante, (as they say) and as from everlasting, seems evident in that he speaks of him, as he was in and from the beginning, when he was then with the Father, before his manifestation to us, yea, before the making of all things that were made; as John 1. 1. 2. 3. So that he is the eternal, vital, intellectual Word of the eternal living Father. 3. As life manifested; (v. 2.) manifested in the flesh; manifested to us. The eternal Life would assume mortality; would put on flesh and blood, (in the entire human nature,) and so dwell among us, and converse with us, John 1. 14. Here were his features and kingly raiment, that eternal Life (a Person of eternal, essential life) should come to visit mortals, and to procure eternal life for them, and then confer it on them!

II. With the evidence and convictive assurances that the apostle and his brethren had of the Mediator's presence and converse in the world, there were sufficient demonstrations of the reality of his abode here, and of the excellency and dignity of his person in the way of his manifestation, The life, the Word of life, the eternal Life, as such, could not be seen and felt; but the Life manifested, might be, and was so. The Life was clothed with flesh; put on the state and habit of abased human nature; and, as such, gave sensible proof of its existence and transactions here. The Divine Life, or Word incarnate, presented and evinced itself to the very senses of the apostles. Man. To their ears, as we have heard, v. 1. 3. The Life assumed a mouth and tongue, that he might utter words of life. The apostles not only heard of him, but they heard him himself. Above three years might they attend his ministry, be auditors of his public sermons and private expositions, (for he expounded them in the house,) and be charmed with the words of him who spake as never man spake before or since. The divine Life would employ the ear, and so the discourse be devoted to the word of life. And it was meet that they who were to be his representatives and imitators to the world, should be personally acquainted with his manifestations. 2. To their eyes. That which we have seen with our eyes, v. 1—3. The word would become visible; would not only be heard, but seen; seen publicly, privately, at distance, and at nearest approach; which may be intimated in the expression, with our eyes; with all the use and exercise that we could make of our eyes. We saw him in his life and ministry; saw him in his transfiguration on the mount, hanging, bleeding, dying and dead, upon the cross; and we saw him after his resurrection, for weeks and months after his death. His apologist must be eye-witnesses as well as ear-witnesses of him; Wherefore, of these men that have accompanied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection, Acts 1. 21. 22. And we were eye-witnesses of his majesty, 2 Pet. 1. 16. 3. To our internal sense; to the eyes of their mind; for so (possibly) may the next clause be understood, which we have looked upon. This may be distinguished from the foregoing perception, seeing with the eyes; and may be the same with what the apostle says in his gospel; (ch. 1. 14.) And we beheld, εἰδούμενοι, his glory, the glory as of the Only-Begotten of the Father. The word is not applied to the immediate object of the eye, but that was rationally collected from what they saw. What we have heard, not what we saw, says the apostle, and consequently, as other things we have well known of this word of life, we report to you. The senses are to be the informers of the mind. 4. To their hands and sense of feeling; And our hands have handled (touched and felt) of the word of life. This surely refers to the full conviction our Lord afforded his apostles of the truth, reality, solidity, and organization of his body, after his resurrection from the dead. When he shewed to them his hands and his side, and when his hands gave them leave to touch him; at least, he knew of Thomas's unbelief, and his professed resolution too not to believe, till he had found and felt the places and signatures of the wounds by which he died. Accordingly, at the next congress he called Thomas, in the presence of the rest, to satisfy the very curiosity of his unbelief. And probably others of them did so too. Our hands have handled of the Word of life, v. 3. That is, to the palpable sense of the testimony of sense. Sense, in its place and sphere, is a means that God has appointed, and the Lord Christ has employed, for our information. Our Lord took care to satisfy (as far as might be) all the senses of his apostles, that they might be the more authentic witnesses of him to the world. They that apply all this to the law and the gospel, lose the variety of sensations here mentioned in the propriety of the expressions and the reason of their incitation and repetition here. That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, v. 3. The apostles could not be deceived in such long and various exercise of their sense. Sense must minister to reason and judgment; and reason and judgment must minister to the reception of the Lord Christ and his gospel. The rejection of the Christian revelation is at last resolved into the rejection of sense itself; He spake not with our lips, but with our hearts, because they believed them not who had seen him after he was risen, Mark 16. 14.

III. With a solemn assertion and attestation of these grounds and evidences of the Christian truth and doctrine, the apostles publish these assurances for our satisfaction; We bear witness, and shew unto you, v. 2. That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, v. 3. It became them, on the one hand, to apply the evidence by which they were led; the reasons by which they were constrained to proclaim and propagate the Christian doctrine in the world. Wisdom and integrity obliged them to demonstrate that it was not either private fancy, or a cunningly devised fable, that they presented to the world. Evident truth would open their mouths, and force a public profession. We cannot but believe that the divine Spirit was specially engaged in the event, Acts 4. 20. It concerned the disciples to be well assured of the truth of the institution they had embraced. They should see the evidences of their holy religion. It fears not the light, nor the most judicious examination. It is able to afford rational conviction, and solid persuasion of mind and conscience. I would that ye knew what great conflict I have (or concern of mind) for you, and for them at Lydda, and for as many as have not seen me in the flesh, that their hearts might be knit together in love, and unto all riches of full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, even of the Father, and of Christ, Col. 2. 1, 2.

IV. With the reason of the apostle's exhibiting and asserting this summary of sacred faith, and this breviate of evidence attending it. This reason is twofold.

1. That the believers of it may be advanced to the same happiness with them; (with the apostles themselves;) That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye may have fellowship with us, v. 3. The apostle means not personal fellowship or conversation in the same church-administrations, but such as is consistent with personal distance from each other. It is communion with heaven, and in blessings that come from thence, and tend thither.

2. This we do the thing and testify, that you may share with us in our privileges and happiness. Gospel-spirits (or those that are made happy by gospel-grace) would fain have others happy too. We see also, there is a fellowship or communion that runs through the whole church of God. There may be some personal distinctions and peculiarities, but there is a communion (or common participation of privilege and dignity) belonging to all saints, from the highest apostle to the lowest believer. As there is the same precious faith, there are the same precious promises dignifying and crowning that faith, and the same precious blessings and glories enriching and filling those promises. Now that believers may be ambitious of this communion, that they may be instigated to retain and hold fast the faith that is the means of such communion; that the apostles also may manifest their love to the disciples in assisting them to the same communion with themselves, they included them in the highest promise, and enjoyed fellowship with them, in the heavenly glory. See whither the gospel revelation tends—to advance us far above sin and earth, and to carry us to blessed communion with the Father and the Son. Seek for that end the eternal Life was made flesh—that he might advance us to eternal life in communion with the Father and himself. See how far they live beneath the dignity, use, and end of the spiritual, blessed faith and institution, which we have a command to hold fast, and enjoy in the glorious and immediate presence of the Father and the Son Jesus Christ.

2. That believers may be enlarged and advanced in holy joy; And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full, v. 4. The gospel-dispensation is not properly a dispensation of sorrow, sorrow, and dread, but of peace and joy. Terror and astonishment may well attend mount Sinai; but exultation and joy mount Zion; where appears the eternal Word, the eternal Life, manifested in our flesh. The mystery of the Christian religion is directly calculated for the joy of mortals. It should be joy to us, that the eternal Son should come to seek and save us; that he has made a full atonement for our sins; that he has conquered sin and death for us; that he lives as our Intercessor and Advocate with the Father; and that he will come again to perfect and glorify his persevering believers. And therefore they live beneath the use and end of the Christian revelation, who are not filled with spiritual joy. Believers should rejoice in their happy relation to God, as his sons and heirs, his beloved and adopted; and in their happy relation to the Son of the Father, as being members of his beloved body, and co-heirs with himself; in the pardon of their sins, in the sanctification of their natures, in the adoption of their persons, in the prospect of grace and glory that will be revealed at the return of their Lord and Head from heaven. Were they confirmed in their holy faith, how would they rejoice! The disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost, Acts 13. 52.

5. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, That God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. 6. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: 7. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

The apostle, having declared the truth and dignity of the Author of the gospel, brings a message or report from him; from which a just conclusion is to be drawn for the consideration and conviction of the professors of religion, or professing entertainers of the glorious dispensation.

1. Here is the message or report that the apostle avers to come from the Lord Jesus; This then is the message which we have heard of him, (v. 5.) of his Son Jesus Christ. As he was the immediate Sender of the apostles, so he is the principal Person spoken of in the preceding context, and the next antecedent also to whom the article him can relate. The apostles and apostolical ministers are the immediate speakers of the Lord Jesus Christ; the chief they pretend to; to bring his mind and messages to the world and to the churches. This is the wisdom and present dispensation of the Lord Jesus, to send his messages to us by persons like ourselves. He that put on human nature, will honour carthen vessels. It was the ambition of the apostles, to be found faithful, and faithfully to deliver the errands and messages they had received. What was communicated to them were solicitous to impart; This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you. A message from the Word of life, from the eternal Word, we should gladly receive: and the present one is this; relating to the nature of God, whom we are to serve, and with whom we should covet all indulged communion—that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all, v. 5. This report associates the excellency of the divine nature is all that beauty and perfection that can be represented to us by light. He is self-active, uncompounded spirituality, purity, wisdom, holiness, and glory; and then the absoluteness and fulness of that excellency and perfection. There is no defect or imperfection, no mixture of any thing alien or contrary to absolute excellency, no mutability or capacity of any decay in him; In him is no darkness at all, v. 5. Or this report may more immediately relate to what is usually called the moral perfection of the divine nature; what we are to imitate, or what is more directly to influence us in our gospel-work. And so it will comprehend the holiness of God, the absolute purity of his nature and will; his penetrative knowledge, (particularly of hearts,) his jealousy and justice, which burn as a most bright and vehement flame. It is meet that to this dark world the great God should be represented as pure and perfect light. It is the Lord Jesus that best of all opens to us the name and nature of the unsearchable God; The only-begotten, that is in the bosom of the Father, and to whom we come. That is the prerogative of the Christian revelation, to bring to us the most noble, the most august, and agreeable account of the blessed God; such as is most suitable to the light of reason, and what is demonstrable thereby; most suitable to the magnificence of his works round about us, and to the nature and office of him that is the supreme Administrator, Governor, and Judge of the world. What more (relating to and comprehensive of all such knowledge) could be concluded in one word than this, God is Light, and in him is no darkness at all? Then, 2. There is a just conclusion to be drawn from this message and report; and that for the consideration and conviction of professors of religion, or professed entertainers of this gospel. This conclusion issues into two branches. (1.) For the conviction of such professors in particular, that they have fellowship, or communion with God: If we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. It is known, that to walk, in scripture-account, is to order and frame the course and actions of the moral life, that is, of the life so far as it is capable of subjection to the divine law. To walk in darkness, is to live and act according to such ignorance, error, and erroneous practice, as are contrary to the fundamental dictates of holy religion. Now there may be those who may pretend to great attainments and enjoyments in religion; they may profess to have communion with God; and yet their lives may be irreligious, immoral, and impure. To such the apostle would not fear to give the lie; They lie, and do not the truth. They believe God; for he holds no heavenly fellowship or intercourse with unholy souls. What communion hath light with darkness? They believe themselves, only, of a fellowship with him, to whom no communications from God, nor accesses to him, There is no truth in their profession or in their practice; or their practice gives their profession and pretences the lie; and demonstrates the folly and falsehood of them. (2.) For the conviction, and consequent satisfaction of those that are near to God; But if we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. As the blessed God, eternal, boundless Light, and the Mediator, is from him, the Light of the world; so the Christian institution is the great luminary that appears in our sphere, and shines here below. A conformity to this in spirit and practice, demonstrates fellowship or communion with God. They that so walk, shew that they know God, that they have received of the Spirit of God, that the divine flesh and blood is stamped upon their souls. Then we have fellowship one with another; they with us, and we with them, and both with God, in his blessed or beatific communications to us. And this is one of those beatific communications to us—that his Son's blood or death is applied or imputed to us; The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. The eternal Light of God is to the believer an additional and permanent light; and so became Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ hath shed his blood for us, or died to wash us from our sins in his own blood. His blood applied to us discharges us from the guilt of all sin, both original and actual, inherent and committed; and so far we stand righteous in his sight: and not only so, but his blood provided for us those sacred influences by which sin is to be subdued more and more, till it is quite abolished, Gal. 3. 13, 14.

3. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. 9. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 10. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us. The apostle, having supposed, that even they of this heavenly communion have yet their sin, proceeds here to justify that supposition; and this he does by shewing the dreadful consequences of denying it; and that in two particulars. 1. If we say, We have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us, v. 8. We must beware of such deceit. We must beware of deceiving ourselves in denying or excusing our sins. The more we see them, the more we shall esteem and value the remedy. If we deny them, the truth is not in us: either the truth that is contrary to such denial; (we lie in denying our sin;) or, the truth of religion is not in us. The Christian religion is the religion of sinners; of such as have sinned; of such as have sinned and still dwell. The Christian life is a life of continued repentance, humiliation for, and mortification of, sin; of continual faith in, thankfulness for, and love to, the Redeemer, and hopeful joyful expectation of a day of glorious redemption, in which the believer shall be fully and finally acquitted, and sin abolished for ever. 2. If we say, We have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us, v. 10. The denial of our sin not only deceives ourselves, but reflects dishonour upon God. It challenges his veracity. He has abundantly testified of, and testified against, the sin of the world. And the Lord said in his heart, (determined thus with himself) I will not again curse the ground (as he had then lately done) for man's sake; for, (or with the learned bishop Patrick,) though, the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth, Gen. 8. 21. But God has given them up, therefore, to the one death of the continued sin, and sinfulness of the world, by his providing a sufficient effectual Sacrifice for sin, that will be needed in all ages; and to the continued sinfulness of believers themselves, by requiring them continually to confess their sins, and apply themselves by faith to the blood of that Sacrifice. And therefore, if we say either that we have not sinned, or do not yet sin, the word of God is not in us, either in our minds, as to the acquaintance we should have with it, or in our hearts, as to the practical influence it should have upon us.

The apostle then instructs the believer in the way to the continued pardon of his sin. Here we have, (1.) His duty in order thereto; If we confess our sins, v. 9. Penitent confession and acknowledgment of sin are the believer's business, and the means of his deliverance from his guilt. (2.) His encouragement therefor: He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, v. 9. God is faithful to his covenant and word, who has therein promised forgiveness to penitent believing confessors. He is just to himself and his glory, has promised grace thereby, by which his righteousness is declared in the justification of sinners. He is just to his Son, who has (not only sent him for such service, but) promised to him, that those who come through him shall be forgiven on his account. By his knowledge (by the believing apprehension of him) shall my righteous servant justify many, Isa.
53. 11. He is clement and gracious also, and so will forgive, to the contrite confessor, all his sins, cleanse him from the guilt of all unrighteousness, and in due time deliver him from the power and practice of it.

CHAP. II.

Here the apostle encourages against sins of infirmity, v. 1.

2. Shows the true knowledge and love of God; (v. 3. 6.) renews the precept of fraternal love; (v. 7. 11.) addresses the several ages of Christians; (v. 12. 14.) warns against worldly love, (v. 15. 17.) against seducers; (v. 18. 19.) shews the security of true Christians; (v. 20. 27.) and advises to abide in Christ, v. 28, 29.

1. My little children, these things I write unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: 2. And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for our own only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

These verses relate to the concluding subject of the foregoing chapter, in which the apostle proceeds upon the supposition of the real Christian's sin. And here he gives them both dissuasion and support.

1. Dissuasion. He would leave no room for sin;

"My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not, v. 1. The design and purpose of this letter, the design of what I have just said concerning a reconciliation of sin with God, and the several parts of it by an irreligious course, is, to dissuade and drive you from sin." See the familiar affectionate compellation with which he introduces his admonition; My little children: children, as having perhaps been begotten by his gospel; little children, as being much beneath him in age and experience. My little children: as being dear to him in the bonds of the gospel. Certainly the gospel most prevailed where and when such ministerial love most abounded; or perhaps the judicious reader will find reason to think that the apostle's meaning in this dissuasion or caution, is this, or amounts to this reading: These things write I unto you, not that ye sin. And so the words will look back to what he had said before concerning the assured pardon of sin; God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, &c. ch. 1. 9. And so the words are a precaution of all abundance of such favours and inducements. Thus sins will be forgiven to penitent confessors, yet this I write, not to encourage you in sin, but upon another account.

Or this clause will look forward to what the apostle is going to say about the Advocate for sinners; and so it is a prepossession, a prevention of like mistake or abuse; These things write I unto you, not that ye sin, but that ye may see your remedy for sin. And so the following particle (as the learned Dictionaries) may be rendered adversatively; But if a man sin, he may know his help and cure. And so we see,

II. The believer's support and relief in case of sin;And (or but) if any man sin, (any of us, or of our aforesaid communion,) we have an Advocate with the Father, &c. v. 1. Believers themselves, those that are advanced to a happy gospel-state, have yet their sins. There is a great distinction therefore between the sinners that are in the world. There are Christianized (such as are instated in the sacred, saving privileges of Christ's mystical or spiritual body) and unchristianized; converted and unconverted sinners. There are some who, though they really sin, yet, in comparison with others, are said not to sin; as ch. 3. 9. Believers, as they have had an atonement applied unto them at their entrance into a state of pardon and justification, so they have an Advocate in heaven still to continue to them that state, and procure their continued pardon and forgiveness. And this must be the support, satisfaction, and refuge of believers, (or real Christians,) in or upon their sins; We have an Advocate. The original name is sometimes given to the Holy Ghost; and then it is rendered, the Comforter. He acts within us; he puts pleas and arguments into our hearts and mouths; and so is our Advocate, by which he persuading us to intercede for ourselves. But here is an Advocate without us, in heaven and with the Father. The proper office and business of an advocate is with the judge; with him he pleads the client's cause. The Judge with whom our Advocate pleads, is, the Father; his Father and our's. He who was our Judge in the legal court, (the court of the violated law,) is our Father and friend, in the government of heaven and of grace. His throne or tribunal is the mercy-seat. And he that is our Father, is also our Judge; the supreme Arbitrator of our state and circumstances, either for life or death, for time or eternity. Ye are come - to God, the Judge of all, Heb. 12. 23. That believers may be encouraged to hope that their cause will go well, as their Judge is represented to them in the relation of Father, so their Advocate pleads, and intercedes, to them, in these considerations: 1. By his person and personal names. It is Jesus Christ the Son of the Father; one anointed by the Father for the whole office of mediation, the whole work of salvation; and consequently for that of the Intercessor or Advocate. 2. By his qualification for the office. It is Jesus Christ the righteous; the Righteous One in the court and sight of the Judge; so that it is not necessary in any respect to the death, righteous for them; he has brought in everlasting righteousness. This the Judge will not deny. Upon this score he pleads, that the clients' sins may not be imputed to them. 3. By the plea he has to make; the ground and basis of his advocacy. And he is the Propitiation for our sins, v. 2. He is the expiatory Victim, the propitiatory Sacrifice that has been offered to the Judge for us! Our offences are not to be placed under the government. In vain do the professors of Rome distinguish between an advocate of redemption and an advocate of intercession, or a mediator of such different service. The Mediator of intercession, the Advocate for us, is the Mediator of redemption, the Propitiation for our sins. It is his propitiation that he pleads. And we might be apt to suppose that his blood had lost its value and efficacy, were no mention made of it in heaven since the time it was shed. But now we see that it is of esteem there, since it is continually represented in the intercession of the great Advocate (the Attorney-General) for the church of God. He ever lives to make intercession for those that come to God through him. 4. By the extent of his plea; the latitude of his propitiation. It is not confined to our own offences, and not particular to the Advocate is the Propitiation for our sins; and not for our's only, (not only for the sins of us Jews, us, that are Abraham's seed according to the flesh,) but also for those of the whole world; (v. 2.) not only for the past, or us present believers, but for the sins of all who shall hereafter believe on him, or come to God through him. The extent and intent of the Mediator's doctrine, for all the nations and countries. As he is the only, so he is the universal Atonement and Propitiation for all that are saved and brought home to God, and to his favour and forgiveness.
I. JOHN, 11.

3. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. 4. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. 5. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him. 6. He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also to walk, even as he walked.

These verses may seem to relate to the seventh verse of the former chapter, between which and these verses there occurred an incidental discourse concerning the believer's duty and relief in case of sin, occasioned by the mention of one of the believer's privileges—his being cleansed from sin by the Mediator's blood. In that verse the apostle asserts the beneficial consequence of walking in the light; "We have then fellowship with one another, such divine fellowship and communion as are the prerogative of the church of Christ." Here now succeeds the trial or test of our light and of our love:

I. The trial of our light; And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments, v. 3. Divine light and knowledge are the beauty and improvement of the mind; it becomes the disciples of the Mediator to be persons of wisdom and understanding. Young Christians are apt to magnify their notions, and applaud their own knowledge especially if they have been suddenly or in a short time communicated; and old ones are apt to suspect the sufficiency and fulness of their knowledge; they lament that they know God and Christ, and the rich contents of his gospel, no more: but here is the evidence of the soundness of our knowledge, if it constrains us to keep God's commands; each perfection of his nature claims this his authority; the wisdom of his counsels, the riches of his grace, the grandeur of his works, recommend his law and government; a careful conscientious obedience to his commandments shews that the apprehension and knowledge of these things is graciously impressed upon the soul; and therefore it must follow in the reverse, that he that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, v. 4. Professors of the truth are often ashamed of their ignorance, and show it on their own account; they do not pretend to great attainments in the knowledge of divine mysteries; Thou makest thy boast of God, and knowest his will, and art proved (in thy rational judgment) the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law, and are confident that thou thyself art (or art fit to be) a guide to the blind, &c. Rom. 2. 17, &c. But what knowledge of God can that be, which sees not that he is most worthy of the most entire and intense obedience? And if that be not seen and known, how vain and superficial is even that knowledge, when it sways not the heart unto obedience! A dissolvent life is the corruption and shame of pretended religious knowledge; it gives the lie to such boasts and pretences, and shews that there is neither religion nor honesty in them.

II. The trial of our love; But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected; hereby know we that we are in him, v. 5. To keep the word of God, or of Christ, is sacredly to attend thereto in all the conduct and motion of life; in him that does so is the love of God perfected. Possibly, some may here understand God's love to us; and doubtless, his love to us cannot be perfected (or obtain its perfect design and fruit) without our practical observance of his word; we are chosen, to be holy and blameless before him in love; we are re-deemed, to be a peculiar people zealous of good works; we are pardoned and justified, that we may be partakers of larger measures of the divine Spirit for sanctification; we are sanctified, that we may walk in ways of holiness and obedience: no act of divine love, that here terminates upon us, obtains its proper tendency, issue, and effect, without our holy attendance to God's word; but the phrase rather denotes here our love to God; so v. 15. The love of (to) the Father, is not in him; so ch. 3. 17. How dwelleth the love of (to) God in him? Now light is to kindle love; and love must and will keep the word of God; it inquires wherein the beloved may be pleased and served, and finding he will be so by our obedience, he is pleased and delights there in himself and exerts itself; there love is demonstrated; there it has its perfect (or complete) exercise, operation, and delight; and hereby (by this dutiful attendance to the will of God, or Christ) we know that we are in him; (v. 5.) we know that we belong to him, and that we are united to him by that Spirit which elevates and assists us to this obedience; and if we acknowledge our relation to him, and our union with him, it must have this continued enforcement upon us; He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself to walk, even as he walked, v. 6. The Lord Christ, was an Inhabitant of this world, and walked here below; here he gave a shining example of absolute obedience to God: they who profess to be on his side, and to abide with him, must walk with him, after his pattern and example. The partisans of the several sects of philosophers of old paid great regard to the dictates and practice of their respective teachers and sect-masters; much more should the Christian, he who professes to abide in and with Christ, aim to resemble his infallible Master and Head, and conform to his course and prescriptions; Then are ye my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you, John 13. 14.

7. Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning. 8. Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. 9. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. 10. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. 11. But he that hateth his brother, is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whether he goeth, because darkness hath blinded his eyes.

This seventh verse may be supposed either to look backward to what immediately preceded; (and then it is walking as Christ walked) that is here represented as no new, but an old commandment; it is that which the apostles would certainly inculcate, whereby they brought the Christian gospel; or it looks forward to what the apostle is now going to recommend, and that is the law of fraternal love; this is the message heard from the beginning, (ch. 3. 11.) and the old commandment, 2 John 5. Now while the apostle addresses himself to the recommendation of such a practice, he is ready to give an instance thereof in his affectionate appellation; Brethren, you who are dear to me in the bond of that love to which I would solicit you;" and so the precept of fraternal love is recommended.

1. An old one; I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning. We are all old as human nature; but it might admit divers emotions, enforcements, and motives. In the state of innocence, had human nature then been propagated, men must have loved one another, as being of one blood, made to dwell on the earth, as being God's offspring, and bearing his image. In the state of sin and promised recovery, they must love one another, as related to God through the maker, as related to each other by blood, and as partners in the same hope. When the Hebrews were peculiarly incorporated, they must accordingly love each other, as being the privileged people, whose were the covenants and the adoption, and of whose race the Messiah and Head of the church must spring; and the law of love must be conveyed with new obligations to the new Israel of God, to the gospel-church; and so it is the old commandment, or the word which the children of the gospel-Israel have heard from the beginning, v. 7.

2. As a new one; "Again, to constrain you to this duty the more, a new commandment I write unto you, the law of the new society, the Christian corporation, which thing is true in him; the matter of which was first true in and concerning the Head of it; the truth of it was first, and was abundantly, in him; he loved the church, and gave himself for it; and it is true in you; this law is, in some measure, written upon your hearts; ye are taught of God to love one another, and that because," (or since, or forasmuch as) "the darkness is past, the darkness of your prejudiced unconverted (whether Jewish or Gentile) minds; your deplorable ignorance of God and of his Christ is now past, and the true light now shineth; (v. 8.) the light of evangelical revelation hath shone with life and efficacy unto your hearts; hence you have seen the excellency of Christ love, and the fundamental obligation thereunto. Hence we see the fundamentals (and particularly the fundamental precepts) of the Christian religion may be represented either as new or old; the reformed doctrine, or doctrine of religion in the reformed churches, is new and old; new, as taught after long darkness, by the lights of the reformation; new, as purged from the remaining dregs of his and their error; old, as long ago taught and heard from the beginning. We should see that that grace or virtue which was true in Christ, should be true also in us; we should be conformable to our Head; the more our darkness is past, and gospel-light shines into us, the deeper should our subjection be to the commandments of our Lord, whether considered as old or new.

3. Light should produce a suitable heat. Accordingly, here is another precept of the Christian religion; before, it was by obedience to God; here by Christian love: 1. He who wants such love, in vain pretends his light; He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now, v. 9. It is proper for sincere Christians to acknowledge what God has done for their souls; but in the visible church there are often those who assume to themselves more than is true; there are those who say they are believers to the very height, the divinity, and the impression on their minds and spirits, and yet they walk in hatred and enmity toward their Christian brethren; these cannot be swayed by the sense of the love of Christ to their brethren, and therefore remain in their dark state, notwithstanding their pretended conversion to the Christian religion.

4. He who is managed by such love, approves his light to be good and genuine; He thatloveth his brother, (as his brother in Christ,) abideth in the light, v. 10. He sees the foundation and reason of Christian love; he discerns the weight and value of the Christian redemption; he sees how meet it is that we should love those whom Christ hath loved; and then the consequence will be, that there is no occasion of stumbling in him, (v. 10.) he will be no scandal, no stumbling-block to his brother; he will conscientiously beware that he neither induce his brother to sin, nor turn him out of the way of religion; Christian love teaches us highly to value our brother's soul, and dread every thing that will be injurious to his innocence and peace. 3. Hatred is a sign of spiritual darkness; But he that hateth his brother, is in darkness, v. 11. Spiritual light is still lit by the Spirit of grace, and one of the fruits of that Spirit is love; he then who is possessed with malignity toward the Christian brother, must needs be destitute of spiritual light; consequently, he walks in darkness, (v. 11.) his life is agreeable to a dark mind and conscience, and he knoweth not whither he goeth; he sees not whither this dark spirit carries him, and particularly that it will carry him to the world of outer darkness, because darkness hath blinded his eyes, v. 11. The darkness of ungenerosity, evidenced by a malignant spirit, is contrary to the light of life; where that darkness dwells, the mind, the judgment, and the conscience will be darkened, and so will mistake the way to heavenly endless life. Here we may observe how effectually our apostle is now cured of his once hot and flaming spirit. Time was, when he was for calling for fire from heaven upon poor ignorant Samaritans who received them not, Luke 9. 54. But his Lord had shewed him that he knew not his own spirit, nor whither it led him. Having now imbibed more of the Spirit of Christ, he breathes out good-will to man, and love to all the brethren. It is the Lord Jesus that is the great Master of love: it is his school (his own church) that is the school of love. His disciples are the disciples of love, and his family must be the family of love.

12. I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. 13. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father. 14. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. 15. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. 16. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. 17. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

This new command of holy love, with the incentives thereto, may possibly be directed to the several ranks of disciples that are here accosted; the several graduates in the Christian university, the catholic church, must be sure to preserve the bond of sacred love; or, there being an important dehortation and dissuasion to follow, without the observance of which, vital religion in the love of God and love of the brethren cannot subsist, the apostle may justly seem to prejudice it with a solemn address to the several forms or orders in the church of Christ; let the infants, or young men, the adult, the seniors, (or the adepts, the nicasia, the most perfect,) in the Christian institution, know that they must not love this world; and so,

I. We have the address itself made to the various forms and ranks in the church of Christ. All Christians are not of the same standing and stature; there are babes in Christ; there are grown men, and old disciples; as these have their peculiar states, so they have their peculiar duties; but there are precepts and a corresponding obedience common to them all, as particularly mutual love and contempt of the world. We see also that wise pastors will judiciously distribute the word of life, and give to the several members of Christ's family their several suitable portions; I write unto you, children, fathers, and young men. In this distribution the apostle addresses,

1. The lowest in the Christian school; I write unto you, little children, v. 12. There are novices in religion, babes in Christ, those who are learning the rudiments of Christian godliness: the apostle may seem to encourage them by applying to them first; and it may be useful to the greater proficients to hear what is said to their juniors; elements are to be repeated; first principles are the foundation of all. He addresses the Christian orders up to the seven heads of Christ himself, (1.) Because their sins were forgiven them for his name's sake, v. 12. The youngest sincere disciple is pardoned; the communion of saints is attended with the forgiveness of sins; sins are forgiven, either for God's name's sake, for the praise of his glory, his glorious performances displayed in forgiveness; or for Christ's name's sake, upon his score, and upon the account of the redemption that is in him; and they that are all the children of old Christians, and stand to be同类ized in this world which so interferes with the love of God. (2.) Because of their knowledge of God; I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father, v. 13. Children are wont to know none so soon as their father; children in Christianity must and do know God; They shall all know me, from the least to the greatest, Heb. 8. 11. Children in Christ should know that God is their Father; it is their inheritance by nature and adoption, to know and understand his father; these children cannot but know their's; they can well be assured by whose power they are regenerated, and by whose grace they are adopted; they that know the Father, may well be withdrawn from the love of this world. Then the apostle proceeds,

2. To those of the highest station and stature; to the seniors in Christianity; to whom he gives an honourable appellation; I write unto you, fathers; (v. 13, 14,) unto you, old disciples, Acts 21. 16. The apostle immediately passes from the bottom to the top of the school, from the lowest form to the highest, that they in the middle may hear both lessons, may remember what they have learned, and perceive what they must come to; I write unto you, fathers. They that are of longest standing in Christ's school, have need of further advice and instruction; the old disciples must go heaven, (the universality above,) with his book, his Bible, in his hand; fathers must be written unto, and preached unto; none are too old to learn; he writes to them upon the account of their knowledge: I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning, v. 13, 14. Old men have knowledge and experience, and expect deference. The apostle is ready to own their attainments, and to congratulate them thereupon. They know the Lord Christ, particularly him that was from the beginning; as ch. 1. 1. As Christ is Alpha and Omega, so he must be the Beginning and End of our Christian knowledge. I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, Phil. 3. 8. They who know him that was from the beginning, before this world was made, may well be in due obedience to relinquish this world. Then,

3. To the middle age of Christians; to those who are in their bloom and flower; I write unto you, young men, v. 13, 14. There are the adult in Christ Jesus, those that are arrived at the strength and wisdom of a man, and can distinguish good and evil. The apostle applies to them up to these accounts: (1.) Upon the account of their martial exploits. Destructive soldiers are they in the camp of Christ; Because ye have overcome the wicked one, v. 13. There is a wicked one that is continually warring against souls, and particularly against the disciples: but they that are grown in Christ's school, can handle their arms and vanquish the evil one; and they that can vanquish him, may be called to vanquish the world too, which is so great an instrument for the Devil. (2.) Upon the account of their strength, discovered in this their achievement; Because ye are strong, and ye have overcome the wicked one, v. 14. Young men are wont to glory in their strength; it will be the glory of youthful persons to be strong in Christ and in his grace; it will be their glory, and it will try their strength, to overcome the Devil; if they are not too hard for the Devil, he will be too hard for them; let vigorous Christians shew their strength in conquering the world; and the same strength must be exerted in overcoming the world, as is employed in overcoming the Devil. (3.) Because of their acquaintance with the word of God; And the word of God abideth in you, v. 14. The word of God must abide in the adult disciples; it is the nutriment and supply of strength to them; it is the weapon with which they do the wicked of the world, the word of the Spirit, whereby they cast his fiery darts; and they, in whom the word of God dwells, are well furnished for the conquest of the world.

II. We have the dehoration or dissuasion thus prefaced and introduced; a caution fundamental to vital practical religion; "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world, v. 15. Be crucified to the world, be mortified towards all things, to be affairs, and not of the world."
The dehoration particularly of Christians should unite in this, in being dead to the world; were they thus united, they would soon unite upon other accounts; their love should be reserved for God; throw it not away upon the world. Now here we see the reasons of this dissuasion and caution; they are several, and had need to be so; it is hard to dispute or dissuade disciples themselves from the love of the world; the first is taken from the inconsistency of this love with the love of God; If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him, v. 15. The heart of man is narrow, and cannot contain both loves; the world draws down the heart from God; and so the more the love of the world prevails, the more the love of God dwindles and decays. The second is taken from the prohibition of worldly love or lust; it is not ordained of God; it is not of the Father, but is of the world; v. 16. He lays it upon the heart, it is not of God; he calls us from it, but it intrudes itself from the world; the world is a usurper of our affection. Now here we have the due consideration and notion of the world, according to which it is to be crucified and renounced. The world, physically considered, is good, and is to be admired as the work of God, and a glass in which his perfections shine; but it is to be considered in its relation to our salvation; and it is said to work upon our weakness, and instigates and in flames our vile affections; there is great affinity and alliance between this world and the flesh, and this world intrudes and encroaches upon the flesh, and thereby makes a party against God; the things of the world therefore are distinguished into three classes, according to the three predominant inclinations of depraved nature; as, 1. There is the lust of the flesh; the flesh here, being distinguished from the eyes and the life, imports the body; the lust of the flesh is, subjectively, the human and innate appetite of indulgence, base pleasure; and objectively, all those things that excite and inflame the pleasures of the flesh; this lust is usually called luxury. 2. There is the lust of the eyes; the eyes are delighted with treasures; riches and rich possessions are craved by an extravagant eye; this is the lust of covetousness. 3. There is the pride of life; a vain mind craves all the grandeur, equipage, and pomp of a vain-glorying life; this is ambition and vain honour and applause; this is, in part, the disease of the ear; it must be flattered with admiration and praise. The objects of these appetites must be abandoned and renounced; as they engage and engross the affection and desire, they are not of the Father, but of the world, v. 16. The Father disallows them, and the world should keep them to itself. The lust and appetite to these things have taken hold, and so the indulging of it is not appointed by the Father, but is insinuated by the insinuating world. The third reason is taken from the vain and vanishing state of earthly things and the enjoyment of them; And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof, v. 17. The things of the world are fading and dying space; the lust itself and the pleasure of it wither and decay; desire itself will ere long fail and cease, Eccl. 12. And what is become of all the pomp and pleasure of all those who now lie mouldering in the grave? The fourth reason is taken from the immortality of the divine lover, the lover of God; But he that doth the will of God, which must be the character of the lover of God, in opposition to this lover of the world, abideth for ever, v. 17. The Object of his love, in opposition to the world that passeth away, abideth for ever; his sacred passion or affection, in opposition to the lust that passeth away, abideth for ever; love shall never fail; and he himself is an heir of immortality and endless life, and shall in time be translated thither. From the whole of these verses we should observe the purity and spirituality of the apostolical doctrine; the animal life must be subjected to the divine; the body with its affections should be subjugated to the soul; the soul should be swayed by religion, or the victorious love of God.

18. Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.

Here is, 1. A moral prognostication of the time; the end is coming; Little children, it is the last time, v. 18. Some may suppose that the apostle here addresses the first rank of Christians again; the juniors are most apt to be seduced; and therefore, Little children, you that are young in religion, take heed to yourselves that ye be not corrupted. But it may be, as elsewhere, a universal appellation, introductory of an alarm to all Christians; Little children, it is the last time; our Jewish polity in church and state is hastening to an end; the Mosial institution and discipline are just upon vanishing away; Daniel's weeks are now expiring; the destruction of the Hebrew city and sanctuary is approaching; the end whereof must be with a flood, and to the end of the war desolations are determined, Dan. 9. 26. It is meet that the disciples should be warned, and ready to meet the case as much as may be of the prophetic periods of time.

2. The sign of this last time; Even now there are many antichrists, v. 18. many that oppose the person, doctrine, and kingdom of Christ. It is a mysterious portion of Providence, that antichrists should be permitted; but when they are come, it is good and safe that the disciples should be informed of them; ministers should be watchmen to the face of Israel. Now it should be no great offence or prejudice to the disciples, that there are such antichrists: (1.) One great one has been foretold; As ye have heard that antichrist shall come, v. 18. The generality of the church have been informed by divine revelation, that there must be a long and fatal adversary to Christ and his church, 2 Thess. 2. 8—10. No wonder then that there are many harbingers and forerunners of the great one; even now there are many antichrists; the mystery of iniquity already worketh. (2.) They were foretold also as the sign of this last time; For there shall arise false christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect, &c. Matt. 24. 24. And these were the forerunners of the dissolution of the Jewish state, nation, and religion, whereby we know it to be the last time. 18. Be watchful; for as we see there has been of seducers arising in the Christian world, fortify us against their seduction.

3. Some account of these seducers or antichrists. (1.) More positively; they were once entertainers or professors of apostolical doctrine; They went out from us, v. 19. from our company and communion, possibly from the church of Jerusalem, or some of the churches of Judæa, as Acts 15. 1. Certain men came down from Jerusalem, and taught the churches, The purest churches may have their apostates and revolters; the apostolical doctrine did not convert all whom it convinced of its truth. (2.) More privately; They were not inwardly such as we are; but they were not of us; they had not from the heart obeyed the form of sound doctrine delivered to them; they were not of our union with Christ the Head. Then here is, 1. The reason upon which it is concluded, that they were not of us; the doctrine, what they pretended, or what we are, and that is, their actual defection; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; v. 19. had the sacred truth been rooted in their hearts, it would have held them with us; had they the antquity from above, by which they had been made true and real Christians, they had not turned antichrists; they that apostatise from religion, sufficiently indicated, by what they were, and what they were in religion: they who have imbibed the spirit of gospel-truth, have a good preservative against destructive error. 2. The reason why they are permitted thus to depart from apostolical doctrine and communion, that their insincerity may be detected; but this was done, or they went out, that they may be made manifest that they were not all of us, v. 19. The church is not all one; there are hypocrites, and others, and who are not; and therefore the church, considered as inwardly sanctified, may well be styled invisible. Some of the hypocritical must be manifested here, and that for their own shame and benefit, in their reduction to the truth, if they have not sinned unto death, and for the terror and caution of others. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, 2 Pet. 3. 17, 18.
20. But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. 21. I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth: but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. 22. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son. 23. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: but he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father also. 24. Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son and in the Father. 25. And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. 26. These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you. 27. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.

Here,

I. The apostle encourages the disciples (to whom he writes) in these dangerous times, in this hour of seducers; he encourages them in the assurance of their stability in this day of apostasy; But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. We see, 1. The blessing wherewith they were enriched—an unction from heaven; Ye have an unction. True Christians are anointed ones, their name intimates as much; they are anointed with the oil of grace, with gifts and spiritual endowments, by the Spirit of grace; they are anointed into a similitude of their Lord's offices, as subordinate prophets, priests, and kings, unto God. The Holy Spirit is compared unto oil, as well as to fire or water; and the communication of his salving grace is our anointing. 2. From whom this blessing comes—from the Holy One; either from the Holy Ghost, or from the Lord Christ, as Rom. 8. 7. These things saith he that is holy; the Holy One. The Lord Christ is glorious in his holiness; the Lord Christ dispenses of the graces of the divine Spirit, and he anoints the disciples to make them like to himself, and to secure them in his interest. 3. The effect of this unction—it is a spiritual eye-salve; it enlightens and strengthens the eyes of the understanding; and thereby ye know all things, (v. 26.) all these things concerning Christ and his religion; it was promised and given you for that end. John 14. 26. The Lord Christ does not deal alike by all his professed disciples; some are more anointed than others. There is great danger lest those that are not thus anointed, should be so far from being true to Christ, that they should, on the contrary, turn antichrists, and prove adversaries to Christ's person and kingdom and god.

II. The apostle indicates to them the mind and meaning with which he wrote to them: 1. By way of negation; not as suspecting their knowledge, or supposing their ignorance in the grand truths of the gospel; I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, v. 21. I could not then be so well assured of your stability therein, nor congratulate you on your unction from above. It is good to surmise well concerning our Christian brethren; we ought to do so till evidence overthrows our surmise, a just confidence in religious persons may both encourage them and contribute to their fidelity. 2. By way of assertion and acknowledgment, as relying upon their judgment in these things; But because ye know it, (ye know the truth in Jesus,) and that no lie is of the truth. They who knew the truth in any kind, were thereby prepared to discern what is contrary thereto, and to be consistent therewith. Recognizto ex sui et obliqui—The line which shews itself to be straight, shews also what line is crooked. Truth and falsehood do not well mix and suit together. They that are well acquainted with Christian truth, are thereby well fortified against antichristian error and delusion. No lie belongs to religion, either natural or revealed. The apostles most of all condemned lies, and shew the inconsistency of it in their doctrine: they would have been the most self-condemned persons, had they propagated the truth by lies. It is a commendation of the Christian religion, that it so well accords with natural religion, which is the foundation of it, that it so well accords with the Jewish religion, which contained the elements or rudiments of it. No lie is of the truth: frauds and impostures then are very unfit means to support and prove a true religion. If they preface these truths, they become better with the state of religion, if they had never been used; the result of them appears in the infidelity of our age; the detection of ancient pious frauds and wiles has almost run our age into atheism and irreligion; but the greatest actors and sufferers for the Christian revelation would assure us that no lie is of the truth.

III. The apostle further implores and arraigns those seducers who were newly arisen: 1. They are liars, egregious opposers of sacred truth; Who is a liar, or the liar, the notorious liar of the time and age in which we live, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? The great and pernicious lies that the father of lies, or of liars, spreads in the world, were of old, and usually are, falsehoods and errors relating to the person of Christ. There is no truth so sacred and fully attested, but some or other will contradict or deny it. That Jesus of Nazareth was the Son and the Christ of God, had been attested by heaven and earth and hell. It should seem that some, in the tremendous judgment of God, are given up to strong delusions. 2. They are direct enemies to God as well as to the Lord Christ; He is antichrist, who denieth the Father and the Son, v. 22. He that opposeth Christ, deniers the witness and testimony of the Father, and the seal that he hath given to his Son; for him hath God the Father sealed, John 6. 27. And he that deniers the witness and testimony of the Father concerning Jesus Christ, denies that God is the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ; and consequently abandons the knowledge of God in Christ, and thenceupon the whole revelation of God in Christ, and particularly of God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself; and therefore the apostle may well infer, Whosoever deniers the Son, the same has not the Father; (v. 22.) he has not the true knowledge of the Father; for the Son has most and best revealed him; he has no interest in the Father, in his favour and grace and salvation; for none cometh to the Father but by the Son. But, as some copies add, he that acknowledgeth the Son, has the Father also, v. 23. As there is an intimate relation between the Father and the Son, so there is an inviolable union in the doctrine, knowledge, and interests of both; and he who has the knowledge of, and right to, the Son, has the knowledge of, and right to, the Father also. They that adhere to the Christian revelation, hold the light and benefit of natural religion withal.

IV. Hereupon the apostle advises and persuades the disciples to continue in the old doctrine at first communicated to them; Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. v. 24. But it was not so in the case of Christ, that was at first delivered to the saints, is not to be exchanged for novelties. So sure were the apostles of the truth of what they had delivered concerning Christ and from him, that after all their toils and sufferings they were not with- reinuch. The Christian truth may plead antiquity, and be recommended thereby. This exhortation is enforced by these considerations: 1. From the sacred advantage they will receive by adhering to the primitive truth and faith: (1.) They will continue thereby in holy union with God and Christ; If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son and in the Father, v. 24. The truth of Christ, abiding in us, is the means of severing us from sin, and uniting us to the Son of God, John 13. 3, 4. The Son is the Medium or Mediator by whom we are united to the Father. What value then should we put upon gos- pel-truth! (2.) They will thereby secure the promise of eternal life; And this is the promise that he (even God the Father, ch. 5. 11.) hath promised us, even eternal life, v. 25. Great is the promise that God makes to his faithful adherents; it is suitable to his own greatness, power, and goodness; its eternal life, which none but God can give. The blessed God puts great value upon his Son, and the truth relating to the Son is placed in direct opposition to those who continue in that truth, (under the light and power and influence of it,) eternal life. Then the exhortation aforesaid is enforced, 2. From the design of the apostle's writing to them. This letter is to fortify them against the deceivers of the age: These things have I written to you concerning them that seduce you; (v. 26;) and therefore if you continue not in what you have heard from the beginning, they are not yours. We should beware lest the apostolical letters, yet, lest the whole scripture of God, should be to us insignificant and fruitless. I have written to him the great things of my law, (and my gospel too,) but they were counted as a strange thing, Hos. 8. 12. 3. From the instructive blessing they had received from heaven; But the anointing which ye have received from him, abideth in you, v. 27. True Chris- tian religion is the effusion of the Holy Spirit, and the anointing, what they have imbibed: the Holy Spirit has imprinted it on their minds and hearts. It is meet that the Lord Jesus should have a constant witness in the hearts of his disciples. The anointing, the pouring out of the gifts of grace upon sincere disciples, is a seal to the truth and doctrine of Christ; since none giveth that seal but God; Nay he who establisheth us with you, (and as it were with us,) in Christ, and hath anointed us, 1 Cor. 1. 1, 2. The chrism or divine anointing is commended on these accounts: (1.) It is durable and lasting; oil or unguent is not so soon dried up as water; it abideth in you, v. 27. Divine illumination, in order to confirmation, must be something continued or constant; temptations, snares, and seductions, arise; the anoint- ing must abide. (2.) It is better than human instruc- tion, and ye need not that man teach you, v. 27. Not that this anointing will teach you the appointed ministry; it could, if God so pleased; but it will not; but it will teach you better than we can; and ye need not that any man teach you, v. 27. You were instructed by us before ye were anointed; but now our teaching is nothing in comparison to that. Who teacheth like him? Heb. S. 22. The divine unction does not supersede ministerial teaching, but surmount it: (3.) It is a sure evidence of truth; and all that it teaches, is infallible truth; But the same anointing teacheth you all things, and is truith, and is no lie, v. 27. The Holy Spirit must needs be the Spirit of truth, as he is called, John 14. 17. The instruction and illumination that he affords, must needs be in and of the truth. The Spirit of truth will not lie: and he teacheth all things, all things in the present dispensation, all things necessary to our knowledge of God in Christ, and their glory in the gospel. And, (4.) It is of a conserva- tive influence; it will preserve those in whom it abideth, against seducers and their seduction; "And even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him, v. 27. It teaches you to abide in Christ; and as it teaches you, it secures you, it lays the foundation of your minds and hearts, that you may not revolt from him. And he that hath anointed us, is God; who also hath sealed us for himself, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." 2 Cor. 1. 21, 22.

28. And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. 29. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that everyone that doeth righteousness, is born of him.

From the blessing of the sacred anointing the apostle proceeds in his advice and exhortation to constancy in and with Christ; And now, little children, abide in him, v. 28. The apostle repeats his kind appellation, little children; which, I suppose, does but so much denote their docility, as his af- fection; and therefore, I judge, may be rendered dear children. He would persuade by love, and prevail by endearment as well as by reason. Not only the love of Christ, but the love of you, constrains us to inculcate your perseverance, and that you would abide in him, in the truth relating to his person, and in your union with him and allegiance to him.

Evangelical privileges are obligatory to all evangelical duties: and they that are appointed by the Lord Jesus, are highly obliged to abide with him in opposition to all adversaries whatever. This duty of perseverance and constancy in trying times, is strongly urged by the two following considerations.

1. From the consideration of his return at the great day of account; That when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming, v. 28. It is here taken for granted that the Lord Jesus will come again. This was part of that truth they had heard from the tongue of the apostle. And when he comes again, he will publicly appear; be manifested to all. When he was here before, he came privately, in comparison. He proceeded from a womb, and was introduced into a stable: but when he comes again, he will come from the opened heavens, and every eye shall see him: and then they who have continued with him throughout all their temptations, and they who have undergone all their difficulties, and endured all the waves of unrighteousness, by which they were induced to desert him; that we may have confidence, and we may not be ashamed. The apostle includes himself in the number. Let not us be ashamed of you, as well as you will not be ashamed of yourselves. Or, μη αἰσχροῖς ὑμᾶς ὑμῖν—that we be not ashamed, (made ashamed, or put to shame) by him at his coming. At his public appearance he will shame all those who have abandoned him; he will disclaim all acquaintance with them; will crowd them with shame and confusion; will abandon them to darkness, devils and endless despair, by professing before men and angels, that he is ashamed of them, Mark 8. 38. And therefore this advice and exhortation he proceeds, 2. From the consideration of the dignity of those who still adhere to Christ and his religion; If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness, is born of him, v. 29. The particle here supplied

, seems not to be vox dubitativa, but concedentis; not so much a conditional particle, as a suppositional one, if I may call it so; a note of allowance or concession; and so seems to be of the same import with our English

, or whereas, or since. So the sense runs more clear. Since ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness, is born of him. He that doeth righteousness, may here be justly enough assumed as another name for him that abideth in Christ. For he that abideth in Christ, abideth in the law and love of Christ, and consequently in his allegiance and obedience to him; and so must do, or work, or practice, righteousness, or the parts of gospel-holiness. Now such a one must be born of him. He is renewed by the Spirit of Christ, after the image of Christ; created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath fore-ordained that they should walk in them, Eph. 2. 10. “Since then ye know that the Lord Christ is righteous, righteousness in his quality and capacity; the Lord our Righteousness, and the Lord our Saviour or our Sanctification; as 1 Cor. 1. 50.) ye cannot but know thereupon,” (or know ye, it is for your consideration and regard,) “that he who by the continued practice of Christianity abideth in him, is born of him.” The new spiritual nature is derived from the Lord Christ. He that is constant to the practice of religion in trying times, is convinced that he is born anew from above from the Lord Christ. The Lord Christ is an everlasting Father. It is a great privilege and dignity to be born of him. They that are so, are the children of God. To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons of God, John 1. 12. And this introduces the context of the following chapter.

CHAP. III.

1. Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knoweth him not. 2. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. 3. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

The apostle, having shewn the dignity of Christ’s faithful followers, that they are born of him, and thereby nearly allied to God, now here, 1. Breaks forth into the admiration of that grace that is the spring of such a wonderful vouchsafement; Behold, (see, we observe,) what manner of love, or how great love, the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called, effectually called. He who calls things that are not, makes them to be what they were not—the sons of God! The Father adopts all the children of the Son. The Son indeed calls them, and makes them his brethren; and thereby he confers upon them the power and dignity of the sons of God. It is wonderful condescending love of the eternal Father, that such as we should be made and called his sons; we who by nature are heirs of sin and guilt, and the curse of God; who by practice are children of corruption, disobedience, and ingratitude! Strange, that the holy God is not ashamed to be called our Father, and to call us his sons. 2. Infers the honor and blessedness of the sons of God, above the cognizance of the world. Unbelievers know little of them. Therefore, (or whereupon upon this score,) the world knoweth us not, v. 1. Little does the world perceive the advancement and happiness of the genuine followers of Christ. They are here exposed to the common calamities of earth and time; all things fall alike to them as to others, unless they are subject to the greater sorrow: for they have often reason to say, If in this life only we had hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable, 1 Cor. 15. 19. The unchristian world, therefore, that walks by sight, knows not their dignity, their privileges, the enjoyments they have in hand, or what they are entitled to. Little does the world think that these poor, humble, contemptible ones are the favourites of heaven, and will be inhabitants there ere long. And they may bear their cross hereafter, since they are now born of God, as well as those. Because it knew him not, v. 1. Little did the world think how great a Person was once sojourning here; that the Maker of it was once an Inhabitant of it. Little did the Jewish world think that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, was one of their blood, and dwelt in their land; he came to his own, and his own received him not. He came to his own, and his own crucified him; but surely, had they known him, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. And the followers of Christ be content with hard fare here, since they are in a land of strangers, among those who little know them, and their Lord was so treated before them. Then the apostle, 3. Exalts these persevering disciples in the prospect of the certain revelation of their state and dignity. Where, (1.) Their present honourable relation is asserted; Beloved, ye may well be our beloved, for ye are now and ever the sons of God, v. 2. We have the nature of sons by regeneration; we have the title and spirit and right to the inheritance of sons by adoption. This honour have all the saints. (2.) The discovery of the bliss belonging and suitable to this relation is defined; And it doth not yet appear what we shall be, v. 2. The glory pertaining to the sonship and adoption is adjourned and reserved for another world. The discovery of it here would put a step to the current of affairs that must now proceed. The sons of God must walk by faith, and live by hope. (3.) The time of the revelation of the sons of God in their proper state and glory, is determined; and that is, when their Elder Brother comes to call and collect them all together. But we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him. The particle is, usually translated if; should be rendered when; for the Hebrew particle (to which this is thought to correspond) is observed so to signify, as Dr. Whitby has here noted; and not only is it sometimes used for or, but some copies even here read ., when. And accordingly it seems proper so to render it in John 14. 3, where we read it, And if I go, and prepare a place; but more naturally and properly, When I shall have gone, and shall have prepared the place, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; or ., when I am there, ye may also be. When the Head of the church, the Only-begotten of the Father, shall appear, his members, the adopted of God, shall appear and be manifested together with him. They may then well wait in faith, hope, and earnest desire, for the revelation of the Lord Jesus; as even the creation itself waiteth for their perfection, and the full manifestation of the sons of God, Rom. 8. 19. The sons of God will be known, and made manifest, in the likeness of God. Here, they shall be like him, like him in honour and power and glory. Their vile bodies shall be made like his glorious body; they shall be filled with life, light, and bliss from him; when he, who is their Life, shall appear, they also shall appear with him in glory, Col. 3. 4. Then, (4.) Their likeness to him is argued from the sight they shall have of him; We shall be like him, for we shall see ourself in him. Their likeness shall enable them to see the cause of that sight which they shall have of him. Indeed, all shall see him, but not as they do; not as he is, that is, to those in heaven; they shall see him in his frowns, in the terror of his majesty, and the splendor of his avenging perfections. But these shall see him in the smiles and beauty of his face; in the correspondence and amiableness of his glory; in the harmony and agreeableness of his beatific perfections. Their likeness shall enable them to see him as the blessed do in heaven. Or, the sight of him shall be the cause of their likeness; it shall be a transformative sight, they shall be transformed into the same image by the beatific view that they shall have of him. Then the apostle, 4. Urges the engagement of these sons of God to the prosecution of holiness; And every man that hath this hope in him, exalteth himself even as he is pure, v. 5. The sons of God know that their Lord is holy and pure; he is of purer heart and eyes than to admit any pollution or impurity to dwell with him. They then who hope to live with him, must study the utmost purity from the world and flesh and sin; they must grow in grace and holiness. Not only does their Lord command them to do so, but their new nature inclines them so to do; yea, their hope of heaven will dictate and constrain them so to do. They know that their High Priest is holy, harmless, and undefiled. They know that their God and Father is the high and holy One; that all the society is pure and holy; that their inheritance is an inheritance of saints in light. It is a contradiction to such hope, to indulge sin and impurity. And therefore as we are sanctified by faith, we must be sanctified by hope. That we may be saved by hope, we must be purified by hope. Their hope of holiness, and not of the sons of God, that makes an allowance for the gratification of impure desires and lusts.

4. Whosoever committeth sin, transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins, and in him is no sin, v. 5. The Son of God appeared, and was known, in our nature; and he came to vindicate and exalt the divine law, and that by obedience to the precept, and by subjection and suffering under the penal sanction; under the curse of it. He came therefore to take away our sins; to take away the guilt of them by the sacrifice of himself; to take away the commission of them by implanting a new nature in us; (for we are sanctified by virtue of his death;) and to dissuade and save from it by his own example. And (or for) in him was no sin; or, he takes sin away, that he might conform us to himself; and in him is no sin. They that expect communion with Christ above, should study communion with him here in utmost purity. And the Christian world should know and consider the great end of the Son of God's coming hither; it was, to take away our sin; and ye know, (and this knowledge should be deep and effectual) that he was manifested to take away our sins.

II. For sin is the opposition nature of the heart, persons, and world; lawlessness, v. 4. Sin is the destitution or privation of correspondence and agreement with the divine law; that law that is the transcript of the divine nature and purity, that contains his will for the government of the world, that is suitable to the rational nature, and enacted for the good of the world, that shews man the way of felicity and peace, and that suits his nature and of the law. The current commission of sin now, is the rejection of the divine law, and that is the rejection of the divine authority, and consequently of God himself.

II. From the design and errand of the Lord Jesus in and to this world, which was, to remove sin; And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins, and in him is no sin, v. 5. The Son of God appeared, and was known, in our nature; and he came to vindicate and exalt the divine law, and that by obedience to the precept, and by subjection and suffering under the penal sanction; under the curse of it. He came therefore to take away our sins; to take away the guilt of them by the sacrifice of himself; to take away the commission of them by implanting a new nature in us; (for we are sanctified by virtue of his death;) and to dissuade and save from it by his own example. And (or for) in him was no sin; or, he takes sin away, that he might conform us to himself; and in him is no sin. They that expect communion with Christ above, should study communion with him here in utmost purity. And the Christian world should know and consider the great end of the Son of God's coming hither; it was, to take away our sin; and ye know, (and this knowledge should be deep and effectual) that he was manifested to take away our sins.

III. For sin is a real sin, and in a real union with, or adhesion unto, the Lord Christ; Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not, v. 6. To sin here is the same as to commit sin; (v. 8, 9,) and to commit sin is to practise sin. He that abideth in Christ, continues not in the practice of sin. As vital union with the Lord Jesus broke the power of sin in the heart and nature; so continuance therein prevents the regimen and prevalence thereof in the life and conduct, and the negative expression is put for the positive. He sinneth not, that is, he is obedient, he keeps the commandments, (in sincerity, and in the ordinary course of life,) and does those things that are pleasing in his sight, as is said v. 22. They that abide in Christ, abide in his covenant with him, and consequently watch against the sin that is contrary thereto. They abide in the potent light and knowledge of his word, and it may be concluded, that he that sinneth, (abideth in the predominate practice of sin,) hath not seen him. (hath not his mind impressed with a sound evangelical discerning of him,) neither known him, hath no experimental acquaintance with him. Practical remuneration of sin is the great evidence of spiritual union with, continuance in, and saving knowledge of, the Lord Christ.
IV. From the connexion between the practice of righteousness and a state of righteousness; intimating wihal, that the practice of sin and a justified state are inconsistent; and this is introduced with the supposition that a surmise to the contrary is a gross deceit; Little children, dear children, and as much children as ye are, herein let no man deceive you. There will be those who will magnify your new light and entertainment of Christianity; who will make you believe that your knowledge, profession, and baptism, will excuse you from the care and accuracy of the Christian life. But beware of such self-deceit. He that doeth righteousness, is righteous. It may appear that righteousness may in several places of scripture be justly rendered religion, as Matt. 5. 10. Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake, that is, for religion's sake. And 1 Pet. 3. 14. But if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, (religion's sake) happy are ye. And so 2 Tim. 3. 16. All scripture, or the whole scripture, is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine— and for instruction in righteousness, that is, in the nature and branches of religion. To do righteousness then, especially being set in opposition to the doing, committing, or practising, of sin, is to practise religion. Now he who practiseth religion, is righteous; he is the righteous person on all accounts; he is sincere and upright before God. The practice of religion cannot subsist without a principle of integrity and rectitude. He that does righteousness, that is, in the nature and branches of righteousness, which consists in pardon of sin and right to life, founded upon the imputation of the Mediator's righteousness. He has a title to the crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge will give, according to his covenant and promise, to those that love his appearing, 2 Tim. 4. 8. He has communion with Christ, in conformity to the divine law, being in some measure practically righteous as he; and he has communion with him in the just state, being now relatively righteous together with him.

V. From the relation between the sinner and the Devil; and thereupon from the design and office of the Lord Christ against the Devil: 1. From the relation between the sinner and the Devil. As elsewhere sinners and saints are distinguished, (though even saints are sinners largely so called,) so to commit them in the practical distinction which is to be made, they are distinguished from saints; to live under the power and dominion of it. And he who does so, is of the Devil; his sinful nature is inspired by, and agreeable and pleasing to, the Devil; and he belongs to the party and interest and kingdom of the Devil. It is he that is the author and patron of sin, and has been a practitioner of it, a tempter and instigator to it, even from the beginning of the world. And therefore he cannot be in a just state, being not the natural offspring of the Devil.

From the design and office of the Lord Christ against the Devil: For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil, v. 8. The Devil has designed and endeavoured to ruin the work of God in this world. The Son of God has undertaken the holy war against him. He came into our world, and was manifested in our flesh, that he might conquer him, and dissolve his works. Sin is the Devil's creature, and the more till he has quite destroyed it. Let not us serve or indulge what the Son of God came to destroy.

VI. From the connexion between regeneration and the relinquishment of sin; Whosoever is born of God, doth not commit sin. To be born of God is to be inwardly renewed and restored to a holy integrity or rectitude of nature by the power of the Spirit of God. Such a one committed not sin, does not work iniquity and practise disobedience; that is contrary to his new nature and the regenerate complexion of his spirit. For, as the apostle adds, his seed remaineth in him, either the word of God in its light and power remaineth in him, (as 1 Pet. 1. 23.) Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word which hath power to give eternal life. I suppose no judicious interpreter understands. That which is contrary to 1. 9, we err if it is made our duty to confess our sins, and supposed that our privilege thereupon, is, to have our sins forgiven. He therefore cannot sin, in the sense in which the apostle says, he cannot commit sin. He cannot continue in the course and practice of sin. He cannot so sin, as to denominate him a sinner in opposition to a saint, or servant of God. Again, he cannot sin comparatively, as he did before he was born of God, and as others do that are not so. And the reason is, because he is born of God; which will amount to all this inhibition and impediment. 1. There is that light in his mind, that shows him the evil and malignity of sin. 2. There is that bias upon his heart, that disposes him to hate and hate sin. 3. There is the spiritual seminal principle or disposition, that breaks the force and fulness of the sinful acts. They proceed from the principle of corruption, as they do others, but they obtain that tendency of heart, spirit and consent, which they do in others. The Spirit lusteth against the flesh. And therefore in respect to such sin it may be said, It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. It is not reckoned the person's sin, in the gospel account, where the bent and frame of the mind and spirit are against it. Then, 4. There is a disposition for humiliation and repentance, by the word of God, which has been committed. He that is born of God, cannot sin. Here we may call to mind the usual distinction of natural and moral impotency. The unregenerate person is morally unable for what is religiously good. The regenerate person is happily disabled for sin. There is a restraint, an embargo, (as we may say,) laid upon his sinning powers. It goes against him, sedately and deliberately to sin. We usually say of a person, This course is not become him, or, He cannot do that, or, He will not commit other enormities. How can I commit this great wickedness, and sin against God? Gen. 59. 9. And so they who persist in a sinful life, sufficiently demonstrate that they are not born of God.

From the discrimination between the children of God and the children of the Devil. They have their distinct characters. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil, v. 10. In this they differ. The old serpent is the seed of God, and the seed of the serpent. Now the seed of the serpent is known by these two signatures. (1) By neglect of religion; whoever doeth not righteousness, (omits and disregards the rights and dues of God;) for religion is but our righteousness toward God, or giving him his due; and whoever does not conscientiously do this, is not of God, but, on the contrary, of the Distinction of the Devil, and shows his spirit by the cause of all religious souls. And, (2) By hatred of fellow-Christians; neither he that loveth not his brother, v. 10. True Christians are to be loved for God's and Christ's sake. They who so love them not, but despise, and hate, and persecute them, have the serpentine nature still abiding in them.

11. For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. 12. Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.

13. Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you. The apostle, having intimated that one note of the Devil's children, is, hatred of the brethren, takes occasion thence,
1. To recommend fraternal Christian love, and that from the excellence, or sanctity, or primariness of the injunction relating thereto; And this is the message (the errand or charge) which ye heard from the beginning, (this came among the principal parts of practical Christianity,) that we should love one another, v. 11. We should love the Lord Jesus, and value his love, and consequently love all the objects of it, and thereupon all our brethren in Christ.
2. To dissuade from what is contrary thereto, all ill toward the brethren, and that by the example of Cain. His envy and malignity should deter us from harbouring the like passion, and that upon these accounts. (1.) It shewed that he was as the first-born of the serpent's seed; even he, the eldest son of the first man, was of the wicked one. He imitated and resembled the first wicked one, the Devil. (2.) His ill-will had no restraint; it proceeded so far as to contrive and accomplish murder, and that of a clear relation, and that in the beginning of this world, when there were but few to replenish it. He slew his brother, v. 12. Sin, indulged, knows no bound. And, (3.) It proceeded so far, and had in it so much of the Devil, that he murdered his brother for religion's sake. He was vexed with the superiority of Abel's service, and envied him the favour and acceptance he had with God. And for these he martyred his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteousness, v. 12. Ill-will will teach us to hate and revenge what we should admire and imitate. And then,
3. To infer, that it is no wonder that good men are so served now; Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you, v. 13. The serpentine nature still continues in the world. The great serpent himself reigns as the God of this world. Wonder not then that the serpentine world hates and hisses at you who belong to that Seed of the woman, that is to bruise the serpent's head.

14. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death. 15. Whosoever hateth his brother, is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. 16. Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. 17. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 18. My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed, and in truth. 19. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him.

The beloved apostle can scarcely touch upon the mention of sacred love, but he must enlarge upon the enforcement of it; as here he does by divers arguments and incentives thereto as; I. That it is a note of our evangelical justification, of our transition into a state of life; We know that we have passed from death to life, because we love the brethren, v. 14. We are by nature children of wrath and heirs of death. By the gospel (the gospel-covenant or promise) our state towards another world is altered and changed. We pass from death to life; from the guilt of death to the right of life. And this transition is made upon one ground, love, of the Lord Jesus; He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; and he who believeth not, hath the wrath of God abiding on him, John 3. 36. Now this happy change of state we may come to be assured of; We know that we are passed from death to life; we may know it by the evidences of our faith in Christ, of which this love to our brethren is one, which leads us to characterize this love that is such a mark of our justified state. It is not a zeal for party in the common religion, or an affection for, or an affectation of, those who are of the same denomination and subordinate sentiments with ourselves. But this love, 1. Supposes a general love to mankind: the law of Christian love, in the Christian community, is founded on the catholic law, in the society of mankind, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. And that is principally on these two accounts. (1.) As the excellency of God; and, (2.) As being beloved in Christ. [1.] As the excellent work of God, made by him, and made in wonderful resemblance of him. The reason that God assigns for the certain punishment of a murderer, is a reason against our hatred of any of the brethren of mankind, and consequently a reason for our love to them: for in the image of God made he man, v. 14. 2. Being, in some measure, beloved in Christ. The whole moral, physical, and spiritual nature of man, or angels humani, should be considered, as being, in distinction from fallen angels, a redeemed nation, as having a divine Redeemer designed, prepared, and given for them. So God loved the world, even this world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whatsoever believeth on him, should not perish, but have everlasting life, John 3. 16. A world so beloved of God, should be highly valued by us. And this love will exert itself in earnest desires, and ardent endeavours, and attempts, for the conversion and salvation of the yet uncalled blinded world; My heart's desire and prayer for Israel are, that they may be saved. And then this love will include all due love to enemies themselves. 2. It includes a peculiar love to the Christian society, to the catholic church, and that for the sake of her Head, as being his body, as being redeemed, justified, and sanctified, in and by him; and this love particularly acts and operates toward those of the catholic church, that we have opportunity of being personally acquainted with, or credibly informed of. They are not so much loved for their own sakes as for the sake of God and Christ, who have loved them. And it is God and Christ, or, if you will, the love of God and grace of Christ, that are beloved and valued in them and toward them. And so this is the issue of salvation in Christ; and is thereupon a note of our passage from death to life. II. The hatred of our brethren is, on the contrary, a sign of our deadly state, of our continuance under the legal sentence of death; He that loveth not his brother, (his brother in Christ,) abideth in death, v. 14. He yet stands under the curse and condemnation of the law. This the apostle argues from a clear reason. Ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him; and he who hates his brother is a murderer; and therefore ye cannot but know that he who hates his brother, hath not eternal life abiding in him," v. 15. Or, he abideth in death, as it is expressed, v. 14. Whosoever ha-
I. John, III.

1. The example of God and Christ should inflame our hearts with this holy love; Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. (John 15:13). For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. (John 3:16). Who ever heard of the love of God being given to the death for us? But since this apostle has declared that the word was God, and that he became flesh for us; I see not why we may not interpret this of God the Word. Here is the love of God himself, of him who in his own person is God, though not the Father, that he assumed a life, that he might lay it down for us! Here is the condescension, the miracle, the mystery of divine love, that God should deign to lower himself to the depth of human degrage, and be made sin, should be condemned as God, should love those whom God hath loved, and so loved: we shall certainly do so, if we have any love for God.

2. The apostle, having proposed this flaming, constraining example of love, and motive to it, proceeds to shew us what should be the temper and effect of this our Christian love. And so, 1. It must be, in the highest degree, so fervent as to make us willing to suffer even death for the sake of the safety and salvation of the dear brethren; And we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren, (v. 16.) either in our ministrations and services to them; (yea, and if I be offered upon the service and sacrifice of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all; I shall congratulate your felicity, Phil. 2:17.) or in exposing ourselves to hazards, when called thereto, for the safety and preservation of those that are more serviceable to the glory of God and the edification of the church than we can be; Who have for my life laid down their own necks; unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles, Rom. 16. 4. How mortified should the Christian be to this life! How prepared to part with every thing for the sake of it, and of a better! 2. It must be, in the next degree, compassionate, liberal, and communicative to the necessities of the brethren; For whose hath this world's good, and sent his brother have need, and shuddert up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? v. 17. It pleases God, that some of the Christian brethren should be poor, for the exercise of the charity and love of those that are rich. And it becomes us, therefore, to become God's poor in the world, and to use the Christian brethren this world's good, that they may exercise their grace in communicating to the poor saints. And they who have this world's good, must love a good God more, and their good brethren more, and be ready to distribute it for their sakes. It appears here, that this love to the brethren is founded upon love to God, in that it is here called so by the apostle; How dwelleth the love of God in him? This love to the brethren is love to God in them, and where there is none of this love to them, there is no true love to God at all. 3. I was going to intimate the third and lowest degree in the next verse; but the apostle has prevented me, by intimating that this last charitable communicative love, in persons of ability, is the lowest that can consist with the love of God. But there may be other fruits of this love; and therefore the apostle desires that in all it should be unfeigned and contagious; as many as are partakers thereof, v. 18. Compliments and flatteries become not Christians; but the sincere expressions of sacred affection, and the services or labours of love, do. Then, IV. This love will evince our sincerity in religion, and give us hope toward God; And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him, v. 19. It is a great happiness to be assured of our integrity in religion. They that are so assured, may have holy boldness or confidence toward God; they may appeal to him from the censures and condemnation of the world. The way to arrive at the knowledge of our own truth and uprightness in Christianity, and to secure our inward peace, is, to abound in love, and in the works of love toward the Christian brethren.

20. If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. 21. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. 22. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

The apostle, having intimated that there may be, even among us, such a privilege as an assurance or sound persuasion of heart toward God, proceeds here,

To establish the court of conscience, and to assert the authority of it: For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things, v. 20. Our heart here is our self-reflecting, judicial power, that noble, excellent ability, whereby we can take cognizance of ourselves, of our spirits, our dispositions and actions; and accordingly pass a judgment upon our state toward God; and so it is the same with conscience, or the power of moral self-consciousness: this power can act both as witness, judge, and executor of judgment; it either accuses or excuses, condemns or justifies; it is set and placed in this office by God himself; the spirit of man, thus capacitated and empowered, is the candle of the Lord, a luminary lighted and set up by the Lord, searching all the inward parts of the heart, and for the generalisation of the private recesses, the secret thoughts of the inner man, Prov. 20. 27. Conscience is God's viceroy, calls the court in his name, and acts for him; the answer of a good conscience toward God, 1 Pet. 3. 21. God is chief judge of the court; If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, superior to our heart and conscience in power and judgment; hence the act and judgment of the heart is the act and judgment of God; and if conscience condemn us, God does so too; For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things, v. 20. God is a greater Witness than our conscience, and knoweth more against us than it does; he knoweth all things; he is a greater Judge than conscience; for as he is supreme, so his judgment shall stand, and shall be fully and finally executed. This seems to be the Natural Right when he says, That Knoweth nothing by myself, that is, in the case, wherein I am censured by some; I am not conscious of any guile, or allowed unfaithfulness, in my stewardship and ministry; yet am I not hereby justified, it is not by my own conscience that I must ultimately stand or fall; the justification, or justifying sentence of my conscience, or self-consciousness, will not determine the controversy between you and me; as you do not appeal to its sentence, so neither will you be determined by its decision; but he that judgeth me is supremely and finally judgeth me, and by whose judgment you and I must be determined, is, the Lord, 1 Cor. 4. 4. Or, 2. If conscience acquit us, God does so too; Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God; (v. 21.) then have we assurance that he accepts us now, and will acquit us in the great day of account. But, possibly, some presumptuous soul may here say, I am glad of this; my heart does not condemn me, and therefore I may conclude God does not. As, on the contrary, upon the foregoing verse, some pious trembling soul will be ready to cry out, God forbid! My heart or conscience condemn me, and must I then infallibly expect the condemnation of God? But let such know, that the errors of the witness are not here reckoned as the acts of the heart; Part of prejudice, partiality, and presumption, may be said to be faults of the officers of the court, or of the attendants of the judge, (as the mind, the will, appetite, passion, sensual disposition, or disordered brain,) or of the jury, who gives a false verdict, not of the judge itself; conscience, properly self-consciousness; acts of ignorance and error are not acts of self-consciousness, but of some mistaken power; and the error being discovered and the censure of conscience, according to the original constitution of it by God himself; according to which process, what is bound in conscience, is bound in heaven; let conscience therefore be heard, be well-informed, and diligently attended to.

II. To indicate the privilege of those who have a good conscience toward God; they have interest in the things of God, and in their concern for him, and in their good conscience there; And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, v. 22. It is supposed that the petitioners do desire, or do not intend to desire, any thing that is contrary to the honour or glory of the court, or to their own intended spiritual good; and then they may depend upon receiving the good things they ask for; and this supposition may well be made concerning the petitioners, or they may well be supposed to receive the good things they ask for, considering their qualification and practice; because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight, v. 22. Obedient souls are prepared for blessings, and they have promise of audience; they who commit things displeasing to God, cannot expect that he should plead them in hearing and answering their prayers, Ps. 66. 18. Prov. 28. 9.

23. And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. 24. And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

The apostle, having mentioned keeping the commandments, and pleasing of God, as the qualification of effectual petitioners in and with Heaven, here suitably proceeds,

1. To represent to us what those commandments primarily and summarily are; they are comprehended in this double one; And he that keepeth his commandments, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment, v. 23. To believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, is, 1. To discern what he is, according to his name; to have an intellectual view of his person and office, as the Son of God, and the anointed Saviour of the world; that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, John 6. 40. 2. To approve him in judgment and conscience, in conviction and consciousness of our case, as one wisely and wonderfully prepared and adapted for the whole work of the eternal salvation. 3. To consent to him, and acquiesce in him, as our Redeemer and Recoverer unto God. 4. To trust to him, and rely upon him, for the full and final discharge of his saving office. They that know thy name, will put their trust in thee, Ps. 9. 10. I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day, 2 Tim. 1. 12. This faith is a needful requisite to those who would be prevalent petitioners with God; because it is by the Son that we must come to the Father; through his grace and righteousness our persons must be accepted or ingratiated with the Father; (Eph. 1. 6.) through his purchase all our desired blessings must come; and through his intercession our prayers must be heard and answered. This is the first part of the commandment that must be observed by acceptable worshippers; the second is, that we love one another, as he gave us commandment, v. 23. The command of Christ should be continually before our eyes; Christian love must possess our souls when we go to God in prayer; to this end we must remember, that the love oblige us, (1.) To forgive those who offend us, (Matt. 6. 14.) and, (2.) To reconcile ourselves to those whom we have offended, Matt. 5. 23. 24. As good-will to men was proclaimed from heaven, so good-will to men, and particularly to the brethren, must be carried in the hearts of those who go to God and heaven.

II. To represent to us the blessedness of obedience to those commands; the obedient enjoy communion with God, and have the Spirit of God dwelleth in them, and he in him, v. 24. We dwell in God by a happy relation to him, and spiritual union with him, through his Son, and by a holy converse with him; and God dwelleth in us by his word, and our faith fixed on him, and by the operations of his Spirit; then there occurs the trial of his divine inhabitation; And hereby we know that he abideth.
in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us, (v. 24.) by the sacred disposition and frame of soul that he hath conferred upon us; which, being a spirit of faith in God and Christ, and of love to God and man, appears to be of God.

CHAP. IV.

1. BELOVED, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. 2. Hereby know ye the spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God. 3. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

The apostle, having said that God’s dwelling in and with us may be known by the Spirit that he hath given us, intimates that that Spirit may be discerned and distinguished from other spirits that appear in the world; and so here, He calls the disciples, to whom he writes, to caution and scrutiny about the spirits, and spiritual professors, that were now risen. (1.) To caution; ‘Beloved, believe not every spirit; regard not, trust not, follow not, every pretender to the Spirit of God, or every professor of vision, or inspiration, or revelation from God.’ Truth is the foundation of simulation and counterfeits; there had been real communications from the divine Spirit, and therefore others pretended thereto. God will take the way of his own wisdom and goodness, though it may be liable to abuse; he has sent inspired teachers to the world, and given us a supernatural revelation, though others may be so evil and so impudent as to pretend the same; every pretender to the divine Spirit, or to inspiration, and extraordinary illumination thereby, is not to be believed. Time was, when the spiritual man (the man of the Spirit, who made a virtue of knowing, and the Son was naught), Hos. 9. 7. (2.) To scrutiny; to examination of the claims that are laid to the Spirit; But try the spirits, whether they are of God, v. 1. God has given of his Spirit in these latter ages of the world, but not to all who profess to come furnished therewith; to the disciples is allowed a judgment of discretion, in reference to the spirits that would be hereafter, the same as in the church of religion; a reason is given for this trial, Because many false prophets are gone out into the world, v. 1. There being much about the time of our Saviour’s appearance in the world a general expectation among the Jews of a Redeemer to Israel, and the humiliation, spiritual reformation, and sufferings of the Saviour being taken as a prejudice against him, others were induced to make use of these prophets and messiahs to Israel, according to the Saviour’s prediction, Matt. 24. 23.

24. It should not seem strange to us, that false teachers set themselves up in the church, it was so in the apostle’s times; fatal is the spirit of delusion, sad that men should vaunt themselves for prophets and inspired preachers, that are by no means so!

2. He gives a test whereby the disciples may try these pretending spirits; these spirits set up for prophets, doctors, or dictators in religion, and so they are to be tried by their doctrine; and the test whereby in that day, or in that part of the world where the apostle now resided, (for in various seasons, and in various churches, tests were different,) must be this; Hereby know ye the Spirit of God, Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God, v. 2. Or, that confesseth Jesus Christ that came in the flesh. Jesus Christ is to be confessed as the Son of God, the eternal Word, and now become flesh, both at the beginning; as the Son of God that came into, and came in, our human mortal nature, and therein suffered and died at Jerusalem. He who confesses and preaches this, by a mind supernaturally instructed and enlightened therein, does it by the Spirit of God, or God is the Author of that illumination. On the contrary, ‘Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, (or that Jesus Christ that came in the flesh,) is not of God, v. 3. God has given so much testimony to Jesus Christ, who was lately here in the world, and in the flesh, (or in a fleshly body like ours,) though now in heaven, that ye may be assured that any impulse or pretended inspiration that contradicts this, is far from being from heaven and of God.” The sum of revealed religion is comprehended in the doctrine concerning Jesus Christ, his person and office. We see then the aggravation of a formal opposition against him and it. And this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come and even now already is it in the world, v. 3. It was foreknown by God, that antichrists would arise, and antichristian spirits oppose his Spirit and his truth; it was foreknown also that one eminent antichrist would arise, and make a long and fatal war against the Christ of God, and his institution, and honour, and kingdom in the world; this great antichrist would have his way prepared, and his rise facilitated by other lesser antichrists, and the spirit of error working and disposing men’s minds for him; the antichristian spirit began by times, even in the apostles’ days. Dreadful and unsearchable is the judgment of God, that persons should be given over to an antichristian spirit, and to such darkness of delusion, as to set themselves against the Son of God, and all the testimony that the Father hath given to the Son! But we have been foretold and forewarned that such opposition would arise; we should therefore cease to be offended; and the more we see the word of Christ fulfilled, the more confirmed we should be in the truth of it.

4. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world. 5. They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. 6. We are of God, he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

In these verses the apostle encourages the disciples against the fear and danger of this seducing antichristian spirit, and that by such methods as these: 1. He assures them of a more divine principle in them, Ye are of God, little children, v. 4. Ye are of God, v. 6. We are born of God, taught of God, appointed of God, and so secured against infectious fatal delusions, God has his chosen, who shall not be mortally seduced. 2. He gives them hope of victory; ‘And have overcome them, v. 4. Ye have hither to overcome these deceivers and their temptations, and there is good ground of hope that ye will do so still, and that upon these two accounts. (1.) "There is a strong preserver within you; because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world; v. 4. The Spirit of God dwells in you, and that Spirit is more mighty than men or devils. It is a great happiness to be under the influence of the Holy Ghost. But he that dwells in you, and is not of the world, with these deceivers; the Spirit of God hath framed your mind for God and heaven; but they are of the world; the spirit that prevails in them, leads them to this world, their heart is addicted thereto; they study the pomp, the pleasure, and interest of the world; and therefore speak they of the world: they profess a worldly messiah and saviour, they project a worldly kingdom and dominion; the possessions and treasures of the world would they convey to themselves, forgetting that the true Redeemer's kingdom is not of this world. This worldly design procures them prostyletes: the world heareth them, v. 5. They are followed by such as themselves; the world will love its own, and its own will love it. But they are in a fair way to conquer pernicious seductions, who have conquered the love of this world. Therefore be zealous, and free them, that though their company might be the smaller, yet it was the better; they had more divine and holy knowledge; "He that knoweth God, heareth us. He who knows the purity and holiness of God, the love and grace of God, the truth and faithfulness of God, the ancient word and prophecies of God, the signals and testimonials of God, must know that he is with us; and he who knows this, will not go to us, and abide with us." He that is well furnished with natural religion, will the more faithfully cleave to the Christian. He that knoweth God, (in his natural and moral excellences, revelations, and works,) heareth us, v. 6. As on the contrary, "He that knoweth not God, heareth us not. He who knows not God regards not us. He that is not born of God, (walking according to his natural disposition,) walks not with us. Thus further any are from God, (as appears in all ages,) the farther they are from Christ, and his faithful servants; and the more addicted persons are to this world, the more remote they are from the spirit of Christianity. Thus you have a distinction betwixt us and others; Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the spirit of error, v. 6. This doctrine concerning the Saviour's person leading you from the world to God, is so strong, (as of the Spirit of truth,) in opposition to the spirit of error. The more pure and holy any doctrine is, the more likely to be of God." 7. Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth, is born of God, and knoweth God. 8. He that loveth not, knoweth not God: for God is love. 9. In this was manifested the love of God towards us, because that God sent his only-begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. 10. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. 11. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. 12. No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwell-eth in us, and his love is perfected in us. 13. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit. As the Spirit of truth is known by doctrine, (so spirits are to be tried,) it is known by love likewise; and so there follows a strong fervent exhortation to holy Christian love; Beloved, let us love one another, v. 7. The apostle would unite them together in his love, that he may unite them in love to each other; "Beloved, I beseech you, by the love I bear you, that your love put on unfailing mutual love." This exhortation is pressed and urged with variety of argument: as, I. From the high and heavenly descent of love; for love is of God: He is the Fountain, Author, Parent, and Commander of love: it is the sum of his law and gospel: And every one that loveth, (whose spirit is framed to judicial holy love,) is born of God, v. 7. The Spirit of God is the Spirit of love. The new nature in the children of God is the offspring of his love: and the temper and com- position of it is love. The fruit of the Spirit is love, Gal. 5. 22. Love comes down from heaven. II. Love argues a true and just apprehension of the divine nature; He that loveth, knoweth God, v. 7. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, v. 8. What attribute of the Divine Majesty so clearly represents the love of God as his holiness, his holy nature, his holy goodness, which is love? The wisdom, the goodness, the harmony, and usefulness, of the vast creation, that so fully demonstrate his being, do at the same time shew and prove his love; and natural reason, inferring and collecting the nature and excellence of the most absolute perfect being, must collect and find that he is most highly good: and he that loveth not, (is not quickened by the knowledge he hath of God,) knoweth not God; it is a convulsive evidence that such one knoweth not, and due knowledge of God dwells not in such a soul: his love must needs shine among his primary bright- est perfections; for God is love; (v. 8.) his nature and essence are love; his will and works are primarily love. Not that this is the only conception we are to have of him; we have found that he is Light as well as Love; (ch. 1. 5.) and God is principally Love to himself, and he has such perfections as arise from the necessary love he must bear to his necessary existence, excellence, and glory; but love is natural and essential to the Divine Majesty; God is Love; that God is Love, is argued from the display and demonstration that he hath given of it; as, I. That he hath loved us, such as we are; In this was manifest the love of God towards us, (v. 9.) towards us mortals, us ungrateful rebels. God com- manded his only-begotten Son, Christ, to die for sinners, Christ died for us, Rom. 5. 8. Strange, that God should love impure, vain, vile dust and ashes! 2. That he has loved us at such a rate, at such an incomparable value as he has given for us; he has given his own, only-beloved, blessed Son for us; Because that God sent his only-begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him, v. 10. This Planet, this Star, so near and so far, so straight way the Son of God; he is the Only-begotten. Should we suppose him begotten as a creature or created being, he is not the Only-begotten. Should we suppose him a natural necessary eradication from the Father's glory, or glorious essence, or substance, he must be the Only-begotten: and then it will be a mystery and miracle of divine love, that such a Son should be loved by such a Father. It may well be said, So (so wonderfully, so magnificently and so incredibly) God loved the world. 3. That God loved us first, and in the circumstances in which we lay; Herein is love, (unusual unprecedented love,) not that we loved God, but that he loved us, v. 10. He loved us, when we had no love for him; when we lay in our guilt, misery, and blood; when we were undeserving, ill-deserving, polluted, and unclean, and wanted to be washed from our sins in sacred blood. 4. That he gave us his Son for such service, and such an end; for such service, to be the Propitiation for our sins; consequently to die for us, to die under the law and curse of God, to bear our sins, to be crucified, to be wounded in his side, and pierced in his side, to be dead and buried for us; (v. 10.) and then for such an end, for such a good and beneficial end to us—that we might live through him, (v. 9.) might live for ever through him, might live in heaven, live with God, and live in eternal glory and blessedness with him and through him: O what love is here! Then, III. Divine love to the brethren should constrain ones; beloved, (I would address this by your interest in my love to remember,) if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another, v. 11. This should be an inviolable argument. The example of God should press us. We should be followers, (or imitators) of him, as his dear children. The objects of the divine love should be the objects of our. Shall we refuse to love these whom the eternal God hath loved? We should be admirers of his love, and lovers of his love, (of the benevolence and complacency that are in him,) and consequently lovers of those whom he loves. The general love of God to the world should induce a universal love among mankind; that ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth his rain on the just and on the unjust, Matt. 5. 45. The peculiar love of God to the chosen, and peculiar love to the church, should induce us to love a peculiar love there; If God so loved us, we ought surely (in some measure suitably thereto) to love one another.

IV. The Christian love is an assurance of the divine inhabitation; If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, v. 12. Now God dwelleth in us, not by any visible presence, or immediate appearance to the eye; (No man hath seen God at any time, v. 12.) but by his Spirit; for those who are new creatures are seen of God at any time; he does not here present himself to our eye or to our immediate intuition, and so he does not that way demand and exact our love; but he demands and expects it in that way in which he has thought meet to deserve and claim it, and that is, in the illustration that he has given of himself and of his love (and thereupon of hisloveliness too) in the catholic church, and particularly in the brethren, the members of the chosen body, and in that copy of them for them and with them, is God to be loved; and thus, if we love one another, God dwelleth in us; the sacred lovers of the brethren are the temples of God; the Divine Majesty has a peculiar residence there.

V. Thence the divine love attains a considerable end and accomplishment in us; “And his love is perfected in us;” (v. 12.) It has obtained its completion in and upon us. God’s love is not perfected in him, in hi, and with us. His love could not be designed to be ineffectual and fruitless upon us; when its proper genuine end and issue are attained and produced in us, it may be said to be perfected; so faith is perfected by its works, and love perfected by its operations. When the divine love has wrought us to the same image, to the love of God, and thereupon to the love of the brethren, the children of God, and the perseverance of them, which move to the number of them, and is in us, and is in us, it is God to be loved; and thus, if we love one another, God dwelleth in us; the sacred lovers of the brethren are the temples of God; the Divine Majesty has a peculiar residence there.

V. Therein the divine love attains a considerable end and accomplishment in us; “And his love is perfected in us;” (v. 12.) It has obtained its completion in and upon us. God’s love is not perfected in him, in hi, and with us. His love could not be designed to be ineffectual and fruitless upon us; when its proper genuine end and issue are attained and produced in us, it may be said to be perfected; so faith is perfected by its works, and love perfected by its operations. When the divine love has wrought us to the same image, to the love of God, and thereupon to the love of the brethren, the children of God, and the perseverance of them, which move to the number of them, and is in us, and is in us, it is God to be loved; and thus, if we love one another, God dwelleth in us; the sacred lovers of the brethren are the temples of God; the Divine Majesty has a peculiar residence there.

One would think, that for God to dwell in us, and we in him, were words too high for earth or heaven, had not God gone before us therein. What it is, has been briefly said on ch. 3. 24. What it fully is, must be left to the revelation of the blessed world. But this mutual inhabitation we know, says the apostle, because he hath given us of his Spirit; he has lodged the image and fruit of his Spirit in our hearts; (v. 13.) and the Spirit that he hath given us, appears to be his, or of him, since it is the Spirit of truth, 새로, of zeal and magnanimity for God, of love to God and man, and of a sound mind, of an understanding well instructed in the affairs of God and religion, and his kingdom among men, 2 Tim. 1. 7.

14. And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. 15. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. 16. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.

Since faith in Christ works love to God, and love to God must kindle love to the brethren, the apostle here confirms the prime article of the Christian faith as the great reason of the establishment of the faith. He proclaims the fundamental article of the Christian religion, which is so representative of the love of God; And we have seen, and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world, v. 14. We here see, 1. The Lord Jesus’s relation to God; he is Son to the Father, such a Son as no one else is, and so as to be God with the Father. 2. His relation and office towards us—the Saviour of the world, of the world; in his death, and resurrection from the dead, and royal ascent to heaven; they had so seen him as to be satisfied that he was the Only-begetten of the Father, full of grace and truth. 3. The ground on which he became so—by the mission of him; the Father sent the Son, he decreed and willed his coming thither, in and with the consent of the Son. 4. The apostle’s assurance of this—he and his brethren had seen it; they had seen the Son of God in his human nature, in his holy converse and works, in his transfiguration on the mount, in his death, and resurrection from the dead, and royal ascent to heaven; they had so seen him as to be satisfied that he was the Only-begetten of the Father, full of grace and truth. 5. The apostle’s attestation of this, in pursuance of such speech; “We have seen and do testify; the weight of this truth obliges us to testify it, the salvation of the world lies upon it, the evidence of the truth warrants us to testify it; our eyes, and cars, and hands, have been witnesses of it.” Therefore, II. The apostle states the excellency, or the excellent privilege attending the due acknowledgment of this truth; Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God, v. 15. This confession seems to include faith in the heart as the foundation of it; acknowledge the belief with the mouth to the glory of God and Christ; and profession in the life and conduct, in opposition to the ungodly, the unconfessing ones from the world. Thus no man says that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost, by the external attestation and internal operation of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 12. 3. And so he who thus confesses Christ, and God in him, is enriched with, or possessed by, the Spirit of God, and has a complacent knowledge of God, and much holy enjoyment of him. Then, III. The apostle applies this in order to the exaltation of holy love. God’s love is thus seen and exalted in Christ Jesus; and thus have we known and believed the love that God hath to us, v. 16.
I. JOHN, IV.

The Christian revelation is, what should endure it to us, the revelation of the divine love; the articles of our revealed faith are but so many articles relating to the divine love; the history of the Lord Christ is the history of God's love to us; all his transactions in and with his Son were but testifications of his love to us, and means to advance us to the love of God; and so was his reconciling himself unto himself, 2 Cor. 5. 19. Hence we may learn,

1. That God is Love, (v. 16.) he is essential boundless love; he has incommunicable, incomprehensible love for us of this world, which he has demonstrated in the mission and mediation of his beloved Son. It is the great objection and prejudice against the Christian revelation, that the love of God should be so essential and so incomprehensible. To shew the height of any perfection of his? When he would shew somewhat of his power and wisdom, he makes such a world as this; when he would shew more of his grandeur and glory, he makes heaven for the ministering spirits that are before the throne; what will he not do then, when he designs to demonstrate his love, and to demonstrate his highest love, or that he himself is Love, or that love is one of the most boundless, dear, transcendent, operative excellencies of his unbounded nature; and to demonstrate this not only to us, but to the angelical world, and to the principalities and powers above, and this not for our surprise for a while, but for the admiration, and praise, and adoration of our most exalted powers to all eternity? What will not God then do? Surely then it will look more agreeable to the design, and grandeur, and pregnancy of his love, (if I may so call it,) to give an eternal Son for us, than to make a Son on purpose for our relief. In such a dispensation as that of giving a natural eternal Son for us and to us, he will command his love to us indeed; and what will not the God of love do, when he designs to commend his love, and to commend it in the view of heaven, and earth and hell; and when he will commend himself and recommend himself to us, and to our highest conviction, and also affection. And what if it should appear at last, (which I shall only offer to the consideration of the judicious,) that the divine love, and particularly God’s love in Christ, should be the foundation of the glories of heaven, in the present enjoyment of those ministering spirits that accompanied it, and of the salvation of this world, and of the torments of hell! This last will seem most strange, and strange, it will appear only that God is love to himself, in vindicating his own law and government, and love and glory; but that the damned ones are made so, or are so punished, (1.) Because they despised the love of God already manifested and exhibited: (2.) Because they refused to be beloved in what was further proposed and promised: and, (3.) Because they made themselves enemies to the objects of divine love and delight? If the consciences of the damned should accuse them of these things, and especially of rejecting the highest instance of divine love; if the far greatest part of the intelligent creation should be eternally blessed through the highest instance of the divine love, then may it well be inscribed upon the whole creation of God, God is love.

2. That hereupon, he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him, v. 16. There is great communion between the God of love and the loving soul, that is, him who loves the creation of God, according to its different relation to God, and reception from him and interest in him. He that dwelleth in sacred love, has the love of God; he that dwelleth after his heart, has the impress of God upon his spirit, the Spirit of God sanctifying and sealing him, lives in the meditation, views, and tastes of the divine love, and will ere long go to dwell with God for ever.

17. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as he is, so are we in this world. 13. There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. 19. We love him, because he first loved us. 20. If a man say, I love God, and hate his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? 21. And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God, love his brother also.

The apostle, having thus excited and enforced sacred love from the great Pattern and motive of it, the love that is and dwells in God himself, proceeds to recommend it further by other considerations; and he recommends it in both the branches of it, both as love to God, and love to our brother or Christian neighbour.

1. As love to God, to the primium amabile—the first and chief of all amiable beings and objects, who has the confluence of all beauty, excellence, and loveliness, in himself, and confers on all other beings whatever renders them good and amiable. Love to God seems here to be recommended on these accounts:—

1. It will give us peace and satisfaction of spirit in the day when it will be most needed, or when it will be the greatest pleasure and blessing imaginable; Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, v. 17. There must be a day of universal judgment. Happy they who shall have holy fiducial boldness before the Judge at that day; who shall be able to lift up their heads, and to look him in the face, as knowing he is their Friend and Advocate! Happy they who have holy boldness and assurance in the prospect of that day, who look and wait for it, and for the Judge’s appearance! So do, and so may do, the lovers of God. Their love to God assures them of God’s love, and to the, and consequently of the friend of the Son of God; the more we love our friend, especially when we are sure that he knows it, the more we can trust his love. As God is good and loving and faithful to his promise, so we can easily be persuaded of his love, and the happy fruits of his love, when we can say, Thou knowest all things, knowest that we love thee; and hope maketh not ashamed; our hope, conceived by the consideration of God’s love, will not disappoint us, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost that is given to us, Rom. 5. 5. Possibly here by the love of God may be meant our love to God, that is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost; that is the foundation of our hope, or of our assurance that our hope will hold good at last. Or, if by the love of God be meant the sense and apprehension of his love to us, yet that must suppose or include us as lovers of him in this case; and indeed the sense and evidence of his love to us, shed abroad in our heart's love to him; and thereupon we have confidence toward him, and peace and joy in him;
he will give the crown of righteousness to all that love his appearing; and we have this boldness toward Christ, because of our conformity to him, because as he is, so are we in this world, (v. 17.) love hath conformed us to him; as he was the great Lover, so is he; love begets love. But if he have not a measure to be so too, and he will not deny his own image; love teaches us to conform in sufferings too, we suffer for him and with him, and therefore cannot but hope and trust that we shall also be glorified together with him, 2 Tim. 2. 12.

2. It prevents or removes the uncomfortable result and fruit of servile fear; There is no fear in love, (v. 18.) so far as love is perfect, perfect love casteth out fear. As perfect love is the highest, most distinguishing, I judge, between fear and being afraid; or in this case, between the fear of God and being afraid of him; the fear of God is often mentioned and commanded as the substance of religion, (1 Pet. 2. 17. Rev. 14. 7.) and so it imports the high regard and veneration we have for God and his authority and government; such fear is consistent with love, yea, with perfect love, as being in him, and being of him, and his love is of God, and avenging God, and perfect love is of God, and God is love, and a view of his vindictive perfections; in the view of them, God is represented as a consuming Fire; and so fear here may be rendered dread; there is no dread in love; love considers its object as good and excellent, and therefore amiable, and worthy to be beloved; love considers God as most eminently good, and most eminently loving us in Christ, and so puts off dread, and puts on joy in him; and as love is the opposite of dread, so that perfect love casteth out fear or dread. They who perfectly love God, are, from his nature, and counsel, and covenant, perfectly assured of his love, and consequently are perfectly free from any dismal dreadful suspicions of his punitive power and justice, as armed against them; they well know that God loves them, and they thereupon triumph in his love. That perfect love casteth out fear, the apostle thus sensibly argues, that it casteth out torment, casteth out fear or dread, because fear hath torment; (v. 18.) fear is known to be a disquieting, torturing passion, especially such a fear as is the dread of an almighty avenging God; but perfect love casteth out torment, for it teaches the mind a perfect acquiescence and complacency in the beloved, and therefore perfect love casteth out fear. Or, which is here equivalent, he that feareth, is not made perfect in love; (v. 18.) it is a sign that our love is far from being perfect, since our doubts and fears, and dismal apprehensions of God, are so many. Let us long for, and hasten to, the world of perfect love, where our serenity and joy in God will be as perfect as our love.

3. From the source and rise of it, which is the antecedent love of God; We love him, because he first loved us, v. 19. His love is the incentive, the motive, and moral cause of our's. We cannot but love so good a God, who was first in the act and work of love; who loved us when we were both unloving and unloved; who loved us at so great a rate; who has been seeking and soliciting our love at the expense of his Son's blood, and has condescended to beseech us to be reconciled unto him. Let heaven and earth stand amazed at such love! His love is adequate to all our needs; his own will (of his own free loving will) begat he us. To those that love him all things work together for good, to them who are the called according to his purpose; they that love God, are the called thereto according to his purpose; (Rom. 8. 28.) according to whose purpose they are called, is sufficiently intimated in the following clauses; whom he did predestinate, or antecedently purpose, to the image of his Son, them he also called, effectually recovered thereto. The divine love stamped love upon our souls; may the Lord still and further direct our hearts into the love of God! 2 Thess. 3. 5.

II. As love to our brother and neighbour in Christ; such love is argued and urged on these accounts: I. As suitable to and consistent with Christian profession. In the profession of Christianity we profess to love God as the Root of religion; "If then a man say, or profess as much as thereby to say, I love God, I am a lover of his name, and house, and worship, and yet hate his brother, whom he should love for God's sake, he is a liar, (v. 20.) he therein gives his profession the lie." That such a one loves not God, the apostle proves by the usual facility of loving what is seen rather than what is unseen; for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen? v. 20. The eye is wont to affect the heart; things unseen less catch the mind, and thereby the heart; the incomprehensibleness of God very much arises from his invisibility; the member of Christ has much of God visible in him; how then shall the hater of a visible image of God pretend to love the unseen Original of his invisible God himself.

2. As suitable to the express law of God, and the just reason of it; And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also, v. 21. As God has communicated his image in nature and in grace, so he would have our love to be suitably diffused. We must love God originally and supremely, and others in him, on the account of their derivation and reception from him, and of his interest in and consequent to our Christian profession having a new nature and excellent privileges derived from God, and God having his interest in them as well as in us, it cannot but be a natural suitable obligation, that he who loves God, should love his brother also.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, the apostle asserts, I. The dignity of believers, v. 1. II. Their obligation to love, and the trial of it, v. 1.-5. III. Their victory, v. 4, 5. IV. The credibility and confirmation of their faith, v. 6.-10. V. The advantage of their faith in eternal life, v. 11.-13. VI. The audience of their prayers, unless for those who have sinned unto death, v. 14.-17. VII. Their preservation from sin and Satan, v. 18. VIII. Their happy distinction from the world, v. 19. IX. Their true knowledge of God; (v. 20.) upon which, they must depart from idols, v. 21.

1. WHOSOEVER believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him. 2. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments. 3. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous. 4. For whatsoever is born of God, overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. 5. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the son of God?

I. The apostle having, as was there observed, in the conclusion of the last chapter, urged Christian love upon those two accounts; 1. As suitable to Christian profession; 2. As suitable to the divine command; here adds a third; such love is suitable, or indeed demanded by their eminent relation; our Christian brethren or fellow-believers are nearly related to God; they are his children; Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God, v. 1. Wherein the Christian brother is, (1.) Described by his faith; he that believeth that Jesus is the Christ; that he is Messiah the Prince; that he is the Son of God by nature and office; that he is the Chief of all the anointed world; Chief of all the priests, prophets, or kings, who were ever anointed by God or for him; that he is perfectly prepared and furnished for the whole work of the eternal salvation; the believer, accordingly, yields himself up to his care and love: and then he is, (2.) Described by his descent; he is born of God, v. 1. This principle of faith, and the new nature that attends it, or from which it springs, are ingenerated by the Spirit of God; and so sonship and adoption are not now appropriated to the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, nor to the ancient Israel of God; all believers, though by nature sinners of the Gentiles, are spiritually descended from God, and accordingly are to be beloved; as it is added, Every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him, v. 1. It seems but natural that he who loves the Father, should love the children also; and that in some proportion to their resemblance to their Father, and to the Father's love to them; and so we must first and principally love the Son of the Father, as he is most emphatically styled, 2 John 3. the Only (accordingly) can the love of his love be shown to those that are voluntarily begotten, and renewed by the Spirit of grace: thereupon, II. The apostle shews, 1. How we may discern the truth, or the true evangelical nature of our love to the regenerate; the ground of it must be our love to God, whose they are; By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, v. 2. Our love to them appears to be sound and genuine, when we feel for them, not merely upon any secular account, as because they are rich, or learned, or kind to us, or of our denomination among religious parties; but because they are God's children, his regenerate grace appears in them, his image and superscription are upon them, and so in them God himself is loved; thus we see what that love to the brethren is, that is so pressed in this epistle; it is love to them as the children of God, and the adoptive children of God, and (1.) Adopted in the union of them with Jesus, v. 3. Our Lord's adoption of us is a reformation to the world, (2.) By the love that he hath to us, v. 3. This is the love of God, that, as thereby we are determined to obedience, and to keep the commandments of God, so his commandments are thereby made easy and pleasant to us. The lover of God says, O how I love thy law! "I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart," (Ps. 119. 32.) when thou shalt enlarge it either with love or with the understanding.

3. What is and ought to be the effect of regeneration—an intellectual spiritual conquest of this world; For whatsoever is born of God, or, as in some copies, whosoever is born of God, overcometh the world, v. 5. He that is born of God, is born for God, and consequently for another world; he has a temper and disposition that tend to a higher better world; he is taught and trained by a spiritual discipline, such a weapon, whereby he can repel and conquer this; as it is added, And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith, v. 4. Faith is the cause of victory, the means, the instrument, see that the Saviour himself was not of this world, that his kingdom was not, and is not so; that it must be separated from the world, and gathered out of it for heaven and for God. There we see that the Saviour designs not this world for the inheritance and portion of his saved company. As he is gone to heaven himself, so he assures them he goes to prepare for their residence there, as designing they should always dwell with him; and allowing them to believe that if in this life, and this world only, they had received him, they should at last be miserable. It is there that the eternal blessed world is most clearly revealed and proposed to our affections and pursuit. It is there that we are furnished with the best arms and artillery against the assaults and attempts of the world. It is there that we are taught how the world may be out-shot in its own bow, or its artillery turned against itself; and its oppositions, encounters, and persecutions, be made serviceable to us, to move and ascend to the higher heavenly world: and there we are encouraged by a whole army and cloud of holy soldiers, who have in their several ages, posts, and stations, overcome the world, and won the crown. It is the real Christian that is the proper hero; who vanquishes the world, and rejoices in a universal victory. Nor does he (for he is far superior to the Greek, and much above the Hebrew) need of a sign to be subdivided, but lays hold on the eternal world of life, and in a sacred sense takes the kingdom of heaven by violence too. Who in all the world but the believer on Jesus Christ can thus overcome the world?

6. This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. 7. For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. 8. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. 9. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

The faith of the Christian believer (or the believer in Christ) being thus mighty and victorious, it had been well founded the better, and with unquestionable celestial evidence concerning the divine mission, authority, and office of the Lord Jesus; and it is so; he brings his credentials along with him; and he brings them, in the way by which he came; and in the witness that attends him.

I. In the way and manner by which he came; not barely by which he came into the world; but by an internal and external, and appeared, and acted, as a Saviour in the world; This is he that came by water and blood. He came to save us from our sins; to give us eternal life, and bring us to God; and that he might the more assuredly do this, he came by, or with, water and blood; even Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ, I say, did so; and none but he. And I say it again, not by or with water only, but spoken with water and blood. v. 6. Jesus Christ came with water and blood, as the notes and signatures of the true effectual Saviour of the world; and he came by water and blood, as the means by which he would heal and save us. That he must and did thus come in his saving office, may appear by our remembering these things: 1. We are inwardly and outwardly defiled; inwardly, by the power and pollution of sin in our nature. For our cleansing from this we need spiritual water; such as can reach the soul and the powers of it. Accordingly, there is it and by Christ Jesus, the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. And this was intimated to the apostles by our Lord, when he washed their feet; and said to Peter, who refused it, Except I wash thee, thou hast no part in me. We are defiled outwardly, by the guilt and condemning power of sin upon our persons. By this we are separated from God, and banished from his favourable, gracious, beatific presence for ever. From this we must be purged by atoning blood. It is the law or determination in the court of heaven, that without shedding of blood there shall be no remission, Heb. 9. 22. The Saviour from sin therefore must come with blood. 2. Both these ways of cleansing were represented in the old ceremonial institutions of the tabernacle. Persons and things were purified with water and blood. There were divers washings and carnal ordinances imposed till the time of reformation, Heb. 9. 10. The ashes of a heifer, mixt with water, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, Heb. 9. 13. Numb. 9. And likewise, almost all things are, by the law, purged with blood, Heb. 9. 23. As these shew us our double defilement, so they shew us the necessity of the purgation. 3. At and upon the death of Jesus Christ, his side being pierced with a soldier's spear, out of the wound there immediately issued water and blood. This the beloved apostle saw, and seems to have been affected with the sight; he alone records it, and seems to reckon himself obliged to record it, as containing something mysterious in it; And he that saw it, bare record, and his record is true. And he kneweth, being an eyewitness, that he saith true, that ye also may believe, and that ye may have life, particularly, that out of his pierced side forthwith there came water and blood, John 19. 35. Now this water and blood are comprehensive of all that is necessary and effectual to our salvation. By the water our souls are washed and purified for heaven and the region of saints in light. By the blood God is glorified, his law is honoured, and his vindicative excellences are illustrated and displayed. Whom he hath cleansed, he hath also glorified, once for all Propitiation through faith in his blood, or a Propitiation in or by his blood through faith, to declare his righteousness, that he may be just, and the Justifier of him that believeth in Jesus, Rom. 3. 25, 26. By the blood we are justified, reconciled, and presented righteous to God. By the blood, the curse of the law being satisfied, the purifying Spirit is obtained and received. By the blood washed and purchased Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit, the promised Spirit, through faith, Gal. 3. 13, &c. The water, as well as the blood, issued out of the side of the sacrificed Redeemer. The water and the blood then comprehend all things that can be requisite to our salvation. They will consecrate and sanctify to that purpose all that God shall appoint or make use of in order to that great end. He loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, Eph. 5. 25—27. He who comes by water and blood, is an accurate perfect Saviour. And this is he who comes by water and blood, even Jesus Christ! Thus we see in what way and manner, or, if you please, in what means so subtly, and skillfully, he comes. But we see his credentials also.

II. In the witness that attends him, and that is, the divine Spirit: that Spirit to whom the perfecting of the works of God is usually attributed: And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, v. 6. It was meet that the commissioned Saviour of the world should have a constant Agent to support his work, and testify of him to the world. It was meet that a divine power should attend him, his gospel, and all who professed and were an errand and office they came, and by what authority they were sent: this was done in and by the Spirit of God; according to the Saviour's own prediction, "He shall glorify me, even when I shall be rejected and crucified by men, for he shall receive or take of mine; he shall not receive my immediate office, he shall not die and rise again for you; but he shall receive of mine, shall proceed on the foundation I have laid, shall take up my institution and truth and cause, and shall further show it unto you, and by you to the world," John 16. 15. And then the apostle adds the commendation, or the acceptableness of this witness; because the Spirit is Truth, v. 6. He is the Spirit of God, and cannot lie. There is a copy that would afford us a very suitable reading thus; because, or that, Christ is the Truth. And so it indicates the matter of the Spirit's testimony, the thing which he attests, and that is, the truth of Christ; and it is the Spirit that beareth witness that Christ is the Truth; and consequently that Christianity, or the Christian religion, is the truth of the day, the truth of God. But it is not meet that one or two copies should alter the text; and our present reading is very agreeable; and so we retain it. The Spirit is Truth. He is indeed the Spirit of truth, John 14. 15. And Acts 2. 33. For Witness worthy of all acceptation, appears in that he is a heavenly Witness, or one of the witnesses that in and from heaven bare testimony concerning the truth and authority of Christ. Because (or for) there are three that have record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. And so v. 7. most appositely occurs, as a proof of the authenticity of the Spirit's testimony; he must needs be true, or even truth itself, if he be not only a Witness in heaven, but even one (not in testimony only, for so an angel may be, but in being and essence) with the Father and the Word. But here we are stooping in our course by the context there is about the genuineness of v. 7. It is alleged that many old Greek manuscripts have it not. We shall not here enter into the controversy. It seems that the critics are not agreed what manuscript is to be followed, yet all sufficiently inform us of the integrity and value of the manuscripts they preserve. Some may be so faulty, as I have an old printed Greek Testament so full of errata, that one would think no critic would establish a various lection thereupon. But let the judicious collators of copies manage that business. There are some rational surmises that seem to support such a clause, 1. If we admit v. 8. in the room of v. 7. it looks too like a tautology and repetition of what was included in v. 6. This is he that came by water and blood, not by water only, but by water and blood; and it is the Spirit that beareth witness. For there are three that have witness; the Spirit, the water, and the blood. This does not assign near so noble an introduction of these three witnesses as our present reading. 2. It is observed, that many copies read that distinctive clause, upon the earth; There are three that bear record upon the earth: now this bears a visible opposition to some witness or witnesses elsewhere, and therefore we are told, by the adversaries of the text, that this clause must be supposed to be omitted in most books that want v. 7. But it should for the same reason be so in all. Taken v. 6. This is he that came by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. It would not now naturally and properly be added, for there are three that bear record on earth; unless we should suppose that the apostle would tell us that all the witnesses are such as are upon the earth, which would assure us that one is infallibly true, or even Truth itself. 3. It is observed, that there is a variety of reading even in the Greek text, as in v. 7. Some copies read αὐτῷ are one; others (at least the Complutensian) sic τριὶ σις are one, or agree in one; and in v. 8. (in that part that it is supposed should be admitted,) instead of the common is τριὶ σις — upon earth, the Complutensian reads τριὶ σις — among the earth, which seems to show that that edition depended upon some Greek authority, and not merely, as some would have us believe, upon the authority either of the vulgar Latin, or of Thomas Aquinas; though his testimony may be added thereto. 4. v. 7. is very agreeable to the style and the theology of our apostle; as, (1.) He delights in the title—The Father; whether he indicates thereby God only, or a divine person distinguished from the Son and Holy Spirit, are one. And yet I am not alone; because the Father is with me. I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. Grace be with— and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, 2 John 3. Then, (2.) The name, the Word, is known to be almost (if not quite) peculiar to this apostle. Had the text been any other, he would have been under the necessity of making it obvious, from the form of baptism, and the common language of the church, to have used the name Son instead of that of the Word. As it is observed, that Tertullian and Cyprian use that name, even when they refer to this verse; or it is made an objection against their referring to this verse, because they speak of the Son, not the Word; and yet Cyprian's expression seems to be the more easy and obvious of the two, The testimony of Facundus himself. Quod Johannis a bestrati testimonium B. Cypriani, Carthaginesis ausites et martyris, in christolae sive libro, quem de Trinitate scireat, de Patre, Filio, et Spiritu sancto dictum intelligat; etsi enim, Dicit Dominus, ego et Pater unus sumus; et iterum de Patre, Filio, et Spiritu sancto scriptum est, Et hi tres unum sunt. —Blessed Cyprian, the Carthaginian Bishop and Martyr, in his book of the Trinity, considered the testimony of the apostle John, as relating to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; for he says, The Lord says, I and the Father are one; and again, These three are one. Now it is no where written that these are one, but in v. 7. It is probable then that St. Cyprian, either depending on his memory, or rather intending things more wordy than words, persons more names, or spelling persons from the Semitic, instead of the church, (both in popular and polemic discourses,) called the second by the name of the Son rather than the Word. If any man can admit Facundus's fancy, that St. Cyprian meant that the Spirit, the water, and the blood, were indeed the Father, Word, and Spirit, that St. John said were one, he may enjoy his opinion to himself. For, [1.] He must suppose that Cyprian not only altered the text, but the sense. For the blood, (the Son,) which Cyprian puts second, the apostle puts last. And, [2.] He must suppose that Cyprian thought that by the blood which issued out of the side of the Son, the apostle intended the Son himself, who might as well have been denoted by the water; that by the water which also issued from the side of the Son, the apostle intended the person of the Holy Ghost; that by the Spirit, which in v. 6. is said to be Truth, and in the gospel is called the Spirit of truth, the apostle meant the person of the rather; though he is no where else so called when joined with the Son and the Holy Ghost. We require good proof that the Carthaginian father could not understand him, must believe too that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are said to be three Witnesses on earth.

[3.] Facundus acknowledges that St. Cyprian says, that of his three it is written, Et hi tres unum sunt—and these three are one. Now these are the words, not of v. 8. but of v. 7. They are not used concerning the three on earth, the Spirit, the word, and the blood; but three in heaven, the Father, and the Word, and the Holy Ghost. So we are told that the author of the book De baptismo hæreticorum, allowed to be contemporary with Cyprian, cites St. John’s words, agreeably to the Greek manuscripts and the ancient versions, thus, At enim Johannes de Domino nostro in epistolet anno doceos, He is qui venit per aquam et sanguinem, Jesus Christus, non in aqua tantum, sed in aqua et sanguine; et Spiritus est qui testimonium perhibet, quia Spiritus est veritas; quia tres testimonium pheribunt, Spiritus et aqua et sanguine, et isti tres in unum sunt—For John, in his epistle, says concerning our Lord, This is he, Jesus Christ, who came by water and blood, not in water only, but in water and blood; and it is the Spirit that bears witness, because the Spirit is Truth; for there are three that bear witness, the Spirit, and the word, and the blood: and these three are one. If all the Greek manuscripts and ancient versions say concerning the Spirit, the water, and the blood, that, in unum sunt—they agree in one, then it was not of them that Cyprian spake, whatever variety there might be in the copies in his time, when he said it was written, unum sunt—they are one. And therefore Cyprian’s words seem still to be a firm testimony to v. 7. and also, or rather, that a forger of the text would have scarcely so exactly hit upon the apostolical name for the second witness in heaven, the Word. Then,

(3.) As this apostle only records the history of the water and blood flowing out of the Saviour’s side, so it is he only, or he principally, who registers to us the Saviour’s promise and prediction of the Holy Spirit’s coming to glorify him, and to testify of him. And so he concludes this point in the name of his own inspiration, of his righteousness, as in his gospel, ch. 14. 16, 17, 26.—15. 26.—16. 7—15. It is most suitable then to the diction and to the gospel of this apostle, thus to mention the Holy Ghost as a Witness for Jesus Christ. Then,

5. It was far more easy for a transcriber, by turning away his eye, or by the obscurity of the copy, if it being obliterated or defaced on the parchment or on a page, or worn away in such materials as the ancient had to write upon, to lose and omit the passage, than for an interpolator to devise and insert it; he must be very bold and impudent, who could hope to escape detection and shame; and profane too, who durst venture to make an addition to a supposed sacred book. And,

6. It can scarcely be supposed, that, when the apostle says, the weakness of the Christian’s faith in overcoming the world, and the foundation it relies upon in adhering to Jesus Christ, and the various testimony that was given to Jesus Christ in the world, he should omit the supreme testimony that attended him, especially when we consider that he meant to infer, as he does, (v. 9.) If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this that he had rehearsed before, is the witness of God, which he hath testified of his Son. Now in the three witnesses on earth, there is neither all the witness of God, nor indeed any witness who is truly and immediately God. The Antitrinitarian opposers of the text will deny that either the Spirit, or the water, or the blood, are God himself; and others may say that the Spirit here is some created spirit of God; but, upon our present reading, it is a noble enumeration of the several witnesses and testimonies supporting the truth of the Lord Jesus, and the divinity of his institution; here is the most excellent abridgment or breviate of the motives to faith in Christ, of the credentials the Saviour brings with him, and of the evidences of our Christianity, that is to be found, I think, in the book of God; which single account, even waving the doctrine of the divine Trinity, the entire text is worthy of all acception.

Having these rational grounds on our side, we proceed. The apostle, having told us that the Spirit that bears witness to Christ is truth, shews us that he is so, by assuring us that he is in heaven, and that there are others also who cannot but be true, or truth itself, concurred in testimony with Jesus; For three are one, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one, v. 7. Here is a Trinity of heavenly Witnesses; such as have testified and vouch to the world the veracity and authority of the Lord Jesus in his office and claims, where the first that occurs in order, is, the Father; he set his seal to the commission of the Lord Christ all the while he was here; more especially, (1.) In proclaiming him to be God’s only-begotten Son, John 1. 14. confirming his character at the transfiguration, Matt. 17. 5. Then, (3.) In accompanying him with miraculous power and works; If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not; but if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him, John 10. 37, 38. (4.) In avouching at his death, Matt. 27. 54. (5.) In raising him from the dead, John 20. 30, and 21. 22. by thus convincing the world—of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more, John 16. 10, and Rom. 1. 4. The second Witness is the Word; a mysterious name, importing the highest nature that belongs to the Saviour Jesus Christ; wherein he existed before the world was, whereby he made the world, and whereby he was truly God with the Father, who bore the human nature, of which the Lord Christ was made, and he redeemed and saved us; and he bore witness, [1.] By the mighty works that he wrought; (John 5. 17.) My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. [2.] In conferring a glory upon him at his transfiguration; And we beheld his glory, the glory of the Only-begotten of the Father, John 1. 14. [3.] In raising him from the dead; (John 2. 19.) Destroy not the temple of God—a temple crucified in three days but arise in it. The third Witness is the Holy Ghost, or the Holy Spirit; an august, venerable name, the Possessor, Proprietor, and Author of holiness. True and faithful must he be, to whom the Spirit of holiness sets his seal and solemn testimony. So he did to the Lord Jesus, the Head of the Christian world; and that in such instances as these: First, In the miraculous production of his immaculate human nature in the Virgin’s womb; The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, Luke 1. 35, &c. Secondly, In the visible descent upon him at his baptism; The Holy Ghost descended upon Christ, Luke 3. 22, &c. Thirdly, In an effectual conquest of the spirits of hell and darkness; If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you, Matt. 12. 28. Fourthly, In the visible potent descent upon this postes, to furnish them with gifts and powers to preach him and his gospel to the world after he himself was gone to heaven, Acts 1. 4, 5, 2. 4, &c. Fifthly, In supporting the name, gospel, and interest of Christ, by miraculous gifts and operations by and upon the disciples, and in the churches, for two hundred years, 1 Cor. 12. 7. Concerning which see Dr. Whitby's excellent discourse in the preface to the second volume of his Commentary on the New Testament. These are witnesses in heaven; and they bear record of the name and the deed one. It should seem not only in testimony, (for that is implied in their being three witnesses, to one and the same thing,) but upon a higher account, as they are in heaven; they are in one of their heavenly being and essence; and, if one with the Father, they must be one God.

To these there is opposed, though with them conjoined, a trinity of witnesses on earth, such as continue here below; and there are three that bear witness on earth, the spirit, the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one, v. 8. Of these witnesses the first is the spirit. This must be distinguished from the person of the Holy Ghost, who is in heaven. We must say then, with the Saviour, (according to what is reported by this apostle,) that which is born of the Spirit, is spirit, John 3. 6. The disciples of the Saviour are, as well as others, born after the flesh. They come into the world, endued with a corrupt carnal disposition, which is enmity to God. This disposition must be mortified and abolished. A new nature must be communicated. Old lusts and corruptions must be eradicated, and the true disciple become a new creature. The regeneration and renovation of souls are a testimony to the Saviour. It is his actual, though initial salvation. It is a testimony on earth, because recorded in the church there, and is not performed in that conspicuous astonishing manner in which signs from heaven are accomplished. To this Spirit belong not only the regeneration and conversion of the church, but its progressive sanctification, victory over the world, her peace and love and joy, and all that grace by which she is made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. Then the second is the water. The water, when it becomes the blood, is a means of salvation, now as a testimony to the Saviour himself, and intimates his purity and purifying power. And so it seems to comprehend, 1. The purity of his own nature and conduct in the world; he was holy, harmless, and undefiled. 2. The testimony of John's baptism, who bore witness of him, prepared a people for him, and referred them unto him, Mark 1. 4, 7, 8. The people are said to have received and washed; Now ye are clean through the word that I have spoken unto you, John 15. 3. 4. The actual and active purity and holiness of his disciples. His body is the holy catholic church. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obsecuring the truth through the Spirit, 1 Pet. 1. 22. And this signed and sealed by, 5. The baptism that he has appointed for the initiation or introduction of his disciples into the church. Except ye wash thee, thou hast no part in me. Not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God, 1 Pet. 2. 21. The third witness is, the blood: this he shed; and this was our ransom. This testifies for Jesus Christ: (1.) In that it sealed up and finished the sacrifices of the Old Testament; Christ, our Passover, was sacrificed for us. (2.) In that it consecrated his sacrifice, as a means of all his ministry and doctrine, John 18. 37. (3.) In that it shewed unparalled love to God, in that he would die a sacrifice to his honour and glory, in making atonement for the sins of the world, John 14. 30, 31. (4.) In that it demonstrated unspeakable love to us: and none will deceive those whom they entirely love, John 14. 13—15. (5.) In that it demonstrated the disinterestedness of the Lord Jesus as to any secular interest and advantage. No impostor and deceiver ever propose to himself contempt and violent cruel death, John 18. 36. (6.) In that it lays obligation on his disciples to suffer and die for him. No deceiver would invite prolesytes to his side and in interest at the rate that the Lord Jesus did. Ye shall be hated of all men for my sake. They shall deliver you out of their synagogues; and the time comes that whosoever kills you, will think that he doeth God service, John 16. 2. He frequently calls his servants to a conformity with him in sufferings. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach; (Heb. 13. 13.) which shews that neither he nor his kingdom is of this world. Then, (7.) The benefits accruing and procured by this blood, (well understood,) must in like manner demonstrate that he is indeed the Saviour of the world. And then, (8.) These are signified and sealed in the institution of his own supper; This is my blood of the New Testament, (which ratifies the New Testament,) which is shed for many, for the remission of sins, Matt. 26. 28. Such are the witnesses on earth. Such is the various testimony given to the Author of our religion. No wonder if the rejecter of all this should be judged as a blasphemer of the Spirit of God, and be left to perish without remedy in his sins. These three witnesses (being more different than the three former) are not so properly said to be one, as to be for one; to be for one and the same purpose and cause; or to agree in one; in one and the same thing among themselves, and in the same testimony with those who bear record from heaven.

The apostle justly concludes, If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this is the witness of God, that he hath testified of his Son, v. 9. Here we have, [1.] A supposition well founded upon the premises. Here is the witness of God; the witness whereby God hath testified of his Son; which surely must intimate some immediate irrefragable testimony, and that of the Father concerning his Son; he has by himself proclaimed and avouched him to the world. [2.] The authority and acceptableness of his testimony; and that argued from the less to the greater; If we receive the witness of men, (and such testimony is and must be admitted in all judicatures and in all nations,) the witness of God is greater. It is truth itself, of highest authority and most unquestionable infallibility. And then there is, [3.] The application of the rule to the present case, (which is understood,) must in like manner be true of the witness, of God even of the Father, as well as of the Word and Spirit, which he hath testified of, and wherein he hath attested, his Son. God, that cannot lie, hath given sufficient assurance to the world, that Jesus Christ is his Son; the Son of his love, and Son by office, to reconcile and recover the world unto himself; he testified therefore the truth and divine original of the Christian religion, and that it is the sure appointed way and means of bringing us to God.

10. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar: because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. 11. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son. 12. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. 13. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.
In these words we may observe, 1. The privilege and stability of the real Christian; He that believeth on the Son of God, hath been prevailed with unfeignedly to cleave to him for salvation, hath the witness in himself, v. 10. He hath not only the outward evidence that others have, but he hath in his own heart a testimony for Jesus Christ. He can allege what Christ and the truth of Christ have done for his soul, and what he has seen and found in him. As He has deeply sought in his sin, and guilt, and misery, and his abundant need of such a Saviour. 2. He has seen the excellency, beauty, and office of the Son of God, and the incomparable suitableness of such a Saviour to all his spiritual wants and sorrowful circumstances. 3. He sees and admires the wisdom and love of God in preparing and sending such a Saviour to deliver him from sin and hell, and to raise him to pardon, peace, and comfort, both of the soul and body. He must be brought to the power of the word and doctrine of Christ, wound-ing, humbling, healing, quickening, and comforting his soul. 5. He finds that the revelation of Christ, as it is the greatest discovery and demonstration of the love of God, so it is the most apt and powerful means of kindling, inciting, and inflaming love to the holy blessed God. 6. He is born of God by the truth of Christ, and has no more need of love, disposition, and delight, in himself, than the man that formerly was he. 7. He finds yet such a conflict with himself, with sin, with the flesh, the world, and invisible wicked powers, as is described and provided for in the doctrine of Christ. 8. He finds such prospects and such strength afforded him by the faith of Christ, that he can despise and overcome the world, and travel on towards, and sealed to the day of redemption. Such assurance has the gospel believer; he has a witness in himself. Christ is formed in him, and is growing up to the fulness and perfection, and perfect image of Christ in heaven.

II. The aggravation of the unbeliever's sin; the sin of unbelief; He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar. He does, in effect, give God the lie; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. But it must be understood, he did not send his Son into the world, when he has given us such manifold evidence that he did; or that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God, when all that evidence relates to and terminates upon him; or that he sent his Son to deceive the world, and to lead it into error and misery; or, that he permits men to devise a religion, which, in all the parts of it, is a perverting, deluding, infidelity thereof, and worthy to be embraced by the reason of mankind, and yet is but a delusion and a lie; and then lends them his Spirit and power to recommend and obtrude it upon the world: which is to make God the Father, the Author, and Abettor of the lie.

III. The matter, the substance, or contents of all this divine testimony concerning Jesus Christ; And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son, v. 11. This is the sum of the gospel. This is the sum and epitome of the whole record given us by all the aforesaid six witnesses. 1. That God hath given us eternal life. He has designed it for us in his eternal purpose. He has prepared all the means that are necessary to bring us this: He has made it over to us by his covenant and promise. And he actually confers a right and title thereto on all who believe on and actually embrace the Son of God. Then, 2. This life is in the Son. The Son is Life; eternal life in his own essence and person, John 1. 4. 1 John 1. 2. He is eternal Life to us; the Spring of our spiritual and glorious life, Col. 3. 4. From him life is communicated to us, both here and in heaven. And thereupon it must follow, (1.) He that hath the Son, hath life, v. 12. He that is united to the Son, is united to life. He who hath a title to the Son, hath a title to life, to eternal life. Such honour hath the Father put upon the Son: such honour must we put upon him too. We must come and kiss the Son, and we shall have life. (2.) He that hath not the Son of God, hath not life, v. 12. He continues under the condemnation of the law; (John 3. 36.) he refuses the Son, who is Life itself, who is the Providence of life, and the Way to it; he provokes God to deliver him over to endless death for making him a liar; since he believes not this record that God hath given concerning his Son.

IV. The end and reason of the apostle's preaching this to believers. 1. For their satisfaction and comfort; These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, v. 15. Upon all this evidence, and upon all these circumstances, it is most fitting that there should be those who believe on the name of the Son of God. God increase their number! How much testimony from heaven has the world to answer for! And to three witnesses in heaven must the world be accountable. These believers have eternal life. They have it in the covenant of the gospel; in the beginning and first-fruits of it within themselves; and in the Lord and Head of heaven; and the others. These believers may come to know that they have eternal life, and should be quickened, encouraged, and comforted, in the prospect of it: and they should value the scriptures, which are so much written for their consolation and salvation. 2. For their confirmation and progress in their holy faith; And that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God, (v. 13.) may go on believing. Believers must persevere, if they would be saved. Those who believe on the name of the Son of God, is to renown eternal life, and to draw back unto perdition. Therefore the evidences of religion and the advantage of faith are to be presented to believers, in order to hearten and encourage them to persevere to the end.

14. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. 15. And if we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him. 16. If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it. 17. All unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin not unto death.

Here we have, 1. A privilege belonging to faith in Christ; and this is, and is in prayer; This is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us, v. 14. The Lord Christ imboldens us to come to God in all circumstances, with all our supplications and requests. Through him our petitions are admitted and accepted of God. The matter of our prayer must be agreeable to the declared will of God. It is not fit that we should ask what is contrary either to his majesty and glory, or to our own good, who are his, and dependent on him. And then we may have confidence that the prayer of faith shall be heard in heaven.

II. The advantage accruing to us by such privilege; If we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know, we have the petitions that we desired of him, v. 15. Great are the deliverances, mercies, and blessings, which the holy petitions need. To know that his petitions are heard or accepted, is as good as to know that they are answered; and therefore that he is so pitied, pardoned, counselled, sanctified, assisted, and saved, (or shall be so,) as he is allowed to ask of God.

III. Direction in prayer, in reference to the sins of others; If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for the sin that is not unto death. But if there be a sin unto death, I do not say that he shall pray for it, v. 16. Here we may observe, 1. We ought to pray for others as well as for ourselves; for our brethren of mankind, that they may be enlightened, converted, and saved; for our brethren in the Christian profession, that they may be sincere, that their sins may be pardoned, and that they may be delivered from evils and the chastisements of God, and preserved in Christian liberty. The mischief is generally a sin, or the heinousness and guilt of sin; There is a sin unto death, (v. 16.) and there is a sin not unto death, v. 17. (1.) There is a sin unto death. All sin, as to the merit and legal sentence of it, is unto death. The wages of sin is death; and cursed is every one that continueth not in all that are written in the book of the law, to do them, Gal. 3. 10. But there is a sin unto death, in opposition to such sin as is here said not to be so, (1.) It is irremissible: it must perish forever, (2.) A sin not unto death. That surely must be all such sin as by divine or human constitution may consist with life; in the human constitution with temporal or corporal life, in the divine constitution with corporeal or with spiritual evangelical life. [1.]

There are sins which, by human righteous constitution, are not unto death; as divers pieces of injustice, which may be compensated without the death of the delinquent. In opposition to which there are others, which, by righteous constitution, are to death, or to a legal forfeiture of life; such as we call capital crimes. Then there are sins which, by divine constitution, are unto death; and that either death corporal, or spiritual and evangelical: First, Such as are, or may be, to death corporal. Such may the sins be either of gross hypocrites, as Ananias and Sapphira, or, for an unbelief, of sincere Christian brethren; as when the apostle says of the offending members of the church of Corinth: For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep, 1 Cor. 11. 30. There may be sin unto corporal death among those who may not be condemned with the world. Such sin, I said, is, or may be, to corporal death. The divine, penal constitution in the gospel, does not positively and peremptorily threaten death to the more visible sins of the members of Christ, but only some gospel-chastisements; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth; and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth, Heb. 12. 6. There is room left for divine wisdom or goodness, or even gospel-severity, to determine how far the chastisement or the scourge shall proceed. And we cannot say but that sometimes it may (in terrorem—for warning to others) proceed even to death. Then, Secondly, There are sins, which, by divine constitution, are unto death spiritual and evangelical, that is, inconsistent with spiritual and evangelical life; with spiritual life in the soul, and with an evangelical right to life above. Such are total impotence and unbelief for the present; final impotence and unbelief are infallibly to death eternal; as also a blasphemy of the Spirit of God in this testimony that he has given to Christ in his gospel, and a total apostasy from the light and convictive evidence of the truth of Christian religion. These are sins deriving the guilt of everlasting death. Then comes,

IV. The application of the direction for prayer, according to the different sorts of sin thus distinguished. The prayer is supposed to be for life; He shall ask, and his (God) shall give him life, v. 17. Life is to be asked of God; he is the God of life; he gives it when and to whom he pleases, and takes it away, either by his constitution or providence, or both, as he thinks meet. In the case of a brother's sin, which is not (in the manner already mentioned) unto death, we may in faith and hope pray for him; and particularly for the life of soul and body. But in case of the sin unto death in the forementioned ways, we have no place to say, as the apostle's expression, I do not say, He shall pray for it, we may intend no more than, "I have no promise for you in that case; no foundation for the prayer of faith." 1. The laws of punitive justice must be executed. for the common safety and benefit of mankind: and even an offending brother in such a case must be resigned to public justice, (which in the foundation of it is divine,) and at the same time also to the mercy of God. 2. The repentance of a sinner (as they may be called,) or the prevention of death, (which may seem to be so consequent upon, or inflicted for, some particular sin,) can be prayed for only conditionally or provisionally, that is, with proviso that it consist with the wisdom, will, and glory of God that they should be removed, and particularly such death prevented. 3. We cannot pray that the sins of the impenitent and unbelieving shall perish, while they are wishing, it is true, that any mercy of life or soul, that supposes the forgiveness of sin, should be granted to them, while they continue such. But we may pray for their repentance, (supposing them but in the common case of the impenitent world,) for their being enriched with faith in Christ, and thereupon for all other saving mercies. 4. In case it should appear that any have committed the unpardonable sin, it is not for us to judge. The repentance of evangelical sins (as they may be called,) or the prevention of death, (which may seem to be so consequential upon, or inflicted for, some particular sin,) can be prayed for only conditionally or provisionally, that is, with proviso that it consist with the wisdom, will, and glory of God that they should be removed, and particularly such death prevented. For what remains but a certain fearful expectation of judgment, to consume such adversaries? Heb. 10. 27. And these last seem to be sins chiefly intended by the apostle by the names of sins unto death. Then, 5. The apostle seems to enjoin us to have a sort of caution, and possibly a threath, that All unrighteousness is sin; (v. 17.) but were all unrighteousness unto death, (since we have all some unrighteousness toward God or man, or both, in omitting and neglecting something that is their due,) then we were all peremptorily bound over to death: but since it is not so, (the Christian brethren, generally speaking, having right to life,) there must be sin that is not to death. Though there is not venial sin, (in the common acceptation,) there is parasitical sin; that does not derive a plenary obligation to eternal death. If it were not so, there could be no justification or continuance of the justified state. The gospel-constitution or covenant abbreviates, abridges, or rescinds the guilt of sin.

18. We know that whosoever is born of God, sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God, keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not. 19. And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. 20. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ.
This is the true God, and eternal life. 21. Little children, keep yourselves from idols.
Amen.

Here we have,
1. A recapitulation of the privileges and advantages of the sound Christian believers:
   1. They are secured against sin, against the fulness of its dominion, or the fulness of its guilt: We know that whosoever is born of God, (and the believer in Christ is born of God, v. 1.) sinneth not.
      (v. 18.) sinneth not with that fulness of heart and spirit that the unregenerate do, (as was said ch. 3.
      6, 9.) and consequently not with that fulness of guilt that attends the sins of others; and so he is secured against that sin that is unavoidable unto death, or that infallibly binds the sinner over unto the wages of eternal death: the power which the new birth and the inhabitation of the divine Spirit thereby, prevent the admission of such unpardonable sin.
   2. They are fortified against the Devil's destructive attempts; He that is begotten of God, keepeth himself, that is, is enabled to guard himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not, (v. 18.) that is, the wicked one may not touch him, to death. It seems not to be here merely a narration of the duty or the practice of the regenerate; but an indication of their power by virtue of their regeneration; they are thereby prepared and principled against the fatal touches, the sting, of the wicked one; he touches not their souls, to infuse that venom there that he does to others, or to expel that regenerative principle that is an antipode to his poison, or to induce them to that sin that by the gospel-constitution converts an indissoluble obligation to eternal death; he may prevail too far with them, to draw them to some acts of sin; but it seems to be the design of the apostle to assert that their regeneration secures them from such assaults of the Devil as will bring them into the same case and actual condemnation with the Devil.

2. They are on God's side and interest, in opposition to the state of the world; And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness, v. 19. Mankind are divided into two great parties or dominions, that which belongs to God, and that which belongs to wickedness, or to the wicked one.
   The Christian believers belong to God; they are of God, and from him, and to him, and for him;
   they succeed into the right and room of the ancient Israel of God, of whom it is said, The Lord's people is his portion, his estate in this world; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance, the dividend that is fallen to him by the lot of his own determination; (Deut. 32.
   9.) while, on the contrary, the whole world, the rest, being by far the major part, lieth in wickedness, in the dominion of the devil; if indeed, wickedness and sin are indeed, were we to consider the individuals, many wicked ones, many wicked spirits, in the heavenly or the earthly places; but they are united in wicked nature, policy, and principle, and they are united also in one head; there is the prince of the devils and of the diabolical kingdom; there is a head of the malignity and of the malignant world; and he has such sway there, that he is called the god of this world. Strange, that such a knowing spirit should be so implacably incensed against the Almighty and all his interests, when he cannot but know that it must end in his own overthrow and everlasting damnation! How tremendous is the judgment of God upon that wicked one! May the God of the Christian world continually demolish his dominion in this world, and translate souls into the kingdom of his dear Son!

4. They are enlightened in the knowledge of the true eternal God; And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; v. 20. The Son of God is come into our world, and we have seen him, and know him by all the evidence that has already been asserted; he had revealed unto us the true God, (as John 1. 18.) and he had opened our minds too to understand that revelation; given us an internal light in our understandings, whereby we may discern the glories of the true God; and he assured us that it is the true God that he hath discovered to us; he is infinitely superior in purity, power, and perfection, to all the gods of the Gentiles; he has all the excellencies, beauties, and riches, of the living and true God; it is the same God that, according to Moses's account, made the heavens and the earth; the same who took our fathers the patriarchs into peculiar covenant with himself; the same who brought our ancestors out of Egypt, who gave us the fiery law upon mount Sinai; who gave us his holy oracles, and promised the call and conversion of the Gentiles; by his counsels and works, by his love and grace, by his errors and judgments, we know that he, and he alone, in the fulness of his being, is the living and true God.
It is a great happiness to know the true God; to know him in Christ, v. 17. 3. It is the glory of the Christian revelation, that it gives the best account of the true God, and administers the best eye-salve for our discerning of the living and true God.

5. They have a happy union with God and his Son; And we are in him that is true, even (or and) in his Son Jesus Christ, v. 20. The Son leads the Father, and we are in both; in the love and favour of both; in covenant and federal alliance with both; in spiritual conjunction with both by the inhabitation and operation of their Spirit: and that you may know how great a dignity and felicity this is, you must remember, that this true one is the true God and eternal Life; (or rather, as it should seem a more natural construction,) This same Son of God is in himself also the true God and eternal Life.
(John 1. 1. and here, ch. 1. 2.) So that in union with either, much more with both, we are united to the true God and eternal Life. Then we have,

11. The apostle's concluding monition; Little children, (Dear children, as it has been interpreted,) keep yourselves from idols, v. 21. Since ye know the true God, and are in him, let your light and love guard you against all that is advanced in opposition to him, or competition with him; flee from the false gods of the heathen world; they are not comparable to the God whose you are, and whom you serve; adore not your God by statues and images which share in his worship; your God is an incomprehensible Spirit, and is disgraced by such servile represent ations of his; be united in communion with your heavenly neighbours in their idolatrous worship; your God is jealous, and would have you come out, and be separated from among them; mortify the flesh, and be crucified to the world, that they may not usurp the throne and dominion in the heart, which is due only to God; the God whom you have known, is he who made you, who redeemed you by his Son, who has sent his gospel to you, who has pardoned your sin;
the God of this world, he begotten you unto himself by his Spirit, and gives you eternal life; ele\voc to him in faith, and love, and constant obedience, in opposition to all things that would alienate your mind and heart from God. To this living and true God be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.
EXPOSITION,
WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

OF THE SECOND EPISTLE OF JOHN.
Completed by Mr. T. Reynolds.

HERE we find a canonical epistle inscribed, principally, not only to a single person, but to one also of the softer sex. And why not to one of that sex? In gospel-redemption-privilege and dignity, there is neither male nor female, they are both one in Christ Jesus; our Lord himself neglected his own repast, to commune with the woman of Samaria, in order to show her the fountain of life; and when almost expiring upon the cross, he would with his dying lips bequeath his blessed mother to the care of his beloved disciple, and thereby instruct him to respect female disciples for the future; it was to one of the same sex that our Lord chose to appear first after his return from the grave, and to send by her the news of his resurrection to this as well as to the other apostles: and we find afterwards a zealous Priscilla, so well acquitting herself in her Christian race, and particularly in some hazardous service toward the apostle Paul, that she is not only often mentioned before her husband, but to her as well as to him, not only the apostle himself, but also all the Gentile churches, were ready to return their thankful acknowledgments. No wonder then that a heroine in the Christian religion, honoured by divine providence, and distinguished by divine grace, should be dignified also by an apostolical epistle.

II. JOHN.

The apostle here salutes an honourable matron and her children, v. 1, 2. Recommends to them faith and love, v. 5, 6. Warns them of deceivers, (v. 7.) and to take heed to themselves, v. 8. Teaches how to treat those who bring not the doctrine of Christ, v. 10, 11. And, referring other things to personal discourse, concludes the epistle, v. 12, 13.

1. THE elder unto the elect lady, and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth; 2. For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever.

Ancient epistles began, as here, with salutation and good wishes: religion consecrates, as far as may be, old forms, and turns compliments into real expressions of life and love. Here we have, as usually,

1. The saluter; not expressed by name, but by a chosen character—The elder. The expression, and style, and love, intimate that the person was the same with that of the foregoing epistle; he is now the elder, emphatically and eminently so; possibly, the oldest apostle now living; the chief elder in the church of God. An elder in the ancient house of Israel was reverend, or to be reverenced; much more he who is so in the gospel-Israel of God. An old disciple is honourable, an old apostle and leader of disciples is more so. He was now old in holy service and experience, had seen and tasted much of heaven, and was much nearer than when at first he believed.

2. The saluted; a noble Christian matron, and her children—To the elect lady, and her children. A lady, a person of eminent quality for birth, education, and estate; it is well that the gospel has got among such; it is pity but lords and ladies should be acquainted with the Lord Christ and his religion; they owe more to him than others do; though usually not many noble are called. Here is a pattern for persons of quality of the same sex; the elect lady; not only a choice one, but one chosen of God; it is lovely and beautiful to see ladies, by holy walking, demonstrate their election of God: and her children; probably, the lady was a widow, she and her children then are the principal part of the family, and so this may be styled an economical epistle. Families may well be written to and encouraged, and further directed in their domestic love, and order, and duties. We see that children may well be taken notice of in Christian letters, and they should know it too, it may avail to their encouragement and caution; they who love and commend them, will be apt to inquire after them; this lady and her children are further notified by the respect paid them, and that, (1.) By the apostle himself; whom I love in the truth, or in truth; whom I sincerely and heartily love. He who was the beloved disciple, had learnt the art of exercise of love; and he especially loved those who loved him, that Lord who loved him. (2.) By all her Christian acquaintance, all the religious who...
II. JOHN.

1. Knowing her, and not only, but also all they that have known the truth. Truth and goodness in an elevated sphere shine bright; truth demands acknowledgment; and they who see the evidences of pure religion, should confess and attest them; it is a good sign and great duty to love and value religion in others. Then here is the ground of this love and respect thus paid to this lady, and her children; for the truth's sake, (or true religion's sake,) we should be wise as well as good. Christian love is founded upon the appearance of Christian vital religion; likeness should beget affection; they who love truth and piety in themselves, should love it in others too, or love others upon the account of it: the apostle and the other Christians loved this lady, not so much for her honour as her holiness; not so much for her bounty as her serious Christianity. We should be desired by fits and starts in certain moods and moods; but religion should still dwell within us, in our minds and hearts, in our faith and love. It is to be hoped that where religion once truly dwells, it will abide for ever.

2. The Spirit of Christianity, we may suppose, will not be totally extinguished: which shall be with us for ever.

3. Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love. I rejoice greatly, that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

Here we see, 1. The salutation, which is indeed an apostolical benediction: Grace be with you, mercy and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love. Sacred love pours out blessings upon this honorable Christian family; to them who have, more shall be given: these blessings are craved. (1.) From God the Father, the God of all grace: he is the Fountain of blessedness, and of all the blessings that must bring us together. (2.) From the Lord Jesus Christ; he is also Author and Communicator of these heavenly blessings, and he is distinguished by this emphatical character—The Son of the Father; such a Son as none else can be; such a Son as is the Brightness of the Father's glory, and the express Image of his person; who, with the Father, is also eternal Life; 1 John 1. 2. From these divine persons the apostle prays be: 3. Grace be with thy groa and sons, will, the spring of all good things; it is grace indeed, that any spiritual blessing should be conferred on sinful mortals. (2.) Mercy—free pardon and forgiveness; they who are already rich in grace, have need of continual forgiveness; [3.] Peace—tranquility of spirit and serenity of conscience, in an assured reconciliation with God, together with all safe and sanctified outward prospects. (b.) These qualifications, true in Christ and love, are to be expressed by sincere and ardent affection in the saluter, (in faith and love he prays them—from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ,) or as productive of continued truth and love in the saluter; these blessings will continually preserve true faith and love in the elect lady, and her children; and may they do so!

2. The congratulation upon the prospect of the exemplary behaviour of other children of this excellent lady. Happy parent, who was blessed with such a numerous religious offspring! I rejoice greatly that I found of thy children walking in the truth, as we have received commandment from the Father. Possibly, the lady's sons travelled abroad, either for accomplishment and acquaintance with the world, or on the account of their own business or the common affairs of the family, and in their travels might come to Ephesus, where the apostle is now supposed to reside, and might there happily converse with him. See how good it is to be trained up to early religion! Though religion is not to be founded upon education, yet education may be, and often is, blessed, and is the way to fortify youth against irreverent spirits. Hence let us let our young children learn to carry their religion along with them, and not either leave it at home, or learn the ill customs of the countries where they come. It may be observed also, that sometimes election runs in a direct line; here is an elect lady, and her elect children. Children may be beloved for their parents' sake; but both by virtue of free grace. From the apostle's joy herein we may observe, that it is pleasant to see children following in the steps of old disciples. They who see this, may well congratulate their parents thereupon, and that both to excite their thankfulness to God for, and to enlarge their comfort in, so great a blessing. How happy a lady was this, who had brought forth so many children for heaven and for God! And how great a joy must it be to her ladyship, to hear so good an account of them from so good a judge! And we may further see, that it is pleasant to see old ministers, and accordingly other good old disciples, to see a hopeful rising generation, who may serve God and support religion in the world when they are dead and gone. We see here also the rule of true walking; the commandment of the Father. Then is our walk true, our converse right, when it is managed by the word of God.

3. And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another. 6. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, that, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

We come now more into the design and substance of the epistle; and here we have, 1. The apostle's request; Now I beseech thee, lady. Considering what it is that he entreats, the way of address is very remarkable; it is not any particular boon or bounty to himself, but common duty and observance of divine command; here he might command or charge; but harsher methods are worse than needless, where nothing will prevail; and the apostolic spirit is, of all other, the most tender and encouraging. Whether out of deference to her ladyship, or apostolical meekness, or both, he condescends to beseech; And now I beseech thee, lady. He may be supposed speaking as another apostle does to a certain master to whom he writes; Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ, (and according to the power with which Christ hath entrusted me,) to enjoin thee that which is convenient, yet, for love's sake, I rather beseech thee, being such an aged, the elder. Love will avail where authority will not; and we may often see that the more authority is urged, the more it is slighted. The apostolical minister will love and beseech his friends into their duty.

2. The thing requested of the lady, and her children—Christian sacred love; that we love one another. They that are eminent in any Christian virtue, have yet room to grow therein. But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. But we beseech you, brethren, (and sisters,) that ye increase more and more, 1 Thess. 4. 9, 10. This love is, (1.) Recommended, (1.) From the obligation thereunto—the command
Divine command should sway our mind and heart. (2.) From the antiquity of the obligation; not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, v. 5. This commandment of mutual Christian love may be said to be a new one, in respect of its new enactment and sanction by the Lord Christ; but yet, as to the moral obligation itself, it holds good as much among the Jews, as among the Christians. Natural, Jewish, or Christian religion; this commandment must every where attend Christianity, that the disciples of it must love one another. Then this love is, (2.) Illustrated from the fruitful nature of it; And this is love, that we walk after his commandments, v. 6. This is the test of our love to God, our obedience to him. This is love to ourselves, to our own souls, so as to walk in obedience to divine commands. In keeping them there is great reward. This is love to one another, to engage one another to walk in holiness; and this is the note of our sincere, mutual, Christian love—that we (in other things) walk after God's commands. There may be mutual love that is not religious and Christian; but we know our's to be so, by our attendance to all other commands beside that of mutual love. Universal obedience is the proof of the goodness and sincerity of Christian virtues; and they that aim at all Christian obedience, will be sure to attend to Christian love; that is a fundamental duty in the gospel-charter; This is the commandment, that as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it, (v. 6,) that is, walk in this love. The foresight of the decay of this love, as well as of other apostasy, might engage the apostle to inculcate this duty, and this primordial command, the more frequently, the more earnestly.

7. For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist. Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward. Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

In this principal part of the epistle we find, 1. The ill news communicated to the lady; seducers are abroad; For many deceivers are entered into the world. This report is introduced by a particle that bespeaks a reason of the report; 'Ye have need to maintain your love, for there are destroyers of it in the world; they who subvert the faith, destroy the love; the common faith is one ground of the common love;' or, 'You must secure your walk according to the commands of God; that will secure you; your stability is likely to be tried, for many deceivers are entered into the world.' Sad and sudden news may be communicated to our Christian friends; not that we should love to make them sorry; but to forewarn is the way to fore-arm them against their trials. Now here is, (1.) The description of the deceiver and his deceit; he confesses not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh; (v. 7.) he brings some error or other concerning the person of the Lord Jesus; he either confesses not that Jesus Christ is the same person, or, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ, the Anointed of God, the Messiah promised of old for the redemption of Israel, or, that the promised Messiah and Redeemer is come in the flesh, or into the flesh; into our world and into our nature; such a one pretends that he is yet to be expected. Strange, that after such evidence, any should deny that the Lord Jesus is the Son of God and Saviour of the world! (2.) The aggravation of the case; such a one is a deceiver and an antichrist; (v. 7.) he deludes souls, and undermines the glory and kingdom of the Lord Christ; he must be an impostor, a willful deceiver, after all the light that has been afforded, and all the evidence that Christ hath given concerning himself, and the attestation God hath given concerning his Son; and he is a willful opposer of the person and honour and interest of the Lord Christ; and as such shall be reckoned with when the Lord Christ comes again; lot as not to think it strange that there are deceivers and destroyers of the Lord Christ's name and dignity now, for there were such of old, even in the apostles' times. 2. The counsel given to this elect household hereupon. Now care and caution is needful; Look to yourselves, (v. 8.) The more deceivers and deceits abound, the more watchful the disciples must be. Delusions may so prevalently, even the elect may be endangered thereby. Two things they must beware of: (1.) That they lose not what they had wrought, (v. 8,) what they have done, or what they have gained. It is pity that any religious labour should be in vain; some begin well, but at last lose all their pains; the hopeful gentleman, who had kept the commands of the second table from his youth up, lost all for want of less love to the world; and one more. Professors should take care not to lose what they have gained. They have not only gained a fair reputation for religion, but much light therein, much conviction of the evil of sin, the vanity of the world, the excellency of religion, and the power of God's word; they have even tasted of the powers of the world to come, and the gifts of the Holy Spirit; and yet at last lose all. Ye did run well, who hindered you, that ye should not have received a full reward. (2.) That they lose not their reward, none of it, of that portion of honour, or praise, or glory that they once stood fair for; that we (or ye, as in some copies) receive a full reward; 'Secure ye as full a reward as will be given to any in the church of God; if there are degrees of glory, lose none of that grace (that light or love or peace) that is to prepare you for the higher elevation in glory; have faith that which is given you (in faith and hope and a good conscience,) that no man take thy crown; that thou neither lose it, nor any jewel out of it,' Rev. 3. 11. The way to attain the full reward, is, to abide true to Christ, and constant in religion to the end. 3. The reason of the apostle's counsel, and of their care and caution about themselves; which is to be held: (1.) The danger and evil of departure from gospel-light and revelation; it is in effect and reality a departure from God himself; Whosoever transgresseth, (transgresseth at this dismal rate,) and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. It is the doctrine of Christ that is appointed to guide us to God; it is that whereby God draws souls to salvation and to himself; who revolve from thence, in so doing revolt from God. (2.) The advantage and happiness of firm adherence to Christian truth; it unites us to Christ, (the Object of Subject matter of that truth,) and thereby to the Father also; for they are one. He that abideth, (rooted and grounded) in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. By the doctrine of Christ we are enlight ened in the knowledge of the Father and the Son; by it we are sanctified for the Father and the Son; hereupon we are enriched with holy love to the Father and the Son; and thereby prepared for the endless enjoyment of the Father and the Son. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken to you, John 15. 3. That purity makes meet for heaven. The great God, as he has set his seal to, so he puts a value upon, the doctrine of Christ. We must retain that holy doctrine in faith and love, as we hope or desire to arrive at blessed communion with the Father and the Son.

10. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.

11. Upon due warning given concerning seducers, the apostle gives direction concerning the treatment of such; they are not to be entertained as the ministers of Christ: the Lord Christ will distinguish them from such, and so would he have his disciples. The direction is negative : (1.) "Support them not: If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, (concerning Christ, as the Son of God, the Messiah and Anointed of God, for our redemption and salvation,) receive him not into your house." Possibly, this lady was like Gaius, whom we read of in the next epistle, a generous housekeeper, and hospitable entertainer of travelling ministers and Christians. These destroyers might possibly expect the same reception with others, or with the best; who came there; (as the blind are often bold enough;) but the apostle allows it not: "Do not welcome them into your family." Doubtless, such may be relieved in their pressing necessities: but not encouraged for ill service. Deniers of the faith are destroyers of souls; and it is supposed that even ladies themselves should have good understanding in the affairs of religion. (2.) "Bless not their enterprises: Neither had we them God speed. Attend not their service with your prayers and good wishes." Bad work should not be consecrated or recommended to the divine benediction. God will be no patron of baseness, seduction, and sin. We ought to bid God speed to evangelical ministration; but the propagation of fatal error, if we cannot prevent, we must not dare to countenance. Then,

2. Here is the reason of such direction, forbidding the support and patronage of the destroyers: If he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds. Favor and affection partake of the sin. We may be sharers in the iniquities of others. How judicious and how cautious should the Christian be. There are many ways of sharing the guilt of other persons' transgressions; it may be done by culpable silence, indulgence, unconcernedness, private contribution, public countenance and assistance, inward approbation, open apology and defence. The Lord pardon our guilt of other persons' sins.

12. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full. 13. The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Amen.

The apostle concludes this letter. 1. With an adjournment of many things to personal conference: Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full. Here it is supposed that some things are better spoken than written. A pen and ink may be a mercy and a pleasure; but a personal interview may be more so: the apostle was not yet too old for travel, nor consequently for travelling service. The communion of saints should be by all methods maintained; and their communion should tend to their mutual joy. Excellent ministers may have their joy advanced by their Christian friends: That I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me, Rom. 1. 12.

2. With the presentation of service and salutation from some near relations to the lady: The children of the elect sister greet thee. Grace was abundant toward this family: here are two elect sisters, and, probably, their elect children. How will they adore this grace in heaven! The apostle condescending to insert the nieces' duty, (as we would call it,) and dutiful salutation to their aunt. The duty of inferior relations is to be cherished. Doubtless, the apostle was easy of access, and would admit all friendly and pious communication, and was ready to enhance the good lady's joy in her nieces as well as her children. May there be many such gracious ladies rejoicing in their gracious descendants and other relations! Amen.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

THIRD EPISTLE OF JOHN.

Completed by Mr. T. Reynolds.

CHRISTIAN communion is exerted and cherished by letter. Christians are to be commended in the practical proof of their professed subjection to the gospel of Christ. The animating and countenancing of generous and public-spirited persons, is doing good to many—To this end, the apostle sends this encouraging epistle to his friend Gaius, in which also he complains of the quite opposite spirit and practice of a certain minister, and confirms the good report concerning another more worthy to be imitated.

III. JOHN.

In this epistle the apostle congratulates Gaius upon the pr-\n \n perty of his soul; (v. 1, 2.) upon the fame he had among \n \n
good Christians; (v. 3, 4.) and upon his charity and hos-\n \n piity to the servants of Christ, v. 3, 6. He complains of \n \n contemptuous treatment by an ambitious Diotrephes, v. 9, \n \n
10. Recommends Demetrius, v. 12. And hopes to visit \n \n
Gaius shortly, v. 13, 14.

1. THE elder unto the well-beloved \n
\n
Gaius, whom I love in the truth.

2. Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

Here we see, 1. The sacred penman who writes and sends the letter; not here indeed notified by his name, but a more general character—The elder; he that is so by years and by office: honour and deference are due to both. Some have questioned whether this were John, the apostle or no: but his style and spirit seem to shine therein. They that are beloved of Christ, will love the brethren for his sake. Gaius could not question from whom the letter came. The apostle might have assumed many more illustrious characters, but it becomes not Christ’s ministers to affect swelling pompous titles. He almost levels himself with the more ordinary pastors of the church, while he styles himself—The elder. Or, possibly, most of the extraordinary ministers, the apostles, were now dead, and this holy survivor would countenance the continued standing ministry, by assuming the more common title—The elder. The elders I exhort, who am also an elder, 1 Pet. 5. 1.

2. The person saluted and honoured by the letter; the former was directed to an elect lady, this to a choice gentleman; such are worthy of esteem and value: he is notified, (1.) By his name, Gaius. We read of several of that name, particularly of one whom the apostle Paul baptised at Corinth, who possibly might be also the apostle’s host and kind entertainer there; (Rom. 16. 23.) if this be not he, it is his brother in name, estate, and disposition. Then, (2.) By the kind expressions of the apostle to him—the well-beloved, and whom I love in the truth. Love expressed is wont to kindle love. Here seems to be either the sincerity of the apostle’s love, or the religion of it; the sincerity of it—whom I love in truth, whom I truly cordially love; the religion of it—whom I love in the truth, for the truth’s sake, as abiding and walking in the truth, as it is in Jesus. To love our friends for the truth’s sake, is true love, religious gospel-love.

3. The salutation or greeting; containing a prayer, introduced by an affectionate compellation—Beloved, thou beloved one in Christ. The minister who would gain love, must shew it himself. Here is, (1.) The apostle’s good opinion of his friend, that his soul prospered. There is such a thing as soul-prosperity—the greatest blessing on this side heaven; this supposes regeneration, and an inward fund of spiritual life; this stock is increasing, and while spiritual treasures are advancing, the soul is in a fair way to the kingdom of glory. (2.) His good wish for his friend, that his body may prosper and be in health as well as his soul. Grace and health are two rich companions; grace will improve health, health will employ grace; it frequently falls out that a rich soul is lodged in a crazy body; grace must be exercised in submission to such a dispensation; but we may well wish and pray that they who have prosperous souls, may have healthful bodies too; there grace will shine in a larger sphere of activity.

4. For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou wakseth in the truth.

5. Beloved,
thou dost faithfully whatsoever thou dost to the brethren, and to strangers; 6. Who have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well: 7. Because that for his name’s sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. 8. We therefore ought to receive such as we might be fellow-helper to the truth.

In these verses we have, 1. The good report that the apostle had received concerning this friend of his; The brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, (v. 3.) who have borne witness of thy charity before the church, v. 6. Where we may see, (1.) The testimony or thing testified concerning Gaius—the truth that was in him; the reality of his faith, the sincerity of his religion, and devotedness to God; and this evinced by his charity, which includes his love to the brethren, kindness to the poor, hospitality to Christian strangers, and readiness to accommodate them for the service of the gospel. Faith should work by love; it gives a lustre in and by the offices of love, and induces others to commend its integrity. (2.) The witnesses—brethren they that are of the household of faith were welcome to him. A good report is due from those who have received good; though a good name is but a small reward for costly service, yet it is better than precious ointment, and will not be refused by the ingenuous and religious. (3.) The auditory, or judicator by which the report and testimony were given—before the church; this seems to be the church at which the apostle now resided; what church that was, we are not sure; what occasion they had thus to testify his faith and love before the church, we cannot tell; possibly out of the fulness of the heart the mouth spake; they could not but testify what they found and felt; possibly, they would engage the church’s prayer for the continued life and usefulness of such a patron, that he might prosper and be in health as his soul prospered.

2. The report the apostle himself gives of him, introduced by an endearing appellation again; Beloved, thou dost faithfully whatsoever thou dost to the brethren, and to strangers, v. 5. (1.) He was hospitable, good to the brethren, even to strangers; it was enough to recommend them to Gaius’s house, that they belonged to Christ; or he was good to the brethren of the same church with himself, and to those who came from far; all of the household of faith were welcome to him. (2.) He seems to have been of a catholic spirit; he could overlook the petty differences among serious Christians, and be communicative to all who bore the image and did the work of Christ. And, (3.) He was conscientious in what he did: Thou dost faithfully (thou makest faithful work of whatsoever thou dost; thou dost it as a faithful servant; and from the Lord Christ mark, that he may give thee the reward of the inheritance. Such faithful souls can hear their braveries without being puffed up; the commendation of what is good in us, is designed, not for our pride, but for our encouragement to continue therein, and should be accordingly improved.

3. The apostle’s joy therein, in the good report itself, and the good ground of it; I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came and testified of thy charity, &c. we have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth, in the precepts of the Christian religion. The best evidence of our having the truth, is, our walking in the truth. Good men will greatly rejoice in the soul-prosperity of others; and they are glad to hear of the grace and goodness of others; They glorified God in me. Love envieth not, but rejoiceth in the good name of other folks. As it is joy to good parents, it will be joy to good ministers to see their children evidence their truth in religion, and adorn their profession.

4. The direction the apostle gives his friend concerning further treatment of the brethren that were with him; whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well. It seems to have been customary in these days of love, to attend travelling ministers and Christians, at least some part of their road; 1 Cor. 16. 6. It is a kind hospitality, to be godly, and a pleasure to travellers, to meet with suitable company: this is a work that may be done after a godly sort, in a manner worthy of God, suitable to the deference and relation we bear to God. Christians should consider not only what they must do, but what they may do; what they may most honourably and landly do: the liberal mind devieth liberal, generous things. Christians should do even the common things of life with a mind and spirit of godliness, as serving God therein, and designing his glory. Then,

5. The reasons of this directed conduct; these are two: (1.) Because that for his name’s sake these brethren went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. It appears thus that these were ministerial brethren; that they went forth to preach the gospel and propagate Christianity; possibly, they might be sent out by this apostle himself; they went forth to do the work of God; this was excellent, they went forth for God and his name’s sake; this is the minister’s highest end, and should be his principal spring and motive, to gather and to build up a people for his name; they went forth also to carry a free gospel about with them; to make it unexpensive where they came; taking nothing of the Gentiles; these were worthy of double honour. There are those who are not called to preach the gospel themselves, who yet may much contribute to the progress of it. The gospel should be made without charge to those to whom it is first preached; they who know it not, cannot be expected to value it; the churches and Christian patriots ought to concur to support the propagation of holy religion in the pagan countries; public spirits should concur according to their several capacities; they who are freely communicative of Christ’s kingdom, should be recommended by those who are communicative of their purses. (2.) We ought therefore to receive such, that we may be fellow-helper to the truth, to true religion. The institution of Christ is the true religion, it has been attested by God; they that are true in it and true to it, will earnestly desire, and pray for, and contribute to, its propagation in the world; many ways may the truth be befriended and assisted; they who cannot themselves contribute it, may be a help, an auxiliary, a company, help, and countenance those who do.

9. I wrote unto the church: But Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not. 10. Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church. 11. Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good, is of God: but he that doeth evil hateth not seen God.
III. JOHN.

869 and all Ma-

But our good.

e^'il, episcopal censure deeds those love.

Caution whom some mended spirit, God.

Are we also bear record, and ye know that our record is true. I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee: 14. But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

Here we see, 1. The character of another person, one Demetrius; not much known otherwise. But here his name will live. A name in the gospel a fame in the churches, is better than that of sons and daughters. His character was his commendation. His commendation was, (1.) General; Demetrius has a good report of all men. Few are well spoken of by all; and sometimes it is ill to be so. But universal integrity and goodness are the way to (and sometimes with) the universal applause, which Deserved and well founded; And of the truth itself, v. 12. Some have a good report, but not of the truth itself. Happy they whose spirit and conduct commend them before God and men. (3.) Conformed to the apostle’s and his friends’ testimony; Yea, and we also bear record; and that with an appeal to Gaius’s own knowledge. And ye (you and your friends) know that our record is true. Probably, this Demetrius was known to the church where the apostle now resided, and to that where Gaius was. It is good to be well known, or known for good. We must be ready to bear our testimony to those who are good: it is a debt to virtue and goodness. It is well for those who are commended, when the consciences of those who commend them can appeal to the consciences of those who know them most.

2. The conclusion of the epistle: i. what we may observe, (1.) The referring of some things to personal interview; I have many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen, but I trust I shall shortly see thee, v. 13, 14. Many things may be more proper for immediate communication, than for letter. A little personal conference may spare the time, trouble, and charge, of many letters; and good Christians may well be glad to see one another.

(2.) The benediction; Peace be to you; all felicity attend you. They that are good and happy themselves, wish others so too. (3.) The public salutation sent to Gaius; Our friends salute thee. A friend to the propagation of religion deserves a common remembrance. And these pious persons shew their friendship to religion as well as to Gaius. (4.) The apostle’s particular salutation of the Christians in Gaius’s church or vicinity; Greet the friends by name. I doubt they were not very many, they might be so personally saluted. But we must learn humility as well as love. The lowest in the church of Christ should be greeted. And they may well salute and greet one another on earth, who hope to live together in heaven. And the apostle who had lain in Christ’s bosom, lays Christ’s friends in his heart.
AN

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

GENERAL EPISTLE OF JUDE

Completed by Mr. J. Billingsley.

THIS epistle (as some few others are) is styled general or catholic, for that it is not immediately directed to any particular person, family, or church, but to the whole society of Christians of that time, lately converted to the faith of Christ, whether from Judaism or Paganism: and it is, and will be, of standing, lasting, and special use in and to the church as long as Christianity, that is, as time, shall last.

Some of the chief things contained in it summarily are, 1. An account of the penman of it, a character of the church, the blessings and privileges of that happy society, v. 1, 2. 2. The occasion of writing this epistle, v. 3. 3. A character of evil and perverse men, who were already sprung up in that infant state of the church, and would be succeeded by others of the like evil spirit and temper in after-times, v. 4. 4. A caution against heartenking to and following after such, from the severity of God toward the unbelieving murmuring Israelites at their coming out of Egypt, the angels that fell, the sin and punishment of Sodom and Gomorrah, v. 5—7. 5. To these the apostle likens the seducers against whom he was warning them, and describes them at large, from v. 8 to 13, inclusive. 6. Then (as specially suitable to his argument) he cites an ancient prophecy of Enoch foretelling and describing the future judgment, v. 14, 15. 7. Enlarges on the seducers' character, and guards against the offence which honest minds might be apt to take at the so early permission of such things, by shewing that it was foretold long before that so it must be, v. 16—19. 8. Exhorts them to perseverance in the faith, fervency in prayer, watchfulness against falling from the love of God, and a lively hope of eternal life, v. 20, 21. 9. Directs them how to act toward the erroneous and scandalous, v. 22, 23. And, 10. Closes with an admirable doxology in the two last verses.

This epistle (as most of the rest do) consists of,

I. A preface or introduction, v. 1, 2.
II. The body of the epistle, v. 3 to 23, inclusive.

The general scope of it is much the same with that of the second chapter of the second epistle of Peter, which having been already explained, the less will need to be said on this.

It is designed to warn us against seducers and their seduction, to inspire us with a warm love to, and a hearty concern for, truth, (evident and important truth,) and that in the closest conjunction with holiness, of which charity, or sincere unbiased brotherly-love, is most essential character and inseparable branch.

The truth we are to hold fast, and endeavour that others may be acquainted with and not depart from, has two special characters.

1. It is the truth as it is in Jesus, Eph. 4. 21.
2. It is truth after (or which is according to) godliness, Tit. 1. 1.

I he gospel is the gospel of Christ; he has revealed it to us, and he is the main subject of it; and therefore we are indispensably bound to learn from thence all we can of his person, nature, and offices: indifference as to this, is inexcusable in any who call themselves Christians; and we know from what fountain we are wholly and solely to draw all necessary saving knowledge.

Further, it is also a doctrine of godliness: whatever doctrines favour the corrupt lusts of men, cannot be of God, let the pleas and pretensions for them be what they will. Errors dangerous to the souls of men soon sprung up in the church. The servant slept, and tares were sown. But such were the wisdom and kindness of Providence, that they began sensibly to appear and shew themselves, while some, at least, of the apostles were yet alive to confute them, and warn others against them. We are apt to think, If we had lived in their times, we should have been abundantly fenced against the attempts and artifices of seducers; but we have their testimony and their cautions, which is sufficient; and if we will not believe their writings, neither would we have believed or regarded their sayings, if we had lived among them and conversed personally with them.

We come now first to consider the preface or introduction to this epistle, v. 1, 2.
JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called:

1. Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

Here we have,

1. An account of the penman of this epistle, Jude, or Judas, or Judah. He was name-sake to one of his ancestors, the son of Jacob, though not the first-born of his sons; out of whose loins (lineally, in a most direct succession) the Messiah came. This was a name of worth, eminency, and honour; yet, 1. He has a wicked name-sake. There was one Judas, (one of the twelve,) surnamed Iscariot, (from the place of his birth,) who was a vile traitor, the betrayer of his and our Lord. The same names may be common to the best and worst persons. It may be instructive to be called after the names of eminently good men, but there can be no inference drawn thence what we shall prove, though we may even thence conclude what sort of persons our good parents or progenitors desired and hoped we should be. But, 2. Our Judas was quite another man. He was an apostle, so was Iscariot; but he was a sincere disciple and follower of Christ, so was not the other. He was a faithful servant of Jesus Christ, the other was his betrayer and murderer; therefore here the one is very carefully distinguished from the other. Dr. Manton's note upon this, is, that God takes great care of the good name of his sincere and useful servants. Why then should we be prodigal of our own or one another's reputation and usefulness? Our apostle here calls himself a servant of Jesus Christ, esteeming that a most honourable title. It is more honourable to be a sincere and useful servant of Christ than to be an earthly king, how potent and prosperous soever. He might have claimed kindred to Christ according to the flesh, but he waves that, and rather glories in being his servant.

Observe, It is really a greater honour to be a faithful servant of Jesus Christ than to be akin to him according to the flesh. Many of Christ's natural relations have denied his incarnation; and his own progenitors have been distant from want of natural affection in him as Man, but from infidelity and obstinacy in themselves; which should make the descendants and near relatives of persons most eminent for sincere and exemplary piety, jealous over themselves with a godly jealousy. A son of Noah may be saved in the ark from a flood of temporal destruction, and yet be overwhelmed at last in a deluge of divine wrath, and suffer the vengeance of eternal fire. Christ himself tells us, that he that heareth his word, and doeth it, that is, he only, is as his brother, and sister, and mother, that is, more honourably and advantageously related to him than the nearest and dearest of his natural relatives, considered merely as such. See Matt. 12. 48-50.

Further, In that the apostle Jude styles himself a servant, though an apostle, a dignified officer in Christ's kingdom: it is a great honour to the meanest sincere ministers, (and it holds proportionably as to every upright Christian,) that he is the servant of Christ Jesus. They were servants before they were apostles, and they were but servants still. Away then with all pretensions in the ministers of Christ to lordly dominion either over one another, or the flocks committed to their charge. Let us ever have that of our dear Redeemer in view, It shall not be so among you, Matt. 20. 25. 26. And brother of James, to wit, of him whom the ancients style the first bishop of Jerusalem, of whose character and martyrdom Josephus makes mention, and ascribes the horrible destruction of that city and nation to this wicked cruelty, as one of its principal causes.* Of this James, our Jude was brother, whether in the strictest or a larger (though very usual) acceptance, I determine not. He however reckons it an honour to him, that he was the brother of such a one. We ought to honour those who are above us in age, gifts, graces, station; not to envy them, yet neither to flatter them, nor be led merely by their example, when we have reason to think we act wrong. Thus that apostle Paul withstood his fellow-apostle Peter to the face, notwithstanding the high esteem he had for him, and the affectionate love he bare to him, when he saw that he was to be blamed, that is, really blame-worthy, Gal. 2. 11, and following verses.

2. We are here acquainted to whom this epistle is directed; namely, to all them who are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called. I begin with the last, called, that is, called Christians, in the judgment of charity, further than which we cannot, nor in justice ought to go, in the judgments or opinions we form or receive of another; for what appears not, is not, nor ought to come into account in our dealings with the censures of one another, whatever abatements the divine goodness may see fit to make for an honest, though misguided soul, in particular cases, (though it be not sure it ought not) to judge of secret or hidden things, (things drawn into the light before the time,) lest our rash and preposterous zeal do more harm than ever it has done good, or I am afraid ever will do. The tares and wheat (if Christ may be Judge) must grow together till the harvest; (Matt. 13. 28-30.) and then he himself will, by proper instruments, take timely care to separate them. We ought to think the best of every man till the contrary appear; not being forward to receive or propagate, much less invent, disadvantageous characters of our brethren. This is the least we can make of the apostle's large and excellent description of charity, (1 Cor. 13.) and this we ought to make conscience of acting up to, which till we do, the Christian churches will, as alas! they are at this day, be filled with envyings and strifes, confusion and every evil work, Jam. 3. 16. Or, the apostle may speak of their being called to be Christians, by the preaching of the word which they gladly received, and professed cordially to believe, and so were received into the society and fellowship of the church, Christ the Head, and believers the members; real believers really, professed believers visibly.

Christians are the called, called out of the world, the evil spirit and of God's protection; we live the world, to higher and better things, heaven, things unseen and eternal; called from sin to Christ, from vanity to seriousness, from uncleanness to holiness; and this in pursuance of divine purpose and grace; for whom he did predestinate, them he also called, Rom. 8. 30. Now they who are thus called, are,

1. Sanctified; sanctified by God the Father. Sanctification is usually spoken of persons not the sons of the Holy Spirit; yet here it is ascribed to God the Father, because the Spirit works it as the Spirit of the Father and the Son. Note, All who are effectually called, are sanctified; made partakers of a divine nature; (2 Pet. 1. 4.) for without holiness no man shall see the Lord, Heb. 12. 14.

Observe, Our sanctification is not our own work. If any are sanctified, they are so by God the Father, not excluding Son or Spirit, for they are one, one God. Our corruption and pollution are of ourselves; but our sanctification and renovation are of God and his grace; and therefore if we perish in our iniquity, we must bear the blame; but if we be sanctified and glorified, all the honour and glory must be ascribed to God, and to him alone. I own it is hard to give a clear and distinct account of this, but we must not deny or disregard necessary truth, because we cannot fully reconcile the several parts of it to each other; for, on that supposition, we might denying that any one of us could stir an inch from the place we are at present in, though we see the contrary every day and hour.

2. The called and sanctified are preserved in Christ Jesus. As it is God who begins the work of grace in the souls of men, so is he who carries it on, and perfects it. Where he begins he will perfect; though we are fickle, he is constant; he will not forsake the work of his own hands, Ps. 138. 8. Let us not therefore trust in ourselves, nor in our stock of grace already received, but in him, and in him alone; still endeavouring, by all proper and appointed means, to keep ourselves as ever we would hope he should know us.

Preserved; from the gates of hell, and to the glory of heaven.

Preserved in Christ Jesus. All who are preserved, are preserved in Jesus Christ; in him as their Citizen and Strong-hold; no longer than they abide in him, and solely by virtue of their union with him.

3. The apostolical benediction; Mercy to you, &c. From the mercy, peace, and love of God all our blessings flow; and our real enjoyment of this life, all our hope of a better.

(1.) The mercy of God is the spring and fountain of all the good we have or hope for; mercy not only to the miserable, but to the guilty.

(2.) Next to mercy is peace, which we have from the sense of having obtained mercy. We can have no true and lasting peace but what flows from our reconciliation with God by Jesus Christ.

There are no springs of peace like those of peace springs love; his love to us, our love to him, and our brotherly love (forgotten, wretchedly neglected grace!) to one another.

These the apostle prays may be multiplied, that Christians may not be content with scraps and narrow scantlings of them; but that souls and societies may be full of them. Note, God is ready to supply us with all grace, and a fulness in each grace. We are not straitened, if we are straitened, in him, but in ourselves.

3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

We have here the design of the apostle in writing this epistle to the lately-converted Jews and Gentiles; namely, to establish them in the Christian faith, and a practice and conversation truly consonant and conformable thereunto, and in an open and bold profession thereof; especially in times of notorious opposition, whether by artful seduction, or violent and inhuman persecution.

But then we must see to it very carefully, that it be really the Christian faith that we believe, profess, propagate, and contend for; not the discriminating badges of this or the other party; not any thing of later date than the inspired writings of the holy evangelists and apostles.

Here observe, 1. The gospel-salvation is a common salvation, that is, in a most sincere offer and tender of it to all mankind to whom the notice of it reaches; for so the commission runs, (Mark 16. 15, 16.) Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, &c. Surely God means as he speaks, he does not delude us with vain words, whatever men do; and therefore none are excluded from the common salvation, but they who obstinately, impenitently, finally exclude themselves. Whoever will, may come and drink of the water of life freely, Rev. 22. 17.

The application of it is made to all believers, and only to such; it is made to the weak as well as to the strong. Let none discourage themselves on the account of hidden decrees which they can know little of, and with which they have nothing to do. God's decrees are dark, his covenants are plain.

1. All good Christians meet in Christ the common "Head, are actuated by one and the same Spirit, are guided by one rule, meet here at one throne "of grace, and hope shortly to meet in one common "inheritance;" a glorious one to be sure, but what or how glorious, we cannot, nor at present need to know; but such it will be as vastly to exceed all our present hopes and expectations.

2. This common salvation is the subject-matter of the faith of all the saints. The doctrine of it is what they all most heartily consent to; they esteem it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, 1 Tim. 1. 15. It is the faith once, or at once, once for all, delivered to the saints; to which nothing can be added, from which nothing may be detracted, in which nothing more or less should be altered. Here let us abide; here we are safe; if we use a strange doctrine, we are in danger of being either entangled or seduced.

3. The apostles and evangelists all wrote to us of this common salvation. This cannot be doubted by those who have carefully read their writings. It is strange that any should think they wrote chiefly to maintain particular schemes and opinions, especially as they never did nor could think of it. It is enough for them to be gratified to us, by inscriptions of the Holy Ghost, all that is necessary for every one to believe and do, in order to obtain a personal interest in the common salvation.

4. They who preach or write of the common salvation, should give all diligence to do it well; they should not allow themselves to offer to God or his people that which cost them nothing, or next to nothing; little or no pains or thought, 2 Sam. 24. 24. This were to treat God irreverently, and man unjustly.

The apostle (though inspired) gave all diligence to write of the common salvation. What then will become of those, who (though uninspired) give no diligence, or next to none, but say to the people, even in the name of God, guileful in buccam venenit—what comes next; who, so that they use scripture-words, care not how they interpret or apply them? Those who speak of sacred things, ought always to speak of them with the greatest reverence, care, and diligence.

5. They who have received the doctrine of this common salvation, must contend earnestly for it. Earnestly, not foriously. They who strive for the Christian faith, or in the Christian course, must strive lawfully, or they lose their labour, and run great hazard of losing their crown, 2 Tim. 2. 5. The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God, Jam. 1. 20. Lying for the truth is bad, and seddling for it is not much better. Observe, They who have received the truth, must contend for it. But how? As the apostles did; by suffering patiently and courageously for it, not by making others suffer if they will not presently embrace every notion that we are pleased (prescribed or unpro- voked) to call faith, or knowledge, or wisdom. We must not suffer ourselves to be robbed of any essential article of Christian faith, by the cunning craftiness or specious plausible pretences of any who lie in wait to deceive, Eph. 4. 14. The apostle Paul tells us, he preached the gospel (mind it was the gospel) with much contention, (1 Thess. 2. 2.) that is, (as I understand it,) with great earnestness, with a hearty zeal, and a great concern for the success of what he preached. But if we will understand contention in the common acceptation of the word, we must impartially consider with whom the aforesaid contended, and how; the enlarging on which would not be proper to this place.

We have here the occasion the apostle had to write to this purport; as evil manners give rise to good laws, so dangerous errors often give just occasion to the proper defence of important truths.

4. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

Here observe, 1. Ungodly men are the great enemies of the faith of Christ, and the peace of the church. They who deny or corrupt the one, and disturb the other, are here expressly styled ungodly men. We might have truth with peace, (a most desirable thing,) were there none (ministers or private Christians) in our particular churches and congregations but truly godly men— a blessing scarcely to be looked or hoped for on this side heaven. Ungodly men raise scruples, start questions, cause divisions, widen breaches, merely to advance and promote their own selfish, ambitious, and covetous ends. This has been the plague of the church in all past ages, and I am afraid no age is, or will be, wholly free from such men and such practices as long as time shall last.

The late excellent Mr. Henry's pious and charitable note on this passage (and I wish it were duly laid to heart by all of us who yet survive,) is, that nothing cuts us off from the church, but that which cuts us off from Christ; namely, reigning infidelity and ungodliness.

We must (as he goes on excellently) abhor the thought of branding particular parties; I add, or persons, with this character; especially of doing it without the least proof, or, as it too often happens, the least shadow of it.

Those are ungodly men who live without God in the world, who have no regard to God and conscience.

They (as the good man goes on) are to be dreaded, and consequently to be avoided, not only who are wicked by sins of commission, but also who are ungodly by sins of omission; who, for example, restrain prayer before God, who dare not reprove a rich man, when it is the duty of their place so to do, for fear they lose his favour, and the advantage they promise himself from, who do the work of the Lord negligently, &c.

2. They are the worst of ungodly men, who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, who take encouragement to sin more boldly, because the grace of God has abounded, and still abounds, so wonderfully; who are hardened in their impieties by the extent and fulness of gospel-grace, the design of which is to reduce men from sin, and bring them unto God. Thus therefore to wax wanton under so great grace, and turn it into an occasion of working all uncleanness with greediness, and hardening ourselves in such a course by that very grace which is the last and most forcible means to reclaim us from it, is to render ourselves the vilest, the worst, and most hopeless of sinners.

3. They who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, do in effect deny the Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ; that is, (as Mr. Henry well ex-presses it,) they deny both natural and revealed religion.

They, as he justly goes on, strike at the foundation of natural religion, for they deny the only Lord God; and they overturn all the frame of revealed religion, for they deny the Lord Jesus Christ. Now this great design in establishing revealed religion in the world, was, to bring men to God.

Note, They who deny our Lord Jesus Christ, do in effect deny the only Lord God. To deny revealed religion is virtually to overcome natural religion, for they stand or fall together, and they naturally yield light and force to each other. Would to God our modern deists, who live in the midst of gospel-light, would seriously consider this, and cautiously, diligently, and especially, examine with themselves what is that binders their receiving the gospel, while they profess themselves fully persuaded of all the principles and duties of natural religion! Never two tales answered more exactly to each other than these do, so that it seems absurd to receive the one and reject the other. One would think it were the fairer way to receive both, or reject both; though perhaps the more plausible method, especially in this age, is to act the latter.

4. They who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, are ordained unto condemnation; so Mr. Henry, and, no doubt, it is a great truth. They, as he speaks, sin against the last, the greatest, and most perfect remedy; and so are without excuse. They who thus sin, must needs die of their wounds, of their disease; are of old ordained to this condemnation, whatever that expression means. But what if our translators had thought fit to have rendered the word in the original, (which I shall not trouble the English reader with,) of old fore-written of, as persons who would through their own sin and folly become the proper subjects of this condemnation, where had the harm been? Plain Christians had not been troubled with dark, doubtful, and perplexing thoughts about reprobation, which the strongest heads cannot enter far into, can indeed bear but little of, without much loss and damage. Is it not enough that early notice was given by inspired writers, that such seducers and wicked men should arise in later times, and that every one, being forewarned, should be fore-armed against them!

5. We ought to contend earnestly for the faith, in opposition to those who would corrupt or deprave it; such as are crept in unawares; a wretched character, to be sure, but often very ill applied by weak and ignorant people, and even by those who themselves crept in unawares, who think their parts too small to stand for a law to all their followers and admirers. Surely faithful, humble ministers are helpers of their people's joy, peace, and comfort; not lords of their faith! Whoever attempt to corrupt the faith, we ought to contend earnestly against them. The more busy and crafty the instruments and agents of Satan are, to rob us of the truth, the more we solicitous should we be to hold it fast, and always provided we be very sure that we fasten no wrong or injurious characters on persons, parties, or sects.

The fair warning which the apostle, in Christ's name, gives to those, who having preached his holy religion, do afterwards desert and prove false to it.

5. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not. 6. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, who were not pleased with the posts and stations the supreme Monarch of the universe had assigned and allotted to them, but thought (like discontented ministers in our age, I might say in every age) they deserved better; they would, with the title of ministers, be sovereigns, and in effect their Sovereign should be their minister—do all, and only, what they would have him; thus wars arise, the main and immediate cause or occasion of their fall.

Thus they quitted their post, and rebelled against God, their Creator and sovereign Lord; but God did not spare them; (high and great as they were,) he would not trussle to them, he threw them off, as a wise and good prince will a selfish and deceitful minister; and the great, the all-wise God, could not be ignorant, as the wise and best of earthly princes often are; what designs they were working.

After all, what became of them? They thought to have dared and outfaced Omnipotence itself; but God was too hard for them, he cast them down to hell. They who would not be servants to their Maker and his will in their first state, were made captives to his justice, and are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness. Here see what the condition of fallen angels is, which yet we have no example, nor any light to design what they were working.

The devil, once angels in the best sense, are reserved, &c.

Observe, There is, undoubtedly there is, a judgment to come; the fallen angels are reserved to the judgment of the great day; and shall fallen men escape it? Surely no. Let every reader consider this in due time.

Their chains are called everlasting, because it is impossible they should ever break loose from them, or make an escape; they are held fast and sure under them; the decree, the justice, the wrath of God, are the very chains under which fallen angels are held so fast. Hear and fear, O sinful mortals of mankind!

3. The apostle here calls to our remembrance the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, v. 7. Even as, &c. It is in allusion to the destruction of Pentapolis, or other cities, that the miserable wretches here mentioned are set forth by a lake that burneth with fire and brimstone: they were guilty of abominable wickedness, not to be named or thought on but with the utmost abhorrence and detestation; their ruin is a particular warning to all people to take heed of, and fly from, fleshly lusts that war against the soul, 1 Pet. 2. 11.

These lusts consumed the Sodomites with fire from heaven, and they are now suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; therefore take heed, imitate not their sins, lest the same plagues overtake you as did them. God is the same holy, just, pure Being now as then; and can the beastly pleasures of a moment make amends for your suffering the vengeance of eternal fire? Stand in awe, therefore, and sin not," Ps. 4. 4.

The apostle next exhibits a charge against deceivers, who were now seducing the disciples of Christ from the profession and practice of his holy religion.

8. Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities. 9. Yet Michael the archangel, when, contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee. 10. But these speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. 11. Woe unto them! For they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. 12. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds: trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; 13. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

He calls them filthy dreamers, forasmuch as conclusion is a dream, and the beginning of, and inlet to, all manner of filthiness.

Note, Sin is filthiness; it renders men odious and vile in the sight of the most holy God, and makes them (sooner or later, as penitent, or as punished to extremity, and without resource) vile in their own eyes, and in a while they become vile in the eyes of all about them.

These filthy dreamers dream themselves into a fool's paradise on earth, and into a real hell at last: let their character, course, and end, be our seasonable and sufficient warning; like sins will produce like punishments and misery.

1. They defile the flesh: the body or body is the immediate seat, and only the irritating occasion, of many horrid pollutions; yet these, though done in and against the body, do greatly defile and grievously main and wound the soul; fleshly lusts do war against the soul, 1 Pet. 2. 11. and in 2 Cor. 7. 1. We read of filthiness of flesh and spirit, each of which, though of different kinds, defiles the whole man.

2. They despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities; are of a disturbed mind and a seditions spirit; forgetting that the powers that be, are ordained of God, Rom. 13. 1. God requires us to speak evil of no man; (Tit. 3. 2.) but it is a great aggravation of the sin of evil-speaking, when what we say is pointed at magistrates, men whom God has set in authority over us, by blaspheming or speaking evil of whom, we blaspheme God himself.

Or, we speak evil of religion, as some do, which ought to have the dominion in this lower world; such evil-speakers despise the dominion of conscience, make a jest of it, and would banish it out of the world; and for the word of God, the rule of conscience, they despise that; the revelations of the divine will go for little with them; they are a rule of faith and manners, but not till they have explained them, and imposed their sense of them upon all about them.

Or, as others account for the sense of this passage, the people of God, truly and specially so, are the dignities here spoken of or referred to, according to that of the Psalmist, (Ps. 105. 15.) Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

They speak evil of, &c. Religion and its serious professors have been always and everywhere evil spoken o: though there is nothing in religion but what is very good, and deserves our highest regards, both as it is perfective of our natures, and subservient to our truest and highest interests; yet this sect, as its enemies are pleased to call it, is every where spoken against, Acts 28. 22.

On this occasion the apostle brings in Michael the archangel.

Interpreters are at a loss what is here meant by the body of Moses. Some think, that the Devil contended that Moses might have a public and honourable funeral, that the place where he was interred might be generally known; hoping thereby to draw the Jews, so naturally prone thereto, to a new and fresh instance of idolatry. Dr. Scott thinks that by the body of Moses, we are to understand the Jewish church, whose destruction the Devil has contended for, as the Christian church is called the body of Christ in the New-Testament style. Others bring other interpretations, which I will not here trouble the reader with.

Though this contest was mighty eager and earnest, and Michael was victorious in the issue, yet he would not bring a railing accusation against the Devil himself; he knew a good cause needed no such weapons to engage him in his defence; it is said, He durst not bring, &c. Why durst he not? Not that he was afraid of the Devil, but he believed God would be offended, if, in such a dispute, he went that way to work; he thought it below him to engage in a trial of skill with the great enemy of God and man, which of them should out-scold or out-rail the other. A memorandum, says good Mr. Henry, to all disputants, never to bring railing accusations into their disputes. Truth needs no supports from falsehood or scurrility. Some say, Michael would not bring a railing accusation against the Devil, as knowing being beforehand that he would be too hard for him at that weapon. (Mr. Henry.) Some think the apostle refers here to the remarkable passage we have, Numb. 20. 7-14. Satan would have represented Moses under disadvantageous colours, which he, good man, did at that time, and upon that occasion, given but too much handle for. Now Michael, according to this account, stands up in defence of Moses, and, in the zeal of an upright and bold spirit, says to Satan, The Lord rebuke thee. He would not stand disputing with the Devil, nor enter into a particular debate about the merits of that special cause; he knew Moses was his fellow-servant, a favourite of God, and he would not patiently suffer him to be insulted, nor that which concerned his life and honour, and just indignation cries out, The Lord rebuke thee: like that of our Lord himself, (Matt. 4. 10.) Get thee hence, Satan. Moses was a dignity, a magistrate, one beloved and preferred by the great God; and the archangel thought it insufferable that such a one should be so treated by a vile apostate spirit, of how high an order soever. So the lesson is, That we ought to stand up in defence of those whom God owns, and whose service he accepts; that their "instruments are in their censures of them and their "conduct." They who censure (in particular) upright magistrates, upon every slip in their behaviour, may expect to hear, The Lord rebuke thee; and divine rebukes are harder to be borne than careless sinners now think for.

V. 10. But these speak evil of the things which they know not, &c. They who speak evil of those things, for instance, which they know not; for if they had known them, they would have spoken well of them; for nothing but good and excellent can be truly said of religion; and it is sad that any thing different or opposite should ever be justly said of any of its professors; a religious life is the most safe, happy, comfortable, and honourable life that is.

Observe, Men are most apt to speak evil of those persons and things that they know least of. How many had never suffered by slanderous tongues, if they had been better known! On the other hand, retirement screen some even from just censure.

But what they know naturally, &c. It is hard, if not impossible, to find any obstinate enemies to the Christian religion, who do not in their stated course live in open or secret contradiction to the very principles of natural religion: this many think hard and uncharitable; but I am afraid it will appear too true in the day of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. The apostle likens such to brute beasts, though they often think and boast themselves, if not the wisest, yet at least the Wittiest, part of mankind.

In those things they corrupt themselves; that is, in the plainest and most natural and necessary things; things that lie most open and obvious to natural reason and conscience; even in those things they count for base, and defile themselves: the fault, whatever it is, lies not in their understandings or apprehensions, but in their depraved wills, and disordered appetites and affections; they could and might have acted better, but then they must have offended violence to those vile affections which they obstinately chose rather to gratify than mortify.

V. 11. He represents them as followers of Cain, and the children and descents of profane people who thought little, and perhaps believed not much, of God or a future world: as greedy and covetous, who, so they could but gain present worldly advantages, cared not what came next; rebels to God and man, who, like Core, ran into attempts in which they must assuredly perish, as he did.

V. 12. These are spots in your feasts of charity— the fleshy or love-feasts, so much spoken of by the ancients; these are offered by way of praise or advertisement, means of or mischiefs to be admitted among them, but were spots in them, defiled and defiling. Observe, It is a great reproach, though unjust and incidental, to religion, when they who profess it, and join in the most solemn institution of it, are in heart and life unsuitable, and even contrary to it.

These are spots. Yet how common in all Christian societies lived on earth, the very best not excepted. Most have been who have been the best.

The Lord remedy it in his due time and way; not in men's blind and rigorous way of plucking up the wheat with the tares; but in the heaven we are waiting, hoping, and preparing for, there is none of this mad work, there are none of these disorderly doings.

When they feast with you, they feast themselves without fear. Arrant glutinous, no doubt, they were such as minded only the gratifying of their appetites with the dainties and plenty of their fare; they had no regard to Solomon's caution, Prov. 23. 2.

Mr. Henry's note on this passage, is, In common eating and drinking; a hole fear is necessary, much more in feasting; though we may sometimes be more easily and insensibly overcome at a common meal than at a feast; for, in the case supposed, we are held under a spell, we are kept by us, and, at least to some persons, the plenty of a feast is its own antidote, as to others it may prove a dangerous snare.

Clouds they are without water; which promise rain in time of drought, but perform nothing of what they promise. Such is the case of formal professors, who, at first setting out, promise much, like early-blossoming trees in a forward spring, but, in consequence, bring forth little or no fruit.

Carried about of winds; light and empty, easily driven about this way or that, as the wind happens to sit; such are empty, ungrounded professors, an easy prey to every seducer. It is amazing to hear many talk so confidently of so many things of which they know little or nothing, and yet have not the wisdom and humility to discern and be sensible how little they know! How happy would our world be, if men either knew more, or practically knew how little they know!

Trees whose fruit withereth, &c. Trees they are, for they are planted in the Lord's vineyard, yet fruitless ones.

Observe, They, whose fruit withereth, may be justly said to be without fruit. It is a sad thing when men seem to begin in the Spirit, and end in flesh. Such is almost as common a case as it is an awful one.

The text speaks of such, as being twice dead; one would think to be once dead were enough; we none of us, till grace renew us to a higher degree than ordinary, love to think of dying once, though this is appointed for us all. What then is the meaning of this being twice dead? Take Mr. Henry's answer in V. 11, 'Their name had been once dead.' In their natural, fallen, corrupted state; but they seemed to recover, and, as a man in a swoon, to be brought to life again, when they took upon them the profession of the Christian religion; but now they are dead again by the evident proofs they have given of their hypocrisy; whatever they seemed, they had nothing truly vital in them.

Plucked up by the roots; as we commonly serve dead trees, trees, which are known to be made right ' ضنلر . Most men are brought to think that, when they are not to be trusted, they are dead, dead, dead; why cumber they the ground? Away with them to the fire.

V. 13. Raging waves of the sea; boisterous, noisy, and clamorous; full of talk and turbulency, but with little (if any) sense or meaning;

Foaming out their own shame; creating much unseemliness to men of better sense and calmer tempers, which yet will in the end turn to their own greater shame and just reproach. The Psalmist's prayer ought always to be that of every honest and good man: 'Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; (Ps. 25:21) and if it will not, let me be unpreserved.' If honestly signify little now, knavery will signify much less, and that in a very little while.

Raging waves are a terror to sailing passengers; but when they are got to port, the waves are forgotten, as if no longer in being; their noise and terror are past.

Wandering stars; planets that are erratic in their motions, keep not that steady, regular course which the fixed ones do, but shift their stations, that one has sometimes much ado to know where to find them. This allusion carries in it a lively emblem of false teachers, who are sometimes here and sometimes there, so that one knows not where nor how to fix them. In the main things at least, one would think something should be fixed and steady; and this might be without infallibility, or any pretensions to it in us poor mortals. In religion and politics, the great subjects of present debate, surely there are certain stamna in which wise and good, honest and disinterested men might agree, without throwing the populace into the utmost anguish and distress of mind, or blowing up their passions into rage and himself without letting them know what they say, or whereof they affirm.

To whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. False teachers are to expect the worst of punishments in this and a future world; not every one who teaches by mistake anything that is not exactly true; (for who then, in any public assembly, shall open a Bible to teach others, unless he thought himself useful or superior to the angels of God in heaven?) but every one who prevaricates, dissembles, would lead others into by-paths and side-ways, that he has opportunity to make a gain or prey of them, or (in the apostle's phrase) to make merchandise of them, 2 Pet. 2. 3. But enough of this. As for the blackness of darkness for ever, I shall only say, that this terrible expression, with all the horror it imports, belongs to false teachers, truly, not slanderously so called, who corrupt the word of God, and betray the souls of men. If this will not make both ministers and people cautious, I know not what will.
The doom of this wicked people is declared.

14. And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, 15. To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. 16. These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men’s persons in admiration because of advantage.

This prophecy of Enoch we have no mention made of in any other part or place of scripture; yet now it is scripture, that there was such prophecy; one plain text of scripture is proof enough of any one point that we are required to believe, especially when relating to a matter of fact; but in matters of faith, necessary saving faith, God has not seen fit, blessed be his holy name he has not, to try us far; there is no fundamental of Christian religion, truly so called, which is not inculcated over and over in the New Testament; by which we may know what the Holy Ghost does, and consequently we ought, to lay the greatest stress upon. Some say that this prophecy of Enoch was preserved by tradition in the Jewish church; others, that the apostle Jude was immediately inspired with the notice of it: be that how it will, it is certain that there was such a prophecy of ancient date, of long standing, and universally received in the Old Testament church; and it is a main point of our New-testament creed.

Observe, Christ’s coming to judgment was prophesied of as early as the middle of the patriarchal age, and was therefore even then a received and acknowledged truth.

The Lord cometh with his holy myriads; including both angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect. What a glorious time will this be, when Christ shall come with ten thousand of these! And we are told for what great and awful ends and purposes he will come so accompanied and attended, namely, to execute judgment upon all.

Observe, It was spoken of then, so long ago, as a thing just at hand; ‘Behold, the Lord cometh; he is just a coming, he will be upon you before you are aware, and, unless you be very cautious and diligent, before you are prepared to meet him comfortably, he cometh. 1. To execute judgment upon the wicked. 2. To convince them.

Observe, Christ will condemn none without precedent, trial, and conviction; such conviction as shall at least silence even themselves; they shall have no excuse or apology to make, that they either can or dare then stand by; then every mouth shall be stopped, the Judge and his sentence shall be (as the immediate approved and applauded, and even the guilty condemned criminals shall be speechless, though at present they want not bold and specious pleas, which they vent with all assurance and confidence; and yet it is sure that the mock-trials of prisoners in the jail among themselves, and the real trial at the bar before the proper judge, soon appear to be very different things.

I cannot pass this fifteenth verse without taking notice how often, and how emphatically, the word ungodly is repeated in it; no less than four times; ungodly men, ungodly sinners, ungodly deeds, and, as to the manner, ungodly committed. Godly or ungodly signifies little with men now-a-days, unless it be to scoff at and deride even the very expressions; but it is not so in the language of the Holy Ghost.

Observe, Omissions, as well as commissions, must be accounted for in the day of judgment.

Observe further, Hard speech of one another, especially if ill-grounded, will most certainly come into account at the judgment of the great day. Let us all take care in time. “If thou,’ says one of our good old puritans, ‘smite (a miscalled heretic, or a schismatic, and God find a real saint lie-deed, look thou to it, how thou wilt answer it.” It may be too late to say before the angel, that it was an error, Eccl. 5. 6. I only here allude to that expression of the divinely inspired writer.

In the sixteenth verse the apostle enlarges further on the character of these evil men and seducers; they are murmurers, complainers, &c.

Observe, A murmuring complaining temper, indulge and manifested, lays them under a very ill character; such are very weak at least, and for the most part very wicked; they murmur against God and his providence, against men and their conduct; they are angry at everything that happens, and never pleased with their own state and condition in the world, as not thinking it good enough for them.

Such walk after their own lusts; their will, their appetite, their fancy, are their only rule and law. Mr. Henry’s note here, is, That they who please their sinful appetites, are most prone to yield to their ungovernable passions.

Lastly, The apostle here gives exhortation to those to whom he wrote, which, with the doxology in the two last verses, concludes the epistle.

17. But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; 18. How that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. 19. These are they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. 20. But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, 21. Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. 22. And of some have compassion, making a difference: 23. And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh. 24. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, 25. To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.
foretold by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; and consequently, the accomplishment of it in the event, is a confirmation of your faith, instead of being in the least an occasion of shaking and unsettling you therein.”

1. They who would persuade, must make it evident that they sincerely love those whom they would persuade; “Bitter words and harsh usage never did, nor ever will convince, much less persuade any body.”

2. The words which inspired persons have spoken (or, as I think,) duly remembered and reflected on, are the best preservative against dangerous errors; this will always be so, till men have learnt to speak better than God himself.

3. We ought not to be offended if errors and persecutions arise and prevail in the Christian church; this was foretold, and therefore we should not think worse of Christ’s person, doctrine, or cross, when we see it fulfilled. See 1 Tim. 4. 1. and 2 Tim. 3. 1. and 2 Pet. 3. 3. We must not think it strange, but comfort ourselves with this, that (in the midst of all this confusion) Christ will maintain his church, and make good his promise, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, Matt. 16. 18.

4. The more religion is ridiculed and persecuted, the faster hold we should take and keep of it; being forewarned, we should shew that we are fore-arm ed; under such trials we should stand firm, and not be moved otherwise.

V. 19. These are they who separate, &c. Ob serve. 1. Sensualists are the worst separatists; they separate themselves from God, and Christ, and his church, to the Devil, the world, and the flesh, by their ungodly courses and vicious practices; and that is a great deal worse than separation from any particular branch of the visible church on account of opinions, or modes and circumstances of external government or worship; though many can patiently hear with the former, while they are plentifully and almost perpetually railing at the latter; as if no sin were damnable, but what they are pleased to call schism.

2. Sensual men have not the Spirit, that is, of God and Christ, the Spirit of holiness, which whoever has not, is none of Christ’s, does not belong to him. Rom. 8. 9.

3. The worse others are, the better should we endeavour and approve ourselves to be; the more busy Satan and his instruments are to pervert others in judgment or practice, the more tenacious should we be of sound doctrine and a good conversation, holding fast the faithful word, as we have been (divinely) taught, holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience, Tit. 1. 9. 1 Tim. 3. 9.

Observe, The way to hold fast our profession, is, to hold on in it; having laid our foundation well in a sound faith, and a sincere upright heart, we must build upon it, make further progress continually; and we should take care with what materials we carry on our building, namely, gold, silver, precious stones, not wood, hay, stubble, 1 Cor. 3. 12. Right principles and a regular conversation will stand the test even of the fiery trial; but whatever we mix of baser alloy, though we be in the main sincere, we shall suffer loss by it; and though our persons be saved, all that part of our work shall be consumed; and if we ourselves escape, it will be with great danger and difficulty, as from a house on fire on every side.

Praying in the Holy Ghost. Observe. 1. Prayer is the nurse of faith; the way to build up ourselves in it, when it is faint, is, to continue instant in prayer, Rom. 12. 12.

2. Our prayers are then most likely to prevail, when we pray in the Holy Ghost, under his guidance and influence, according to the rule of his word, with faith, fervency, and constant persevering importunity; this is praying in the Holy Ghost, whether it be done by, or without a set prescribed form.

V. 21. Keep yourselves, &c. 1. “Keep up the grace of love to God in its lively vigorous actions and exercises in your souls.” 2. “Take heed of throwing yourselves out of the love of God to you, or its delightful, cheering, strengthening manifestations; keep yourselves in the way of God, if you would continue in his love.”

Looking on the mercy, &c. 1. Eternal life is to be looked for only through mercy; mercy is our only plea, not merit; or if merit, not our own, but another’s, who has merited for us what otherwise we could have had no claim to, nor have entertained any well-grounded hope of.

2. It is said, not only through the mercy of God as our Creator, but through the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ as Redeemer; all who come to heaven, must come through our Lord Jesus Christ; for there is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved, but that of the Lord Jesus only, Acts 4. 12. compared with v. 10.

3. A believing expectation of eternal life will arm us against the snares of sin; (2 Pet. 3. 14.) a lively faith of the blessed hope will help us to mortify our cursed lusts.

22. And of some have compassion, &c. Ob serve. 1. We ought to do all we can to rescue others out of the snare of the Devil, that they may be saved from (or recovered, when entangled therein, out of) dangerous errors, or pernicious practices. We are not only (under God) our own keepers, but every man ought to be (as much as in him lies) his brother’s keeper; none but a wicked Cain will contradict this, Gen. 4. 9. We must watch over one another, faith, and love, and tenderness, both to ourselves, and to one another, and set a good example to all about us.

This must be done with compassion, making a difference. How is that? We must distinguish between the weak and the wilful.

1. Of some we must have compassion, treat them with all tenderness, restore them in the spirit of meekness, not be needlessly harsh and severe in our censures of them and their actions, nor proud and haughty in our conduct toward them, not implacable, not averse to reconciliation with them, or admitting them to the friendship they formerly had with us, when they give evident or even strongly hopeful tokens of a sincere repentance: if God has forgiven them, why should not we? We infinitely more need his forgiveness than they do, or can do ours; though perhaps neither they nor we are justly or sufficiently sensible of this.

2. Others save with fear: urging upon them the terrors of the Lord; “Endeavour to frighten them out of their sins; preach hell and damnation to them;” so good Mr. Henry.

But what if prudence and caution in administering even the most just and severe reproofs, be what are primarily and chiefly here intended: (I do but offer it for consideration;) as if he had said, “Fear lest you frustrate your good intentions and honest designs by rash and imprudent management, that you do not harden, instead of reclaiming, even where greater degrees of severity are requisite, than in the immediately foregoing instance.” We are often apt to over-do, when we are sure we mean honestly, and think we are right in the main; yet the very worst are not needlessly or rashly, or to extremity, to be provoked; lest they be thereby further hardened through our default.

Hating even the garment, &c. that is, keeping yourselves at the utmost distance from what is or appears evil, and designing and endeavouring that others may do so too; avoid, as Mr. Henry speaks,
Lastly, The apostle concludes this epistle with solemn ascription of glory to the great God. Note, Whatever is the subject or argument we have been treating of, ascribing glory to God is fittest for us to conclude with, v. 24, 25.

Note further, God is able, and he is as willing as able, to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory; not as those who have never been faulty, (for what has once been done can never be rendered undone, even by Omnipotence itself, for that implies a contradiction,) but as those whose faults shall not be imputed to their ruin, which, but for God's mercy and a Saviour's merits, they might most justly have been.

Before the presence of his glory. Observe, I. The glory of the Lord will shortly be present; we now look upon it as distant, and too many look upon it as uncertain, but it will come, and it will be manifest and apparent, every eye shall see him, Rev. 1. 7. This is now the object of our faith, but hereafter, (and surely it cannot now be long,) it will be the object of our sense; whom we now believe in, him we shall shortly see, to our unspeakable joy and comfort, or inexpressible terror and consternation. See 1 Pet. 1. 8.

Observe, 2. All real sincere believers shall be presented, at the Lord Redeemer's appearance and coming, by him their glorious Head, to the Father, in order to his approbation, acceptance, and reward; they were given him of the Father, and of all that were so given him he has lost none, nor will lose any one, not an individual, a single soul, but will present them all perfectly holy and happy, when he shall surrender his mediatorial kingdom to his God, and our God; his Father, and our Father, John 6. 39. with ch. 17. 12. 1 Cor. 15. 24.

Observe, 3. When believers shall be presented faultless, it will be with exceeding joy. Alas! now our faults fill us with fears, doubts, and sorrows; but be of good cheer; if we are sincere, we shall be, our dear Redeemer has undertaken for it, we shall be presented faultless; where there is no sin, there will be no sorrow; where there is the perfection of holiness, there will be the perfection of joy. Surely, the God who can and will do all this, is worthy to have glory, majesty, dominion, and power, ascribed to him, both now and for ever! And to this we may well, with the apostle, add our hearty Amen.

AN EXPOSITION,

WITH

OF THE

REVELATION OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE

Completed by Mr. William Tong.

It ought to be no prejudice to the credit and authority of this book, that it has been rejected by men of corrupt minds, such as Cerdon and Marcion, and doubted of by men of a better character; for that has been the lot of other parts of holy writ, and of the divine Author of the scripture himself. The image and superscription of this book are truly sacred and divine, and the matter of it agreeable with other prophetic books, particularly Ezekiel and Daniel; the church of God has generally received it, and found good counsel and great comfort in it.

From the beginning, the church of God has been blessed with prophecy; that glorious prediction of breaking the serpent's head, was the stay and support of the patriarchal age; and the many prophecies there were concerning the Messiah to come, were the gospel of the Old Testament. Christ himself prophesied of the destruction of Jerusalem; and about the time in which that was accomplished, he intrusted the apostle John with this book of revelation, to deliver it to the church as a prediction of the most important events that should happen to it, to the end of time, for the support of the faith of his people, and the direction of their hope. It is called the Revelation, because God therein discovers those things which could never have been sifted cut by the reasonings of human understanding; those deep things of God, which no man knows, but the Spirit of God, and those to whom he reveals them.
CHAP. I.

This chapter is a general preface to the whole book, and contains, I. An inscription, declaring the original and the design of the book, v. 1. II. The apostolical benediction pronounced on all those who shall pay a due regard to the contents of this book, v. 3. III. A glorious vision or appearance of the Lord Jesus Christ to the apostle John, when he delivered to him this revelation; v. 9, to the end of the chapter.

1. The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: 2. Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

Here we have,

1. What we may call the pedigree of this book.
   It is the revelation of Jesus Christ; the whole Bible is so; for all revelation comes through Christ, and all centres in him; and especially in these last days God has spoken to us by his Son, and concerning his Son, Christ, as the King of his church, has been pleased thus far to let his church know by what rules and methods he will proceed in his government, though he has been ‘the Prophet of the church, he has made known to us the things that shall be hereafter.

2. It is a revelation which God gave unto Christ. Though Christ is himself God, and, as such, has light and life in himself, yet, as he sustains the office of Mediator between God and man, he receives his instructions from the Father; the human nature of Christ, though endowed with the greatest sagacity, judgment, and penetration, could not, in a way of reason, discover these great events, which, not being produced by natural causes, but wholly depending upon the will of God, could be the object only of divine presence, and must come to a created mind only by revelation. Our Lord Jesus is the great Trustee of divine revelation; it is to him that we owe the knowledge we have of what we are to expect from God, and what he expects from us.

The angel signified it to the apostle John; as the angels are the messengers of Christ, the ministers are the messengers of the churches; what they receive from heaven, they are to communicate to the churches. John was the apostle chosen for this service. Some think he was the only one surviving, the rest having scaled their testimony with their blood. This was to be the last book of divine revelation, and therefore notified to the church by the last of the apostles. John was the beloved disciple; he was, under the New Testament, as the prophet Daniel under the Old, a man greatly beloved; he was the servant of Christ; he was an apostle, an evangelist, and a prophet; he served Christ in all the three extraordinary offices of the church. James was an apostle, but not a prophet or evangelist; Matthew was an apostle and evangelist, but not a prophet; John was an evangelist, a preacher of the gospel, and so Christ calls him in an eminent sense his servant John.

5. John was to deliver this revelation to the church; to all his servants. For the revelation was not designed only for the use of Christ’s extraordinary servants the ministers, but for all his servants, the members of the church; they have all a right to the knowledge of these mysteries of God, and all have their concern in them.

II. Here we have the subject-matter of this revelation, namely, the things that must shortly come to pass. The evangelists give us an account of the things that are past; prophecy gives us an account of things to come. These future events are shewed, and not in the clearest light in which God could have set them, but in such a light as he saw most proper, and which would best answer his wise and holy purposes. Had they been as clearly foretold in all their circumstances as God could have revealed them, the prediction might have prevented the accomplishment; but they are foretold more darkly, to beget in us a veneration for the scripture, and to engage our attention, and excite our inquiry; we have in this revelation a general idea of the methods of Divine Providence and Government in and about the church, and many good lessons may be learned hereby. These events (it is said) were such as should come to pass not only surely, but shortly; that is, they would begin to come to pass very shortly, and the whole would be accomplished in a short time. For now the last ages of the world were come.

III. Here is an attestation of the prophecy, v. 2. It was signified to John, who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. It is observable that the historical books of the Old Testament have not always the name of the historian prefixed to them, as in the books of Judges, Kings, Chronicles; but in the prophetic books the name is always prefixed, as Isaiah, Jeremiah, &c. So in the New Testament, though John did not prefix his name to his first epistle, yet he does to this prophecy, as ready to pay homage, and answer for the truth of it; and he gives us not only his name, but his office. He was one who bare record of the word of God in general, and of the testimony of Jesus in particular, and of all things that he saw; he was an eye-witness, and he concealed nothing that he saw. Nothing recorded in this revelation was his own invention or imagination; it came from the Lord God, and the testimony of Jesus; and as he added nothing to it, so he kept back no part of the counsels of God.

3. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear, the words of the prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

4. John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven spirits which are before his throne; 5. And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, 6. And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. 7. Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

We have here an apostolical benediction on those who should give a due regard to this divine revelation; and this benediction is given more generally and more especially.

I. More generally, to all who either read or hear all the faithful shepherds. This blessing seems to be pronounced with a design to encourage us to study this book, and not be weary of looking into it upon the account of the obscurity of many things in it; it will repay the labour of the careful and attentive reader. Observe, 1. It is a blessed privilege to enjoy the oracles of God. This was one of the principal advantages the Jews had above the Gentiles. 2. It is a blessed thing to study the scriptures; the theme of God of the whole Trinity; for this is a privilege not only to read the scriptures ourselves, but to hear them read by others, who are qualified to give us the sense of what they read, and to lead us into an understanding of them. 3. It is not sufficient to our blessedness, that we read and hear the scriptures, but we must keep the things that are written; we must keep them in our memories, in our minds, in our affections, and in practice, and as we shall see presently, we come to the accomplishment of the scriptures, the greater regard we shall give to them. The time is at hand, and we should be so much the more attentive as we see the day approaching.

II. The apostolical benediction is pronounced more especially and particularly to the seven Asian churches, v. 4. These seven churches are named in a round circuit, or in regular order, in the chapters following. The apostolical blessing is more expressly directed to these, because they were nearest to him, who was now in the isle of Patmos, and perhaps he had the peculiar care of them, and superintendence over them, not excluding any of the rest of the apostles, if any of them were now living. Here observe, grace and peace, holiness and comfort: grace, that is, the good-will of God towards us, and his good work in us: and peace, that is, the sweet evidence and assurance of this grace. There can be no true peace where there is not true grace; and where grace goes before, peace will follow.

1. What the blessing is, which he pronounces on all the faithful shepherds in these churches—

2. From whence this blessing is to come. In whose name does the apostle bless the churches? In the Name of God, of the whole Trinity; for this is an act of adoration, and God only is the proper Object of it; his ministers must bless the people in no name but his alone. And here,

(1.) The Father is first named; God the Father, which may be taken either essentially, for God as God, or personally, for the first Person in the ever blessed Trinity; the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Having determined that God is Jehovah, who is, and was, and who is to come, eternal, unchangeable, the same to the Old Testament church which was, and to the New Testament church, which is, and who will be the same to the church triumphant which is to come.

(2.) The Holy Spirit, called the seven spirits, not seven in number, or in nature, but the infinite perfect Spirit of God, in which there is a diversity of gifts and operations. He is before the throne; for as God made, so he governs, all things by his Spirit.

(3.) The Lord Jesus Christ. He mentions him after the Spirit, because he intended to enlarge more upon the person of Christ, as God manifested in the flesh, whom he had seen dwelling on earth before, and now saw again in a glorious form. Observe the particular account we have here of Christ. v. 5.

[1.] He is the faithful Witness. He was, from eternity a Witness to all the counsels of God, (John 11. 18.) and he was in time a faithful Witness to the revealed will of God, who has now spoken to us by his Son; upon his testimony we may safely depend, for he is a faithful Witness, cannot be deceived, and cannot deceive us.

[2.] He is the first-born of the dead, from the dead, of the first Parent and Head of the resurrection, the only one that raised himself by his own power, and who will by the same power raise up his people from their graves to everlasting honour; for he has begotten them again to a lively hope by his resurrection from the dead.

[3.] He is the Prince of the kings of the earth; from him they have their authority; by him their power is limited, and their wrath restrained; by him their counsels are accounted. This is good news to the church, and it is good evidence of the Godhead of Christ, who is King of kings and Lord of lords.

[4.] He is the great Friend of his church and people; one who has done great things for them, and this out of pure disinterested affection; he has loved them, and, in pursuance of that everlasting love, he has, First, Washed them from their sins in his own blood; Second, Washed them from the stain, a guilt of and pollution; nothing can fetch out this stain but the blood of Christ; and rather than it should not be washed out, Christ was willing to shed his own blood, to purchase pardon and purity for them. Secondly, He has made them kings and priests to God and his Father. Having justified and sanctified them, he makes them kings to his Father; that is, in his Father's account, with his approbation, and far superior to all others, they overcome the world, mortify sin, govern the inner spirits, conquer Satan, have power and prevalency with God in prayer, and shall judge the world. He hath made them priests; given them access to God, enabled them to enter into the holiest, and to offer spiritual and acceptable sacrifices; he has given them an action suitable to this character; and for these high honours and favours they are bound to aspire to in the present life.

[5.] He will be the Judge of the world; Behold, he cometh, and every eye shall see him. This book, the Revelation, begins and ends with a prediction of the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. We should set ourselves to meditate frequently upon the second coming of Christ, and keep it in the eye of our faith and expectation. John refers to this as if he saw that day, and to him they are accountable. He cometh with clouds, which are his chariot and pavilion; he will come publicly; every eye shall see him, the eye of his people, the eye of his enemies, every eye, your's and mine. He shall come, to the terror of those who pierced him and have not repented; and of all who have wounded and crucified him afresh by their apostasy from him; he shall come, to the astonishment of the nations of the earth. For he comes to take vengeance on those who know not God, as well as on those that obey not the gospel of Christ.

[6.] This account of Christ is ratified and confirmed by himself, v. 8. Here our Lord Jesus justly challenges the same honour and power that is ascribed to the Father, v. 4. He is the Beginning and the End; all things are from him and for him; he is the Almighty; he is the same eternal and unchanged One. And surely it is not too much to blot out one character of this name of Christ, deserves to have his name blotted out of the book of life. Them that honour him, he will honour; but they who despise him, shall be lightly esteemed.
9. I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. 10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord’s day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11. Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea. 12. And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; 13. And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. 14. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire; 15. And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. 16. And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. 17. And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last: 18. I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death. 19. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter; 20. The mystery of seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

We are now come to that glorious vision which the apostle had of the Lord Jesus Christ, when he came to deliver this revelation to him. Where observe,

I. The account given of the person who was favoured with this vision. He describes himself, 1. By his present state and condition. He was the brother and companion of these churches in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Christ. He was, at this time, as the rest of true Christians were, a persecuted man, banished, and perhaps imprisoned, for his adherence to Christ. He was their brother, though an apostle; he seems to value himself upon his relation to the church, rather than his authority in it. Judas may be an apostle, but not a brother in the family of God; he was their companion.

The children of God should choose communion and society with each other; he was their companion in tribulation. The persecuted servants of God do not suffer alone, the same trials are accomplished in others; he was their companion in patience, not only a sufferer with them in suffering circumstances, but in suffering graces. If we have the patience of the saints, we should not grudge to meet with their trials. He was their brother and companion in the patience of the kingdom of Christ; a sufferer for Christ's cause, for asserting his kingly power over the church of the world, and for adhering to it against all who would usurp upon it. By this account he gives of his present state, he acknowledges his engagements to sympathize with them, and to endeavour to give them counsel and comfort; and be-speaks their more careful attention to what he had to say to them from Christ their common Lord.

2. By the place where he was when he was favoured with this vision. He was in the isle Patmos; he does not say who banished him thither; it becomes Christians to speak sparingly and modestly of their own sufferings. Patmos is said to be an island in the Egean sea, one of those called Cyclades, and was about thirty-five miles in compass; but under this confinement it was the apostle's comfort that he did not suffer as an evil-doer, but that it was for the testimony of Jesus, for bearing witness to Christ as the Immanuel, the Saviour. This was a cause worth suffering for; and the Spirit of glory and of God rested upon this persecuted apostle.

3. The day and time in which he had this vision; it was the Lord’s day, the day of the Lord's resurrection; he received the vision, but before he received it; he was in a serious, heavenly, spiritual frame, under the blessed gracious influences of the Spirit of God. God usually prepares the souls of his people for uncommon manifestations of himself, by the quickening, sanctifying influences of his good Spirit. Those who would enjoy communion with God on the Lord's day, must endeavour to abstract their thoughts and affections from flesh and fleshy things, and be wholly taken up with things of a spiritual nature.

II. The apostle gives an account of what he heard when thus in the Spirit. An alarm was given as with the sound of a trumpet, and then he heard a voice, the voice of Christ applying to himself the character before given, the First and the Last, and commanding the apostle to commit to writing the things that should be revealed to him, and to send it immediately to the seven Asian churches, whose names are mentioned. Thus our Lord Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, gave the apostle notice of his glorious appearance, as with the sound of a trumpet.

III. We have now an account of what he saw; he turned to see the voice, whose it was, and whence it came; and then a wonderful scene of vision opened itself to his view.

1. He saw a representation of the church under the emblem of seven golden candlesticks, as it is explained in the last verse of the chapter. The churches 'are compared to candlesticks, because they hold forth the light of the gospel to advantage; the churches are not candles, Christ only is our Light, and his gospel our lamp, but they receive their light from Christ and the gospel, and hold it forth to others; they are golden candlesticks, for they should be precious and pure, comparable to fine gold; not only the ministers, but the members of the churches ought to be such; their light should so shine before men, as to engage others to give glory to God.

2. He saw a representation of the Lord Jesus Christ in the midst of the golden candlesticks; for he has promised to be with his churches always to the end of the world, filling them with light, and life, and love, for he is the very animating, informing Soul of the church. And here we observe,

(1.) The glorious form in which Christ appeared in several particulars. [1.] He was veiled with a garment pure and white, as his robe, denoting righteousness and honour. [2.] He was girt about with a golden girdle; the breastplate of the High-Priest, on which the names of his people are engraven; he was ready girt to do all the work of a Redeemer. [3.] His head and hair were white like wool or snow; he was the Ancient of days; his hoary head was no sign of decay, but it was indeed a crown of glory. [4.] Like a flaming spear, as the flame of fire, piercing and penetrating into the very hearts and reins of men, scattering terrors among his adversaries. [5.] His feet were like unto fine burning brass; strong and steadfast, supporting his own interest, subduing his enemies, and treading them to powder. [6.] His voice was as the sound of many waters; of many rivers falling in together. He can and will make himself heard to those who hear and to those who are not near. His gospel is a profounding and mighty stream, fed by the upper springs of infinite wisdom and knowledge. [7.] He had in his right hand seven stars; the ministers of the seven churches, who are under his direction, have all their light and influence from him, and are secured and preserved by him. [8.] Out of his mouth went a two-edged sword; his word, which both wounds and heals, stabs sinners on the right hand and on the left. His comeliness was as the sun shining; its strength too bright and dazzling for mortal eyes to behold.

(2.) The impression this appearance of Christ made upon the apostle John; (v. 17.) He fell at the feet of Christ as dead; he was overpowered with the greatness of the lustre and glory in which Christ appeared, though he had been so familiar with him before. How well is it for us that God speaks to us by his ministers, whose terrors shall not make us afraid. For none can see the face of God, and live.

(3.) The condescending goodness of the Lord Jesus to his disciples; (v. 17.) He laid his hand upon him; he raised him up, he did not plead against him with his great power, but he put strength into him, he spake kind words to him. [1.] Words of comfort and encouragement; (v. 20.) He comforted away the shibboleish fears of his disciples. [2.] Words of instruction; telling him particularly who he was, that thus appeared to him. And here he acquaints him, First, With his divine nature; the First and the Last. Secondly, With his former sufferings; I was dead; the very same that his disciples saw upon the cross dying for the sins of men. Thirdly, With his resurrection and life; I live, and am alive for evermore; have conquered death, and opened the grave, and am Partaker of an endless life." Fourthly, With his office and authority; I have the keys of hell and of death; a sovereign dominion in and over the invisible world, opening and none can shut, shutting so that none can open, opening the gates of death when he pleases, and the gates of the eternal world, of happiness or misery, as the Judge of all, from whose sentence there lies no appeal whither. Fifthly, With his will and pleasure; that John should write both the things he had seen, and the things that are, and that should be hereafter. Sixthly, With the meaning of the seven stars, that they are the ministers of the churches; and of the seven candlesticks, that they are the seven churches, to whom Christ would now send by him particular and proper messages.

CHAP. II.

The apostle John, having, in the foregoing chapter, written the things which he had seen, now proceeds to write the things that are, according to the command of God, (ch. 1. 19.) that is, the present state of the seven churches of Asia, with which he has a particular acquaintance, and for which he had a tender concern. He was directed to write to every one of them according to their present state and circumstances; and to inscribe every letter to the angel of that church, to the Minister or rather ministry of that church, called angels, because they are the messengers of God to mankind. In this chapter, we have, I. The message sent to Ephesus, v. 1. ... II. To Smyrna, v. 8. ... III. To Pergamos, v. 12. ... IV. To Thyatira, v. 18. to the end.

1. UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write: These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; 2. I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars; 3. And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted. 4. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. 5. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of its place, except thou repent. 6. But this thou hast, that thou hast kept my works which thou hast; and hast done them a little more than at first. 7. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

We have here,

I. The inscription, where observe,

1. To whom the first of these epistles is directed; to the church of Ephesus, a famous church planted by the apostle Paul, (Acts 19.) and after that watered and governed by St. John, who had his residence very much there. We can hardly think that Timothy was the angel, or sole pastor and bishop of this church at this time, that he who was of a very excellent spirit, and naturally cared for the good state of the souls of the people, should become so remiss as to deserve the rebukes given to the ministry of this church. Observe,

2. From what this day, to Ephesus was sent: here we have one of those titles that were given to Christ in his appearance to John in the chapter foregoing; He that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, and walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, ch. 1. 13. 16. This title consists of two parts:

(1.) He that holdeth the stars in his right hand. The ministers of Christ are under his special care and protection. It is the honour of God, that he knows the number of the stars, calls them by their names, binds the sweet influences of Pleiades, and looses the bands of Orion; and it is the honour of the Lord Jesus Christ, that the ministers of the gospel, who are greater blessings to the church than the stars are to the world, are in his hand; he directs all their motions, heDisposestheYhewhithem, and guides them into their several orbs; he fills them with light and influence, he supports them, or else they would soon be falling stars; they are instruments in his hand, and all the good they do, is done by his hand with them. (2.) He walketh in the midst of the golden candlesticks. This speaks his relation to his churches, as the other his relation to his ministers. Christ is in an intimate connexion with all the churches in the world; he knows and observes their state, he takes pleasure in them, as a man does to walk in his garden; though Christ be in heaven, he walks in the midst of his churches on earth, observing what is amiss in them, and what it is that they want: this is a great encouragement to those who have the care of the churches—that the Lord Jesus has graven them upon the palms of his hands.

II. The contents of the epistle, in which, as in most of those that follow, we have,

1. The commendation Christ gave this church, ministers and members, which he always brings in, by declaring that he knows their works, and therefore both his commendation and reproof must be strictly regarded; for he does not in either speak at a venture, he knows what he says. Now the church of Ephesus is recommended to

[1.] Their one earnest duty; (v. 2.) I know thy works, and thy labour. This may more immediately relate to the ministry of this church, which had been laborious and diligent. Dignity calls for duty. Those that are stars in Christ's hand, need to be always in motion, dispensing light to all about them; For my name sake thou hast laboured, and hast not spilt, v. 5. Christ keeps an account of every day's work, and every hour's work, his servants do for him, and their labour shall not be in vain in the Lord. (2.) For their patience in suffering; (v. 2.) Thy labour and thy patience. It is not enough that we be diligent, but we must be patient, and endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ. Ministers must have and exercise great patience, and no Christian can be without it. There must be bearing patience, to endure the sorest and most unexpected wrapping of circumstances; and there must be waiting patience, that when they have done the will of God, they may receive the promise; Thou hast borne, and hast patience, v. 5. We shall meet with such difficulties in our way and work, as require patience to go on and finish well. (3.) For their zeal against what was evil; (v. 2.) Thou hast not borne them that are evil. It consists very well with Christian patience, not to bear with sin, much less allow it; though we must shew all meekness to men, yet we must shew a just zeal against their sins. This their zeal was the more to be commended, because it was according to knowledge, discreet zeal upon a previous trial made of the pretences, practices, and tenets of evil men; Thou hast tried them that say they are apostles, and are not. The church, when they are tried, must not proceed with discretion; none should be cast off till they are tried. Some were risen up in this church, that pretended to be not ordinary ministers, but apostles; their pretensions had been examined, and found to be vain and false; those that impartially search after truth, may come to the knowledge of it. 2. The rebuke given to this church; (v. 4.) Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee. Those that have much good in them, may have something much amiss in them; and our Lord Jesus, as an impartial Master and Judge, takes notice of both; though he first observes what is good, and is most ready to mention that, yet he also observes what is amiss, and will faithfully reprove them for it. The sin that Christ charged this church with, is, their decay and sloth in the work of revelation, and they had cast away the first love; not left and forsaken the Object of it, but lost the fervent degree of it, that at first appeared. Observe, (1.) The first affections of men toward Christ, and holiness, and heaven, are usually lively and warm. God remembered the love of Israel's espousals, when she should follow him withersoever he went; (2.) These lively affections will abate and cool, if great care be not taken, and diligence used, to preserve them in constant exercise. (3.) Christ is grieved and displeased with his people, when they see them grow remiss and cold toward him, and he will one way or other make them sensible that he does not take it well from them. (3.) The advice and counsel given them from Christ; (v. 5.) Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, &c. (1.) Those that have lost their first love, must remember from whence they are fallen; they must compare their present with their former state, and consider how much better it was with them than then now; how much peace, strength, purity, and pleasure they have lost, by leaving their first love; how much more comfortably they could lie down and sleep at night; how much more cheerfully they could awake in the morning; how much better they could mind their public duties, and private concerns; how much more likely they could enjoy the favours of Providence; how much easier the thoughts of death were to them, and how much stronger their desires and hopes of heaven. (2.) They must repent; they must be inwardly grieved and ashamed for their sinful declining; they must blame themselves, and shame themselves, for it, and humbly confess it in the sight of God, and judge and condemn themselves in holy love and zeal. They must return and do their first works; they must as it were begin again, go back step by step, till they come to the place where they took the first false step; they must endeavour to revive and recover their first zeal, tenderness, and seriousness, and must pray as earnestly, and watch as diligently, as they did when they first set out in the ways of God. Now this good advice is forced and urged, (1.) By a several mention of the state of the churches; I will come unto thee quickly, and remove thy candlestick out of its place. If the presence of Christ's grace and Spirit be slighted, we may expect the presence of his displeasure; he will come in a way of judgment, and that suddenly and surprisingly, upon impenitent churches and sinners; he will unchain them, take away his gospel, his ministers, and his ordinances from them; and what will the churches or the angels of the churches do when the gospel is removed? (2.) By an encouraging mention that is made of what was yet good among them; (v. 6.) "This thou hast, that thou hatedst the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. Though thou hast declined in thy love to what is good, yet thou retainest thy hatred to what is evil, especially to what is grossly evil. This is to thee a grace. The Nicolaitans, that had sheltered themselves under the name of Christianity; they held hateful doctrines, and they were guilty of hateful deeds, hateful to Christ, and to all true Christians; and it is mentioned to the praise of the church of Ephesus, that they had a just zeal, and abhorrence of those wicked doctrines and practices. And indifference of spirit between truth and error, good and evil, may be called charity and meekness, but it is not pleasing unto Christ. Our Saviour Joineth this kind commendation to his severe threat-ening, to make the advice more effectual. III. We have the conclusion of this epistle, in which, as in those that follow, we have,
1. A call to attention; He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Observe, (1.) What is written in the scriptures, is spoken by the Spirit of God. (2.) What is said to one church, concerns all the churches, in every place and age. (3.) We can never employ our faculty of hearing better than in hearkening to the word of God; and we deserve to lose it, if we do not employ it to this purpose; and they who will not hear the call of God now, will wish at length they had never had a capacity of hearing any thing at all.

2. A promise of great mercy to those who overcome. The Christian life is a warfare against sin, Satan, the world, and the flesh. It is not enough that we engage in this warfare, but we must pursue it to the end; we must never yield to our spiritual enemies, but fight the good fight, till we gain the victory, as all persevering Christians shall do; and the warfare and victory shall have a glorious triumph and reward. That which is here promised, is, to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God. They shall have that perfection of holiness, and that confirmation therein, that Adam would have had; if he had gone well through the course of his trial, then he would have eaten of the tree of life which was in the midst of paradise, and that Jesus, who came to cleave to him in his holy and happy state. So all who persevere in their Christian trial and warfare, shall derive from Christ, as the Tree of Life, perfection and confirmation in holiness and happiness in the paradise of God; not in the earthly paradise, but the heavenly, ch. 22. 1, 2.

3. And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive. 9. I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich,) and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan. 10. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. 11. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

We now proceed to the second epistle sent to another of the Asian churches, where, as before, observe.

1. The preface or inscription in both parts.

2. The superscription, telling us to whom it was more expressly and immediately directed; to the angel of the church in Smyrna, a place well known at this day by our merchants, a city of great trade and wealth, perhaps the only city of all the seven that is still known by the same name, now however no longer distinguished for its Christian church, being overrun with Mahometanism.

3. The subscription, containing another of the glorious titles of our Lord Jesus, the First and the Last, he that was dead and is alive, taken out of ch. 1. 17, 18. (1.) Jesus is the First and the Last. It is but a little scantling of time that is allowed to us in this world, but our Redeemer is the First and the Last. He is the First, for by him all things were made; and he was before all things with God, and was God himself. He is the Last, for all things are made for him, and he will be the Judge of all. This surely is the title of God from everlasting and to everlasting, and it is the title of one that is an unchangeable Mediator between God and Man, Jesus, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. He was the First, for by him the foundation of the church was laid in the patriarchal state; and he is the Last, for by him the top-stone will be brought forth and laid in the end of time. (2.) He was dead, and is alive. He was dead, and died for our sins; he is alive, for he rose again for our justification, and he ever lives to make intercession for us. He was dead, and by dying purchased salvation for us; he is alive, and by his life applies this salvation to us. And if when we were enemies, we are reconciled by his death, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. His death we commemorate every sabbath-day, his resurrection and life every sabbath-day.

II. The subject matter of this epistle to Smyrna, where, after the common declaration of Christ’s omniscience, and the perfect cognizance he has of all the works of men, and especially of his churches, he takes notice,

1. Of the improvement they had made in their spiritual state. This comes in, in a short parenthesis, ch. 2. 1-3. 10. (v. 9.) poor in temporals, but rich in spirituals; poor in spirit, and yet rich in grace; their spiritual riches are set off by their outward poverty. Many who are rich in temporals, are poor in spirituals. Thus it was with the church of Laodicea. Some who are poor outwardly, are inwardly rich; rich in faith, in good works, rich in privileges, rich in bonds and deeds of gift, rich in hope, rich in reversion. Spiritual riches are really the reward of great diligence; the diligent hand makes rich. Where there is spiritual plenty, outward poverty may be better borne; and when God’s people are impoverished in temporals, for the sake of Christ and a good conscience, he makes all up to them in spiritual riches, which are much more satisfying and enduring.

2. Of their sufferings; I know thy tribulation and thy poverty; the persecution they underwent, even to the spoiling of their goods; for who will be faithful to Christ, must expect to go through many tribulations; but Jesus Christ takes particular notice of all their troubles. In all their afflictions he is affected, and he will recompense tribulation to those who trouble them, but to them that are troubled, rest with himself.

3. He knows the wickedness and the falsehood of their enemies; I know the blasphemy of them that say they are Jews, but are not; that is, (1.) Of those who pretend to be the only peculiar covenant people of God, as the Jews boasted themselves to be, even after God had rejected them: Or, (2.) Of those who would be setting up the Jewish rites and ceremonies, which were now not only antiquated, but abrogated; these may say that they only are the church of God in the world, when, indeed, they are the Synagogue of Satan. Observe, (1.) As Christ has a church in the world, the spiritual Israel of God, so the Devil has his Synagogue; those assemblies that are set up in opposition to the truths of the gospel, and that promote and propagate damnable errors, those who are set up in opposition to the purity and spirituality of gospel-worship, and promote and propagate the vain inventions of men, those rites and ceremonies, which never entered into the thoughts of God, and those assemblies which are set up to revile and persecute the true worship and worshippers of God, these are all Synagogues of Satan; he presides over them, he works in them, his interests are served by them, and he receives a horrid homage and honour from them. (2.) For the Synagogues of Satan to give themselves out to be the church or Israel of God, is no less than blasphemy. God is greatly dishonoured, when his name is made use of to promote and patronize the interests of Satan; and he has a high resentment of this blasphemy, and will take a just revenge on those who persist in it. 4. He foreknows the future trials of his people, and forewarns them of them and fore-arms them against them. (1.) He forewarns them of future trials; (v. 10.) The Devil shall cast some of you into prison, and ye shall have tribulation. The people of God must look for a series and succession of troubles in this world, and their troubles usually rise higher; they had been impoverished by their tribulations before, now they must be imprisoned. Observe, It is the Devil that stirs up his instruments, wicked men, to injure the children of God; these instruments are the Devil's tools, though they gratify their own sinful malignity, and know not that they are actuated by a diabolical malice. (2.) Christ fore-arms them against these approaching troubles: [1.] By his counsel; Fear none of these things: this is not only a word of command, but of efficacy, not only forbidding slavish fear, but subduing it, and furnishing the soul with strength and courage. The word of God being a sure and precious thing, would be alleviated and limited. First, They should not be universal; it would be some of them, not all, who should be cast into prison; those who were best able to bear it, and might expect to be visited and comforted by the rest. Secondly, They were not to be perpetual, but for a set time, and a short time, ten days; it should not be everlasting tribulation, the time should be shortened for the elect's sake. Thirdly, It should be to try them, not to destroy them; that their faith, and patience, and courage, might be proved and improved, and be found to honour and glory. [3.] By proposing and promising a glorious reward to their fidelity; (v. 10.) Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. Observe, First, The sureness of the reward; I will give thee. He has said it, that is able to do it; and he has undertaken that he will do it; they shall have the reward from his own hand, and none of their enemies shall be able to wrest it out of his hand, or to pull it from their heads. Secondly, The suitableness of it; 1. A crown, to reward their poverty, their fidelity, and their conflict. 2. A crown of life, to reward those who are faithful even unto death, are faithful till they die, and who part with life itself, in fidelity to Christ; that life, so worn out in his service, or laid down in his cause, shall be rewarded with another, and a much better life, that shall be eternal. III. The conclusion of this message, and that, as before, 1. With a call to universal attention, that all men, all the world, should hear what passes between Christ and his churches; how he commends them, how he comforts them, how he reproves their failures, how he rewards their fidelity; it concerns all the inhabitants of the world, and the inhabitants of God's dispensation; all the world may learn instruction and wisdom thereby. 2. With a gracious promise to the conquering Christian; (v. 11.) He that overcometh, shall not be hurt of the second death. Observe, (1.) There is not only a first, but a second death; a death after the body is dead. (2.) This second death is unspeakably worse than the first death, both in the dying pains and agonies of the former, and the agony of the heart with the mixture of support, and in the duration— it is eternal death, dying the death, to die, and to be always dying; this is hurtful indeed, it is fatally hurtful to all who fall under it. (3.) From this hurtful, this destructive death, Christ will save all his faithful servants; the second death shall have no power over those who are partakers of the first resurrection; the first death shall not hurt them, and the second death shall have no power over them. 12. And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges; 13. I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is; and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth. 14. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. 15. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. 16. Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth. 17. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

Here also we are to consider, 1. The inscription of this message. 1. Whom it was sent to; to the angel of the church of Pergamos. Whether this was a city raised up out of the Ruins of old Troy, a Troy nouvelle (as our Londen was once called,) or some other city of the same name, is neither certain nor material; it was a place where Christ had called and constituted a gospel-church by the preaching of the gospel, and the grace of his Spirit making the word effectual. 2. Who it was, that sent this message to Pergamos; the same Jesus who here describes himself as one that hath the sharp sword with two edges; (ch. 1. 16.) out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword.

Some have observed, that in the several titles of Christ which are prefixed to the several epistles, there is something suited to the state of those churches; as in that to Ephesus, what could be more proper to awaken and recover a drowsy and declining church, than to hear Christ speaking as one that held the stars in his hand, and walked in the midst of the golden candlesticks? &c.

The church of Pergamos was infested with men of corrupt minds, who did what they said, and said what they did, and so brought among the inhabitants of the church, and Christ, being resolved to fight against them by the word of his word, takes the title of him that hath the sharp sword with two edges. (1.) The word of God is a sword; it is a weapon both offensive and defensive, it is, in the hand of God, able to slay both sin and sinners. (2.) It is a sharp sword; no heart is so hard but it is able to wound it, no knot so close tied but it is able to cut it; it can divide asunder between the soul and the spirit, that is, between the soul and those sinful habits that by custom are become another soul, or seems to be essential to it. (3.) It is a sword with two edges; it turns and cuts every way; there is the edge of the law against the transgressors of that dispensation, and the edge of the gospel against the despisers of that dispensation;
there is an edge to make a wound, and an edge to open a festered wound in order to its healing; there is no escaping the edge of this sword; if ye turn aside to the right-hand, it has an edge on that side; if on the left-hand, ye fall upon the edge of the sword on that side; it turns every way.

II. From the context, this epistle is referred to the Corinthians, which from the remarks of the writer, is distinctly pointed out. This religious state of things in the world, the circumstance of the place where this church was planted, a place where Satan's seat was. As our great Lord takes notice of all the advantages and opportunities we have for duty by the places we dwell, so he takes notice of all the temptations and discouragements we meet with from the places where we dwell, and makes gracious allowances for them. This people dwell where Satan's seat was, where he has power to confound the world, ; his seat is in some places that are infamous for wickedness, error, and cruelty; some think that the Roman governor in this city was a most violent enemy to the Christians; and the seat of persecution is Satan's seat.

2. He commends their steadfastness; (v. 13.) Thou hast fasted my name, and hast not denied my faith. These two expressions are much of the same sense; the former may signify the effect, and the latter the cause or means. (1.) "Thou hast fasted my name; thou art not ashamed of thy relation to me, but accounted it thine honour that my name is named on thee, that, as the wife bears the name of the husband, so thou art called by my name; this thou hast fasted, as thine honour and privilege." (2.) That which has made thee thus faithful, is, the grace of faith; thou hast not denied the great doctrines of the gospel, nor departed from the Christian faith, and by that means thou hast been kept faithful. Our faith will have a great influence upon our faithfulness; men who deny the faith of Christ, may boast very much of their sincerity, and faithfulness to God and conscience; but it has been seldom known that those who let go the true faith, retain their fidelity; usually on that rock on which men make ship, they break. Where faith, they make ship, which is a condition of good conscience; and here our blessed Lord aggravates the fidelity of this church from the circumstance of the times, as well as of the place where they lived; they had been steadfast even in those days where Antipas his faithful martyr was slain among them: who this person was, and whether there be any thing mysterious in his name, we have no certain account; he was a faithful disciple of Christ, known for the sufficiency of his faith and fidelity with his blood in the place where Satan dwelt; and though the rest of the believers there knew this, and saw it, yet they were not discouraged nor drawn away from their steadfastness; this is mentioned as an addition to their honour.

3. He reproves them for their sinful failures; (v. 14.) But I have a few things against thee, because thou holdest not the doctrine of Babnaam, and them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. There were some who taught that it was lawful to eat things sacrificed to idols, and that simple fornication was no sin; they, by an impure worship, drew men into impure practices, as Babnaam did the Israelites. Observe, (1.) The filthiness of the spirit and the filthiness of the flesh often go together; corrupt doctrines and a corrupt worship often lead to a corrupt conversation. (2.) It is very lawful to fix the name of the leaders of any heresy upon those who follow them; it is the shortest way of telling whom we mean. (3.) To continue in communion with persons of corrupt principles and practices, is displeasing to God, draws a guilt and blame upon the whole society; they become partners of other men's sins. Though he has no power to punish the persons of men, either for heresy or immorality, with corporal penalties; yet it has power to exclude them from their holy communion; and if it do not so, Christ, the Head and Lawgiver of the church, will be displeased with it.

4. He calls them to repentance; (v. 16.) Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, &c. Observe here, (1.) Repentance is the duty of churches and communities as well as particular persons; they who sin together, should repent together. (2.) It is the duty of Christian societies to repent of other men's sins, as far as they have been necessary to them, though but so much as by connivance. (3.) When God comes to punish the corrupt members of a church, he rebukes that church itself for allowing and acquiescing in the evils thereof, as well as the sinners; it is a gospel-duty. (2.) It is the duty of churches and communities as well as particular persons; they who sin together, should repent together.

III. We have the conclusion of this epistle, where, after the usual demand of universal attention, there is the promise of great favour to those that overcome; (v. 17.) They shall eat of the hidden manna, and have the new name, and the white stone, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it. 1. The hidden manna, the influences and comforts of the Spirit of Christ in communion with him, coming down from heaven into the soul, from time to time, for its support, to let it taste something how saints and angels live in heaven; this is hidden from the rest of the world; a stranger intermeddles not with this joy; and it is laid up in Christ, the Ark of the covenant, in the holy of holies. 2. The white stone, with a new name engraved upon it: this white stone is absolution from the guilt of sin, alluding to the ancient custom of those acquitted on trial, and a black stone to those condemned. The new name is the name of adoption: adopted persons took the name of the family into which they were adopted: none can read the evidence of a man's adoption but himself; he cannot always read it; but, if he persevere, he shall have both the evidence of son-ship and the inheritance.

18. And after the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass; 19. I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first. 20. Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. 21. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not. 22. Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. 23. And I will kill her children with death: and all the churches shall know that I am he who searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works. 24. But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and who have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden. 25. But that ye have already hold fast till I come. 26. And be thou overcomer, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: 27. And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as I received of my Father. 28. And I will give him the morning star. 29. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

The form of each epistle is very much the same; and in this, as the rest, we have to consider the inscription, contents, and conclusion.

1. The inscription, telling us,

1. To whom it is directed; to the angel of the church of Thyatira, a city of the proconsular Asia, bordering upon Myria on the north, and Lydia on the south, a town of trade; from whence came the woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, who, being at Philippi in Macedonia, probably, about the business of her calling, heard Paul preach there, and God opened her heart, that she attended to the things that were spoken, and believed, and was baptized, and entertained Paul and Silas there: whether it was by her in Thyatira, a city of her own country, or by a gospel was brought into her own city Thyatira, is not certain; but that it was there, and successful to the forming a gospel-church, this epistle assures us.

2. By whom it was sent; by the Son of God, who is here described as having eyes like a flame of fire, and feet like as fine brass; his general title is here, the Son of God, that is, the eternal and only-begotten Son of God, which denotes that he has the same nature with the Father, but with a distinct and subordinate manner of subsistence. The description we have here of him, is in two characters: (1.) That his eyes are like unto a flame of fire, signifying his piercing, penetrating, perfect knowledge, a thorough insight into all persons, and all things; one who searches the hearts, and tries the reins of the children of men, (ver. 23.) and will make all the churches to know him as such. (2.) That his feet are like fine brass; that the goings of his providence are steady, awful, and all pure and holy; as he judges with perfect wisdom, so he acts with perfect strength and steadiness.

11. The contents, or subject-matter of this epistle, which, as the rest, includes,

1. The honourable character and commendation Christ gives of this church, ministry, and people; and this given by one who was no stranger to them, but well acquainted with them, and with the principles from which they acted. Now in this church Christ makes honourable mention, (1.) Of their charity; either more general, a disposition to do good to all men, or more special, to the household of faith; there is no religion where there is no charity. (2.) Their service, their ministration; this respects chiefly the officers of the church, who had laboured in the word and doctrine. (3.) Their faith, which was the grace that actuated all the rest, both their charity, and their service. (4.) Their patience; for those that are most charitable to others, most diligent in their places, and most faithful, must yet expect to meet with that which will exercise their patience. (5.) That which was lacking in these last years was that they were better than the first; this is an excellent character; when others had left their first love, and lost their first zeal, these were growing wiser and better: it should be the ambition and earnest desire of all Christians, that their last works may be their best works, that they may be better and better every day, and best at last.

8. A former proof for what was amiss; this is not so directly charged upon the church itself as upon some wicked seducers who were among them; the church's fault was, that she connived too much at them; these wicked seducers are compared to Jezebel, and called by her name; Jezebel was a persecutor of the prophets of the Lord, and a great patroness of idolaters and false prophets; the sin of these seducers was, they attempted to draw the servants of God from the ways of truth and to give them up to call themselves prophets, and so would claim a superior authority and regard to the ministers of that church. Two things aggravated the sin of these seducers, who, being one in their spirit and design, are spoken of as one person: (1.) They made use of the name of God to oppose the truth of his doctrine and worship; this very much aggravated their sin. (2.) They abused the patience of God to harden themselves in their wickedness; God gave them space for repentance, but they repented not. Observe, [1.] Repentance is necessary to prevent the sinner's ruin. [2.] Repentance requires time, a course of time, and time convenient; it is a great work, and a work of time. [3.] Where God gives space for repentance, he expects fruits meet for repentance. [4.] Where the space for repentance is lost, the sinner perishes with a double destruction.

Now why should the wickedness of this Jezebel be charged upon the church of Thyatira? Because that church suffered her to seduce the people of that city. But how could they help it? They had not, as a church, civil power to banish or imprison her; but they had ministerial power to censure and to excommunicate her: and it is probable that neglecting to use the power they had, made them sharers in her sin.

3. The punishment of this seducer, this Jezebel, ver. 22, 23. In these words is couched a prediction of the fall of Babylon: (1.) I will cast her into a bed, into a bed of pain, not of pleasure, into a bed of flames; and they who have sinned with her, shall suffer with her; but this may yet be prevented by their repentance. (2.) I will kill her children with death, that is, the second death, which doeth the work effectually, and leaves no hope of future life, no remission from those things; the second death, but only to shame and everlasting contempt.

4. The design of Christ in the destruction of these wicked seducers; and that was the instruction of others, especially of his churches; All the churches shall know that I am he that searcheth the reins and the hearts; and I will give to every one of you according to your works. God is known by the judgments that he executeth; and, but for them who would berike known, (1.) His infallible knowledge of the hearts of men, of their principles, designs, frame, and temper; their formality, their indifference, their secret inclinations to symbolize with idolaters. (2.) His impartial justice, in giving every one according to his work, that the name of Christians should be no protection, their churches should be no sanctuaries for sin and sinners.
5. The encouragement given to those who kept themselves pure and undefiled; (v. 24.) But to you I say, and to the rest, &c. Observe, (1.) What these socalled do their doctrines, depths, profound mysteries; amusing the people, and endeavouring to persuade them that they had a deeper insight into religion than their own ministers had attained to. (2.) What Christ called them, depths of Satan, satanical delusions and devices, diabolical mysteries; for there is a mystery of iniquity, as well as the mystery of godliness: it is a dangerous thing to despise the mystery of God; and it is as dangerous to receive the mysteries of Satan. (3.) How tender Christ is of his faithful servants! (v. 25.) "I will lay upon you no other burden; but that which you have already, hold fast till I come. I will not overburthen your faith with any new mysteries, nor your consciences with any new laws; I only require your attention to what you have received; hold that fast till I come, and I desire no more." Christ is coming to put an end to all the temptations of his people; and if they hold fast faith and a good conscience till he comes, all the difficulty and danger are over.

III. We now come to the conclusion of this message, v. 26—29. Here we have, 1. The promise of an ample reward to persevering, victorious believers, in two parts: (1.) Very great dominion over the rest of the world; power over the nations; which may refer either to the time when the empire should turn Christian, and the world be under the government of the Christian emperor, as in Constantine's time; or to the other world, when believers shall sit down with Christ on his throne of judgment, and join with him in trying and condemning and consigning over to punishment the enemies of Christ and the church. The upright shall have dominion in the morning. (2.) Knowledge and wisdom, suitable to such power and dominion; I will give him the Morning-star. Christ is the Morning-star; he brings day with him into the soul, the light of grace and of glory; and he will give his people that perfection of light and wisdom, that is requisite to the state of dignity and dominion that shall have the morning of the resurrection. 2. This epistle ends with the usual demand of attention; He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. In the foregoing epistles, this demand of attention comes before the concluding promise; but in this, and all that follow, it comes after, and tells us, that we should all attend to the promises as well as to the precepts that Christ delivers to the churches.

CHAP. III

Here we have three more of the epistles of Christ to the churches: I. To Sardis, v. 1. II. To Philadelphia, v. 7. III. To Laodicea, v. 14, to the end.

1. And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. 2. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. 3. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. 4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. 5. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. 6. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Here is, 1. The preface, shewing, To whom this letter is directed; to the angel of the church of Sardis, an ancient city of Lydia, on the banks of the mountain Timolus, saith to have been the chief city of Asia the Less, and the first city in that part of the world that was converted by the preaching of St. John; and, some say, the first that revolted from Christianity, and one of the first that was laid in its ruins, in which it still lies, without any church or ministry. 2. By whom this message was sent; the Lord Jesus, who here assumes the character of him that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; taken out of ch. 1. 4. where the seven Spirits are said to be before the throne. (1.) He hath the seven Spirits, that is, the Holy Spirit with his various powers, graces, and operations; for he is personally one, though efficaciously various; and may be said here to be seven, because he is the first cause of everything that is true and holy in the church and of the angels of the churches, to shew that to every minister, and to every church, there is a dispensation and measure of the Spirit given for them to profit withal; a stock of spiritual influence for that minister and church to improve, both for enlargement and continuance; which measure of the Spirit is not ordinarily withdrawn from them, till the forfeit it by misimprovement; churches have their spiritual stock and fund, as well as particular believers; and this epistle being sent unto a languishing ministry and church, therefore they are very fitly put in mind that Christ has the seven Spirits, the Spirit without measure, and in perfection, to whom they may apply themselves for the reviving of his work among them. (2.) He hath the seven stars, the angels of the churches; they are disposed of by him, as he pleases, which should make them faithful and zealous. He has ministers to employ, and spiritual influences to communicate to his ministers for the good of his church; the Holy Spirit usually works by the ministry, and the ministry will be of no efficacy without the Spirit; the same divine hand holds them both. 3. The body of this epistle; there is this observable in it, that whereas in the other epistles Christ begins with commanding what was good in the churches, and then proceeds to tell them what was amiss, in this (and in the epistle to Laodicea) he begins, 1. With a reproof, and a very severe one; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. HYPOCRISY, and a lamentable decay in religion, are the sins charged upon this church, by the Lord himself; he shows his well-will, and all her works. (1.) This church had gained a great reputation; it had a name, and a very honourable one, for a flourishing church; a name for vital, lively religion, for purity of doctrine, unity among themselves, uniformity in worship, decency, and order; we read not of any unhappy divisions among themselves; every thing appeared well, as to what falls under the observation of men. (2.) This church was not really what it was reputed to be; they had a name to live, but they were dead; there was a form of godliness, but not the power; a name to live, but not a principle of life; if there was not a total privation of life, yet there was a great deadness in their souls, and in their services; a great deadness in the spirits of their ministers, and a great deadness in their ministerials, in their praying, in their preaching, in their converse; and a great deadness in the people in hearing, in prayer, and in conversation; what little life was yet left among them, was, in a manner, ebbing, ready to die.

2. Our Lord proceeds to give this degenerate church the best advice; (v. 2.) Be watchful, and strengthen the things, &c. (1.) He advises them to be upon their watch; the cause of their sinful deadness and declension was, that they had let down their watch; whenever we are off our watch, we lose ground, and therefore must return to our watchfulness and holiness. (2.) He means, whatever is destructive to the life and power of godliness. (2.) To strengthen the things that remain, and that are ready to die. Some understand this of persons; there were some few who had retained their integrity, but they were in danger of declining with the rest. It is a difficult thing to keep up to the life and power of godliness ourselves, when we see a universal deadness and declension prevailing round about us. Or may be understood of practices, as it follows, I have not found thy works perfect before God, not filled up; there is something wanting in them; there is the shell, but not the kernel; there is the carcase, but not the soul; the shadow, but not the substance; the inward thing is wanting, thy works are hollow and empty; prayers are not filled up with holy desires, alms-deeds not filled up with true charitable acts, etc. Are not thy works suitable to the very soul of God? Are not there inward affections suitable to outward acts and expressions? Now when the spirit is wanting, the form cannot long subsist. (3.) To recollect themselves, and remember how they have received and heard; (v. 3.) not only to remember what they had received and heard, what messages they had received from God, what tokens of his mercy and favour towards them, what sense they had heard, how they knew they had received and heard, what impressions the mercies of God had made upon their souls at first, what affections they felt working under the word and ordinances, the love of their espousals, the kindness of their youth, how welcome the gospel and the grace of God were to them when they first received them; where is the blessedness they then spake of? (4.) To hold fast what they had received; that they might not lose it, for sinners are not sure of what they had lost so much of the life of religion, and had run the risk of losing all. 3. Christ enforces his counsel with a dreadful threatening in case it should be despised; (v. 3.) I will come unto thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know the hour. Observe, (1.) When Christ leaves a people as to his gracious presence, he comes to them in judgment; and his judicial presence will be visitation against sin, and Satan, and his judicial presence. (2.) His judicial approach to a dead declining people will be surprising; their deadness will keep them in security, and, as it procures an angry visit from Christ to them, it will prevent their discerning it, and preparing for it. (3.) Such a visit from Christ will be to their loss; he will come as a thief, to strip them of their remaining enjoyments, not by fraud, but in justice and righteousness, taking the fornication they have made of all to him. 4. Our blessed Lord does not leave this sinful people without some comfort and encouragement; in the midst of judgment he remembers mercy, (v. 4.) and here, (1.) He makes honourable mention of the faithful remnant in Sardis, though but small; Thou hast a few names in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments; they had not given into the prevailing corruptions and pollution of the day and place in which they lived. God takes notice of the smallest number of those who abide with him; and the fewer they are, the more precious in his sight. (2.) He makes a very gracious promise to them; They shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy; in the stole, the white robes of justification and adoption, and comfort; or in the white robes of honour and glory in the other world: They shall walk with Christ in the pleasant walks of the heavenly paradise; and what delightful converse will there be between Christ and them when they thus walk together! This is an honour proper and suitable to their integrity, which their fidelity has prepared them for, and which it is no way unbecoming Christ to confer on them; They that are white shall be clothed in a gospel-worthiness that is ascribed to them; not merit, but meekness; they who walk with Christ in the clear garments of real practical holiness here, and keep themselves unsullied from the world, shall walk with Christ in the white robes of honour and glory in the other world; this is a suitable reward. 3. We now come to the conclusion of this epistle, in which, as before, we have, 1. A great reward promised to them who are overcoming Christian, (v. 5.) and it is very much the same with what has been already mentioned; He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment; the purity of grace shall be rewarded with the perfect purity of glory; holiness, when perfected, shall be its own reward; glory is the perfection of grace, differing not in kind, but in degree; now to this is added another promise very suitable to the case; I will not blot his name out of the book of life, but will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. Observe, (1.) Christ has his book of life, a register and roll of all who shall inherit eternal life. (2.) The book of eternal election: (v. 6.) The book of remembrance of all those who have lived to God, and have kept up the life and power of godliness in evil times. (2.) Christ will not blot the names of his chosen and faithful ones out of this book of life; men may be enrolled in the registers of the church, as baptised, as making a profession, as having a name to live, and that name may come to be blotted out of the roll, when it appears it was but a name, a name to live, without spiritual life; such often lose the very name before they die, they are left of God to blot out their own names by their gross and open wickedness; but the names of those that overcome, shall never be blotted out; who is a watchful, watchful, watchful woman, and confess the names of the faithful who stand there, before God, and all the angels; he will do this as their Judge, when the books shall be opened; he will do that as their Captain and Head, leading them with him triumphantly to heaven, presenting them to the Father; Behold me, and the children that thou hast given me. How great will this honour and reward be! 2. The demand of universal attention finishes the message; and Christ adds, the words of his mouth are precious; men must give heed to all, take no note from men; that which may seem more particularly directed to one body of men, has something in it instructive to all.
are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. 10. Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. 11. Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. 12. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name. 13. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

We are now come to the sixth letter sent to one of the Asian churches; where observe,

I. The inscription, shewing, 1. For whom it was more immediately designed; the angel of the church of Philadelphia: this also was a city in the Lesser Asia, seated upon the borders of My sia and Lydia, and had its name from that brotherly-love for which it was eminent. We can hardly suppose that this name was given to it after it received the Christian religion, and that it was so called from that Christian affection that all believers have, and should have, one for another, as the children of one Father, and the brethren of Christ; but rather that it was its ancient name, on the account of the love and kindness which the citizens had, and shewed, to each other as a civil fraternity; this was an excellent spirit, and, when sanctified by the grace of the gospel, would render them an excellent church, as indeed they were, for here is no one fault found with this church, and yet, doubtless, there were faults in it of common infirmity, but love covers such faults.

2. By whom this letter was signed; even by the same Jesus who is alone the universal Head of all the churches; and here observe by what title he chooses to represent himself to this church; he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, &c. You have his personal character, he that is holy, and he that is true; holy in his nature, and therefore he cannot but be true to his word, for he hath spoken in his holiness; and you have also his political character, he hath the key of David, he openeth, and no man shuttest; he hath the key of the house of David, the key of government and authority in and over the church.

(1) Observe the acts of his government: [1.] He opens. He opens a door of opportunity to his churches, he opens a door of utterance to his ministers, he opens a door of salvation; and he opens a door of admission into the visible church, laying down the terms of communion, and he opens the door of admission into the church triumphant, according to the terms of salvation fixed by him. [2.] He shuts the door; when he pleases, he shuts the door of opportunity, and the door of utterance, and leaves obstinate sinners shut up in the hardness of their hearts; he shuts the door of the fellowship against unbelievers and profane persons; and he shuts the door of heaven against the foolish virgins who have slept away their day of grace, and against the workers of iniquity, how vain and confiding soever they may be.

(2) The way and manner in which he performs these acts, and that is absolute sovereignty, independent upon the will of men, and irresistible by the power of men; He openeth, and no man shuttest; he shuttest, and no man openeth; he works to will and to do, and when he works, none can let. These were proper characters for him, when speaking to a church that had endeavoured to be conformed to Christ in holiness and truth, and that had enjoyed a wide door of liberty and opportunity under his care and government.

II. The subject-matter of this epistle; where, 1. Christ puts them in mind of what he had done for them; (v. 8.) I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it. I have set it open, and kept it open, though there be many adversaries. Learn here, (1.) Christ is to be acknowledged as the Author of all the liberty and opportunity his churches enjoy. (2.) He takes notice, and keeps account, how long he has preserved their spiritual liberties and privileges for them. (3.) Wicked men envy the people of God their door of liberty, and would be glad to shut it against them. (4.) If we do not provoke Christ to shut this door against us, men cannot do it.

2. This church is commended; (v. 8.) Thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name. In this there seems to be encouraged and a brave remnant, a little strength, a little grace, which, though it be not proportionate to the wide door of opportunity which I have opened to thee, yet is true grace, and hast kept thee faithful. True grace, though weak, has the divine approbation; but though Christ accepts a little strength, yet believers should not rest satisfied in a little, but should strive to grow in grace, to be strong in faith, giving glory to God. True grace, though weak, would do more than the greatest gifts or highest degrees of common grace, for it will enable the Christian to keep the word of Christ, and not to deny his name. Obedience, fidelity, and a free confession of the name of Christ, are the fruits of true grace, and are pleasing to Christ as such.

3. Here is a promise of the great favours God would bestow on this church, v. 9, 10. This favour consists in two things: [1.] Christ promises to make this church's enemies subject to her. [1.] These enemies are described to be such as said they were Jews, but lied in saying so; pretended to be the only and peculiar people of God, but were really the synagogue of Satan. Assemblies that worship God in spirit and in truth, are the Israel of God; assemblies that either worship false gods, or the true God in a false manner, are the synagogues of Satan; though they may profess to the true people of God, their profession is false. [2.] Their subjection to the church is described; They shall worship at thy feet; not pay a religious and divine honour to the church itself, or to the ministry of it, but shall be convinced that they have been in the wrong, that this church is in the right, and is beloved of Christ, and they shall desire to be taken into communion with her, and that they may worship the same God, in the same manner. Shall this great change be wrought? By the power of God upon the hearts of his enemies, and by signal discoveries of his peculiar favour to his church; They shall know that I have loved thee. Observe, First, The greatest honour and happiness any church can enjoy, consist in the peculiar love and favour of Christ. Secondly, Christ can discover this his favour to his people in such a manner that their very enemies shall see it, and be forced to acknowledge it. Thirdly, This will, by the grace of Christ, soften the hearts of their enemies, and make them desirous to be admitted into communion with them.

(2.) Another instance of favour that Christ promises to this church, is perseverance in the most trying times, (v. 10.) and this as the reward of their past fidelity; To him that hath, shall be given. Here observe, [1.] The gospel of Christ is the word of his patience; it is the fruit of the patience of God to a sinful world, it sets before men the example of Christ in all his sufferings for men, it calls those who receive it to the exercise of patience in conformity to Christ. [2.] This gospel should be carefully kept by all that enjoy it; they must keep up to the faith and practice and worship prescribed in the gospel. [3.] After a day of patience we must expect an hour of temptation; a day of gospel-peace and liberty is a day of God’s patience, and it is seldom kept before men, and kept by them, as it is often followed by an hour of trial and temptation. [4.] Sometimes the trial is more general and universal; it comes upon all the world, and when it is so general, it is usually the shorter. [5.] They who keep the gospel in a time of peace, shall be kept by Christ in an hour of temptation; by keeping the gospel they are prepared for the trial; and the same divine grace that has made them fruitful in times of peace, will make them fruitful in persevere nce.

4. Christ calls the church to that duty which he before promised he would enable her to do, and that is, to persevere, to hold fast that which she had. (1.) The duty itself; "Hold fast that which thou hast; that faith, that truth, that strength of grace, that zeal, that love to the brethren; thou hast been possessed of this excellent treasure, hold it fast." (2.) The motives taken from the speedy appearance of Christ; "Behold, I come quickly. See, I am just a coming to relieve them under the trial, to reward their fidelity, and to punish those who fall away; they shall lose that crown which they once seemed to have a right to, which they hoped for, and pleased themselves with the thoughts of; the persevering Christian shall win the prize from backsliding professors, who once stood fair for it."

III. The conclusion of this epistle, v. 12, 13. Here, after his usual manner, our Saviour promises a glorious reward to the victorious believer, in two things: 1. He shall be a monumental pillar in the temple of God; not a pillar, to support the temple, (heaven needs no such props,) but a monument of the free and powerful grace of God, a monument that shall never be defaced nor removed, as many stately pillars erected in honour to the Roman emperors and generals are.

2. This monumental pillar there shall be an honourable inscription, as in those cases is usual: (1.) The name of God, in whose cause he engaged, whom he served, and for whom he suffered in this warfare; and the name of the city of God, the church of God, the new Jerusalem, which came down from heaven; on this pillar shall be recorded all the services the believer did to the church of God, how he asserted her rights, enlarged her borders, maintained her dignity and honour; this will be a greater name than Adi-Had, or Africa; a soldier under God in the wars of the church. And then another part of the inscription is,

(2.) The new name of Christ, the Mediator, the Redeemer, the Captain of our salvation; by this it will appear under whose banner this conquering believer was enlisted, under whose conduct he acted, by whose example he was encouraged, and under whose guidance he his hand, and came off victorious. The epistle is closed up with the demand of attention: "If that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches, how Christ loves and values his faithful people, how he commends, and how he will crown their fidelity.

14. And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the Beginning of the creation of God; 15. I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. 16. So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth: 17. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. 18. I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see. 19. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. 20. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. 21. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. 22. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

We are now come to the last and worst of all the seven Asian churches, the reverse of the church of Philadelphia; for as there was nothing reproved in that, here is nothing commended in this; and yet this was one of the seven golden candlesticks; for a corrupt church may be still a church. Here we have, as before,

I. The inscription, to whom, and from whom: 1. To whom; to the angel of the church of Laodicea; this was once a famous city near the river Lykus, had a wall of vast compass, and three marble theatres, and, like Rome, was built on seven hills. It seems, the apostle Paul was very instrumental in planting the gospel in this city, and from hence he wrote a letter, which he mentions in the epistle to Colossians, the last chapter, and sends salutations to them, as being not above twenty miles distant from Colosse. In this city was held a council in the fourth century, but it has been long since demolished, and lies in its ruins to this day, an awful monument of the wrath of the Lamb.

2. From whom was this message sent; here our Lord Jesus styles himself the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the Beginning of the creation of God. (1.) The Amen, one that is steady and unchangeable in all his purposes and promises, which are all yea and amen. (2.) The faithful and true Witness, whose testimony of God to men ought to be received and fully believed, and whose testimony of men to God will be fully believed and regarded, and will be a swift but true witness against all indifferent lukewarm professors. (3.) The Beginning of the creation of God, either of the first creation, and so he is the First; Cause, the Creator, and the Governor of it; or of the second creation, the church; and so he is the Head of that body, the First-born from the dead, as it is in ch. 1. 5. from whence these titles are taken. Christ, having raised up himself by his own divine power, as the Head of a new world, raises up dead souls to be a living temple and church to himself.

II. The subject-matter; in which observe,
1. The heavy charge drawn up against this church, ministers and people, by one who knew them better than they knew themselves; (v. 15.) Thou art neither cold nor hot, but worse than either; I would thou were cold or hot. Lukewarmness or indifference in religion is the worst temper in the world. If religion be a real thing; it is the most excellent thing; it should be in good earnest in it; if it be not a real thing, it is the vilest imposture, and we should be earnest against it. If religion be worth any thing, it is worth every thing; an indifference here is inexcusable. Why halt ye between two opinions? If God be God, follow him; if Balaam, (be God,) follow him. Here is no room for neutrality. An open enemy shall have fairer quarters than a perfidious neuter; and there is more hope of a turning heart of such. Christ expects that men should declare themselves in earnest either for him or against him.

2. A severe punishment threatened; I will spue thee out of my mouth. As lukewarm water turns the stomach, and provokes to a vomit, lukewarm professors turn the heart of Christ against them; he is sick of them, and cannot long bear them; they may call their lukewarmness charity, meekness, mildness, and a large heart; it is nauseous to Christ, and makes those so that allow themselves in it; they shall be rejected, and finally rejected; for far be it from the holy Jesus to return to that which has been thus rejected.

3. We have one cause of this indifference and inconsistency in religion assigned, and that is, self-conceit and self-delusion; they thought they were very well already, and therefore they were very indifferent whether they grew better or no; (v. 17.) Because thou sawest, I am rich, and increased with goods, &c. Here observe, what a difference there was between the thoughts they had of themselves, and the thoughts that Christ had of them.

(1.) The high thoughts they had of themselves; Thou sawest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; rich, and growing richer, and increased to that degree, as to be above all want or possibility of wanting. Perhaps they were well provided for as to their bodies, and that made them overlook the necessities of their souls; or they thought themselves well furnished in their souls; they had learning, and they took it for religion; they had gifts, and they took them for grace; they had wit, and they took it for true wisdom; they had ordinances, and they took up with them instead of the God of ordinances. How careful should we be not to put the cheat upon our own souls! Doubtless, there are many in hell, that once thought themselves to be in the way to heaven. Let us daily beg of God that we may not be left to flatter and deceive ourselves in the concerns of our souls.

(2.) The mean thoughts that Christ had of them; and he was not mistaken. He knew, though they knew not, that they were wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; naked in heart, and naked in religion; naked in works, and naked in faith; in the grate of their sins, and naked in the garment of justification, or sanctification; their nakedness both of guilt and pollution had no covering; they lay always exposed to sin and shame; their righteousnesses were but filthy rags; they were rags, and would not cover them; filthy rags, and would defile them; and they were naked, without house or harbour, for they were without God, and he has been the Dwelling-place of his people in all ages. It is a wretched state of men to have no room of safety, and all suitable accommodations. The riches of the body will not enrich the soul; the sight of the body will not enlighten the soul; the most convenient house for the body will not afford rest or safety to the soul; the soul is a different thing from the body, and must have accommodation suitable to its nature, or else in the midst of bodily prosperity it will be wretched and miserable.

We are told that they were given by Christ to this sinful people, and that, is, that they drop their vain and false opinion they had of themselves, and endeavour to be that really which they would seem to be; (v. 18.) I counsel thee to buy of me, &c. Observe, (1.) Our Lord Jesus Christ continues to give good counsel to those who have cast his counsels behind their backs. (2.) The condition of sinners is never desperate, while they enjoy the gracious calls and counsels of Christ. (3.) Our blessed Lord, the Counsellor, always gives the best advice, and that which is most suitable to the sinner's case; as here, [1.] These people were poor; Christ counsels them to buy of him gold tried in the fire, that they might be rich; he lets them know where they might have true riches, and how they might have them; where they might have them—from himself; he sends them not to the streams of Pactolus, nor to the mines of Potosi, but invites them to himself, the Pearl of great price. And how must they have this true gold from him? They must buy it. That seems to be unsaying all again. How can they that are poor, buy gold? Just as they may buy of Christ wine and milk, that is, without money and without price, Isai. 55. 1. Something indeed must be parted with, but it is nothing of a valuable consideration, it is only to make room for receiving true riches. Part with sin and self-sufficiency, and come to Christ with a sense of poverty and emptiness, that you may be filled with his hidden treasure. [2.] These people were naked; Christ tells them where they might have clothing, and such as would cover the shame of their nakedness. This they must receive from Christ; and they must only put off their filthy rags, that they might put on the white raiment that he had purchased and provided for them; his own apparel of his own dressing, for justification, and the garments of holiness and sanctification. [3.] They were blind; and he counsels them to buy of him eye-salve, that they might see; to give up their own wisdom and reason, which are but blindness in the things of God, and resign themselves to his word and Spirit, and their eyes shall be opened to see their way and their end, their duty and their true interest; a new and glorious scene would then open itself to their souls; which would be furnished with the most beautiful and excellent objects, and this light would be marvellous to them who were but just now delivered from the powers of darkness. This is the wise and good counsel Christ gives to careless souls; and if they follow it, he will judge himself bound in honour to make it effectual.
5. Here is added great and gracious encouragement to this sinful people to take the admonition and advice well that Christ had given them, v. 19, 20. He tells them, (1.) It was given them in true and tender affection; Whom I love, I rebuke and chasten. You may think I have given you harsh words and severe reproofs; it is all out of love to your souls. I would not have thus openly rebuked and corrected your sinful lukewarmness and vain confidence, if I had not been a Lover of your souls; had I hated you, I would have let you alone, to go on in sin till it had been your ruin. Sinners ought to take the rebukes of God's word and rod as tokens of his good-will to their souls, and should accordingly receive them, to provoke them to repentance and make them better; for the frowns and wounds of a friend than the flattering smiles of an enemy. (2.) If they would comply with his admonitions, he was ready to make them good to their souls; (v. 20.) Behold, I stand at the door and knock, &c. Here observe, (1.) Christ is graciously pleased by his word and Spirit to come to the door of the heart of sinners; he draws near to them in a way of mercy, ready to make them a kind visit. (2.) He finds this door shut against him; the heart of man is by nature shut up against Christ by ignorance, unbelief, sinful prejudices. (3.) When he finds the heart shut, he does not immediately withdraw, but he waits to be gracious, even till his head be filled with the dew. (4.) He uses all proper means to awaken sinners, and to cause them to open to him; he calls by his word, he knits up the impetuous of his Spirit, he sends their conscience. (5.) They who open to him, shall enjoy his presence, to their great comfort and advantage; he will sup with them, he will accept of what is good in them, he will eat his pleasant fruit, and he will bring the best part of the entertainment with him; if what he finds would make but a poor feast, what he brings will make up the deficiency; he will give fresh supplies of grace and comforts, and by stir up fresh workings of faith, joy, love, and delight; and in all this Christ and his repeating people will enjoy pleasant communion with each other. Alas! what do careless, obstinate sinners lose by refusing to open the door of the heart to Christ? III. We now come to the conclusion of this epistle; and here, as before, 1. The promise made to the overcoming believer. (1.) It is here implied, that though the church is said to be an oracle to bewitching the nations and overcome with lukewarmness and self-confidence, yet it was possible that by the reproofs and counsels of Christ they might be inspired with fresh zeal and vigour, and might come off conquerors in their spiritual warfare. (2.) That if they did so, all former faults should be forgiven, and they should have a great reward. And what is that reward? They shall sit down with me on my throne, as I also overcame, and sat with my Father on his throne, v. 21. Here it is intimated, (1.) That Christ himself had met with his temptations and conflicts. (2.) That he overcame them all, and was more than a conqueror. (3.) That, as the reward of his conflict and victory, he is sat down with God the Father on his throne, possessed of that glory which he had with the Father from eternity, but which he was placed very much to conceal on earth; leaving it, as it were, in the hands of the Father, that he might better use it and carry it as a crown upon his head; he would fulfill the work of a Saviour before he reassumed that manifestative glory; and having done so, then pignus repositum—he demands the pledge, to appear in his divine glory equal to the Father. (4.) That those who are conformed to Christ in his trials and victories, shall be conformed to him in his glory; they shall sit down with him on his throne, on his throne of judgment at the end of the world, upon the throne of glory to all eternity, shining in his beams by virtue of their union with him, and relating to him, as the mystical body of which he is the Head. 2. All is closed up with the general demand of attention, (v. 22.) putting all to whom these epistles shall come, in mind, that what is contained in them, is not of private interpretation, but intended only for the instruction, reproof, and correction of those particular churches, but of all the churches of Christ in all ages and parts of the world: and as there will be a resemblance in all succeeding churches to these, both in their graces and sins, so they may expect that God will deal with them as he dealt with these, which are patterns to all ages, what faithful and fruitful churches may expect to receive from God, and what those who are unfaithful may expect to suffer from his hand; yea, that God's dealings with his churches may afford useful instruction to the rest of the world, to put them upon considering, If judgment begin at the house of God, what shall the end of them be that do not obey the gospel of Christ? 1 Pet. 4. 17. Thus end the messages of Christ to the Asian churches; the epistolary part of this book. We now come to the prophetical part.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, the prophetical scene opens and the epistolary part opened with a vision of Christ, (ch. 1.) so this part is introduced with a glorious appearance of the great God, whose throne is heaven, and who is to be in heaven, and is now here upon the earth. This discovery was made to John, and in this chapter he, I. Records the heavenly sight he saw, v. 1-7. And then, II. The heavenly songs he heard, v. 8 to the end.

1. AFTER this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter. 2. And immediately I was in the Spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. 3. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine-stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. 4. And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. 5. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices. And there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God. 6. And before the throne there was a sea of glass, like unto crystal. And in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts, full of eyes before and behind. 7. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

We have here an account of a second vision, with which the apostle John was favoured. "After this," that is, "not only after I had seen the vision of Christ walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks, but after I had taken his messages from his mouth, and written and sent them to the several churches, according to his command, after this, I had another vision." Those who well improve the covenants they have had of God already, are prepared thereby for more, and may expect them.

I. The preparation made for the apostle's having this vision, 1. A door was opened in heaven. Whence we learn, (1.) Whatever is transacted on earth, is first designed and settled in heaven; there is the model of all the works of God; all of them are therefore before his eye, and he lets the inhabitants of heaven see as much of them as is fit for them to know nothing of future events; but what God is pleased to discover to them they are within the veil, till God opens the door. But, (2.) So far as God reveals his designs to us, we may and ought to receive them, and not pretend to be wise above what is revealed.

2. To prepare John for the vision, a trumpet was sounded, and he was called up into heaven, to have a sight there of the things which were to be hereafter. He was called into the third heaven (1.) as a way opened into the holiest of all, into which the sons of God may enter by faith and holy affections now, in their spirits when they die, and in their whole persons at the last day. (2.) We must not intrude into the secret of God's presence, but stay till we are called up to it.

3. To prepare for this vision, the apostle was in the Spirit; he was in a rapture, as before; (ch. 1. 10.) whether in the body, or out of the body, we cannot tell; perhaps he himself could not; however, all his affections were for time suspended, and his spirit was possessed with the spirit of prophecy, and wholly under a divine influence. The more we abstract ourselves from all corporeal things, the more fit we are for communion with God; the body is a veil, a cloud and clog to the mind in its transactions with God. We should as it were forget it when we go in before the Lord in duty, and be willing to drop it, that we may go up to him in heaven. This was the apperatus to the vision. Now observe,

II. The vision itself; it begins with the strange sights that the apostle saw, and they were such as these. 1. He saw a throne set in heaven, the seat of honour, and authority, and judgment. Heaven is the throne of God; there he resides in glory, and from thence he gives laws to the church, and to the whole world; and all earthly thrones are under his disposal, and thence proceed all the means of heaven. 2. He saw a glorious One upon the throne; the throne was not empty; there was one in it who filled it, and that was God, who is here described by those things that are most pleasant and precious in our world; his countenance was like a jasper and a sardine-stone; he is not described by any human features, so as to be represented by an image, but only by his transcendent brightness. The jasper is a transparent stone, which yet offers to the eye a variety of the most vivid colours, signifying the glorious perfections of God; the sardine-stone is red, signifying the justice of God; that essential attribute which he never divests himself of in favour of any, but gloriously exerts it in the government of the world, and especially of the church, through our Lord Jesus Christ. This attribute is displayed in pardoning as well as in punishing, in saving as well as in destroying. 3. He saw a rainbow above the throne; he was an everlasting covenant, the seal and token of the covenant of providence that God made with Noah and his posterity with him, and is a fit emblem of that covenant of promise that God has made with Christ as the Head of the church, and all his people in him; which covenant is as the waters of Noah unto God, an everlasting covenant ordered in all things, and sure. This rainbow looked like the emerald; the most prevailing colour was a pleasant green, to shew the reviving and refreshing nature of the new covenant. 4. He saw four and twenty seats round about the throne, not empty, but filled with four and twenty elders, presbyters, representing, very probably, the whole church of Christ in the Old-Testament and in the New-Testament state; not the ministers of the church, but rather the representatives of the people. Their sitting denotes their honour, rest, and satisfaction; their sitting about the throne, signifies their relation to God, their nearness to him, the sight and enjoyment they have of him, and their continual regard to him. They are invested with divine majesty, the righteousness of the saints, both imputed and inherent; they had on their heads crowns of gold, signifying the honour and authority given them of God, and the glory they have with him. All these may in a lower sense be applied to the gospel-church on earth, in its worshipping assemblies; and in the higher sense, to the church triumphant in heaven. 5. He perceived lightnings and voices proceed out of the throne; that is, the awful declarations that he makes to his church of his sovereign will and pleasure. Thus he gave forth the law on mount Sinai; and the gospel has not less glory and authority than the law, though it be of a more spiritual nature. 6. He saw seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are explained to be the seven Spirits of God, v. 5. The various gifts, graces, and operations of the Spirit of God in the churches of Christ, are then here dispensed according to the will and pleasure of him who sits upon the throne. He saw before the throne a sea of glass, like unto crystal. As in the temple there was a great vessel of brass filled with water, in which the priests were to wash when they went to minister before the Lord; and this was called a sea so in the gospel-church, the sea or laver for purification is the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, who cleanses from all sin, even from sanctuary-sins. In this all those must be washed, that are admitted into the glorious presence of God on earth, or his glorious presence in heaven. 7. He saw four animals, living creatures, between the throne and the circle of the elders, (as seems most probable,) standing between God and the people; these seem to signify the ministers of the gospel, not only because of this their situation nearer to God, and between him and the elders or representatives of the Christian people, and because fewer in number than the people; but as they are here described, (1.) By their mimicking lion-like courage, their great labour and diligence, in which they resemble the ox; their prudence and discretion becoming men, and their sublime affections and speculations, by which they mount up with wings like eagles toward heaven, (v. 7.) and these wings full of eyes within, to shew that in all their meditations and ministrations they are to act with knowledge and skill. (2.) By their members endued with holy, sanctifying sainthood, vigilance and circumspection. (3.) By their lion-like courage, their great labour and diligence, in which they resemble the ox; their prudence and discretion becoming men, and their sublime affections and speculations, by which they mount up with wings like eagles toward heaven, (v. 7.) and these wings full of eyes within, to shew that in all their meditations and ministrations they are to act with knowledge and skill. (4.) By their continual employment, and that is, praising God, and not ceasing to do so night and day. The elders sit, and are ministered unto; they stand, and minister, they rest not night and day. This now leads to the other part of the representation. 8. And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within; and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. 9. And when those beasts give
We have considered the sights that the apostle saw in heaven: now let us observe the songs that he heard, for there is in heaven not only that to be seen, which will highly please a sanctified eye, but there is that to be heard, which will greatly delight a sanctified ear. It is true concerning the church of Christ here, which is a heaven upon earth, and it will be eminently so in the church made perfect in the heaven of heavens. 1. He heard the song of the four living creatures, of the ministers of the church, which refers to the prophet Isaiah's vision, ch. 6. And here, (1.) They adore one God, the one only, the Lord God Almighty, unchangeable and everlasting. (2.) They adore three Holy Persons in this one God, the Father, the Word, Son, and the Holy Spirit; and these are one infinitely Holy and Eternal Being, who sits upon the throne, and lives for ever and ever. In this glory the prophet saw Christ, and spake of him. 2. He heard the adorations of the four and twenty elders, that is, of the Christian people represented by them; the ministers led, and the people followed, in the praises of God, v. 10, 11. Here observe, (1.) The Object of their worship was the same with that whoseworship ministers adored, him that sat on the throne, the eternal, ever-living God. The true church of God has one and the same Object of worship. Two different objects of worship, either co-ordinate or subordinate, would confound the worship, and divide the worshippers. It is unlawful to join in divine worship with those who either mistake or multiply the object. There is but one God, and he alone, as God, is worshipped by the church on earth, and in heaven forever. (2.) The acts of adoration. [1.] They fell down before him that sat on the throne; they discovered the most profound humility, reverence, and godly fear. [2.] They cast down their crowns before the throne; they gave God the glory of the holiness wherewith he had crowned their souls on earth, and the honour and happiness with which he crowns them in heaven. They owe all their graces and all their graces to his infinite bounty, so that his crown is infinitely more glorious than theirs, and that it is their glory to glorifying God. (3.) The words of adoration: they said, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power, v. 11. Observe, [1.] They do not say, We give thee glory, and honour, and power; for what can any creature pretend to give unto God? But the heavenly minds express the full consent of the minds of all the several parts of the church. In this they tacitly acknowledge, that God was exalted far above all blessing and praise; he was worthy to receive glory, but they were not worthy to praise, nor able to do it according to his infinite excellences. (4.) We have the ground and reason of their adoration, which is threefold. [1.] He is the Creator of all things, the first Cause; and none but the Creator of all things should be adored; no mere creature can be the object of religious worship. [2.] He is the Preserver of all things, and his preservation is a continual creation: they are created still by the sustaining power of God; all beings but God are dependent upon the will and power of God, and no dependent being must be set up as an object of religious worship. It is the part of the best dependent beings, to be worshippers, not to be worshipped. [3.] He is the final Cause of all things; for thy pleasure they are and were created. It was his will and pleasure to create all things; he was not put upon it by the will of another; there is no such thing as a subordinate creator, that acts under and by the will and power of another; and if there were, he ought not to be worshipped. As God made all things at his pleasure, he made them for his pleasure; to deal with them as he pleases, and to justify himself by them one way or other. Though he delights not in the death of sinners, but rather that they should turn and live, yet he hath made all things for himself, Prov. 16. 4. Now if these be true and sufficient grounds for religious worship, as they are proper to God alone, Christ must needs be God, one with the Father and Spirit, and be worshipped as such; for we find the same causality ascribed to him; (Col. 1. 16, 17.) All things were created by him, and for him, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist.

CHAP. V.

In the foregoing chapter, the prophetic scene was opened, in the sight and hearing of the apostle, and he had a sight of God the Father, and his Son, and the Holy Spirit, the King of the church. He saw God on the throne of glory and government, surrounded with his holy ones, and receiving their adorations. Now the counsels and decrees of God are set before the apostle, as in a book, which God held in his right hand; and this book is represented, 1. As sealed in the hand of God, v. 1. 6. II. As taken into the hand of Christ the Redeemer, to be unsealed and opened, v. 6, to the end.

1. And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals. 2. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? 3. And no man in heaven, nor in earth, nor under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. 4. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. 5. And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

Hitherto the apostle had only seen the great God, Governor of all things; now, 1. He is favoured with a sight of the model and methods of his government, as they are all written down in a book which he holds in his hand; and this we are now to consider as shut up and sealed in the hand of God. Observe, (1.) The designs and methods of Divine Providence are traced towards the church, and the world are stated and fixed; they are resolved upon and agreed to, as that which is written in a book. The great design is laid, every part adjusted, all determined and every thing passed into decree, and made a matter of record. The original and first draught of this book, is the book of God's decrees, laid up in his own cabinet, in his eternal mind: but there is a transcript of so much as was necessary to be known in the book of the seven seals, in general, and in the prophetic part of scripture especially, and in this prophecy in particular. (2.) God holds this book in his right hand, to declare the authority of the book, and his readiness and resolution to execute all the contents thereof, all the counsels and purposes therein recorded. (3) This book in the hand of God is shut up and sealed; it is known to none but himself, till he allows it to be opened. Known unto God, and to him alone, are all his works, from the beginning of the world; but it is his glory to conceal the matter as he pleases. The times and seasons, and their great events, he hath kept in his own hand and power. (4) It is sealed with seven seals. This tells us, with what unutterable treaths but counsels of God are laid, how impenetrable by the eye and intellect of the creature; and also points to us seven several parts of this book of God's counsels; each part seems to have its particular seal, and, when opened, discovers its proper events; these seven parts are not unsealed and opened at once, but successively, one scene of Providence introducing another, and explaining it, till the whole mystery of God's counsel and conduct be finished in the world.

2. He heard a proclamation made concerning this sealed book. (1) The crier was a strong angel: not that there are any weak ones among the angels in heaven, though there are many among the angels of the churches. This angel seems to come out, not only as a crier, but as a champion, with a challenge to any, or all the creatures, to try the strength of their wisdom in opening the counsels of God; and as a champion, he cried with a loud voice, that every creature might hear. (2) The cry or challenge proclaimed was, "Who is worthy to open the book, and to lose the seals thereof? v. 2. If there be any creature that thinks himself sufficient either to explain or execute the counsels of God, let him stand forth, and make the attempt." (3) None in heaven or earth could accept the challenge, and undertake the task: none in heaven; none of the angels, though they be before the throne of God, and the ministers of his providence; they with all their wisdom cannot dive into the decrees of God: none on earth; no man, the wisest or the best of men; none of the magicians and soothsayers; none of the prophets of God, any further than he reveals his mind to them: none under the earth; none of the fallen angels, none of the spirits of men departed, though they should return to our world; then Satan himself, with all his subtlety, cannot do it; the creatures cannot open it, nor look on it; they cannot read it, God can only do it.

3. He felt a great concern in himself about this matter; the apostle wept much; it was a great disappointment to him. By what he had seen in him who sat upon the throne, he was very desirous to see and know more of his mind and will: this desire, when not presently gratified, filled him with sorrow, and then swelled his eye with tears. He was comforted and encouraged to hope this sealed book should yet be opened. Here observe, (1.) Those who have seen most of God in this world, are most desirous to see more; and those who have seen his glory, desire to know his will. (2.) Good men may be too eager and too hasty to look into the mysteries of divine conduct. (3.) Such desires, not presently answered, turn to grief and sorrow; hope deferred makes the heart sick.

4. The apostle was comforted and encouraged to hope this sealed book should yet be opened. Here observe, (1.) Who it was, that gave St. John the hint; one of the elders. God had revealed it to his church. If angels do not refuse to learn from the church, ministers should not disdain to do it. God can make his people to instruct and inform their teachers when he pleases. (2.) Who it was, that would do the thing; the Lord Jesus Christ, called, the Lamb, the在市场上, the Offspring of Judah, the Son of Man, according to the man nature; alluding to Jacob's prophecy; (Gen. 49. 10.) and the root of David, according to his divine nature, though a branch of David, according to the flesh. He who is a middle person, God and man, and bears the office of Mediator between God and man, is fit and worthy to open and execute all the counsels of God toward men. Before he does in his mediatorial state and capacity, as the Root of David, and the Offspring of Judah; and as the King and Head of the Israel of God; and he will do it, to the consolation and joy of all his people.

6. And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beast and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

Here, I. The apostle beholds this book taken into the hands of the Lord Jesus Christ, in order to its being opened and executed by him. Where Christ is described, I. By his place and station; in the midst of the throne, and of the four beasts, and of the elders. He was on the same throne with the Father; he was nearer to him than either the elders or ministers of the churches. Christ, as Man and Mediator, is subordinate to God the Father, but is nearer to him than all the creatures, for in him all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily. The ministers stand between God and the people. Christ stands as Mediator between God and both ministers and people. The form in which he appeared to St. John, was called a Lamb here; he appears as a Lamb slain. He is a Lion, to conquer Satan; a Lamb, to satisfy the justice of God. He appears with the marks of his sufferings upon him, to shew that he intercedes in heaven, in the virtue of his satisfaction. He appears as a Lamb, having seven horns and seven eyes; perfect power to execute all the will of God, and perfect wisdom to understand it all, and to do it in the most effectual manner; for he hath the seven Spirits of God, he has received the Holy Spirit without measure, in all perfection of light, and life, and power, by which he is able to teach and rule all parts of the earth. 3. He is described by his act and deed; He came, and took the book that was opened, and of the right hand of him that sat on the throne; (v. 7.) not by violence, nor by fraud, but he prevailed to do it, (as v. 5.) he prevailed by his merit and worthiness, he did it by authority, and by the Father's appointment. God very willingly and justly put the book of his eternal counsels into the hand of Christ, and Christ as readily and gladly took it into his hand; for he delights to reveal and to do the will of his Father.

14. The apostle observes the universal joy and thanksgiving that filled heaven and earth upon this transaction. No sooner had Christ received this book out of the Father's hand, than he receives the plannses and adorations of angels and men, yea, of every creature. And indeed, it is just matter of joy to all the world, to see that God does not deal with men in a way of absolute power and unjust justice, but in a way of infinite love and mercy through the Redeemer. He governs the world, not merely as a Creator and Lawgiver, but as our God and Saviour. All the world has reason to rejoice in this.

The song of praise that was offered up to the Lamb on this occasion, consists of three parts, one sung by the church, the other by the church and the angels, the third by every creature.

1. The church begins the song with these words, being more immediately concerned in it; (v. 8.) the four living creatures, and the four and twenty elders, the Christian people, under their minister, lead up the chorus; where observe, (1.) The object of their worship—the Lamb, the Lord Jesus Christ; it is the declared will of God, that all men should honour the Son as they honour the Father; for he has the same nature. (2.) Their posture; they fell down before him; gave him worship. (3.) The form of worship, by the best and lowest adoration. (4.) The instruments used in their adorations; harps and vials; the harps were the instruments of praise, the vials were full of odours or incense, which signify the prayers of the saints: prayer and praise should always go together. (4.) The matter of their song; it was suited to the new state of the church, the gospel-state introduced by the Son of God.

2. They acknowledge the infinite fitness and worthiness of the Lord Jesus for this great work of opening and executing the counsel and purposes of God; (v. 9.) Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; every way sufficient for the work, and deserving of the honour. They mention the grounds and reasons of this worthiness; and though they do not exclude the dignity of his person as God, without which he had not the right of executing it, yet they do ascribe the merit of his sufferings, which he endured for them; these more sensibly struck their souls with thankfulness and joy. Here, First, They mention his suffering; Thou wast slain, slain as a Sacrifice, thy blood was shed. Secondly, The fruits of his sufferings: 1. Redemption to God; Christ has redeemed his people from the bondage of sin, guilt, and Satan; redeemed them through his blood, set them at liberty to serve him, and to enjoy him. 2. High exaltation; Thou hast made us to our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth, v. 10. Every ransomed slave is not immediately preferred to honour; he thinks it a great favour to be restored to liberty; but when the effect of God were made slaves by sin and Satan, in every nation of the world, Christ not only purchased their liberty for them, but the highest honour and preferment, made them kings and priests; kings, to rule over their own spirits, and to overcome the world, and the evil one; and he has made them priests, given them access to himself, and liberty to offer up spiritual sacrifices, and they shall reign on the earth; they shall with him judge the world at the great day.

3. The doxology, thus begun by the church, is carried on by the angel, and the four living creatures, and the four and twenty elders, and in conjunction with the church; (v. 11.) they are said to be innumerable, and to be the attendants on the throne of God, and guardians to the church; though they did not need a Saviour themselves, yet they rejoice in the redemption and salvation of sinners; and they agree with the church in acknowledging the infinite merits of the Lord Jesus as dying for sinners, and as the sole Mediator of the new and everlasting covenant, and as the mediatorial and mediatorial part of the whole creation; (v. 13.) heaven and earth ring with the high praises of the Redeemer, the whole creation fairs the better for Christ, by him all things consist; and all the creatures, had they sense and language, would adore that great Redeemer who delivers the creature from that bondage under which it groans, through the corruption of men, and the just curse denounced by the great God upon the world; for all things (whatsoever name, or whatever appellation) is made for the whole creation, is a song of blessing, and honour, and glory, and power; (1.) To him that sits on the throne, to God, as God; or to God the Father, as the first Person in the Trinity, and in the first in the economy of our salvation; and, (2.) To the Lamb, as the second Person in the Godhead, and the Mediator of the new covenant; not that the worship paid to the Lamb is of another nature, and inferior worship, for the very same honour and glory are in the same words ascribed to the Lamb, and to him that sits on the throne; their essence being the same, but their parts in the work of our salvation being distinct, they are distinctly adored. We worship and glorify one and the same God for our creation, and for our redemption.

We see how the church that began the heavenly anthem, most obvious; the properties of this book are cut, closed with their, Amen, and end as they began, with a low prostration before the Eternal and everlasting God. Thus we have seen this sealed book passing with great solemnity from the hand of the Creator into the hand of the Redeemer.

CHAP. VI.

The book of the divine counsels being thus lodged in the hand of Christ, he loses no time, but immediately enters upon the work of opening the seals, and publishing the contents; but this is done in such a manner, as still leaves the predictions very abstruse, and difficult to be understood. Hitherto, the waters of the sanctuary have been as those in Ezekiel's vision, only to the ankles, or to the knees, or the breast at least; but now it is to be a river to be a river that cannot be passed over; the visions which John saw, the epistles to the churches, the songs of praise, in the two foregoing chapters, had some things dark and hard to be understood; but now this book is opened, and divided into seven seals opened, seven trumpets sounding, and seven vials poured out. It is supposed that the opening of the seven seals discloses these providences that
AND I saw when the Lamb opened the first seal, and heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts, saying, Come and see. And I saw, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

Here, 1. Christ, the Lamb, opens the first seal; he now enters upon the great work of opening and accomplishing the purposes of God toward the church and the world. 2. One of the ministers of the church calls upon the apostle, with a voice like thunder, to come near, and observe what then appear, v. 2.

(1.) The Lord Jesus appears riding on a white horse: white horses are generally refused in war, because they make the rider a mark for the enemy; but our Lord Redeemer was sure of the victory and a glorious triumph; and he rides on the white horse of a pure but despised gospel, with great swiftness through the world.

(2.) He had a bow in his hand; the convictions impressed by the word of God are sharp arrows, they reach at a distance; and though the ministers of the word draw the bow at a venture, God can and will direct it to the joints of the harness; this bow, in the hand of Christ, abides in strength, and, like that of Jonathan, never returns empty.

(3.) A crown was given him, importing, that all who receive the gospel, must receive Christ as a king, and must be his loyal and obedient subjects; he will be glorified in the success of the gospel. When Christ was going to war, one would think a helmet had been more proper than a crown; but a crown is given him as the earnest and emblem of victory.

(4.) He went forth conquering, and to conquer. As long as the church continues militant, Christ will be conquering; when he has conquered his enemies in one age, men go on opposing, and Christ goes on conquering; and his former victories are pledges of future victories; he conquers his enemies in his people; their sins are their enemies, and his enemies; when Christ comes with power into their soul, he begins to conquer these enemies, and he goes on conquering, in the progressive work of sanctification; he conquers his enemies in the world, wicked men, some by bringing them to his foot, others by making them his footstool. Observe, From this seal opened, it is all done at once; we are ready to think, when the gospel goes forth, it should carry all the world before it, but it often moves with apparent slowness, and moves slowly; however, Christ will do his own work effectually, in his own time and way.

3. And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say; Come and see. And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword. 5. And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. 6. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and I saw, when he opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see. And I looked, and beheld a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

The three next seals give us a sad prospect of great and desolating judgments with which God punishes those who either refuse or abuse the everlasting gospel: though some understand them of the persecutions that befel the church of Christ, and others of the destruction of the Jews, they rather seem more generally to represent God's terrible judgments, by which he avenges the quarrel of his covenant upon those who make light of it.

1. Upon opening the second seal, to which John was called to attend, another horse appears, of a different colour from the former, a red horse; (v. 4.) this signifies the desolating judgment of war; he that sat upon this red horse, had power to take peace from the earth, and that the inhabitants of the earth should kill one another. Who this was, that sat upon the red horse, whether Christ himself, as Lord of hosts, or the instruments that he raised up to conduct the war, is not clear; but this is certain, (1.) That those who will not submit to the bow of the gospel, must expect to be cut in sunder by the sword of divine justice. (2.) That Jesus Christ rules and commands, not only in the kingdom of Grace, but of Providence. And, (3.) That the sword of war is a dreadful judgment; it takes away peace from the earth, one of the greatest blessings, and it puts men upon killing one another; men, who should love one another, and help one another, are, in a state of war, set upon killing one another.

2. Upon opening the third seal, which John is bid to observe, another horse appears, different from the former, a black horse, signifying famine, that terrible judgment; and he that sat on that horse, had a pair of balances in his hand, (v. 5.) signifying, that men should weigh with carefulness what they did, as was threatened; (Lev. 26. 26.) They shall deliver your bread to you by weight. That which follows in v. 6. of the voice that cried, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: 10. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? 11. And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled. 12. And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; 13. And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. 14. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were removed out of their places. 15. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; 16. And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: 17. For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

In the remaining part of this chapter, we have the opening of the fifth and the sixth seals.

1. The fifth seal: here is no mention made of any one who called the apostle to make his observation, either because the decorum of the vision was to be observed, and each of the four living creatures had discharged its duty of a monitor before; or because the events here opened lay out of the sight, and beyond the time, of the present ministers of the church, or because it does not contain a new prophecy of any future events, but rather opens a spring of support and consolation to those who had been, and still were under great tribulation for the sake of Christ and the gospel. Here observe,

1. The sight this apostle saw at the opening of the fifth seal; it was a very affecting sight; (v. 9.) I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: (v. 10.) And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? (v. 11.) And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled. (v. 12.) And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; (v. 13.) And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. (v. 14.) And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were removed out of their places. (v. 15.) And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; (v. 16.) And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: (v. 17.) For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

In the remaining part of this chapter, we have the opening of the fifth and the sixth seals.

1. The fifth seal: here is no mention made of any one who called the apostle to make his observation, either because the decorum of the vision was to be observed, and each of the four living creatures had discharged its duty of a monitor before; or because the events here opened lay out of the sight, and beyond the time, of the present ministers of the church, or because it does not contain a new prophecy of any future events, but rather opens a spring of support and consolation to those who had been, and still were under great tribulation for the sake of Christ and the gospel. Here observe,

...wallowing in their own blood. (4.) The stars of heaven should fall to the earth, (v. 13.) and that as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. The stars may signify all the men of note and influence among them, though in lower spheres of activity; there should be a general desolation. (5.) The heaven should depart as a scroll when it is being unrolled, so as to be read, that may intend, Their ecclesiastical state shall perish, and be laid aside for ever. (6.) Every mountain and island shall be moved out of their places. The destruction of the Jewish nation should affect and afflict all the nations round about, those who were highest in honour, and those who seemed to be best secured; it would be a judgment that should astonish all the world. This leads to, 2. The dread and terror that would seize upon all sorts of men in that great and awful day, v. 15. Neither authority, nor grandeur, nor riches, nor valour, nor strength, would be able to support men at that time; yea, the very poor slaves, who, one would think, had nothing to fear, because they had nothing to lose, would be all in amazement at that day. Here observe, (1.) The degree of their terror and astonishment should prevail so far as to make them, like distracted desperates, cast mountains to fall upon them, and to the hills to cover them; they would be glad to be no more seen; yea, to have no longer any being. (2.) The cause of their terror, and that was, the angry countenance of him that sits on the throne, and the wrath of the Lamb. Observe, (1.) That which is matter of displeasure to Christ, is so to God; they are so entirely one, that what pleases or displeases the one, pleases or displeases the other. (2.) Though God is invisible, he can make the inhabitants of this world sensible of his awful brows. (3.) Though Christ be a Lamb, yet he can be angry, even to wrath, and the wrath of the Lamb is exceeding dreadful; for if the Redeemer, that appeases the wrath of God, himself be our wrathful enemy, where shall we have a friend to plead for us? They perish without remedy, who perish by the wrath of the Redeemer. (4.) As men have their day of opportunity in the last day, in the seasons of grace, so God has his day of righteous wrath; and when that day comes, the most stout-hearted sinners will not be able to stand before him: all these terrors actually fell upon the sinners in Judea and Jerusalem in the day of their destruction, and they will all, in the utmost degree, fall upon importunate sinners, at the general judgment of the last day.

CHAP. VII.

The things contained in this chapter came in after the opening of the six seals, which foretold great calamities in the world; and before the sound of the seven trumpets, which gave notice of great corruptions arising in the church: between them comes in this comfortable chapter, which secures the greatest and most comforting blessings to the people of God in times of common calamity. We have, I. An account of the restraint laid upon the winds, v. 1. II. The sealing of the servants of God, v. 4. &c. III. The songs of angels and planets on this occasion, v. 9. The inscription of the honour and happiness of those who had faithfully served Christ, and suffered for him, v. 13, &c.

1. AND after these things I saw four angels standing upon the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. 2. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, 3. Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

Here we have an account of the restraint laid upon the winds. By these winds we suppose are meant those errors and corruptions in religion which would occasion a great deal of trouble and mischief to the church of God: sometimes the Holy Spirit is compared to the wind; here the spirits of error are compared to the four winds, contrary one to another, but doing much hurt to the church, the garden and vineyard of God, breaking the branches, and blasting the fruits of its plantation: the Devil is called the prince of the power of the air; i.e., by a great wind, overthrew the house of Job’s eldest son; errors are as wind, by which they who are unstable, are shaken, and carried to and fro, Eph. 4. 14. Observe, 1. These are called the winds of the earth, because they blow only in these lower regions near the earth; heaven is always clear and free from them. 2. They are restrained by the ministry of angels, standing on the four corners of the earth; intimating, that the spirit of error cannot go forth till God permits it, and that the angels minister to the good of the church by restraining its enemies. 3. Their restraint was only for a season, and that was, till the servants of God were sealed in their foreheads. God has particular care and concern for his own servants in times of temptation and corruption, and he has a way to secure them from the common infection; he first establishes them, and then he tries them; he has the timing of their trials in his own hand.

4. And I heard the number of them which were sealed; and there were sealed a hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel. 5. Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand. 6. Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Naphtali were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand. 7. Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand. 8. Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

We have here an account of the sealing of the servants of God; where observe, 1. To whom this work was committed—to an angel, another angel; while some of the angels were employed to restrain Satan and his agents, another angel was employed, and distinguished the faithful servants of God. 2. How they were distinguished—the seal of God was set upon their foreheads, a seal known to him, and as plain as if it appeared in their foreheads; by this mark they were set apart for mercy and safety in the worst of times. 3. The number of those that were sealed; where observe, (1.) A particular account of those that were sealed of the twelve tribes of Israel—twelve thousand out of every tribe, the whole sum amounting to a hundred and forty-four thousand: in this list the tribe of Dan is omitted, perhaps because they were greatly addicted to idolatry; and the order of the tribes is altered, perhaps according as they had been more or less distanced by God. Some take this to be a select number of the Jews who were reserved for mercy at the destruction of Jerusalem; others think that time was past, and therefore it is to be more generally applied to God’s chosen remnant in the world; but if the destruction of Jerusalem was not yet over, (and I think it is hard to prove that it was,) it seems more proper to understand this of the remnant of that people which God had reserved to bless the Gentiles as a church, only he who have a definite number for an indefinite. (2.) A general account of those who were saved out of other nations; (v. 9.) a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues: though these are not said to be sealed, yet they were selected by God out of all nations, and brought into his church, and there stood before the throne. Observe, [1.] God will have a greater harvest of souls among the Gentiles than he had among the Jews; more are the children of the desolate than of the married woman. [2.] The Lord knows who are his, and he will keep them safe in times of dangerous temptation. [3.] Though the church of God is but a little flock, in comparison of the wicked world, yet it is no contemptible society, but really large, and to be still more enlarged.

9. After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; 10. And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. 11. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, 12. Saying, Amen. Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

Here we have the songs of saints and angels on this occasion; where observe, 1. The praises offered up by the saints, (and, as it seems to me, by the Gentile believers,) for the care of God in reserving so large a remnant of the Jews, and saving them from infidelity and destruction. The Jewish church prayed for the Gentiles before their conversion, and the Gentile churches have reason to bless God for his distinguishing mercy to so many of the Jews, when the rest were cut off. Here observe, (1.) The posture of these praising saints; they stood before the throne, and before the Lord; before the Creator, and the Mediator. In acts of religious worship we come nigh to God, and are to conceive ourselves as in his special presence: and we must fan the grace of God by Christ: the throne of God would be inaccessible to sinners, were it not for a Mediator. (2.) Their habit; they were clothed with white robes, and had palms in their hands; they were invested with the robes of justification, holiness, and victory, and had palms in their hands, as conquerors used to appear in their triumphs; such a glorious appearance will the faith ful servants of God make at last, when they have fought the good fight of faith, and finished their course. (5.) Their employment; they cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God who sittheth upon the throne, and to the Lamb. This may be understood either as a hosannah, wishing well to the interest of God and Christ in the church, and in the world, or as a hallelujah, giving to God and the Lamb the praise of the great salvation; both the Father and the Son are joined together in these praises; the Father contrived this salvation, the Son purchased it; and they who enjoy it, must and will bless the Lord and the Lamb; and they will do it publicly, and with becoming fervour. 2. Here is the song of the angels; (v. 11, 12.) where observe, (1.) Their station—before the throne of God, attending on him, and about the saints, ready to serve them. (2.) Their posture, which is very humble, and expressive of the greatest reverence—they fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God. Behold the most excellent of all the creatures, who never sinned, who are before him continually, not only covering their faces, but falling down on their faces before the Lord! What humility then, and what profound reverence, become us vile, frail creatures, when we come into the presence of God! We should fall down before him; there should be both a reverential frame of spirit, and a humble behaviour, in all our addresses to God. (3.) Their praises; they cried, saying, Amen. The praises of the saints, said their Amen thereto; there is in heaven a perfect harmony between the angels and saints; and then they added more of their own, saying, Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen. Here, (1.) They acknowledge the glorious attributes of God, his wisdom, his power, and his might. (2.) They declare that for these his divine perfections he ought to be blessed, and praised, and glorified, to all eternity; and they confirm it by their Amen. We see what is the work of heaven, and we ought to begin it now, to get our hearts tuned for it, to be much in it, and to long for that world where our praises, as well as happiness, will be perfected. 3. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? And whence came they? 14. And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. 15. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne, shall dwell among them. 16. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. 17. For the Lamb, who is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Here we have a description of the honour and happiness of those who have faithfully served the Lord Jesus Christ, and suffered for him; where observe, 1. A question asked by one of the elders, not for his own information, but for John’s instruction: ministers may learn from the people, especially from aged and experienced Christians; the lowest saint in heaven knows more than the greatest apostle in the world. Now the question has two parts: (1.) What are these that are arrayed in white robes? (2.) Where came they? It seems to be spoken by way of admiration, as Cant. 3. 6. Who that cometh out of the wilderness? Faithful Christians deserve our notice and respect; we should mark the uprightness. 2. The answer returned by the apostle, in which he tacitly acknowledges his own ignorance, and sues to this elder for information; Thou knowest. Those who would gain knowledge, must not be ashamed to own their ignorance, nor to desire information from that source which is able to give it. 3. The account given to the apostle concerning that noble army of martyrs who stood before the throne of God with white robes, and palms of victory in their hands: and notice is taken here, of (1.) The low and desolate state they had formerly been in; they had been in great tribulation, persecuted by men, tempted by Satan, sometimes troubled in their own spirits; they had suffered the spoiling of their goods, the imprisonment of their persons, yea, the loss of their lives. The way to heaven lies through many tribulations; but tribulation, how great soever, shall not separate us from the love of God. Tribulation, when gone through well, will make heaven more welcome and more glorious. (2.) The means by which they had been prepared for the great honour and happiness they now enjoyed; (v. 14.) they had washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. It is not the blood of the meanest of ourselves, but the blood of the Lamb, that can wash away sin, and make the soul pure and clean in the sight of God; other blood stains, this is the only blood that makes the robes of the saints white and clean. (3.) The blessedness to which they are now advanced, being thus prepared for it. (1.) They are happy in their station, for they are before the throne of God, and serve him night and day among them; they are in that presence where there is fulness of joy. (2.) They are happy in their employment, for they serve God continually, and that without weakness, drowsiness, or weariness; heaven is a state of service, though not of suffering; it is a state of rest, but not of sloth; it is a pleasing, delightful rest. (3.) They are happy in their freedom from all the inconveniences of this present life; from want, and want, and want, and want. They hunger and thirst no more; all their wants are supplied, and all the uneasiness caused thereby is removed. Secondly, From all sickness and pain; They shall never be scorched by the heat of the sun any more. (4.) They are happy in the love and conduct of the Lord Jesus; He shall feed them, he shall lead them to living fountains of waters, he shall put them into the possession of every thing that is good and pleasant; and to their joy, before they shall hunger and thirst no more. (5.) They are happy in being delivered from all sorrow, or occasion of it; God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. They have formerly had their sorrows, and shed many tears, both upon the account of sin and affliction; but God himself, with his own gentle and gracious hand, will wipe those tears away. He will make it more for ever; and they would not have been without these tears, when God comes to wipe them away; in this he deals with them as a tender father who finds his beloved child in tears, he comforts him, he wipes his eyes, and turns his sorrow into rejoicing; this should moderate the Christian’s sorrow in his present state, and support him under all the troubles of it; for they that sow in tears, shall reap in joy; and they that now go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them.
CHAP. VIII.

We have already seen what occurred upon opening six of the seals; we now come to the opening of the seventh, which introduced the sounding of the seven trumpets; a direful scene now opens. Most expositors agree, that the seven seals represent the interval between the apostle's time and the reign of Constantine, but that the seven trumpets are designed to represent the rise of antichrist, some time after, and for some time before, the Christian church has flourished. I. The preface, or prelude, to the sounding of the trumpets, v. 1. 6. II. The sounding of four of the trumpets, v. 7, &c.

1. And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. 2. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets. 3. And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer, and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. 4. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. 5. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth; and there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings, and an earthquake. 6. And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

In these verses we have the prelude to the sounding of the trumpets in several parts: 1. The opening of the last seal; this was to introduce a new set of prophetical iconisms and events; there is a continued chain of providence, one part linked to another, (where one ends, another begins,) and though they may differ in nature and in time, they all make up one wise, well-connected, and uniform design in the hand of God. 2. A preparation of incense in heaven for the seven trumpets, for the space of half an hour, which may be understood either, (1.) Of the silence of peace, that for this time no complaints were sent up to the ear of the Lord God of sabaoth, all was quiet and well in the church, and therefore all silent in heaven; for whenever the church on earth cries, through oppression, that cry comes up to heaven, and resounds there; or, (2.) A silence of expectation; great things were upon the wheel of Providence, and the church of God, both in heaven and earth, stood silent, until they came down, to see what God was doing, according to that of Zech. 2. 13. Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord, for he is risen up out of his holy habitation. And elsewhere, Be still, and know that I am God. 3. The trumpets were delivered to the angels, who were to sound them. Still the angels are employed as the wise and willing instruments of Divine Providence, and they are furnished with all their materials and instructions from God our Saviour. As the angels of the churches are to sound the trumpet of the gospel, the angels of heaven are to sound the trumpet of Providence, and every one has his part given him. 4. To prepare for this, another angel must first offer incense, v. 5. It is very probable that this other angel is the Lord Jesus, the High Priest of the church, who is here represented in his sacerdotal office, having a golden censer, and much incense, a fulness of merit in his own glorious person, and this incense he was to offer up, with the prayers of all the saints, upon the golden altar of his divine nature. Observe, (1.) All the saints are a praying people; none of the children of God are born dead, a Spirit of grace is always a Spirit of adoption and supplication, teaching us to cry, Abba, Father, Ps. 32. 6. For this, shall every one that is greatly pray unto thee. (2.) Times of danger should be praying times, and so should times of great expectation; both our fears and our hopes should put us upon prayer; and where the interest of the church of God is deeply concerned, the hearts of the people of God to prayer should be greatly enlarged. (3.) The prayers of the saints themselves stand in need of the incense and intercession of Christ to make them acceptable and effectual, and there is provision made by Christ for that purpose; he has his incense, his censer, and his altar; he is all himself to his people. (4.) The prayers of the saints come up before God in a cloud of incense; no prayer, thus recommended, was ever denied audience and acceptance. 5. These prayers that were thus accepted in heaven, produced great changes upon earth, in return to them; the same angel that in his censer offered up the prayers of the saints, in the same censer took of the fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth, and this presently caused strange commotions, voices, and thunders, and lightnings, and an earthquake; these were the answers God gave to the prayers of the saints, and tokens of his anger against the world, and that he would greatly treat the nations, to avenge himself and his people of their enemies; and now all things being thus prepared, the angels discharge their duty.

7. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of the trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up. 8. And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood; 9. And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. 10. And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning, as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; 11. And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter. 12. And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise. 13. And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabiters of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpets of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

Observe, 1. The first angel sounded the first trumpet, and the events which followed were very dismal; (v. 7.) There followed hail and fire mingled. with blood, &c. Here was a terrible storm; but whether it is to be understood of a storm of heresies, a mixture of monstrous errors falling on the church, (for in that age Arianism prevailed,) or a storm or tempest of war falling on the civil state, expositors are not agreed. Mr. Mede takes it to be meant of the Gothic inundation that broke in upon the empire in the year 395, the same year that Theodosius died, when the northern nations, under Alaricus, king of the Goths, brake in upon the western parts of the empire. However, there is another opinion. (1.) It was a very terrible storm—fire, and hail, and blood; a strange mixture! (2.) The limitation of it; it fell on the third part of the trees, and on the third part of the grass, and blasted and burnt it up; that is, say some, upon the third part of the clergy, and the third part of the laity; or, as others who take it to fall upon the civil state, upon the third part of the great men, and upon the third part of the common people. Another upon the Romans, 137 years, which was a third part of the then known world, or upon a third part of that empire. The most severe calamities have their bounds and limits set them by the great God.

2. The second angel sounded, and the alarm was followed, as in the first, with terrible events; (v. 8.) a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea, and there was a great noise of thunder, and of much lightning; and this mountain some understand the leader or leaders of the heretics; others, as Mr. Mede, the city of Rome, which was five times sacked by the Goths and Vandals, within the compass of 137 years; first by Alaricus, in the year 410, with great slaughter and cruelty. In these calamities, a third part of the people (called here the sea or collection of waters) were destroyed; here was still a limitation to the third part of the waters, the third part of the great men, and the third part of the common people. This storm fell heavy upon the maritime and merchandising cities and countries of the Roman empire.

3. The third angel sounded, and the alarm had the like effects as before; (v. 10.) There fell a great star from heaven, &c. Some take this to be a political star, some eminent governor, and they apply it to Augustus, who was chosen to restore the empire to its place over a thousand years ago. Others take it to be an ecclesiastical star, some eminent person in the church, compared to a burning lamp, and they fix it upon Pelagius, who proved about this time a flaming star, and greatly corrupted the churches of Christ. Observe, (1.) Where this star fell—upon a third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters, v. 10. (2.) What effect it had upon them; it turned those streams and springs into wormwood, made the water of the sea bitter, caused the fountains to become wormwood, that men were poisoned by them; either the laws, which are springs of civil liberty and property, and safety, were poisoned by arbitrary power; or the doctrines of the gospel, the springs of spiritual life, refreshment, and vigour, to the souls of men, were so corrupted and embittered by a mixture of dangerous errors, that the souls of men found their ruin where they sought for their refreshment.

4. The fourth angel sounded, and the alarm was followed with further calamities. Observe, (1.) The nature of this calamity; it was darkness; it fell therefore upon the great luminaries of the heaven, that give light to the world—the sun, and the moon, and the stars; either the guides and governors of the church, or of the state, who are placed in higher orbs than the people, and are to dispense light and light should not be shut out of their meridian; (2.) The limitation; it was confined to a third part of these luminaries; there was some light both of the sun by day, and of the moon and stars by night, but it was only a third part of what they had before. Without determining what is matter of controversy in these points among learned men, we rather choose to make these plain and practical remarks: [1.] Where the gospel comes to a people, and is but coldly received, and has not its proper effects upon their hearts and lives, it is usually followed with dreadful judgments. [2.] God gives warning to men of his judgments before he sends them; he sounds an alarm by the written word, by ministers, by men's own consciences, and by the signs of the times; so that if a people be surprised, it is their own fault. [3.] The anger of God against a people makes dreadful work among them; it embitters all their comforts, and makes even life itself bitter and burtensome. [4.] God does not in this world stir up all his wrath, but sets bounds to the most terrible judgments. [5.] Corruption of doctrine and worship in the church, are themselves great judgments, and the usual causes and tokens of other judgments coming on a people.

5. Before the other three trumpets are sounded, here is solemn warning given to the world, how terrible the calamities would be, that should follow them, and how miserable those times and places would be, on which they fell, v. 13. First, The messenger was an angel flying in the midst of heaven, as in haste, and coming on an awful errand. Secondly, The message was a denunciation of further and greater woe and misery than the world had hitherto endured. Here are three woes, to shew how much the calamities coming should exceed those that had been already, or to hint how every one of the three succeeding trumpets should introduce its particular and distinct calamity. If lesser judgments do not take effect, but the church and the world grow worse under them, they must expect greater; and God will be known by the judgments that be upon men; and he expects, when he comes to punish the world, the inhabitants thereof should tremble before him.

CHAP. IX.

In this chapter, we have an account of the sounding of the fifth and sixth trumpets, the appearances that attended them, and the events that were to follow; the fifth trumpet, v. 11. 12. the sixth, v. 13, &c.

1. AND the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit. 2. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. 3. And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power. 4. And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree: but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. 5. And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man. 6. And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them. 7. And the shapes of the locusts were like... unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men. 3. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions. 9. And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. 10. And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months. 11. And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon. 12. One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

Upon the sounding of this trumpet, the things to be observed are, 1. A star falling down from heaven to the earth. Some think this star represents some eminent bishop in the Christian church, some angel of the church; for in the same way of special invocation by which pastors are called stars, the church is called heaven; but who this is, expositors do not agree. Some understand it of Boniface the third bishop of Rome, who assumed the title of universal bishop, by the favour of the emperor Phocas, who, being a usurper and tyrant in the state, allowed Boniface to be so in the church, as the reward of his flattery. 2. To this fallen star was given the key of the bottomless pit. Having now come down from heaven to earth, he becomes a minister of Christ, he becomes the Antichrist, the minister of the Devil; and by the permission of Christ, who had taken from him the keys of the church, he becomes the Devil's turnkey, to let loose the powers of hell against the churches of Christ. 3. Upon the opening of the bottomless pit there arose a great smoke, which darkened the sun and the air. The devils are the powers of darkness, hell is the place of darkness. The Devil carries on his designs by blinding the eyes of men, by extinguishing the spiritual knowledge, and promoting ignorance and error; he first deceives men, and then destroys them; wretched souls follow him in the dark, or they durst not follow him. 4. Out of this dark smoke there came a swarm of locusts, one of the plagues of Egypt, the Devil's emissaries headed by antichrist, all the root and rabble of antichristian orders, to promote superstition, idolatry, error, and cruelty; and these had, by the just permission of God, power to hurt those who had not the mark of God in their foreheads. 5. The hurt they were to do them, was not a bodily, but a spiritual hurt; they should not in a military way destroy all by fire and sword; the trees and the grass should be untouched, and those they hurt, should not be slain; it should not be a persecution, but a secret poison and infection in their souls, which should rob them of their purity, and afterward of their peace. Here's a poison in the soul, working slowly and secretly, but will be bitterness in the end. 6. They had no power so much as to hurt those who had the seal of God in their foreheads. God's electing, effectual, distinguishing grace will preserve his people from total and final apostasy. 7. The power given to these factors for hell is limited in point of time, five months, a certain season, and but a short season, though how short we cannot tell; gospel-seasons have their limits, and times of seduction are limited too. 8. Though it would be short, it would be very sharp, insomuch that those who were made to feel the malignity of this poison in their consciences, would be weary of their lives; v. 6. A wounded spirit who can bear? 9. These locusts were of a monstrous size and shape, v. 7, 8, &c. They were equipt for their work like horses prepared to battle. (1.) They pretended to great authority, and seemed to be assured of victory; They had crowns like gold on their heads; it was not true, but a counterfeit authority. (2.) They had the shew of wisdom and sagacity, the face of men, though the spirit of devils. (3.) They had all the allurements of seeming beauty, to insnare and defile the minds of men, hair like women; their way of worship was very gaudy and ornamental. (4.) Though they appeared with the tenderness of women, they had the teeth of lions, were really cruel creatures. (5.) They had the defence and protection of earthly powers, breastplates of iron. (6.) They made a mighty noise in the world, they flew about from one country to another, and the noise of their motion was like that of an army with chariots and horses. (7.) Though at first they soothed and flattered men with a fair appearance, there was a sting in their tails; the cup of their abominations contained that, which, though luscious at first, would at length bite like a serpent, and sting like an adder. (8.) The king and commander of this hellish squadron is here described, and called an angel. As an angel, so he was the nature of an angel, once one of the angels of heaven. (2.) The angel of the bottomless pit; an angel still, but a fallen angel, fallen into the bottomless pit, vastly large, and out of which there is no recovery. (3.) In these infernal regions he is a sort of prince and governor, and has the powers of darkness under his rule and command. (4.) His true name is Abaddon, Apollyon—a destroyer, for that is his business, his design, and employment, to which he diligently attends, in which he is very successful, and takes the horrid hellish pleasure; it is about this destroying work that he sends out his emissaries and armies to destroy the souls of men. And now here we have the end of one woe; and where one ends, another begins.

13. And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God, 14. Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates. 15. And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men. 16. And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them. 17. And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinet, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone. 18. By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire and by the smoke and by the brimstone which issued out of their mouths. 19. For their power is in their mouths, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.
And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues, yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk: 21. Neither repented they of their murders, or of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, or of their thefts.

Here let us consider the preface to this vision, and then the vision itself. 1. The preface to this vision; (v. 13, 14.) A voice was heard from the horns of the golden altar; where observe, 1. The power of the church's enemy is restrained till God gives the word to have them turned loose. 2. When nations are ripe for punishment, those instruments of God's anger that were before restrained, are now let loose upon them, v. 14. 3. The instruments that God makes use of to punish a people, may sometimes lie at a great distance from them, so that no danger may be apprehended from them. These four messengers of divine judgment lay bound in the river Euphrates, a general, mighty, vast power, on the brink of the Turkish power had its rise, which seems to be the story of this vision.

II. The vision itself; (v. 15, 16.) And the four angels that had been bound in the great river Euphrates, were now loosed. And here observe, 1. The time of their military operations and executions is limited to an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year. Prophetic characters of time are hardly to be understood by us, though generally the time is fixed to an hour, when it shall begin, and when it shall end; and how far the execution shall prevail, even to a third part of the inhabitants of the earth. God will make the wrath of man praise him, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain. 2. The army that was to execute this great commission, is mustered, and the number found to be of hosts up to two hundred thousand thousand; but we are left to guess what the infantry must be. In general, it tells us, the armies of the Mahometan empire should be vastly great; and so it is certain they were. 3. Their formidable equipage and appearance, v. 17. As the horses were fierce, like lions, and eager to rush into the battle; so they who sat upon them, were clad in bright and costly armour, with all the ensigns of martial courage, zeal, and resolution. 4. The description of the chariots, or carriages made in the Roman empire, which was now become anti-christian; a third part of them were killed; they went as far as their commission suffered them, and they could go no further. 5. Their artillery, by which they made such slaughter, described by fire, smoke, and brimstone, issuing out of the mouths of their horses, and the stings that were in their tails. It is Mr. Mede's opinion, that this is a prediction of great guns, those instruments of cruelty which men made to make such destruction: he observes, These were first used by the Turks at the siege of Constantinpole, and, being new and strange, were very terrible, and did great execution. However, here seems to be an allusion to what is mentioned in the former vision, that, as antichrist had his forces of a spiritual nature, like scorpions poisoning the minds of men with error and idolatry; so the Turks, who were raised up to promote antichristianism, may use their scorpions and their stings too, to hurt and kill their bodies, who had been the murderers of so many souls. 6. And lastly, Observe the impenitency of the antichristian generation under these dreadful judgments; (v. 20.) the rest of the men who were not killed, repented not, they still persisted in those sins for which God was so severely punishing them; which were, (1.) Their idolatry; they would not cast away their images, though they could do them no good, could neither see, nor hear, nor walk. (2.) Their murders, (v. 21.) which they had committed upon the saints and servants of Christ. Popery is a bloody religion, and seems resolved to continue such. (3.) Their sorceries; they have their charms, and magic arts, and rites in exorcism and other things. (4.) Their fornication; they allow both spiritual and carnal impurity, and promote it in themselves and others. (5.) Their thefts; they have by unjust means heaped together a vast deal of wealth, to the injury and impoverished of families, cities, princes, and nations. These are the flagrant crimes of anti-christ and his agents; and though God has revealed his wrath from heaven against them, they are obstinate, hardened, and impenitent, and judicially so, for they must be destroyed. From this sixth trumpet learn, [1.] God can make one enemy of the church to be a scourge and plague to another. [2.] He who is the Lord of hosts, has vast armies at his command, to serve his own purposes. [3.] The most formidable powers have limits set them, which they cannot transgress. [4.] When God's judgements are prepared, he brings in as his herald, he expects the inhabitants thereof should repent of sin, and return to God's righteousness. [5.] Impunity under divine judgments is an iniquity that will be the ruin of sinners; for where God judges, he will overcome.

CHAP. X.

This chapter is an introduction to the latter part of the prophesies of this book. Whether what is contained between this and the sounding of the seventh trumpet, (ch. 11. 15.) be a distinct prophecy from the former, or only a more general account of some of the principal things included in the other, is disputed by our curious inquirers into these abstruse writings. However, here we have, I. A remarkable description of a very glorious angel with an open book in his hand, v. 1. 3. II. An account of seven thunders which the apostle heard, as echoing to the voice of this angel, and communicating some discoveries, which the apostle was not yet allowed to write, v. 4. III. The solemn oath taken by him who had the book in his hand, v. 5. 7. IV. The charge given to the apostle, and observed by him, v. 8. 11.

1. A ND I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire: 2. And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth, 3. And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices. 4. And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not. 5. And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, 6. And sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer: 7. But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

Here we have an account of another vision the apostle was favoured with, between the sounding of the sixth trumpet and that of the seventh. And we observe,

1. The person who was principally concerned in communicating this discovery to John—an angel from heaven, another mighty angel; who is so set forth as would induce one to think it could be no other than our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. (1.) He was clothed with a cloud; he vails his glory, which is too great for mortality to behold; and he throws a veil upon his dispensation, and cloths, and covers, and hides, and hides it, (2.) A rainbow was upon his head; he is always mindful of his covenant; and when his conduct is most mysterious, yet it is perfectly just and faithful. (3.) His face was as the sun, all bright, and full of lustre and majesty, ch. 1. 16. (4.) His feet were as pillars of fire; all his ways, both of grace and providence, are pure and steady.

2. His station and posture; he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot upon the earth; to shew the absolute power and dominion he had over the world. And he held in his hand a little book opened, probably the same that was before sealed, but was now opened, and gradually fulfilled by him.

3. His awful voice; He cried aloud, as when a lion roareth; (v. 5.) and his awful voice was echoed by seven thunders, seven solemn and terrible ways of discovering the mind of God.

4. The prohibition given to the apostle, that he should not publish, but conceal, what he had learned from the seven thunders, v. 4. The apostle was for preserving and publishing every thing he saw and heard in these visions, but the time was not yet come.

5. The solemn oath taken by this mighty angel.

6. The voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth. 9. And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey. 10. And I took the little book out of the angel’s hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter. 11. And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

Here we have, 1. A strict charge given to the apostle, which was,

(1.) That he should go and take the little book out of the hands of that mighty angel mentioned before. This charge was given, not by the angel himself who stood upon the earth, but by the same voice from heaven which had lain in conjunction upon him not to write what he had discerned by the seven thunders.

(2.) To eat the book; this part of the charge was given by the angel himself, hinting to the apostle, that before he should publish what he had discovered, he must more thoroughly digest the predictions, and be himself suitably affected with them. And as the manner of the task upon which this little book would have, when the apostle had taken it in; at first, while in his mouth, sweet. All persons feel a pleasure in looking into future events, and in having them foretold; and all good men love to receive a word from God, of what import soever it be.

But when this book of prophecy was more thoroughly digested by the apostle, the contents would be bitter; these were things so awful and terrible, such grievous persecutions of the people of God, and such desolation made in the earth, that the foresight and forknowledge of them would not be pleasant, but painful to the mind of the apostle; thus was Ezekiel’s prophecy to him, ch. 3. 5.

3. The apostle’s discharge of the duty he was called to; (v. 10.) He took the little book out of the angel’s hand, and ate it up, and he found the relish to be as was told him. (1.) It becomes the servants of God to digest in their own souls the messages they bring to others in his name, and to be suitably affected therewith themselves. (2.) It becomes them to deliver every message with which they are charged, whether pleasing or unpleasing to men. That which is least pleasing, may be most profitable; however, God’s messengers must not keep back any part of the counsel of God.

4. The apostle is made to know that this book of prophecy which he had now taken in, was not given him merely to gratify his own curiosity, or to affect him with pleasure or pain, but to be communicated by him to the world; here his prophetic commission seems to be renewed, and he is ordered to prepare for another embassy, to convey those declarations of the mind and will of God, which are of great importance to all the world, and to the highest and greatest men in the world, and such should be read and recorded in many languages; this indeed is the case; we have them in our language, and are all obliged to attend to them, humbly to inquire into the meaning of them, and firmly to believe that every thing shall have its accomplishment in the proper time; and when the prophecies are fulfilled, the sense and truth of them will appear, and the omniscience, power, and faithfulness of the great God will be adored.

CHAP. XI.

In this chapter, we have an account, 1. Of the measuring reed given to the apostle, to take the dimensions of the temple, v. 1, 2. II. Of the two witnesses of God, v. 3—14. III. Of the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and what followed upon it, v. 15, &c.

1. And there was given me a reed like unto a rod; and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. 2. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.
This prophetic passage about measuring the temple, is a plain reference to what we find in Ezekiel's vision, Ezek. 40. 3, &c. But how to understand either the one or the other, is not so easy; it should seem, the design of measuring the temple in the former case, was in order to the rebuilding of it, and that with advantage; the design of this measure seems to be either, 1. For the preservation of it in those times of public danger and calamity that are here foretold; or, 2. For its trial; that it may be seen how far it agrees with the standard, or pattern in the mount: or, 3. For its reformation; that what is redundant, deficient, or changed, may be regulated according to the true model. Observe, 1. How much was to be measured. (1.) The temple; the gospel-church in general; whether it be so built, so constituted, as the gospel rule directs; whether it be too narrow, or too large; that it may be built in such a manner as best to suit the place of the most solemn acts of worship, may be put for religious worship in general; whether the church has the true altars, both as to substance and situation; as to substance, whether they take Christ for their Altar, and lay down all their offerings there; and in situation, whether the Altar be in the holiest; that is, whether they worship God in the Spirit and in the truth; (2.) The altar. To which is added, that in which the place of the most solemn acts of worship, may be put for religious worship in general; whether the church has the true altars, both as to substance and situation; as to substance, whether they take Christ for their Altar, and lay down all their offerings there; and in situation, whether the Altar be in the holiest; that is, whether they worship God in the Spirit and in the truth; (3.) Those worshipers are measuring; whether they make God's glory their end, and his word their rule, in all their acts of worship; and whether they come to God with suitable affections, and whether the conversation be as becomes the gospel.

2. What was not to be measured, (v. 2) and why it should be left out. (1.) What was not to be measured; the court which is without the temple, measured not. Some say that Herod, in his additions made to the temple, built an outer court, and called it, the court of the Gentiles. Some tell us, that Adrian built the city and an outer court, and called it Ælia, and gave it to the Gentiles. (2.) Why was not the outer court mentioned? This was no part of the temple, according to the model either of Solomon or Zerubbabel, and therefore God would have no regard to it. He would not mark it out for preservation; but admit it; so that those who would mix Pagan ceremonies and customs, and to annex them to the gospel-churches, so Christ abandoned it to them, to be used as they pleased; and both that and the court were trodden under foot for a certain time; forty and two months; which some would have to be the whole time of the reign of antichrist. Who they worship in the outer court, are either such as worship in a false manner, or with hypocritical externals, where the heart is wanting; and these are rejected of God, and will not be found among his enemies. From the whole observe, 1. God will have a temple and an altar in the world, till the end of time. 2. He has a strict regard to this temple, and observes how every thing is managed in it. 3. Those who worship in the outer court, will be rejected; and only those who worship within the veil, accepted. 4. The holy city, the church and church state, will be much trampled upon in the world. But, 5. The desolation of the churches are for a limited time, and for a short time, and she shall be delivered out of all her troubles.

3. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. 4. These are the two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. 5. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. 6. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy; and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will. 7. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. 8. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. 9. And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. 10. And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. 11. And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them. 12. And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them. 13. And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: and the remnant were afflicted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

In this time of treading down, God has reserved to him his faithful witnesses, who will not fail to attest the truth of his word and worship, and the excellency of his ways. Here observe, 1. The number of these witnesses; it is but a small number, and yet it is sufficient. (1.) It is but small; many will own and acknowledge Christ in times of prosperity, who will desert and deny him in times of persecution; one witness, when the cause is upon trial, is worth many at other times. (2.) It is a sufficient number; for in the mouth of two witnesses every cause shall be established. Christ sent out his disciples two by two, to preach the gospel. Some think these two witnesses are Enoch and Elias, who are to return to the earth for a time: others, the church of the believing Jews, and that of the Gentiles; it should rather seem, they are God's eminent faithful ministers, who shall not only continue to profess the Christian religion, but to preach it, in the worst of times. 2. The time of their prophesying, or bearing their testimony for Christ; a thousand two hundred and threescore days; that is (as many think) to the period of the reign of antichrist; and if the beginning of that interval could be ascertained, this number of prophetical days, taking a day for a year, would give us a prospect when the end shall be. 3. Their habit, and posture; they prophesy in sackcloth, as those that are deeply affected with the low and distressed state of the churches and interest of Christ in the world.
4. How they were supported and supplied during the discharge of their great and hard work; they stood before the God of the whole earth, and he gave them power to prophesy. He made them to be like Zerubbabel and Joshua, the two olive-trees and candlestick in the vision of Zechariah, ch. 4. 3, &c. God gave them the oil of holy zeal, and courage, and strength, and comfort; he made them olive-trees, and their lamps of profession were kept burning by the oil of inward gracious principling, which he saw good to give them. They had oil not only in their lamps, but in their vessels; habits of spiritual life, light, and zeal.

5. Their security and defence during the time of their prophesying; (v. 5.) If any attempted to hurt them, fire proceeded out of their mouths, and devoured them. Some think this alludes to Elias's calling for fire from heaven, to consume the captains and their host in 2 Kings 1. 12. God promised the prophet Jeremiah, (ch. 5. 14.) Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people shall be wood, and it shall devour them. By their praying and preaching, and courage in suffering, they shall gall and wound the very hearts and consciences of many of their persecutors, who shall go away self-condemned, and be even terrorists to themselves; like Pashur, at the word of Jeremiah, (Jer. 26. 10, 11.) They shall have that free access to God, and that interest in him, that, at their prayers, God will inflict plagues and judgments upon their enemies, as he did on Pharaoh, turning their rivers into blood; and restraining the dews of heaven, shutting heaven up, that no rain shall fall for many days, as he did at the prayers of Elias, 1 Kings 17. 1. God has ordained his arrows for the persecutors, and is often plaguing them while they are persecuting his people; they find it hard work to kick against the pricks.

6. The slaying of the witnesses, to make their testimony more strong; they must seal it with their blood. Here observe, (1.) The time when they should be killed; when they have finished their testimony. They are immortal, they are invulnerable, till their work be done. Some think it ought to be rendered, when they were about to finish their testimony. But perhaps the word in sackcloth is to be taken as the greatest part of the 1260 years, then they should feel the last effect of antichristian malice. (2.) The enemy that should overcome and slay them; the beast that ascended out of the bottomless pit. Antichrist, the great instrument of the Devil, should make war against them, not only with the arms of subtle and sophistical learning, but chiefly with open force and violence; and God would preserve his ministers and heralds of truth against their witnesses for a time. (3.) The barbarous usage of these slain witnesses; the malice of their enemies was not satisfied with their blood and death, but pursued even their dead bodies. [1.] They would not allow them a quiet grave; their bodies were cast out in the open street, the high street of Babylon, or in the high road leading to the city. This city is spiritually called Sodom, for monstrous wickedness; and Egypt for prodigious splanranny; and here Christ in his mystical body has suffered more than in any place in the world. [2.] Their dead bodies were insulted by the inhabitants of the earth, and their death was a matter of mirth and joy to the antichristian world, v. 10. They were glad to be rid of these witnesses, who by their doctrine and example had teased, terrified, and tormented the conscience of their enemies; these spiritual weapons cut wicked men to the heart, and fill them with the greatest rage and malice against the faithfull.

7. The resurrection of these witnesses, and the consequences thereof. Observe, (1.) The time of their rising again; after they had lain dead three days and a half; (v. 11.) a short time in comparison of that in which they had prophesied. Here may be a reference to the resurrection of Christ, who is the Resurrection and the Life. Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Or, there may be a reference to the resurrection of Lazarus on the fourth day, when they thought it impossible. God's witnesses may be slain, but they shall rise again, not in the resurrection; but in their successors. God will revive his work, when it seems to be dead in the world. (2.) The power by which they were raised; The spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet. God put not only life, but courage into them; God can make the dry bones to live; it is the Spirit of life from God that quickens dead souls, and shall quicken the dead bodies of his people, and his dying interest in the world. The effect of this upon their enemies; Great fear fell upon them. The reviving of God's work and witnesses will strike terror into the souls of his enemies. Where there is guilt, there is fear; and a persecuting spirit, though cruel, is not a courageous, but a cowardly spirit. Herod feared John the Baptist.

8. The ascension of the witnesses into heaven, and the consequences thereof, v. 12, 13. Observe, (1.) Their ascension. By heaven we may understand, either some more eminent station in the church, the kingdom of grace in this world, or a high place in the kingdom of glory above. The former seems to be the meaning; They ascended to heaven in a cloud, in a figurative, not in a literal sense, and their enemies saw them. It will be no small part of the punishment of persecutors, both in this world, and at the great day, that they shall see the faithful servants of God greatly honoured and advanced. To this honour they did not attempt to ascend, till God called them, and said, Come up hither. The Lord's witnesses must wait for their advancement, both in the church, and in heaven, till God calls them; they must not be weary of suffering and service, nor too hastily grasp at the reward; but stay till their Master calls them, and then they may gladly ascend to him. (2.) The consequences of the ascension; a mighty shock and confusion in the antichristian empire, and the fall of a tenth part of the city. Some refer this to the beginning of the reformation from popery; when many princes and states fell off from their subjection to Rome. This great work met with great opposition; all the western world felt a great concussion, and the antichristian interest received a great blow. When they lost a great deal of ground and interest. [1.] By the sword of war, which was then drawn; and many of those who fought under the banner of antichrist, were slain by it. [2.] By the sword of the Spirit; The fear of God fell upon many. They were convinced of their errors, superstition, and idolatry; and by true repentance, and embracing the truth, they gave glory to the God of heaven. Thus when God's work and witnesses revive, the devil's work and witnesses fall before him.

14. The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly. 15. And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, 17. Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, who art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. 18. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them who destroy the earth. 19. And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament, and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

We have here the sounding of the seventh and last trumpet, which is ushered in by the usual warning and demand of attention; The second woe is past, and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly. Then the seventh angel sounded. This had been suspended for some time, till the apostle had been made acquainted with some intervening occurrences of very great moment, and worthy of his notice and observation. But what he before expected, he now heard—the seventh angel sounding. Here observe the effects and consequences of this trumpet, thus sounded.

1. Here were loud and joyful acclamations of the saints and angels in heaven. Observe, (1.) The manner of their adorations; they rose from their seats, and fell upon their faces, and worshipped God; they did it with reverence and humility. (2.) The matter of the adorations. [1.] They thankfully recognise the right of our God and Saviour, to rule and reign over all the world; (v. 15.) The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ. They were always so in title, both by creation and purchase. [2.] They thankfully observe his actual possession of them, and reign over them; they give him thanks because he had taken to him his great power, asserted his rights, exerted his power, and assumed the grand title into possession of the kingdom. [3.] They rejoice that this reign shall never end; He shall reign for ever and ever, till all enemies be put under his feet; none shall ever wrest the sceptre out of his hand.

2. Here were angry resentments in the world, at these just appearances and acting of the power of God; (v. 16.) The nations were angry; not only had been so, but were so still: their hearts rose up against God, they met his wrath with their own anger. It was a time when God was taking a just revenge upon the enemies of his people, recompensing their just misery and sufferings, and their enemies could not bear it, they fretted against God, and so increased their guilt, and hastened their destruction.

3. Another consequence was, the opening of the temple of God in heaven. By this may be meant, that here is now a more free communication between heaven and earth; prayer and praises more freely and frequently ascending, and graces and blessings plentifully descending. But it rather seems to intend the church of God on earth, a heavenly temple. It is an allusion to the various circumstances of things in the time of the first temple, under idolatrous and wicked princes, it was shut up and neglected; but under religious and reforming princes, it was opened and frequented. So, during the power of antichrist, the temple of God seemed to be shut up, and was so in a great degree; but now it was opened again. At this opening of it, Observe, (1.) What was seen there; the ark of God's testament. This was in the holy of holies; in this ark the tables of the law were kept. As before Josiah's time, the law of God had been lost, but was then found; so in the reign of antichrist, God's law was hid aside, and made void by their traditions and decrees; the scriptures were locked up from the people, and they must not look into these divine oracles; now they are opened, now they are brought to the views of all. This was an unspeakable and invaluable privilege; and this, like the ark of God's testament, was a token of the presence of God, returned to his people, and his favour towards them in Jesus Christ the Propitiation.

(2.) What was heard and felt there; Luminations, voices, thunderings, an earthquake, and great hail. The great blessing of the reformation was attended with very awful providences; and by terrible things in righteousness God would answer those prayers that were presented in his holy temple now opened. All the great revolutions of the world are concerted in heaven, and are the answers of the prayers of the saints.

CHAP. XII.

It is generally agreed by the most learned expositors, that the narrative we have in this and the following chapters, from the sounding of the seventh trumpet to the opening of the vials, is not a prediction of things to come, but rather a recapitulation and representation of things past; which as God would have the apostle foresee while future, he would have him to review now that they were past, that he might have a more perfect idea of them in his mind, and might observe the agreement between the prophecy and that Providence that is always fulfilling the scriptures. In this chapter, we have an account of the contest between the church and antichrist; the seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent. 1. As it was begun in heaven, v. 1. 14. As it was carried on in the wilderness, v. 15, &c.

1. AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars: 2. And she being with child, cried, travelling in birth, and pained to be delivered. 3. And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. 4. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman who was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born. 5. And she brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne. 6. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days. 7. And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, 8. And prevailed not; neither was there place found any more in heaven. 9. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, who deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. 10. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, who accused them before our God day and night. 11. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony: and they loved not their lives unto the death.

Here we see that early prophecy eminently fulfilled, in which God said he would put enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, Gen. 3. 15. You will observe,

I. The attempts of Satan and his agents to prevent the increase of the church, by devouring her effectual servants. v. 8. As it was born of; of this we have a very lively description in the most proper images.

1. We see how the church is represented in this vision, (1.) As a woman, the weaker part of the world, but the spouse of Christ, and the mother of the saints. (2.) As clothed with the sun, the imputed righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ; having put on Christ, who is the Sun of righteousness. She, by her relation to Christ, is invested with the honorable rights and privileges, and shines in his rays. (3.) As having the moon under her feet; that is, the world; she stands upon it, but lives above it; her heart and hope are not set upon sublunary things, but on the things that are in heaven, where her Head is. (4.) As having on her head a crown of twelve stars, that is, the doctrine of the gospel preached by the twelve apostles, which is a crown of glory to all true believers. (5.) As holding a little scroll written with other strength, crying out, and fained to be delivered; she was pregnant, and now in pain to bring forth a holy progeny to Christ; desirous that what was begun in the conviction of sinners, might end in their conversion; and when the children were brought to the birth, there might be strength to bring forth, and she might see of the travail of her soul.

2. How the grand enemy of the church is represented. (1.) As a great red dragon; a dragon, for strength; a red dragon, for fierceness and cruelty. (2.) As having seven heads, that is, placed on seven hills, as Rome was; and therefore it is probable that pagan Rome is here meant. (3.) As having ten horns, divided into ten provinces, as the Roman empire was by Augustus Caesar. (4.) As having seven crowns upon his head, which is after expounded to be seven kings, ch. 17. 10. (5.) As having with his tail a third part of the stars in heaven, and casting them down to the earth; turning the ministers and professed of the Christian religion out of their places and privileges, and making them as weak and useless as he could. (6.) As standing before the woman, to devour her child as soon as it should be born; very vigilant to crush the Christian religion in its birth, and entirely to prevent the growth and continuance of it in the world.

II. The successfulness of the church; for, 1. She was safely delivered of a man-child; (v. 5.) by which some understand Christ, others Constantine; but others, with greater propriety, a race of true believers, strong and united, resembling Christ, and designed, under him, to rule the nations with a rod of iron; that is, to judge the world by their doctrine and lives now, and as assessors with Christ at the great day. 2. Care was taken of this child; it was caught up to God, and to his throne; that is, taken into his special, powerful, and immediate protection. The Christian religion has been from its infancy the special care of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. 3. The church was marked out to be a holy city, the child of the Lamb, and the seed of the woman, against the man-child, he engaged all the powers of heaven against him; (v. 7.) There was war in heaven; heaven will espouse the quarrel of the church.

Here observe, 1. The seat of this war—in heaven; in the church, which is the kingdom of heaven on earth; under the care of heaven, and in the same interest. 2. The parties—Michael, and his angels, on one side; and the dragon, and his angels, on the other; Christ, the great Angel of the covenant, and his faithful followers; and Satan and all his instruments. This latter party would be much superior in number and outward strength to the other; but the strength of the church lies in having the Lord Jesus for the Captain of their salvation. 3. The success of the battle; The dragon and his angels fought, and prevailed not; there was a great struggle on both sides, but the victory fell to Christ and his church, and the dragon and his angels were not only conquered, but cast out; the Pagans idolatry, which was worshipping devils, was extirpated out of the empire in the time of Constantine. 4. The triumphant song that was composed and used on this occasion, v. 10, 11. Here observe,

(1.) How the conqueror is adored; Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; Now God has not only proved himself to be a strong and mighty Saviour; his own arm has brought salvation, and now his kingdom will be greatly enlarged and established. The salvation and strength of the church are all to be ascribed to the King and Head of the church.

(2.) How the conquered enemy is described; [1.] By his malice; he was the accuser of our brethren, and accused them day and night; he appeared before God as an adversary to the church, continually bringing in accusations and accusations against them, whether true or false; thus he accused Job, and thus he accused Joshua the high priest, Zech. 3. 1. Though he hates the presence of God, yet he is willing to appear there, to accuse the people of God. Let us therefore take heed that we give him no cause of accusation against us; that he may have no opportunity to say in before the Lord, and accuse and condemn ourselves, and commit our cause to Christ as our Advocate. [2.] By his disappointment and defeat he and all his accusations are cast out, the indictments quashed, and the accuser turned out of the court with just indignation.

(3.) How the victory was gained; the servants of God overcame Satan; [3.] By the blood of the Lamb, as the meritorious cause. Christ by dying destroyed him that hath the power of death, that is, the Devil. [2.] By the word of their testimony, as the great instrument of war; the word of the Spirit, which is the word of God; by a resolute, powerful preaching of the everlasting gospel, which is mighty, through God, to pull down strong-holds; by their courage and patience in sufferings; they love not their lives unto the death, when the love of life stood in competition with their loyalty to Christ; they loved not their lives so well, but they could give them up to death, could lay them down in Christ's cause; their love to their own lives was overcome by stronger affections of another nature; and this their courage and zeal helped to confound their enemies, and make the spectators, to confirm the souls of the faithful, and so contributed greatly to this victory.

12. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. 13. And when the dragon saw that he was cast into the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child. 14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. 15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood. 16. And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. 17. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

We have here an account of this war, so happily finished in heaven, or in the church, as it was again renewed and carried on in the wilderness, the place to which the church was fled, and where she had been for some time secured by the special care of her Divine Defender. Observe, I. The warning given of the distress and calamity that shall fall upon the inhabitants of the world in general, through the wrath and rage of the Devil. For though his malice is chiefly bent against the servants of God, yet he is an enemy and later of mankind as such; and being defeated in his designs against the church, he is resolved to give all the disturbance he can to the world in general; (v. 12.) Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, and the sea. The rage of Satan grows so much the greater, as he is limited both in place and time; when he was confined to the wilderness, and had but a short time to reign there, he comes with the greater wrath.

11. His second attempt upon the church now in the wilderness; He persecuted the woman, which brought forth the man-child, v. 13. Observe, I. That God had taken of his church; he had conveyed her, as on eagle's wings, into a place of safety provided for her, where she was to continue for a certain space of time; couched in prophetic characters, taken from Dan. 7. 25.

2. The continual malice of the dragon against the church; her obscurity could not altogether protect her; the old subtile serpent, which at first lurked in paradise, now follows the church into the wilderness, and casts out a flood of water after her, to carry her away. This is thought to be meant of a flood of error and heresies, which was breathed by Arius, Nestorius, Pelagius, and many more, by which the church of God was in danger of being overwhelmed and carried away. The church of God is in more danger from heretics than from persecutors; and heresies are as certainly from the Devil as open force and violence.

3. The seasonable help provided for the church in this dangerous juncture; (v. 16.) The earth helped the woman, and opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood. Some think, we are to understand the swarms of Goths and Vandals that invaded the Roman empire, and found work for the Arian rulers, who otherwise would have been as furious persecutors as the Pagan had been, and had exercised great cruelties already; but God opened a mouth to them, and the flood was in a manner swallowed up thereby, and the church enjoyed some respite. God often sends the sword to avenge the quarrel of his covenant; and when men choose new gods, then there is danger of war in the gates; in testime broils and contentions often end in the invasions of a common enemy.

4. The Devil, being thus defeated in his designs upon the universal church, now turns his rage against particular persons and places; If his first great enemy against the woman pushes him on to make war with the remnant of her seed. Some think hereby are meant the Albigenses, who were first by Dioscleose driven up into barren and mountainous places, and afterward cruelly murdered by Popish rage and power, for several generations; and for no other reason than because they kept the commandments of God, and held the testimony of Jesus Christ. Their fidelity to God and Christ, both in doctrine, worship, and practice, was that which exposed them to the rage of Satan and his instruments; and such fidelity will expose men still, less or more, to the end of the world, when the last enemy shall be destroyed.

CHAP. XIII.

We have, in this chapter, a further discovery and description of the church's enemies; not other enemies than are mentioned before, but described after another manner, that the methods of their enmity may more fully appear: they are represented in two beasts; the first you have an account of, v. 1., the second, v. 9. The one is represented Rome pagan, and the other Rome papal; but others understand Rome papal to be represented by both these beasts; by the first in its secular power, by the second in its ecclesiastical.
and them that dwell in heaven. 7. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. 8. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. 9. If any man have an ear, let him hear. 10. He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

We have here an account of the rise, figure, and progress of the first beast: and observe,

1. From what situation the apostle saw this monster: he seemed to himself to stand upon the sea-side, though, it is probable, he was still in a rapport; but he took himself to be in the island Patmos, whether in the body, or out of the body, he could not tell.

2. From whence this beast came—out of the sea; and yet, by the description which it is, should be more likely to be seen on land, but the more monstrous every thing about it was, the more proper an emblem it would be to set forth the mystery of iniquity and tyranny.

3. What was the form and shape of this beast: it was for the most part like a leopard, but its feet were like the feet of a bear, and its mouth as the mouth of a lion; it had ten horns, and ten stars, and upon its head was written, a name written, A liar. In some part of this description here seems to be an allusion to Daniel's vision of the four beasts, which represented the four monarchies. Dan. 7: 3, 4. One of these beasts was like a lion, another like a bear, and another like a leopard; this beast was a sort of composition of these three, with the ferocity, strength, and swiftness, of them all. The seven heads and ten horns seem to design its number, magnitude, and multitude: the word blasphemy, on its forehead, proclaims its direct enmity and opposition to the glory of God, by promoting idolatry.

4. The source and spring of his authority—the dragon, he gave him power, and dominion, and great authority: he was set up by the Devil, and supported by him to do his work, and promote his interest: and he lent him all the assistance he could.

5. A dangerous wound given him, and yet unexpected, that he should be horns, and ten stars: some think that by this headless head we are to understand the abolishing of pagan idolatry: and by the healing of the wound, the introducing of the popish idolatry, the same in substance with the former, only in a new dress, and which so effectually answers the Devil's design as that did.

6. The honour and worship paid to this infernal monster is said to be wonder after the beast, they all admired his power, and policy, and success, and they worshipped the dragon that gave power to the beast, and they worshipped the beast: they paid honour and adoration to the Devil and his instruments, and thought there was no power able to withstand them: so great were the darkness, degeneracy, and madness of the world.

7. How he exercised his infernal power and policy: he had a mouth, speaking great things, and blasphemies; he blasphemed God, the name of God, the tabernacle of God, and all them that dwell in heaven; and he made war with the saints, and overcame them, and gained a sort of universal empire in the world. His malice was principally levelled at the God of heaven, and his heavenly attendance; at God, in making images of him that is invisible, and in worshipping them; at the tabernacle of God, that is, say some, at the human nature of the Lord Jesus Christ, in which God dwells as in a tabernacle; this is disgraced and humbled by their doctrine of transubstantiation, that will not suffer his body to be a true body, and will put it in the power of every priest to make a body for Christ; and against them that dwell in heaven, the glorified saints, by putting them into the place of the pagan demons, and praying to them; which they are so far from being pleased with, that they truly judge themselves wronged and dishonoured by it; thus the malice of the Devil shews itself against heaven, and the blessed inhabitants of heaven: these are above the reach of his power; he can do this, to blaspheme them; but the saints on earth are more exposed to his cruelty, and he sometimes is permitted to triumph over them, and trample upon them.

8. The limitation of the devil's power and success, and that both as to time and persons. (1.) He is limited in point of time; his reign is to continue forty and two months, (v. 5.) suitable to the other prophetic characters of the reign of antichrist. (2.) He is limited as to the persons and things that shall entirely subject to his will and power; it will be only those whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life. Christ has a chosen remnant, redeemed by his blood, recorded in his book, sealed by his Spirit; and though the Devil and antichrist might overcome their bodily strength, and take away the natural life, they could never conquer their souls, nor prevail with them to forsake their Saviour, and revolt to his enemies.

9. Here is a demand of attention to what is here discovered of the great sufferings and troubles of the church, and an assurance given, that when God has accomplished his work on mount Zion, his refining work, then he will turn his hand against the enemies of his people, and they who have killed the sword, shall themselves fall by the sword, (v. 10,) and they who led the people of God into captivity, and mischief, and misery, shall themselves be delivered over to judgment. Here is that which will be proper exercise for the patience and faith of the saints; patience under the prospect of so great sufferings, and faith in the prospect of so glorious a deliverance.

11. And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth: and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. 12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them who dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. 13. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men. 14. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live. 15. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. 16. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: 17. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. 18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and this number is Six hundred threescore and six.

Those who think the first beast signifies Rome pagan, by this second beast would understand Rome papal, that does promote licenity and tyranny, but in a more soft and lamb-like manner: those that understand the first beast of the secular power of the papacy, take the second to intend its spiritual and ecclesiastical powers, which act under the disguise of religion and charity to the souls of men. Here observe, 1. The form and shape of this second beast; he had two horns like a lamb, but a mouth that spake like the dragon: all agree that this must be some great impostor, who under a pretence of religion shall deceive the souls of men: the papists would have to bring this, says Dr. More, has rejected that opinion, and fixes it upon the ecclesiastical powers of the popes. The popes shews the horns of a lamb, pretends to be the vicegerent of Christ upon earth, and so to be vested with his power and authority; but his speech bewrays him: for he gives forth those false doctrines, and cruel decrees, which shew him to belong to the dragon, and not to the Lamb. 2. The power which he exercises; all the power of the former beasts: (v. 12.) he promotes the same interest, pursues the same design, in substance, which is, to draw men off, from worshipping the true God, to worship those who by nature are no gods, and subject the souls and consciences of men to the will and authority of men, in opposition to the will of God; this design is promoted by popery as well as by paganism, and by the crafty arts of popery as well as by the former arts of paganism. 3. The methods by which this second beast carried on his interests and designs; they are of three sorts: (1.) Lying wonders, pretended miracles, by which they should be deteacted, and prevailed with to worship the former beast in this new image or shape that was now made for him: they would pretend to bring down fire from heaven, as Elias did; or to cast down mountains, as Gideon did; or to slay his enemies, as he did the magicians of Egypt, to do things that seem very wonderful, and by which unwar thy persons may be deluded: it is well known that the papal kingdom has been long supported by pretended miracles. (2.) Excommunications, anathemas, severe censures; by which they pretend to cut men off from Christ, and cast them into the power of the Devil, both in this life, and in that to come. (3.) Wholesale power, that they may be put to death; and this notwithstanding their vile hypocrisy, they are justly charged with killing those whom they cannot corrupt. (3.) By disfranchisement; allowing none to enjoy natural, civil, or municipal rights, who will not worship that papal beast, that is, the image of the pagan beast. It is made a qualification for buying and selling the rights of nature, as well as for places of profit and trust, that they have the mark of the beast in their forehead, and in their right hand; and that they have the name of the beast, and the number of his name: it is probable that the mark, the name, and the number of the beast, may all signify the same thing—that they make an open profession of their subjection and obedience to the papacy, which is receiving the mark in their forehead, and that they oblige themselves to use all their interest, power, and endeavours, to promote the papal authority, which is receiving the mark in their right hand. We are told that pope Martin V. in his bull added to the council of Constance, prohibits Roman-catholics to suffer any heretics to dwell in their countries, or to make any bargains, use any trades, or bear any civil offices; which is a very effectual stop of this pretended number.

4. We have here the number of the beast, given in such a manner, as shews the infinite wisdom of God, and will sufficiently exercise all the wisdom and accuracy of men; The number is the number of a man, computed after the usual manner among men, and it is 666. Whether this be the number of the errors and heresies that are contained in popery, or rather, as others, the number of the years from its rise to its fall, it is not certain, much less what that period is, which is described by these fantastic numbers: the most adured dissertation on this intricate subject, is that of Dr. Potter, where the curious may find sufficient entertainment: it seems to me to be one of those seasons which God has reserved in his own power; only this we know, God has written Mene Tekel upon all his enemies; he has numbered their days, and they shall be finished, but his own kingdom shall endure for ever.

CHAP. XIV.

After an account of the great trials and sufferings which this usurpation of God had endured, we have now a more pleasant scene opening, the day begins to dawn; and here we have represented, I. The Lord Jesus at the head of his faithful followers. v. 1. 2. Three angels sent successively to proclaim the fall of Babylon to her accessible and consequent to so great an event. v. 6. 11. 12. III. The vision of the harvest. v. 14. 16. 1. And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him a hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. 2. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: 3. And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, who were redeemed from the earth. 4. These are they who were not defiled with women: for they are virgins. These are they who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb. 5. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God. Here we have one of the most pleasing sights that can be viewed in this world—the Lord Jesus Christ at the head of his faithful adherents and attendants. Here observe, 1. How Christ appears; as a Lamb standing upon mount Sion. Mount Sion is the gospel-church, Christ is with his church, and in the midst of her in all her troubles, and therefore she is not consumed.
It is his presence that secures her perseverance: he appears as a Lamb, a true Lamb, the Lamb of God: a counterfeit lamb rose out of the earth in the last chapter, which was really a dragon; here Christ appears as the true paschal Lamb, to show that his mediatorial government is the fruit of his sufferings, and the cause of his people's safety and fidelity.

2. How his people appear; very honourably; (1.) As to the numbers, they are many, even all who were sealed; not one of them lost in all the tribulations through which they had gone. (2.) Their distinguishing badge; they had the name of God written in their foreheads, they made a bold and open profession of their faith in God and Christ; and this being followed by suitable actions, they are known and approved. (3.) Their congratulations and songs of praise, which were peculiar to the redeemed; (v. 5.) their praises were loud as the thunder, or as the voice of many waters; they were melodious, as far as harpers; they were heavenly, before the throne of God; the song was new, suited to the new covenant, and unto that new and gracious dispensation of Providence under which they now were; and their song was a secret to others, strangers intermeddled not with their joy; others might repeat the words of the song, but they were strangers to the true sense and spirit of it. (4.) Their character and description; they were of the first fruits of God, and the Lamb, v. 4. Here is plain evidence of a special redemption; they were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits to God, and to the Lamb, v. 4. Here is plain evidence of a special redemption; they were redeemed from among men; some of the children of men are, by redeeming mercy, distinguished from others; they were the first-fruits to God, and to the Lamb; his choice ones, eminent in every way. (5.) By the earnestness of many more who should be followers of these, as they were of Christ. [4.] By their universal integrity and conscientiousness; there was no guile found in them, and they were without fault before the throne of God; they were without any prevailing guile, any allowed fault, their hearts were right with God; and as for their human infirmities, they were freely pardoned in Christ; this is the happy remnant who attend upon the Lord Jesus as their Head and Lord; he is glorified in them, and they in him.

6. And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people; 7. Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. 8. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city; because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. 9. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, 10. The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: 11. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. 12. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

In this part of the chapter we have three angels or messengers sent from heaven, to give notice of the fall of Babylon, and of those things that were antecedent and consequent to that great event.

1. The first angel was sent on an errand antecedent to it, and that was, to preach the everlasting gospel, v. 6. 7. Observe, (1.) The gospel is an everlasting gospel; it is so in its nature, and shall be so in its effects, even to the end of the world; the word of the Lord endureth for ever. (2.) It is a work fit for an angel, to preach this everlasting gospel; such is the dignity, and such is the difficulty of that work! And yet we have this treasure in earthen vessels. (3.) The everlasting gospel is of great concern to all the world; and, as it is the concern of all, it is very much to be desired that it should be made known to all, even to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. (4.) The gospel is the great means whereby men are brought to fear God, and to give glory to him. Natural religion is not sufficient to keep up the fear of God, nor to secure to him glory from men; it is the gospel that revives the fear of God, and retrieves his glory in the world.

2. The second angel follows the other, and proclaims the actual fall of Babylon, The preaching of the everlasting gospel had shaken the foundations of antichristianism in the world, and hastened its downfall. By Babylon is generally understood Rome, which was before called Sodom and Egypt, for wickedness and cruelty; and is now called Babylon, for her pride and idolatry. Observe, (1.) What God has fore-ordained and foretold shall be done as certainly as it was done already. (2.) The greatness of the papal Babylon will not be able to prevent her fall, but will make it more dreadful and remarkable. (3.) The wickedness of Babylon, so corrupting, debasing, and intoxicating the nations round about her, will make her fall just, and will declare the righteousness of God in her utter ruin, v. 8. Her crimes are recited as the just cause of her destruction.

3. A third angel follows the other two, and gives warning to all of that divine vengeance which would overtake all those that obstinately adhered to the antichristian interest, after God had thus proclaimed its downfall, v. 9, 10. If after this, (this threatening denounced against Babylon, and in part already executed,) any should persist in their idolatry, professing subjection to the beast, and promoting his cause, they must expect to drink deep of the wine of the wrath of God, they shall be for ever miserable in soul and body, Jesus Christ shall inflict this punishment upon them, and the holy angels shall behold it, and approve of it. Idolatry, both pagan and papist, is a damning sin in its own nature, and will prove fatal to those who persist in it, after fair warning given by the word of Providence; they who refuse to come out of Babylon, when thus called, and resolve to partake of her sins, must receive of her plagues; and the guilt and ruin of such incorrigible idolaters will serve to set forth the excellency of the patience and obedience of the saints; these graces shall be rewarded with salvation and glory; when the treachery and rebellion of others shall be punished with everlasting destruction, thy who refuse to come from the city of Babylon and turn, as the Lord saith, to the honour of the faithful, (v. 12.) Here is the patience of the saints; you have before seen their patience exercised, now you see it rewarded.

13. And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them. 14. And I looked, and beheld, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat, like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. 15. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. 16. And he that sat on the cloud, thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped. 17. And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he having also a sharp sickle. 18. And another angel came out of the altar, who had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. 19. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God. 20. And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horse-bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

Here we have the vision of the harvest and vintage, introduced with a solemn preface. Observe, 1. The preface, v. 13. Here note, 1. From whence this prophecy about the harvest came; it came down from heaven, and not from men, and therefore it is of certain truth and great authority. 2. How it was to be preserved and published—by writing; it was to be matter of record, that the people of God might have recourse to it for their support and comfort upon all occasions. 3. What principally intended, and that is, to shew the blessedness of all the faithful servants and saints of God, both in death and after death; Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, &c. Here observe, 1. The description of those that are, and shall be, blessed—such as die in the Lord, either die in the cause of Christ, or rather die in a state of vital union with Christ, such as are found in Christ when death comes. 2. The demonstration of this blessedness—they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them. 1. They are blessed in their rest, as they shall rest from their labours. 2. They are blessed in their works, these shall follow them; there the wicked cease from troubling, there the weary are at rest. 2. They are blessed in their recompense, their works follow them; they do not go before them as their title, or purchase, but follow them as their evidence of having lived and died in the Lord; and the memory of them will be pleasant, and the reward glorious, far above the merit of all their services and sufferings. 2. They are happy in the time of their dying, when they have lived to see the cause of God reviving, the peace of the church returning, and the wrath of God falling upon their idolatrous cruel enemies; such times are good times to die in; they have Simeon’s desire; Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. And all this is ratified and confirmed by the testimony of the Spirit witnessing with their spirits, and with the written word.

II. We have the vision itself, represented by a harvest and a vintage. 1. By a harvest; (v. 14, 15.) an emblem that sometimes signifies the cutting down of the wicked, when ripe for ruin, by the judgments of God; and sometimes the gathering in of the righteous, when ripe for heaven, by the mercy of God. This seems to be the meaning here. (1.) The Gentile church’s judgments against the wicked: and here observe, (1.) The Lord of the harvest—one so like unto the Son of man, that he was the same, even the Lord Jesus, who is described, [1.] By the chariot in which he sat—a white cloud; a cloud that had a bright side turned to the church, how dark soever it might be to the wicked. [2.] By the ensign of his power—on his head was a golden crown, authority to do all that he did, and whatsoever he would do. [3.] By the instrument of his providences—in his hand a sharp sickle. [4.] By the solicitations he had from the temple to perform this great work; what he did was desired to do by his people; and though he was resolved to do it, he would for this thing be sought unto by them, and so it should be in return to their prayers. (2.) Observe the harvest-work; which is, to thrust the sickle into the clusters of the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God. The vintage is the judgment of God’s justice, the field is the world, reaping is cutting the inhabitants of the earth down, and carrying them off. (3.) The harvest-time; and that was when the corn is ripe, when the measure of the sin of men is filled up, and they are ripe for destruction. The most invertebrate enemies of Christ and his church are not destroyed, till by their sin they are ripe for ruin, and then he will spare them no longer; he will thrust in his sickle, and the earth shall be reaped. 2. A vintage, v. 17. Some think that these two are only different emblems of the same judgment; others, that they refer to distinct events of Providence before the end of all things. Observe, (1.) To whom this vintage-work was committed—to an angel, another angel that came out from the altar, that is, the holiest of all in heaven. (2.) At whose command and direction this vintage-work was undertaken; it was, as before, at the cry of an angel out of the temple, the ministers and churches of God on earth. (3.) The work of the vintage; which consists of two parts, [1.] The cutting off, and gathering, the clusters of the vine, which were now ripe and ready, fully ripe, v. 18. [2.] Casting these grapes into the wine-press; v. 18. Here the word grace refers to the vintage; What was the wine-press? It was the wrath of God, the fire of his indignation, some terrible calamity, very probably the sword, shedding the blood of the wicked. Secondly, Where was the place of the wine presses without the city, where the army lay, that came against Babylon. 3rdly, The quantity of the wine, that is, of the blood that was drawn forth by this judgment; it was, for depth, up to the horses' bridles, and for breadth and length, a thousand and six hundred furlongs; (v. 20.) that is, say some, 280 Italian miles, which is thought to be the measure of the holy land, and may be meant of the patrimony of the holy see, encompassing the city of Rome: but here we are left to doubtful conjectures; perhaps, this great event has not yet had its accomplishment, but the vision is for an appointed time; and therefore, though it may seem to tarry, we are to wait for it. But who shall live when the Lord does this?

CHAP. XV.

Hitherto, according to the judgment of very eminent expositors, God had represented to his servant John, I. The state of the church under the pagan powers, in the six seals opened; and then, II. The state of the church under the papal powers, in the vision of the six trumpets that began to sound upon the opening of the seventh seal: and then is inserted, III. A more general and brief account of the past, present, and future state of the church, in the little book, &c. He now proceeds, IV. To shew him how antichrist should be destroyed, by what steps destruction shall come upon him. And then, V. To shew how the seven vials shall be poured upon the earth. This chapter contains an awful introduction or preparation for the pouring out of the vials; in which we have, I. A sight of those angels in heaven, who were to have the execution of this grand work, and whose declarations from the heavenly host heralded the great design, v. 1–5. 2. A sight of these angels coming out of heaven to receive those vessels which they were to pour out, and the great cominations that this caused in the world, v. 6, &c.

1. AND I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God. 2. And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. 3. And they sang the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. 4. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

Here we have the preparation of matters for the pouring out of the seven vials, which was committed to seven angels; and observe,

How these angels appeared to the apostle in heaven; it was in a wonderful manner, and that upon the account, 1. Of the work they had to do; which was, to finish the destruction of antichrist. God was now about to pour out his seven last plagues upon that interest; and as the measure of Babylon's sins was filled up, they should now find the full manifestation of his vindictive wrath. 2. The spectators and witnesses of this their commission—all that had gotten the victory over the beast, &c. These stood on a sea of glass, representing this world, as some think, a brittle thing, that shall be broken to pieces; or, as others, the gospel-covenant, alluding to the brazen sea in the temple, in which the priests were to wash: the faithful servants of God stand upon the foundation of the righteousness of Christ; or, as others, the Red Sea, that stood as it were congealed while the Israelites went through; and the pillar of fire reflecting light upon the waters, they would seem to have fire mingled with them; and this to shew that the fire of God's wrath against Pharaoh and his horses should dissolve the congealed waters, and destroy them, &c.; to which there seems to be an allusion, by their singing the song of Moses; in which, (1.) They extol the greatness of God's works, and the justice and truth of his ways, both in delivering his people, and destroying their enemies; they rejoiced in hope, and the near prospect they had of this, though it was not yet accomplished. (2.) The call upon all nations to render unto God the four, glory, and worship, which were due to the devisers of their truth and justice; (v. 4.) Who shall not fear thee?

5. And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened: 6. And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles. 7. And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials, full of the wrath of God, which liveth for ever and ever. 8. And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

Observe, 1. How these angels appeared; coming out of heaven to execute their commission; (v. 3.) The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened. Here is an allusion to the holiest of all, in the tabernacle and temple, where was the mercy-seat, covering the ark of the testimony, where the high priest made intercession, and God communed with his people, and heard their prayers. Now by this, as it is here mentioned, we may understand, (1.) That in the judgments God was now about to execute upon the antichristian interest, he was fulfilling the prophecies and promises of his word and covenant, which were thus always binding on the antichristian interest, and on which he was ever mindful. (2.) That in this work he was answering the prayers of the people, which were offered to him by their great High Priest. (3.) That he was herein avenging the quarrel of his own Son, and our Saviour Jesus Christ, whose offices and authority had been usurped, his name dishonoured, and the great designs of his death opposed, by antichrist and his adherents. (4.) That he was opening a wider door of liberty for his people, and a more extensive worship innumerable solemn assemblies, without the fear of their enemies.

2. How they are equipped and prepared for their work; where observe, (1.) Their array; they were clothed with pure and white linen, and had their breasts girded with golden girdles, v. 6. This was the habit of the high priests when they went in to inquire of God, and came out with an answer from him: this shewed that these angels were acting all things under the divine appointment and direction, and that they were going to prepare a sacrifice to the Lord, called the sufferer of the great God, ch. 19. 17. The angels are the ministers of divine justice, and they do every thing in a pure and holy manner. (2.) Their artillery, what it was and from whence they receive it; their artillery, by which they were to do this great execution, was, seven vials filled with the wrath of God; they were armed with the wrath of God against his enemies: the meanest creature, when it comes armed with the anger of God, will be too hard for any man in the world; but much more an angel of God. This wrath of God was not to be poured out all at once, but successively upon seven parts, which should successively fall upon the antichristian party. Now from whence did the angels receive these vials? From one of the four living creatures, one of the ministers of the true church, that is, in answer to the prayers of the ministers and people of God, and to avenge their cause, in which the angels are willingly employed. 3. The impressions these things made upon all who stood near the temple; they were all, as it were, wrapt up in clouds of smoke, which filled the temple, from the glorious and powerful presence of God; so that no man was able to enter into the temple, till the work was finished. The interests of antichrist were so interwoven with the civil interests of the nations, that he could not be destroyed without giving a great shock to all the world; and the people of God would have but little rest and leisure to assemble themselves between them, while this great work was a doing; for the present, their sabbaths would be interrupted, ordinances of public worship intermitted, and all thrown into a general confusion. God himself was now preaching to the church, and to all the world, by terrible things in righteousness; but when this work was done, then the churches would have rest, the temple would be opened, and the solemn assemblies gathered, edified, and multiplied; the greatest deliverances of the church are brought about by awful and astonishing steps of Providence.

CHAP. XVI.

In this chapter, we have an account of the pouring forth of these vials that were filled with the wrath of God; they were poured out upon the whole antichristian empire, and on every thing appertaining to it: I. Upon the earth, v. 2. II. Upon the sea, v. 3. III. Upon the rivers and fountains of waters, v. 4. Here the heavenly hosts proclaim and applaud the righteousness of the judgments of God. IV. The fourth vial was poured out upon the sun; v. 5. V. The fifth on the seat of the beast. VI. The sixth on the river Euphrates. VII. The seventh in the air; upon which, the elect of the nations fell, and great Babylon came in remembrance before God.

I. AND I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. 2. And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men who had the mark of the beast, and upon them who worshipped his image. 3. And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea, and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea. 4. And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. 5. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, who art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus: 6. For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy. 7. And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

We had in the foregoing chapter the great and solemn preparation that was made for the pouring out of the vials; now we have the performance of that work. We observe,

1. That though every thing was made ready before, yet nothing was to be put in execution without an immediate positive order from God; and this he gave out of the temple, answering the prayers of his people, and avenging their quarrel.

II. No sooner was the word of command given, than it was immediately obeyed; no delay, no objection made. We find that some of the best men, as Moses and Jeremiah, did not so readily come in and comply with the call of God to their work; but the angels of God excel not only in strength, but in a readiness to do the will of God. God says, Go your ways, and pour out the vials; and immediately the work is begun. We are taught to pray, that the will of God may be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

1. We have here a reference and allusion to several of the plagues of Egypt, such as the turning their waters into blood, and smiting them with boils and sores. Their sins were alike, and so were their punishments.

2. These vials have a plain reference to the seven trumpets, which represented the rise of antichrist; and we learn hence, that the fall of the church's enemies shall bear some resemblance to their rise; and that God can bring them down in such ways as they chose to exalt themselves. And the fall of antichrist shall be gradual; as Rome was not built in one day, so neither shall it fall in one day, but it falls by degrees; it shall fall so as to rise no more.

3. The fall of the antichristian interest shall be universal. Every thing that any ways belonged to them, or could be serviceable to them, the premises, and all their appurtenances, are put into the wrat for destruction; their earth, their air, their sea, their rivers, their cities, all consigned over to ruin, all accursed for the sake of the wickedness of that people. This the creation groans and suffers through the sins of men. Now we proceed to,

1. (1.) The first angel who poured out his vial: (v. 2.) observe, [1.] Where it fell—upon the earth; that is, say some, upon the common people; others, upon the body of the Romish clergy, who were the basis of the papacy, and of an earthly spirit, all carrying on earthly designs. [2.] What it produced—rivers and fountains were turned into blood. 2. What it produced—vermin and noisome sores on all who had the mark of the beast. They had marked themselves by their sin, now God marks them out by his judgments. This sore, some think, signifies some of the first appearances of Providence against their state and interest, which gave them great uneasiness, as it discovered their inward distemper, and was a token of further evil; the plague-tokens appeared.

2. (2.) The second angel poured out his vial; and here we see, [1.] Where it fell—upon the sea; that is, say some, upon the jurisdiction and dominion of the papacy; others, upon the whole system of their religion, their false doctrines, corrupt glosses, their superstitious rites, their idolatrous worship, their pardons, indulgences, a great conflux of wicked-

ventions and institutions, by which they maintain a trade and traffic advantageous to themselves, but injurious to all who deal with them. [2.] What it produced—it turned the sea into blood, as the blood of a dead man, and every living soul died in the sea. God discovered not only the vanity and falsehood of their religion, but the pernicious and deadly nature of it—that the souls of men were poisoned by that which was pretended to be the sure means of their salvation.

3. The next angel poured out his vial; and we are told, [1.] Where that fell—upon the rivers, and upon the fountain of waters; that is, some very learned men, upon their emissaries, and especially the Jesuits, who, like streams, conveyed the venom and poison of their errors and idolatries from the spring-head through the earth. [2.] What effect it had upon them—it turned them into blood; and some expect princes to take a just revenge upon them that had been the great incendiaries of the world, and had occasioned the shedding of the blood of armies, and of martyrs: the following doxology favours this sense; (v. 5, 6.) the instrument that God makes use of in this work, is called the angel of the waters, who extols the righteousness of God in this retaliation, They have shed the blood of thy saints, and of their prophets, and thou hast given them to drink; for they are worthy: to which another angel answered by full consent, v. 7.

8. And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire. 9. And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, who hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory. 10. And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain. 11. And blasphemed the God of Heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

In these verses we see the work going on in the appointed order.

The fourth angel poured out his vial, and that fell upon the sun; who is, say some, upon some eminent prince of popish communion, who should renounce their false religion a little while before his utter downfall; and some expect, from that very time, will be the German emperor. And now what will be the consequence of this? That sun which before cherished them with warm and benignant influences, shall now grow hot against these idolaters, and shall scorch them. Princes shall use their power and authority to suppress them; which yet would be so far from bringing them to repentance, that it should cause them to continue their idolatry, and look away, under the glossing out their blasphemous speeches against the God of heaven; they were hardened to their ruin.

The fifth angel poured out his vial, v. 10. And observe, 1. Where that fell—upon the seat of the beast; upon Rome itself, the mystical Babylon, the head of the antichristian empire. 2. What effect it had there—the whole kingdom of the beast was fall of darkness and distress; from that very city which was the seat of their policy, the source of all their learning, and all their knowledge, and all their pomp and pleasure, it now becomes a source of darkness, and pain, and anguish. Darkness was one of the plagues of Egypt, and it is opposed to lustre and honour, and so forebodes the contempt and scorn to which the antichristian interest should be exposed.

12. And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared. 13. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. 14. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. 15. Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame. 16. And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

The sixth angel poured out his vial; and observe, 1. Where it fell, upon the great river Euphrates. Some take it literally, for the place where the Turkish power and empire began: and think this is a prophecy of the destruction of the Turkish monarchy and idolatry, which they suppose will be effected about the same time with that of the papacy, as another antichrist, and that thereby a wall shall be raised for the convenience of the Jews, those princes of the east. Others take it for the river Tiber; for as Rome is mystical Babylon, Tiber is mystical Euphrates. And when Rome is destroyed, her river and merchandise must suffer with her.

2. What did this vial produce? (1.) The drying up of the river, which furnished the city with wealth, provisions, and all sorts of accommodations. (2.) A way is hereby prepared for the kings of the east. The idolatry of the church of Rome had been a great hindrance both to the conversion of the Jews, who have been long cured of their inclination to idols, and of the Gentiles, who are hardened in their idolatry, by seeing that which so much symbolizes with it, among those called Christian and heathen. It is therefore very probable that the downfall of papacy, removing these obstructions, will open a way for both the Jews and other eastern nations to come into the church of Christ. And if we suppose that Mahometanism shall fall at the same time, there will be still a more open communication between the western and eastern nations, which may facilitate the advancement of the kingdom of the Gentiles. And when this work of God appears, and is about to be accomplished, no wonder if it occasion another consequence, which is, (3.) The last effect of the great dragon; he is resolved to have another push for it, that, if possible, he may retrieve the ruinous posture of his affairs in the world. He is now rallying his forces, recollecting all his spirits, to make one desperate sally before all is lost. This is occasioned by the pouring out of the sixth vial.

Here observe, [1.] The instruments he makes use of to engage the powers of the earth in his cause and quarrel—three unclean spirits like frogs come forth, one out of the mouth of the dragon, another out of the mouth of the beast, and a third out of the false prophet. Hell, the secular power of antichrist.
and the ecclesiastical power, all combined to send their several instruments, furnished with hellish malice, with worldly policy, and with religious falsehood and deceit; and these should muster up the Devil's forces for a decisive battle.

[2.] The means these instruments would use to engage the powers of the earth in this war—they should work pretended miracles; the old stratagem of him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, 2 Thess. 2. 9, 10. Some think, that a little before the fall of antichrist, the popish pretense of power to work miracles will be revived, and will very much amuse and deceive the world.

[3.] The field of battle—a place called Armageddon; that is, say some, the mount of Megiddo, near to which, by a stream issuing from thence, Barak overcame Sisera, and all the kings in alliance with him, Judges 5. 19. And in the valley of Megiddo Joshua was slain. This place had been famous for two events of a very different nature, the first very happy for the church of God, the latter very unhappy; but it should now be the field of the last battle in which the church shall be engaged, and she shall be victorious. This battle required time to prepare for it, and therefore the further account of it is suspended till we come to the nineteenth chapter, v. 19, 20.

[4.] The warning which God gives of this great and decisive trial, to engage his people to prepare for it, v. 15. It would be sudden and unexpected, and therefore Christians should be clothed, and armed, and ready for it, that they might not be surprised and ashamed. When God's cause comes to be tried, and his battles to be fought, all his people should be ready to stand up for his interest, and be faithful and valiant in his service.

17. And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done. 18. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. 19. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. 20. And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found. 21. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

Here we have an account of the seventh and last angel pouring forth his vial, contributing his part toward the accomplishment of the downfall of Babylon, which was the finishing stroke. And here, as before, three observations.

1. Where this plague fell—on the air, upon the prince of the power of the air, that is, the Devil. His powers were restrained, his policies confounded, he was bound in God's chain, the sword of God was upon his eye and upon his arm; for he, as well as the powers of the earth, is subject to the almighty power of God. He had used all possible means to preserve the antichristian interest, and to prevent the fall of Babylon; all the influence that he has upon the minds of men, blinding their judgments, and perverting them, hardening their hearts, raising their enmity to the gospel as high as could be. But now here is a vial poured out upon his kingdom, and he is not able to support his tottering cause and interest any longer.

2. What it produced. (1.) A thankful voice from heaven, pronouncing that now the work was done. The church triumphant in heaven saw it, and rejoiced; the church militant on earth saw it, and became triumphant. It is finished. (2.) A mighty commotion on the earth—an earthquake, so great as never was before, shaking the very centre of the earth, and this ushered in by the usual concomitant of thunder and lightnings. (3.) The fall of Babylon, which was divided into three parts, called the cities of the nations; (v. 19.) having had rule over the nations, and taken in the idolatry of the nations, incorporating into her religion something of the Jewish, something of the Pagan, and something of the Christian religion, and so was three cities in one. God now remembered this great and wicked city: though for some time he had seemed to have forgotten her idolatry and cruelty, yet now he gives unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. And this downfall extended further than to the seat of antichrist; it reached from the centre to the circumference; and every island, and every mountain, that seemed shall in future time to be made more secure, were carried away in the deluge of this ruin.

3. How the antichristian party were affected with it: though it fell upon them as a dreadful storm, as if the stones of the city, tossed up into the air, came down upon their heads, like hail-stones of a talent weight each, yet they were so far from repenting, that they blasphemed that God who thus punished them. Here was a dreadful plague of the heart, a spiritual judgment more destructive than all the rest. Observe, (1.) The greatest calamities that can befall men, will not bring them to repentance without the grace of God working with them. (2.) Those that are not made better by the judgments of God, are always the worse for them. (3.) To be hardened in sin and enmity against God by his righteous judgments, is a certain token of utter destruction.

CHAP. XVII.

This chapter is another representative of those things that had been revealed before, concerning the wickedness and ruin of antichrist. This antichrist had been before represented as a beast, and is now described as a great whore. And here, i. The apostle is invited to see this vile woman, v. 1, 2. II. He tells us what an appearance she made, v. 3. 6. III. The mystery of it is explained, v. 7. 12. And, IV. Her ruin foretold, v. 13, &c.

1. And there came one of the seven angels who had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters: 2. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. 3. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. 4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: 5. And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. 6. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

Here we have a new vision, not as to the matter of it, for that is contemporary with what came under the three last vials; but as to the manner of description, &c. Observe,

1. The invitation given to the apostle to take a view of what was here to be represented; (v. 1.) Come hither, and I will shew thee the judgment of the great whore, &c. This is a name of great infamy. A whore, in this passage, is one that is married, and has been false to her husband's bed, has forsaken the guide of her youth, and broken the covenant of God; she had been a prostitute to the kings of the earth, whom she had intoxicated with the wine of her fornication.

2. The appearance she made; it was gay and gaudy, like such sort of creatures; (v. 4.) She was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls. Here were all the allurements of worldly honour and riches, pomp and pride, suited to sensual and worldly minds.

3. Her principal seat and residence—upon the beast that had seven heads and ten horns; that is to say, Rome, the city on seven hills, infamous for idolatry, tyranny, and blasphemy.

4. Her name, which was written on her forehead. It was the custom of impudent harlots to hang out signs, with their names, that all might know what they were. Now in this observe, (1.) She is named from her place of residence—Babylon the great. But that we might not take it for the old Babylon literally so called, we are told there is a mystery in the name; it is some other great city resembling the old Babylon. (2.) She is named from her infamous way and practice; not only a harlot, but a mother of harlots; it breeding up harlots, and nursing and training them up to idolatry, and all sort of lewdness and wickedness; the parent and nurse of all false religion and filthy conversation.

5. Her diet; she satiated herself with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus. She drank their blood with such greediness, that she intoxicated herself with it; it was so pleasant to her, that she could not tell when she had enough of it: she was satiated, yet never satisfied.

7. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carryeth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. 8. The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they beheld the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. 9. And here is the mind that hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. 10. And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. 11. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. 12. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, who have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. 13. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

Here we have the mystery of this vision explained. The apostle wondered at the sight of this woman: the angel undertakes to open this vision to him, it being the key of the former visions; and he tells the apostle what was meant by the beast on which the woman sat; but it is so explained, as still to need further explanation. 1. This beast was, and is not, and yet is; that is, it was a seat of idolatry and persecution; and is not, that is, not in the ancient form, which was pagan; and yet it is, it is truly the seat of idolatry and tyranny, though of another sort and form. It ascends out of the bottomless pit; idolatry and cruelty are the issue and product of hell, and they shall return thither, and go into perdition. 2. This beast has seven heads, which have a double signification. (1.) Seven mountains—the seven hills on which Rome stands; and, (2.) Seven kings—seven sorts of government. Rome was governed by kings, consuls, tribunes, decemviri, dictators, emperors who were pagan, and emperors who were Christian; five of these were extinct when this prophecy was written; one was then in being, that is, the pagan emperor; and the other, that is, the Christian emperor, was yet to come, v. 10. This beast, the papacy, makes an eighth governor, and sets up idolatry again. 3. This beast had ten horns; which are said to be ten kings which have as yet received no kingdoms; as yet, that is, as some, shall not rise up till the Roman empire be broken in pieces; or, as others, shall not rise up till near the end of antichrist's reign, and so shall reign but as it were hour with her, but shall for that time be very unamiable and very accursed in this interest, and entirely devoted to it, divesting themselves of their prerogatives and revenues, (things so dear to princes,) out of an unaccountable fondness for the papacy.

14. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him, are called, and chosen, and faithful. 15. And he said unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. 16. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire. 17. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. 18. And the woman which thou sawest that is great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

Here we have some account of the downfall of Babylon, to be more fully described in the following chapter.

1. Here is a war begun between the beast and his followers, and the Lamb and his followers. The beast and his army, to an eye of sense, appear much stronger than the Lamb and his army: one would think an army with a Lamb at the head of them could not stand before the great red dragon. But,

2. Here is a victory gained by the Lamb. The Lamb shall overcome; Christ must reign till all enemies be put under his feet; he will be sure to meet with many enemies, and much opposition, but he will also be sure to gain the victory.

3. Here is the ground and reason of the victory assigned; and that is taken, (1.) From the character of the Lamb; he is King of kings, and Lord of lords. He has, both by nature and by office, supreme dominion and power over all things; all the powers of earth and hell are subject to his check and control. (2.) From the character of his followers; they are called, and chosen, and faithful; they are called out by commission to this warfare, they are chosen and fitted for it, and they will be faithful in it. Such an army, under such a Commander, will at length carry all the world before them.

4. The victory is justly agrandiz'd, (1.) By the vast multitude who paid obedience and subjection to the beast and to the whore. She sat upon (that is, presided over) many waters; and these waters were so many multitudes of people, and nations, of all languages; yea, she reigned not only over kingdoms, but over the kings, and they were tributaries and vassals. (2.) By the powerful influence which God hereby shewed he had over the minds of great men; their hearts were in his hand, and he turned them as he pleased; for, [1.] It was of God, and to fulfil his will, that these kings agreed to give their kingdom unto the beast; they were judicially blinded and hardened to do so. And, [2.] It was of God, that afterward their hearts were turned against the whore, to hate her, and to make her desolate and naked, and to eat her flesh, and burn her with fire; they shall at length see their folly, and how they have been bewitched and enslaved by the papacy, and, out of a just resentment, shall not only fall off from Rome, but shall be made the instruments of God's providence in her destruction.

CHAP. XVIII.

We have here, I. An angel proclaiming the fall of Babylon, v. 1, 2. II. Assigning the reasons of her fall, v. 3, 4. III. Giving warning to all who belonged to God, to come out of her, v. 4, 5. and to assist in her destruction, v. 6, 7. IV. The great lamentation made for her by those who had been swift in her pleasures and profits, v. 8, 9. V. The great joy that there would be among others at the sight of her irrecoverable ruin, v. 20, 26.

1. And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. 2. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. 3. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

The downfall and destruction of Babylon form an event so fully determined in the counsels of God, and of such consequence to his interests and glory, that the visions and predictions concerning it are repeated.

1. Here is another angel sent from heaven, attended with great power and lustre, v. 1. He had not only light in himself, to discern the truth of his own prediction, but to inform and enlighten the world about that great event; and not only light to discern it, but power to accomplish it.

2. This angel publishes the fall of Babylon, as a thing already come to pass; and this he does with a mighty strong voice, that all might hear the cry, and might see how well this angel was pleased to be the messenger of such tidings. Here seems to be an allusion to the prediction of the fall of pagan Babylon, (Isa. 21. 9.) where the word is repeated as it is here, is fallen, is fallen. Some have thought a double fall is hereby intended, first her apostasy, and then her ruin; and they think the words immediately following, favour their opinion; (v. 2.) She is come to the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird. But this is also borrowed from Isa. 21. 9. and seems to describe not so much her sin of entertaining idols, which are truly called devils, as her punishment; it being a common notion, that unclean spirits, as well as your ominous and hateful birds, used to haunt a city or house that lay in its ruins.

3. The reason of this ruin is declared; for though God is not obliged to give any account of his matters, yet he is pleased to do so; especially in those dispensations of Providence that are most awful and tremendous. The wickedness of Babylon had been very great; for she had not only forsaken the true God herself, and set up idols, but had with great art and industry drawn all sorts of men into the spiritual adultery; and by her wealth and luxury had retained them in her interest, v. 3.

4. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. 5. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. 6. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double. 7. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. 8. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burnt with fire; for strong is the Lord God which judgeth her.

Here is fair warning given to all that expect mercy from God, that they should not only come out of her, but be assisting in her destruction, v. 4, 5. Here observe, 1. God may have a people even in Babylon, some who belong to the election of grace. 2. God's people shall be called out of Babylon, and called effectually. 3. Those that are resolved to partake... with wicked men in their sins, must receive of their plagues. 4. When the sins of a people reach up to heaven, the wrath of God will reach down to the earth. 5. Though private revenge is forbidden yet God will have his people act under him, when called to it, in pulling down his and their inveterate and implacable enemies, v. 5. 6. God will proportion the punishment of sinners to the measure of their wickedness, pride, and security, v. 7. 7. When destruction comes on a people suddenly, the surprise is a great aggravation of their misery, v. 8.

9. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning. 10. Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come. 11. And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth her merchandise any more: 12. The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, 13. And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. 14. And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all. 15. The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for fear of her torment, weeping and wailing, 16. And saying, Alas, alas, that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! 17. For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every ship-master, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off. 18. And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city? 19. And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea, by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.

Here we have a doleful lamentation made by Babylon's friends for her fall; and here observe, 1. Who are the mourners; those who had been bewitched by her fornication, those who had been sharers in her sensual pleasures, and those who had been gainers by her wealth and trade—the kings, and the merchants of the earth; the kings of the earth, whom she had flattered into idolatry, by allowing them to be arbitrary and tyrannical over their subjects, while they were obsequious to her, and the merchants, that is, those who trafficked with her for indulgences, pardons, dispensations, and preferments; these will mourn, because by this craft they got their wealth.

2. What was the manner of their mourning, (1.) They stood afar off, they durst not come nigh her; even Babylon's friends will stand at a distance from her fall; though they had been partakers with her in her sensual pleasures and profits, they were not willing to bear a share in her plagues. (2.) They made a grievous outcry, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! (3.) They wept, and cast dust upon their heads, v. 19. The pleasures of sin are but for a season, and they will end in dismal sorrow: all those who rejoice in the success of the church's enemies, will share with them in their downfall; and those who have most indulged themselves in pride and pleasure, are the least able to bear calamities; their sorrows will be excessive, as their pleasure and jollity were before.

3. What was the cause of their mourning; not their sin, but their punishment. They did not lament their fall into idolatry, and luxury, and persecution, but their fall into ruin—the loss of their traffic, and of their wealth and power. The spirit of antichrist is a worldly spirit, and their sorrow is a mere worldly sorrow; they do not lament that anger of God, that was now fallen upon them, but for the loss of their outward comforts. We have a large schedule and inventory of the wealth and merchandize of this city, all which was suddenly lost, (v. 12, 13,) and lost irrecoverably, v. 14. "All things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all." The church of God may fall for a time, but she shall rise again; but the fall of Babylon will be an utter overthrow, like that of Sodom and Gomorrah. Godly sorrow is some support under affliction, but mere worldly sorrow adds to the calamity.

20. Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her. 21. And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. 22. And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and of trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee: 23. And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived: 24. And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

We have here an account of the joy and triumph that was both in heaven and earth at the irrecoverable fall of Babylon: while her own people were bewailing her, the servants of God are called to rejoice over her, v. 20. Here observe, 1. How universal this joy would be; heaven and earth, an gels and saints, would join in it; that which is matter of rejoicing to the servants of God in this world, is matter of rejoicing to the angels in heaven. 2. How just and reasonable, and that, (I.) Because the fall of Babylon was an act of God's vindictive justice: God was then avenging his people's cause; they had committed their cause to him, to whom vengeance belongs, and now the year of recompense was come for the controversies of Zion; and though they did not take pleasure in the miseries of any, yet they had reason to rejoice in the discoveries of the glorious justice of God; (2.) Because it was an irrecoverable ruin: this Babylon should never molest them any more, and of this they were assured by a remarkable token; (v. 21.) An angel from heaven takes up a stone like a great millstone, and casts it into the sea, saying, Thus shall Babylon be thrown down with violence, and be found no more at all; the place should be no longer habitable by man, no work should be done there, no comfort enjoyed, no light seen there, but utter darkness and desolation, as the reward of her great wickedness; first, in deceiving the nations with her sorceries, and, secondly, in destroying and murdering those whom she could not deceive, v. 24. Such abominable sins deserved so great a ruin.

CHAP. XIX.

In this chapter, we have, I. A further account of the triumphant song of angels and saints for the fall of Babylon, v. 1. 4. II. The marriage between Christ and the church proclaimed and perfected, v. 5. 10. III. Another warlike expedition of the glorious Head and Husband of the church, with the success of it, v. 10, &c.

1. AND after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

2. For true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, who did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. 3. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever. 4. And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

The fall of Babylon being fixed, finished, and declared to be irrecoverable, in the foregoing chapter, this begins with a holy triumph over her, in pursuance of what is given forth, (ch. 18. 20.) Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy angels. prophes. They now gladly answer the call; and here you have, 1. The form of their thanksgiving, in that heavenly and most comprehensive word, Alleluia, praise ye the Lord: with this they begin, with this they go on, and with this they end; (v. 4.) their prayers are now turned into praises, their hosannas end in halleluias. 2. The matter of their thanksgiving: they praise him for the truth of the word, and the righteousness of his providential conduct, especially in this great event—the ruin of Babylon, who had been a mother, nurse, and nest of idolatry, lewdness, and cruelty; (v. 2.) for which signal example of divine justice, they ascribe salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto our God. 3. The effect of these their praises: when the angels and saints, said Alleluia, her fire burned more fiercely, and her smoke ascended for ever and ever, v. 3. The surest way to have our deliverances continued and completed, is, to give God the glory of what he has done for us: praising God for what we have, is praying in the most effectual manner for what is yet further to be done for us; the praises of the saints blow up the fire of God's wrath against the common enemy. 4. The blessed harmony between the angels and the saints in this triumphant song; (v. 4.) the churches and their ministers take the melodious sound from the angels, and repeat it; falling down, and worshipping God, they cry, Amen; Alleluia.

5. And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. 6. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thun- derings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. 7. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. 8. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God. 10. And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

The triumphant song being ended, an epithalamium, or marriage-song, begins, v. 6. Here observe,

I. The concert of heavenly music; the chorus was large and loud, as the voice of many waters, and of mighty thunderings. God is fearful in praises; there is no joy like that in heaven; the morning-stars sing together; no jarring string, or key untuned, but pure and perfect melody.

II. The occasion of this song; and that is, the reign and dominion of that omnipotent God who has redeemed his church by his own blood, and is now in a more public manner betrothing her to himself; (v. 7.) The marriage of the Lamb is come. Some think this refers to the conversion of the Jews, which they suppose will succeed the fall of Babylon; others, to the general resurrection: the former seems more probable.

1. You have here a description of the bride, how she appeared; not in the gay and gaudy dress of the mother of harlots, but in fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of saints; in the robes of Christ's righteousness, both imputed for justification, and imparted for sanctification; the stole, the white robe of almsgiving, adoption, and inheritance; and the white robe of purity, and universal holiness; she had washed her robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and these her nuptial ornaments she did not purchase by any price of her own, but received them as the gift and grant of her blessed Lord.

2. The marriage-feast, which, though not particularly described, (as Matt. 22. 4.) yet is declared to be such as would make them all happy, who were called to it, so called as to accept the invitation, a feast made up of the promises of the gospel, the true saying of God, v. 9. These promises, opened, applied, sealed, and earnedest by the Spirit of God, in holy, eucharistical ordinances, are the marriage-feast; and the whole collective body of all those who partake of this feast, is, the bride, the Lamb's wife; they eat into one body, and drink into one Spirit, and are not mere spectators or guests, but coalesce into the espoused party, the mystical body of Christ.

3. The transport of joy which the apostle felt in himself at this vision; he fell down at the feet of the angel, to worship him; supposing him to be more than a creature; or having his thought that the sent overpowered by the vehemency of his affections; where observe, (1.) What honour he offered to the angel; he fell at his feet, to worship him; this prostration was a part of external worship, it was a posture of proper adoration. (2.) How the angel refused it, and that with some resentment; “See thou do it not; have a care what thou doest, thou art doing a wrong thing.” (3.) He gave a very good reason for his refusal; “I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus; I am a creature, think equal in office, though not in nature; I, as an angel and messenger of God, have the testimony of Jesus, a charge to be a witness for him, and to testify concerning him; and thou, as an apostle, having the Spirit of prophecy, hast the same testimony to give in; and therefore we are in this brethren, and fellow-servants.” (4.) He directs him to the right key, and only Object of religious worship; and that is, God; “Worship God, and him alone.” This fully condems the practice both of the papists in worshipping the elements of bread and wine, and saints, and angels; and the practice of the Socinians and Arians, who do not believe that Christ is truly and by nature God, and yet pay him religious worship; and this shews what wretched fig-leaves all their evasions and excuses are, which they offer in their own vindication; they stand hereby convicted of idolatry by a messenger from heaven.

11. And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. 12. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself. 13. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called, The Word of God. 14. And the armies which were in heaven, followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. 15. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. 16. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS. 17. And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; 18. That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great. 19. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. 20. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

No sooner was the marriage solemnized between Christ and his church by the conversion of the Jews, than the glorious Head and Husband of the church is called to one of his most extensive service, and seems to be the great battle that was to be fought at Armageddon, foretold ch. 16. 16. And here observe,

1. The description of the great Commander; (1.) By the seat of his empire; and that is heaven: his throne is there, and his power and authority are heavenly and divine. (2.) His equipage; he is again described as sitting on a white horse; to shew the equity of the cause, and certainty of success. (3.) His attributes, he is faithful and true; his name is righteous in all his judicial and military proceedings, he has a penetrating insight into all the strength and stratagems of his enemies, he has a large and extensive dominion, many crowns, for he is King of kings, and Lord of lords. (4.) His armour; and that is a vesture dyed in blood; either his own blood, by which he purchased this mediatorial power; or the blood of his enemies, over whom he has always prevailed. (5.) His name; The Word of God; a name that none fully knows but himself: only this we know, that this Word was God manifest in the flesh; but his perfections are incomprehensible by any creature.

2. The army which he commands; (v. 14.) a very large one, made up of many armies; angels and saints followed his conduct, and resembled him in their equipage, and in their armour of purity and righteousness; chosen, and called, and faithful.

3. The weapons of his warfare—a sharp sword proceeding from his mouth, (v. 15.) with which he smites the nations: either the threatenings of the written word, which now he is going to execute, or rather, his word of command, calling on his followers to take a just revenge on his and their enemies, who are now put into the wine-press of the wrath of God, to be trodden under foot by him. 4. The ensigns of his authority, his coat of arms—a name written on his vesture and thigh, King of kings, and Lord of lords; asserting his authority and power, and the cause of the quarrel, v. 16.

5. An invitation given to the fowls of heaven, that they should come and see the battle, and share in the spoil and pillage of the field; (v. 17. 18.) intimating that this great decisive engagement should clear the way of exodution, which brings new fields of prey, and that all the world should have cause to rejoice in the issue of it.

6. The battle joined; the enemy falls on with great fury, headed by the beast, and the kings of the earth; the powers of earth and hell gathered, to make their utmost effort, v. 19.

7. The victory gained by the great and glorious Head of the church, the beast and the false prophet, the leaders of the army, were taken prisoners, both he who led them by power, and he who led them by policy and falsehood, these are taken and cast into the burning lake, made incapable of molesting the church of God any more; and their followers, whether officers or common soldiers, are given up to military execution, and made a feast for the fowls of heaven. Though the divine vengeance will chiefly fall upon Satan and his hosts, yet it will be no excuse to those who fight under their banner, that they only followed their leaders, and obeyed their command; since they would fight for them, they must fall and perish with them. Be wise now therefore, ye kings, be instructed, ye rulers of the earth; kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, Ps. 2. 10, 12.

CHAP. XX.

This chapter is thought by some, to be the darkest part of all this prophecy; it is very probable that the things contained in it are not yet accomplished; and therefore it is the wiser way to content ourselves with general observations, than to be positive and particular in our explications of it. Here we have an account of the binding of Satan for a thousand years, v. 1... 3. II. The reign of the saints with Christ for the same time, v. 4... 6. III. Of the loosing of Satan, and the conflict of the church with Gog and Magog,
v. 7... 10. IV. Of the day of judgment, v. 11, &c.

1. AND I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. 2. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years,
3. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more,
till the thousand years should be fulfilled:
and after that he must be loosed for a little season.

We have here a prophecy of the binding of Satan for a certain term of time, in which he should have much less power, and the church much more peace than before. The power of Satan was broken in part by the setting up of the gospel-kingdom in the world, it was further reduced by the empire's becoming Christian, it was yet further broken by the downfall of the mystical Babylon; but still this serpent had many heads, and when one is wounded, another has life remaining in it. Here we have a further limitation and diminution of his power; where observe, 1. To whom this work of binding Satan is committed—to an angel from heaven. It is very probable that this angel is no other than the Lord Jesus Christ; the description of him will harshly agree with any other; he is one who has power to bind the strong man armed, to cast him out, and to spoil his goods; and therefore must be stronger than he. 2. The means he makes use of in this work; he has a chain, and a key; a great chain to bind Satan, and the key of the prison in which he was to be confined. Christ never wants proper powers and instruments to break the power of Satan, for he has the powers of heaven, and the keys of hell. 3. The execution of this work, v. 2, 3. (1.) He laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan. Neither the strength of the dragon, nor the subtility of the serpent, was sufficient to rescue him out of the hands of Christ; he cought hold, and kept his hold. And, (2.) He cast him into the bottomless pit; cast him down with force, and with a just vengeance, to his own place and prison, from which he had been permitted to break out, and disturb the churches, and deceive the nations; now he is brought back to that prison and there laid in chains. (3.) He is shut up, and a seal set upon him; Christ shuts, and none can open; he shuts by his power, seals by his authority; and his lock and seal even the devils themselves cannot break open. (4.) We have the term of this confinement of Satan—a thousand years; after which, he was to be loosed again for a little season. The church should have a considerable time of peace and prosperity, but all her trials were not yet over.

4. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them:
and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, nor which, had received his mark upon their fore-heads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.
5. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished.
This is the first resurrection. 6. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

We have here an account of the reign of the saints for the same space of time, in which Satan continued bound; and here observe, 1. Who they were, that received such honour—those who had suffered for Christ, and all who had faithfully adhered to him, not receiving the mark of the beast, nor worshipping his image; all who had kept them-severs clear of pagan and papal idolatry. 2. The honour bestowed upon them; (1.) They were raised from the dead, and restored to life. This may have been taken either metaphorically, or in a civil and political sense; and had a political resurrection; their liberties and privileges were revived and restored. (2.) Thrones, and power of judgment, were given to them; they were possessed of great honour, and interest, and authority; I suppose, rather of a spiritual, than of a secular nature. (3.) They reigned with Christ a thousand years. They who suffer with Christ, shall reign with Christ, and shall reign with him in his spiritual and heavenly kingdom, in a glorious conformity to him in wisdom, righteousness, and holiness, before what had been known before in the world;
this is called the first resurrection, which none but those who have served Christ, and suffered for him, shall be favoured with. As for the wicked, they shall not be raised up, and restored to their power again, till they be set loose; this may be called a resurrection, as the conversion of the dead is called be life from the dead. 3. The happiness of these servants of God is declared. (1.) They are blessed and holy, v. 6. None can be blessed but they that are holy; and all that are holy shall be blessed.
These were holy as a sort of first-fruits to God in this spiritual resurrection, and as such blessed by him. (2.) They are secured from the power of the second death. We know something of what the first death is, and it is awful; but we know not what this second death is; it must be much more dreadful; it is the death of the soul, eternal separation from God. The Lord grant we may never know what it is by experience; they who have had experience of a spiritual resurrection, are saved from the power of the second death.

7. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison. And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the devil, that deceiveth them, was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

Here we have an account of the return of the church's troubles, and another mighty conflict, very sharp, but short and decisive. Observe, 1. The restraints laid for a long time on Satan, are at length taken off, his prisoners are loosed, and Satan's power is, as it will not be wholly destroyed; it may be limited and lessened, but he will have something still to do for the disturbance of the people of God. 2. No sooner is Satan let loose, than he falls to his old work, deceiving the nations, and so stirring them up to make a war with the saints and servants of God, which they would never do, if he had not first deceived them; they are deceived both as to the cause they engage in, they believe it to be a good cause, when it is indeed a very bad one; and they are deceived in the issue, they expect to be successful, but are sure to lose the day. 3. His last efforts seem to be the greatest; the power now permitted to him, seems to be more unlimited than before; he has now liberty to beat up for his volunteers in all the four quarters of the earth, and he raised a mighty army, the number of which was as the sand of the sea. v. 4. We have the names of the principal commanders of this army upon the drawn-Gog and Magog. We need not be too inquisitive as to what particular powers are meant by these names, since the army was gathered from all parts of the world: these names are found in other parts of scripture. Magog we read of in Gen. 10. 2. He was one of the sons of Japheth, and peopled the country called Syria, from which his descendants spread into many other parts. Of Gog and Magog together we only read in Ezek. 38. 2. a prophecy, from whence this in the Revelation borrows many of its images. 5. We have the march and military disposition of this formidable army; (v. 9.) They went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, that is, the spiritual Jerusalem, in which the most precious interests of the people of God are lodged, and therefore to them a beloved city. The army of the enemy is described as drawn forth out of the city, and lying under the walls of it; they were encamped about Jerusalem; but the army of the enemy was so much superior to that of the church, that they compassed them and their city about. 6. You have an account of the battle, and the issue of this war; Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured the enemy. Thus the ruin of Gog and Magog is foretold; (Ezek. 38. 22.) I will rain upon him, and upon his bands an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, and fire and brimstone. God would, in an extraordinary and more immediate manner, fight this last and decisive battle for his people, that the victory might be complete, and the glory redound to himself. 7. The doom and punishment of the grand enemy, the Devil; he is now cast into hell, with his two great officers, the beast and the false prophet, tyranny and idolatry, and that not for any term of time, but to be there tormented night and day, for ever and ever.

11. And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. 12. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. 13. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. 14. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. 15. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

The utter destruction of the Devil's kingdom very properly leads to an account of the day of judgment, which will determine every man's everlasting state; and we may be assured there will be a judgment, when we see the prince of this world is judged, John 16. 11. This will be a great day, the great day, upon all them that are upon the earth that do evil. There will be a judgment-seat of Christ. The Lord help us firmly to believe this doctrine of the judgment to come! It is a doctrine that made Felix tremble. Here we have a description of it; where observe, 1. We behold the throne, and tribunal of judgment, great and white, very glorious, and perfectly just and righteous. The throne of iniquity, that establishes wickedness by a law, has no fellowship with this righteous throne and tribunal. 2. The appearance of the Judge, and that is, the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom he will appear before the judgment-seat of Christ. The Lord help us firmly to believe this doctrine of the judgment to come! It is a doctrine that made Felix tremble. Here we have a description of it; where observe, 1. We behold the throne, and tribunal of judgment, great and white, very glorious, and perfectly just and righteous. The throne of iniquity, that establishes wickedness by a law, has no fellowship with this righteous throne and tribunal. 2. The appearance of the Judge, and that is, the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom he will appear before the judgment-seat of Christ. 3. The persons to be judged; (v. 12.) the dead, small and great; both young and old, low and high, poor and rich. None are so mean but they have some talents to account for; and none so great as to avoid the jurisdiction of this court; not only judges, but all who have died before, and were expected to surrender the bodies of men, hell shall surrender the souls of the wicked, the sea shall surrender the many who seemed to have been lost in it. All these are the king's prisoners, and he will cause them to set forth their prisoners. 4. The rule of judgment settled; the books were opened. What books? The book of God's omniscience, who is greater than our omnisciences, and knoweth all things. There is a book of remembrance with him both for good and bad; and the book of the sinner's conscience, which, though formerly secret, will now be opened; and another book shall be opened—the book of the scriptures, the statute-book of heaven, the rule of life; this book is opened, as containing the law, the touchstone by which the hearts and lives of men are to be tried; this book determines matter of right, she other books give evidence of matters of fact; some, by the other book; called the book of life, understand the book of God's eternal counsels; but that does not seem to belong to the affair of judgment; in eternal election God does not act judicially, but with absolute, sovereign freedom. 5. The cause to be tried; and that is, the works of men, what they have done, and whether it be good or evil; by their works men shall be justified, or condemned; for though God knows their state and their principles, and looks chiefly at these, yet, being to approve himself to angels and men as a righteous God, he will try their principles by their practices, and so men be justifi'd when he speaks, and clear when he judges. 6. The issue of the trial and judgment; and that will be according to the evidence of fact, and rule of judgment; all those who have made a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell, shall then be condemned with their infernal confederates, cast with them into the lake of fire, as not being entitled to eternal life, according to the rules of life laid down in the scripture; but those whose names are written in that book, that is, those that are justified and acquitted by the gospel, shall then be justifi'd and acquitted by the Judge, and shall enter into eternal life, having nothing more to fear from death, or hell, or wicked men; for these are all destroyed together. Let it be our great concern to see on what terms we stand with our Bibles, whether they justify us or condemn us now; for the Judge of all will proceed by that rule; Christ shall judge the secrets of all men according to the gospel. Happy are they who have so ordered and stated their cause according to the gospel, as to know beforehand that they shall be justified in the great day of the Lord!

CHAP. XXI.

Hitherto, the prophecy of this book has presented to us a very remarkable mixture of light and shade, prosperity and adversity, mercy and judgment, in the conduct of Divine Providence toward the church in the world: now, at the close of all, the day breaks, and the shadow flee away; a new world now appears, the former being passed away. Some are willing to understand all that is said in these two last chapters, of the state of the church even here on earth, in the glory of the last days; but we are to understand that these chapters take in no respect a representation of the perfect and triumphant state of the church in heaven. Let but the faithful saints and servants of God wait a while, and they shall not only see, but enjoy, the perfect holiness and happiness of that world, to which God has prepared a place for them. An introduction to the vision of the new Jerusalem, ch. 1. 9. II. The vision itself, v. 10, &c.

1. AND I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. 2. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. 3. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. 4. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. 5. And he that sat upon the throne, said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful. 6. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst, of the fountain of the water of life freely. 7. He that overcometh, shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. 8. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

We have here a more general account of the happiness of the church of God in the future state, by which it seems most safe to understand the heavenly state.

1. A new world now opens to our view; (v. 1.) I saw a new heaven and a new earth; that is, a new universe; for we suppose the world to be made up of heaven and earth. By the new earth we understand a new state for the bodies of men, as well as a heaven for their souls. This world is not now newly created, but newly opened, and filled with all those who were the heirs of it. The new heaven, and the new earth, will not then be distinct; the very earth of the saints, their glorified bodies, will now be spiritual and heavenly, and suited to serve and beautify their souls. To make way for the commencement of this new world, the old world, with all its troubles and commotions, passed away.

2. In this new world the apostle saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from heaven, not locally, but as to its original: this new Jerusalem is the church of God in its new and perfect state, fire parted as a bride adorned for her husband, beautified with all perfection of wisdom and holiness, meet for the full fruition of the Lord Jesus Christ in glory.

3. The blessed presence of God with his people is here proclaimed and admired; (v. 3.) I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, &c. Observe, (1.) The presence of God with his church is the glory of the church. (2.) It is matter of wonder that a holy God should ever dwell with any of the children of men. (3.) The presence of God with his people in heaven will never be interrupted as it is on earth, but he will dwell with them to the end. (4.) This will be the most perfect, purest, and nearest tabernacle of God on earth, and will be nearer than any other blessing which God could bestow upon him, his love fully manifested to them, and his presence so near them, will be their perfect happiness; then he will fully answer the character of the relation on his part, as they shall do on their part.

4. This new and blessed state will be free from all trouble and sorrow; for, (1.) All the effects of former trouble shall be done away: they have been occasioned by the sins of men, by reason of sin, of affliction, of the calamities of the church, of the sickness of God's people; these shall be wiped away; no signs, no remembrance of former sorrows shall remain, any further than to make their present felicity the greater. God himself, as their tender Father, with his kind hand, shall wipe away the tears of his children; and they would not have been without those tears, when God shall come and wipe them away. (2.) All the causes of future sorrow shall be for ever removed; There shall be neither death, nor pain; and therefore no sorrow...
nor crying; these are things incident to that state in which they were before, but now all former things are passed away.

5. The truth and certainty of this blessed state are ratified by the word and promise of God, and ordered to be committed to writing, as matter of perpetual record, v. 5, 6. The subject-matter of this vision is so great, and of so great importance to the church and people of God, that they have need of the fullest assurances of it; and God therefore from heaven repeats and ratifies the truth thereof. Besides, many ages must pass between the time when this vision was given for and the accomplishment of it, and many great trials must intervene; and therefore God would have it committed to writing, for perpetual memory, and continual use to his people. Observe, (1.) The certainty of the promise avouched; These words are faithful and true; and it follows, It is done; as sure as if it were done already. We may and ought to take God's promise as present payment; if he has said, he makes all things new; it is done. (2.) He gives us his titles of honour as a pledge or surety of the full performance, even those titles of Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End. As it was his glory, that he gave the rise and beginning to the world, and to his church, it will be his glory to finish the work begun, and not to leave it imperfect. As his power and will were the first cause of all things, his pleasure and glory are the last end, and he will not lose his design; for then he would no longer be the Alpha and Omega. Most may begin designs which they can never bring to perfection; but the counsel of God shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure. (3.) The desires of his people toward this blessed state, are another evidence of the truth and certainty of it; they thirst after a state of sinless perfection, and the uninterrupted enjoyment of God; and God has wrought in them these longing desires which cannot be satisfied with any thing else, and therefore would be the torment of the sinner if he lived a thousand years; but these would be inconsistent with the goodness of God, and his love to his people, to create in them holy and heavenly desires, and then deny them their proper satisfaction; and therefore they may be assured, when they have overcome their present difficulties, he will give them of the fountain of the water of life freely.

6. The greatness of this future felicity is declared and illustrated; (1.) By the freeness of it; it is the free gift of God; he gives of the water of life freely; this will not make it less, but more grateful to his people. (2.) The fulness of it; the people of God then lie at the fountain-head of all blessedness, they inherit all things; (v. 7.) Enjoying God, they enjoy all things, he is All in all. (3.) By the tenure and title by which they enjoy this blessedness; by right of inheritance, as the sons of God; a title of all other things, with a most imperishable, as from so near and endeared a relation to God himself, and the most sure and indefeasible, that can make no more ease than the relation from which it results. (4.) By the vastly different state of the wicked; their misery helps to illustrate the glory and blessedness of the saints, and the distinguishing goodness of God toward them, v. 8. Here observe, [1.] The sins of those who perish, among which are first mentioned their unbelief. How fearful lead the van in this black list; they durst not accept the righteousness of God, they go astray in the darkness of unbelief; and those who were so dastardly as not to dare to take up the cross of Christ, and discharge their duty to him, were yet so desperate as to run into all manner of abominable wickedness—murder, adultery, sorcery, idolatry, and lying. [2.] Their punishment; They have their part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone: which is the second death. First, They could not burn at a stake for Christ, but they must burn in hell for sin. Secondly, They must die another death after their natural death; the agonies and torments of the first death will consign them over to the far greater terrors and agonies of eternal death; to die and to be always dying. Thirdly, This misery will be their proper part and portion, what they have justly deserved, what they have in effect chosen, and what they have prepared themselves for by their sins. Thus the misery of the damned will illustrate the blessedness of those that are saved, and the blessedness of the saved will aggrandise the misery of those that are damned.

9. And there came unto me one of the seven angels who had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. 10. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, 11. Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper-stone, clear as crystal; 12. And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel: 13. On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. 14. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. 15. And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. 16. And the city lieth four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. 17. And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel. 18. And the building of the wall of it was of jasper; and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass. 19. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; 20. The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacint; the twelfth, an amethyst. 21. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

We have already considered the introduction to the vision of the new Jerusalem in a more general idea of the heavenly state; we now come to the vision itself; where observe,

I. The person that opened the vision to the apostle—one of the seven angels, that had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, v. 9. God has a variety of work and employment for his holy angels; sometimes they are to sound the trumpet of Divine Providence, and give fair warning to a careless world; sometimes they are to pour out the vials of God's anger upon impenitent sinners; and sometimes to discover things of a heavenly nature to those that are the heirs of salvation; they readily execute every commission they receive from God, and when this world shall be at an end, yet the angels shall have the charge of the great God in proper pleasant work to all eternity.

II. The place from which the apostle had this glorious view and prospect; he was taken, in ecstasy, into a high mountain; from such situations men usually have the most distinct views of adjacent cities; they who would have clear views of heaven, must get as near heaven as they can, into the mount of vision, the mount of meditation and faith, from which they see the appearance of Christ, in his image more perfected in them, and in his favour shining upon her; and now we have a large description of the church triumphant under the emblem of a city, far exceeding in riches and splendour all the cities of this world; and this new Jerusalem is here represented to us, both in the exterior and the interior part of it.

1. The exterior part of the city—the wall, and the gates; the wall for security; and the gates for entrance.

(1.) The wall for security. Heaven is a safe state; those that are there, are inclosed with a wall, that separates them, and secures them from all evils and enemies: now here, in the account of the wall, we observe, [1.] The height of it, which, we are told, is very high, seventy yards, (v. 17,) sufficient both for ornament and security. [2.] The matter of it; it is the unexpedite pearl wall built of the most precious stones, for firmness and lustre; (v. 11,) this city has a wall that is impregnable as well as precious. [3.] The form of it was very regular and uniform; it was four-square, the length as large as the breadth. In the new Jerusalem all shall be equal in purity and perfection; there shall be an absolute uniformity in the church triumphant; a thing wanted and wished for on earth, but not to be expected till hereafter: [3.] The gates; (v. 15, 16,) twelve thousand furlongs each way, each side, which is forty-eight thousand furlongs in the whole compass, or fifteen hundred German miles; here is room sufficient for all the people of God; many mansions in their Father's house.

[5.] The foundation of the wall, for heaven is a city that hath her foundations; (v. 19,) the promise and prophecy of the Gospel. Christ, are the strong foundations of the church's safety; the foundations are described by their number, and by their matter; by their number—twelve; alluding to the twelve apostles, (v. 14,) whose gospel-doctrines are the foundations upon which the church is built, Christ himself being the chief cornerstone; and as to the matter of these foundations, it was various and precious, set forth by twelve sorts of precious stones, denoting the variety and excellency of the doctrines of the gospel, or of the graces of the Holy Spirit, or the personal excellencies of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(2.) The gates for entrance. Heaven is not inaccessible; there is a way opened into the holiest of all; there is a free admission to all those that are sanctified; they shall not find themselves shut out. Now as to these gates, observe, [1.] Their number; they are twelve gates, answering to the twelve tribes of Israel. All the true Israel of God shall have entrance into the new Jerusalem, as every tribe had into the earthly Jerusalem. [2.] Their guards which were placed upon them—twelve angels; to admit and receive the several tribes of the spiritual Israel, and to keep out others. [3.] The inscription on the gates—the names of the tribes. He sheweth them that have a right to the tree of life, and to enter through the gates into the city, [4.] The situation of the gates. As the city had four equal sides, answering to the four quarters of the world, east, west, north, and south; so in each side there were three gates, signifying that from all quarters of the earth there shall be some who shall get safe to heaven and be received there, and that there is as free entrance from one part of the world as from the other; for in Christ there is neither Jew, nor Greek, Barbarian, Scythian, bond, or free; men of all nations, and languages, who believe on Christ, have by him access to God in grace here, and in glory hereafter.

[5.] The materials of these gates; they were all of pearls, and yet with great variety, every gate one pearl; either one single pearl of that vast bigness, or one single sort of pearl. Christ is the Pearl of great price, and he is our Way to God. There is nothing magnificent enough in this world fully to set forth the glory of heaven. Could we, in the glass of a strong imagination, contemplate such a city as is here described, even as to the exterior part of it, such a wall, and such gates, how wonderful; how glorious, would the prospect be! And yet this is but a faint and dim representation of what heaven is in itself.

22. And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. 23. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. 24. And the nations of them which are saved, shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it. 25. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. 26. And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it. 27. And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they who are written in the Lamb's book of life.

Now we come to take a view of the interior part of the new Jerusalem. You have seen its strong wall, and stately gates, and glorious guards; now we are to be led through the gates into the city itself; and the first thing which we observe there is, the street of the city, which was pure gold, like transparent glass, v. 21. The saints in heaven tread upon gold. The new Jerusalem has its several streets. There is the most exact order in heaven; every saint has his proper mansion. There is converse in heaven; the saints are then at rest; but it is not a mere passive rest; it is not a state of sleep, and inactivity, but a state of delightful motion; the nations that are saved, walk in the light of it; they walk with Christ in white; they have communion not only with God, but with one another; and all their steps are firm and clean, they are pure and clear as gold and transparent glass.

1. The temple of the new Jerusalem, which was no temple in the sense of being built with men's hands, as that of Solomon and Zerubbabel, but a temple altogether spiritual and divine; for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple thereof. There the saints are above the need of ordinances, which were the means of their preparation for heaven. When the end is attained, the means are no longer useful. Perfect and immediate communion with God will more than supply the place of gospel-institutions.

2. The light of this city. When there is no light, there can be no lustre, nor pleasure.

Heaven is the inheritance of the saints in light. But what is that light? There is no sun nor moon shining there, v. 23. Light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to behold the sun. What a dismal world would this be, if it were not for the light of the sun! What is there in heaven, that supplies the want of it? There is no want of the light of the sun; for the glory of God is seen in the Lamb, and the Lamb is the Light thereof. God in Christ will be an everlasting Fountain of knowledge and joy to the saints in heaven; and if so, there is no need of the sun or moon, any more than we here need to set up candles at noon day, when the sun shineth in its strength.

3. The inhabitants of this city; they are described here several ways. (1.) By their numbers—whole nations of saved souls; some out of all nations, and many out of some nations, who were sealed on earth, are saved in heaven. (2.) By their dignity—some of the kings and princes of the earth; great kings. God will have some of all ranks and degrees of men to fill the heavenly mansions, high and low; and when the greatest kings come to heaven, they will see all their former honour and glory swallowed up of this heavenly glory that so much excels. (3.) The continual communion and entrance into this city; the gates shall never be shut. There is no night, and therefore no need of shutting up the gates. Some one or other is coming in every hour and moment; and those that are sanctified, always find the gates open; they have an abundant entrance into the kingdom.

4. The accommodations of this city; all the glory and honour of the nations shall be brought into it; whatever is excellent and valuable in this world, shall be there enjoyed in a more refined kind, and to a far greater degree; brighter crowns, a better and more enduring substance, more sweet and satisfying feasts, a more glorious attendance, a truer sense of honour, and far higher posts of honour, a more glorious temper of mind, and a form and a countenance more glorious than ever were known in this world.

And lastly, the unmixed purity of all who belong to the new Jerusalem, v. 27. (1.) There the saints shall have no impure thing remain in them. In the article of death they shall be cleansed from every thing that is of a defiling nature. Now they feel a sad mixture of corruption with their graces, which hinders them in the service of God, interrupts their communion with him, and intercepts the light of his countenance; but, at their entrance into the holy city, there are washed in the blood of Christ, and presented to the Father without spot. (2.) There the saints shall have no impure persons admitted among them. In the earthly Jerusalem there will be a mixed communion, after all the care that can be taken; some roots of bitterness will spring up to trouble and defile Christian societies; but in the new Jerusalem there is a society perfectly pure; free. [1.] From such as are openly profane. There are none admitted into heaven, who work abominations. In the churches on earth, sometimes abominable things are done, solemn ordinances profaned, and prostituted to men openly vicious, for worldly ends; but no such abominations can have place in heaven. [2.] Free from hypocrites, such as make lies, say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie. These will creep into the churches of Christ on earth, and may lie concealed there a long time, perhaps all their days; but they cannot intrude into the new Jerusalem, which is wholly reserved for those that are called, and chosen, and faithful; who are all written, not only in the register of the visible church, but in the Lamb's book of life.

CHAP. XXII.

In this chapter, we have, I. A further description of the heavenly state of the church, v. 1. 5. II. A confirmation of this and all the other visions of this book, v. 6. 19. III. The conclusion, v. 20, 21.

1. And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. 2. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side the river, was there the tree of life, which bear twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. 3. And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him: 4. And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. 5. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign for ever and ever.

The heavenly state which was before described as a city, and called the new Jerusalem, is here described as a paradise; alluding to the earthly paradise which was lost by the sin of the first Adam; here is another paradise restored by the second Adam. A paradise in a city, or a whole city in a paradise! In the first paradise there were only two persons to behold the beauty and taste the pleasures of it; but in this second paradise whole cities and nations shall find abundant delight and satisfaction.

And here observe,

1. The river of paradise: the earthly paradise was well watered; no place can be pleasant or fruitful that is not so. This river is described, (1.) By its fountain-head—the throne of God, and the Lamb. All our springs of grace, comfort, and glory, are in God; and all our streams from him, through the mediation of the Lamb. (2.) By its quality—pure, and clear as crystal. All the streams of earthly comfort are muddy; but these are clear, saltatory, and refreshing, giving life, and preserving life, to those who drink of it.

2. The tree of life, in this paradise. Such a tree there was in the earthly paradise, Gen. 2. 9. This far excels it. And now as to this tree, observe, (1.) The situation of it—in the midst of the street, and on either side the river; or, as it might have been better rendered, in the midst between the terraces walk and the river. This tree of life is fed by the pure waters of the river that comes from the throne of God. The presence and perfections of God furnish out all the glory and blessedness of heaven. (2.) The fruitfulness of this tree. [1.] It brings forth many sorts of fruit, twelve sorts, suited to the refined taste of all the saints. [2.] It brings forth fruit at all times; yieldeth its fruit every month; this tree is never empty, never barren; there is always fruit upon it. In heaven there is not only a variety of pure and satisfying pleasures, but a continuance of them, and always fresh. [3.] The fruit is not only pleasant, but wholesome. The presence of God in heaven is the health and happiness of the saints; there they find in him a remedy for all their former maladies, and are preserved by him in the most healthful and vigorous state.

3. The perfect freedom of this paradise from everything that is evil; (v. 2.) There shall be no more curse; no accursed serpent, no serpent there, as there was in the earthly paradise. Here is the great excellency of this paradise—the Devil has nothing to do there; he cannot draw the saints from serving God to be subject to himself, as he did our first parents, nor can he so much as disturb them in the service of God.

4. The supreme felicity of this paradisical state. (1.) There the saints shall see the face of God; there they shall enjoy the beatific vision. (2.) God will own them, as having his seal and name on their foreheads. (3.) They shall reign with him for ever; their service shall be not only freedom, but honour and dominion. (4.) All this shall be with perfect knowledge and joy. They shall be full of wisdom and comfort, continually walking in the light of the Lord; and this not for a time, but for ever and ever.

6. And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. 7. Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of this prophecy. 8. And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel who shewed me these things. 9. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them who keep the sayings of this book: worship God. 10. And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of this prophecy: for the time is at hand. 11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still. 12. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. 13. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last. 14. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. 15. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. 16. I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star. 17. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: 19. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

We have here a solemn ratification of the contents of this book, and particularly of this last vision; though some think it may not only refer to the whole book, but to the whole New Testament, yea, to the whole Bible, completing and confirming the canon of scripture. And here, 1. This is confirmed by the narrative of nature and the course of events, these discoveries; he is the Lord God, faithful and true, and so are all his sayings. 2. By the messengers who chose to reveal these things to the world; the holy angels shewed them to holy men of God; and God would not employ his saints and angels in deceiving the world. 3. They will soon be confirmed by their accomplishment; they are things that must shortly be done; Christ will make haste, he will come quickly, and put all things out of disorder; and then they will prove the wise and happy men, who have believed and kept his words. 4. By the integrity of that angel who had been the apostle's guide and interpreter in these visions; that integrity was such, that he not only refused to accept religious adoration from John, but once and again reproved him for it. He who was so tender of the honour of God and his word, and displeased with what was a wrong to God, would never come in his name to lead the people of God into mere dreams and delusions: and it still is a further confirmation of the sincerity of this apostle, that he confesses his own sin and folly, into which he had now again relapsed, and he leaves this his falling on permanent record; this shews he was a faithful and an impartial writer.

5. By the order given to leave the book of the prophecy open, to be speedily read; not only for their edification, but that they might labour to understand it, that they might make their discoveries in it, and compare the prophecy with the events. God here deals freely and openly with all; he does not speak in secret, but calls every one to witness to the declarations here made. 6. By the effect this book, thus kept open, will have upon men; those that are filthy and unjust, will take that occasion from thence to be more so, but it will confirm, strengthen, and sanctify those that are upright with God; it will be a savour of life unto life, and of death to others, and so will appear to be from God, v. 12. 7. It will be Christ's rule of judgment at the great day; he will dispense rewards and punishments to men according as their works agree or disagree with the word of God; and therefore that word itself must needs be faithful and true. 8. It is the word of him who is the Author, Finisher, and Giver of rewards and punishments. With a view to this, v. 13, 14. He is the First and the Last, and the same from first to last, and so is his word too; and he will by this word give to his people, who conform them selves to it, a right to the tree of life, and an entrance into heaven; and this will be a full confirmation of the truth and authority of his word, since it contains the title and evidence of that confirmed state of holiness and happiness that remains for his people in heaven. 9. It is a book that condemns and excludes.
from heaven all wicked, unrighteous persons, and particularly those that love and make lies, (v. 15.) and therefore can never be itself a lie. 10. It is confirmed by the testimony of Jesus, who is the Spirit of prophecy. And this Jesus, as God, is the Root of David, though, as Man, his Offspring; a Person in whom all uncreated and created excellences meet; too great and too good to deceive his churches and the world. He is the Fountain of all light, the bright and the morning Star; and as such has given to his churches this morning light of prophecy, to assure them of the light of that perfect day that is approaching. 11. It is confirmed by an open and general invitation to all, to come and partake of the promises and privileges of the gospel, those streams of the water of life; these are tendered to all who feel in their souls a thirst which nothing in this world can quench. 12. It is confirmed by the joint testimony of the Spirit of God, and that gracious Spirit that is in all the true members of the church of God; the Spirit and the bride join in testifying the truth and excellency of the gospel. 13. Lastly, It is confirmed by a most solemn sanction, condemning and cursing all who shall dare to corrupt or change the word of God, either by adding to it, or taking from it; (v. 18, 19.) He that adds to the word of God, draws down upon himself all the plagues written in this book; and he who takes any thing away from it, cuts himself off from all the promises and privileges of it; this sanction is like a flaming sword, to guard the canon of the scripture from profane hands. Such a fence as this, God set about the law, (Deut. 4. 2.) and the whole Old Testament, (Mal. 4. 4.) and now in the most solemn manner about the whole Bible; assuring us that it is a book of the most sacred nature, divine authority, and of the last importance, and therefore the peculiar care of the great God.

20. He who testifieth these things, saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. 21. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

We are now come to the conclusion of the whole; and that in three things; 1. Christ's farewell to his church. He seems now, after he had seven days discovering these things to his people on earth, to take leave of them, and return to heaven; but he parts with them in great kindness, and assures them it shall not be long before he comes again to them; Behold, I come quickly: as when he ascended into heaven after his resurrection, he parted with a promise of his gracious presence, so here he parts with a promise of a speedy return. If any say, "Where is the promise of his coming, when so many ages are now past since this was written?" Let them know he is not slack to his people, but long-suffering to his enemies; his coming will be sooner than they are aware, sooner than they are prepared, sooner than they desire; and to his people it will be seasonable; the vision is for an appointed time, and will not tarry; he will come quickly; let this word be always sounding in our ear, and let us give all diligence, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless. 2. The church's hearty echo to Christ's promise: (1.) Declaring her firm belief of it; Amen, so it is, so it shall be. (2.) Expressing her earnest desire of it; Even so, come Lord Jesus; make haste, my Beloved, and be thou like a roe, or like a young hart on the mountains of spices. Thus beats the pulse of the church, thus breathes that gracious Spirit which actuates and informs the mystical body of Christ; and we should never be satisfied, till we find such a Spirit breathing in us, and causing us to look for the blessed hope, and glorious appearance of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; this is the language of the church of the first-born, and we should join with them, often putting ourselves in mind of his promise. What comes from heaven in a promise, should be sent back to heaven in a prayer. "Come, Lord Jesus, put an end to this state of sin, sorrow, and temptation; gather thy people out of this present evil world, and take them up to heaven, that state of perfect purity, peace, and joy, and so finish thy great design, and fulfill all that word in which thou hast caused thy people to hope," 3. The apostolical benediction which closes the whole; The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen. Here observe, (1.) The Bible ends with a clear proof of the Godhead of Christ, since the Spirit of God teaches the apostle to bless his people in the name of Christ, and to beg from Christ a blessing for them; this is a proper act of adoration. (2.) Nothing should be more desired by us than that the grace of Christ may be with us in this world, to prepare us for the glory of Christ in the other world. It is by his grace that we must be kept in a joyful expectation of his glory, fitted for it, and preserved to it; and his glorious appearance will be welcome and joyful to those that are partakers of his grace and favour here; and therefore to this most comprehensive prayer we should all add our hearty Amen; most earnestly thirsting after greater measures of the gracious influences of the blessed Jesus in our souls, and his gracious presence with us, till glory has perfected all his grace towards us, for he is a Sun and a Shield, he gives grace, and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.
